INTRODUCTION

If the historian's knowledge of his subject were complete, and his judgment unerring, the writing of history would be a simple matter, depending only upon the writer's power of expression, and the amount of space available. As, however, these ideal conditions practically never exist, his task usually resolves itself into an attempt to draw conclusions from too meagre records, and to reconcile or explain contradictory, or seemingly contradictory, statements. The result is that the facts are often complicated and obscured, sometimes even hopelessly distorted, and not infrequently quite overwhelmed, by the writer's individual interpretations and opinions, the expounding of which is apt to occupy as much space as the recital of the facts themselves.

It has long seemed to the author that the ideal method of presenting history would be to arrange all of the available worth-while material in strictly chronological order, and to allow the facts and the myths, together with the interpretations of competent authorities, and even the casual comments of intelligent observers, to speak for themselves. The present Chronology is an attempt to carry out this idea; in it are recorded, in brief form, but with sufficient detail to make easy reading, all procurable information of real importance or interest relating to the history and development of Manhattan Island, special emphasis being placed on information regarding the physical growth of the city of New York.

In the search for such material, all known and available sources have been examined, or at least inquired into, and a consistent effort has been made to trace each material fact or statement to its original source, and to quote from that source, retaining, wherever practicable, the language, and thereby the spirit, of the original, usually in condensed form, immaterial facts or statements being omitted. Even when this method has proved impracticable, if the subject has seemed of sufficient importance or interest it has usually been included, and reference given to the earliest and best authority found. This has sometimes led to the inclusion of material the authenticity of which is open to question, and occasionally even to the recording of statements which have been rejected by modern critics as belonging to mere tradition or mythology. The author cannot but feel that the modern fashion of excluding such material has robbed many a serious work, not only of local colour and picturesque interest, but of valuable suggestions and hints which would have proved useful in future researches.

John Addington Symonds, in his Renaissance in Italy ("The Fine Arts," pp. 102-3), has very well expressed the reasons for giving thoughtful consideration to tradition—even to myth—in the interpretation of history. He says: "I regard the present tendency to mistrust tradition, only because it is tradition, as in the highest sense uncritical. . . . Tradition, when not positively disproved, should be allowed to have its full value; and a sounder historic sense is exercised in adopting its testimony with due caution than in recklessly rejecting it and substituting guesses which the lack of knowledge renders unsubstantial. Tradition may err about dates, details, and names. It is just here that antiquarian research can render valuable help. But there are occasions when the perusal of documents and the exercise of what is called the higher criticism afford no surer basis for opinion. If in such cases a legend has been formed and recorded, the student will advance further toward comprehending the spirit of his subject by patiently considering what he knows to be in part perhaps a mythus than by starting with the foregone conclusion that the legend must of necessity be worthless, and that his cunning will suffice to supply the missing clue."

In the preparation of the Chronology, not only have the original sources, whenever available, been used, and full references given thereto, but references have also been furnished to later, and secondary, authorities. Even "popular" works have been drawn upon, where these add to our knowledge or understanding of the subject under consideration. Furthermore, frequent cross-references have been supplied, so that related subjects may be easily compared, without reference through the Index.

In most cases, quoted facts and statements have been allowed to tell their own story, with little or no comment by the author; occasionally, however, especially in connection with the periods of discovery and early settlement, where it is usually difficult to convey a clear and comprehensive idea by merely quoting from the fragmentary, scattered, and often very perplexing, records, it has seemed desirable to compare and discuss the meagre facts, and, when possible, to draw conclusions from them; and the author has even yielded to the temptation to formulate certain theories, which, in many cases, he is fully aware that he has been unable satisfactorily to sustain. They are given in the hope that in this way an occasional hint may be supplied which will prove of value in some more comprehensive or detailed investigation.

While the Chronology, in form and substance, is primarily a compilation, nevertheless, it contains a considerable admixture of new material; and even the old facts and statements will often be found to have acquired a new significance by being placed in their true chronological sequence, and viewed in relation one to another.

The Chronology is intended to form a complete work in itself, containing, as it does, sometimes in condensed and sometimes in extended form, all of the historical material found in Volumes I and III, and everything of real importance from Volume II, in addition to much that has been obtained since these volumes were written. Doubtless, more satisfactory results would have been obtained in the work as a whole had it been possible to complete the Chronology before writing the earlier volumes, as these are based primarily upon the very sources that have been developed, usually in more detail, in the Chronology.

As explained in the Preface (Volume I), considerable space has been devoted, especially during the early periods, and in connection with matters of topographical and antiquarian interest, to facts and occurrences which, in themselves, may sometimes seem of but little moment, for it not infrequently happens that these apparently insignificant trifles acquire interest and importance beyond themselves, through their association with people, events, or places, which have since become famous.

It has also seemed desirable to add occasional brief references to contemporary occurrences of outstanding importance, or of special interest, in other parts of America, and even abroad, so that the reader may be in a position to study intelligently the various factors which helped to form public opinion, at any given moment, on Manhattan Island, and thereby be better able to understand the underlying motives which prompted action on the part of the inhabitants.

In consulting the Chronology, an eye should be kept on the Addenda, which occasionally contains new material and corrections not referred to in the text or in the marginal notes.

Although new light has been thrown on some vexed questions, many still remain unanswered. Who, for example, was the first European to set eyes upon Manhattan Island? Was it Karlsefni, the Norseman, about the year 1020, or possibly the French explorer whose intimate knowledge of our bay was shown on the Cossin Map, five and a half centuries later? Who were the first foreign sojourners on our island? If neither the early Norse voyagers nor the projectors of the Cossin Map, were they, perhaps, the weather-stressed crew of some phantom ship driven for shelter into our splendid harbour on one of those mysterious clandestine voyages along the North East Coast which we know from casual references and from unidentified maps must have been of almost yearly occurrence during the 16th Century? Or does the honour perchance belong to the "pretended Dutch Governour," and his followers, whom Samuel Argall is said to have found on the island in the Autumn of 1613, and who, it now seems, may well have been that famous pioneer in our waters, Adriaen Block, and his indomitable shipmates? Or, again, was the first permanent settlement on Manhattan begun by Minuit, in 1626, or by May and Tienpont in 1624, in accordance with Catalina Trico's much maligned statements, which are certainly strengthened by the testimony of the recently discovered Van Rappard documents, as well as by the cumulative evidence of other records here grouped under these early years? Or is it possible that it was even earlier?—during that mysterious period between the founding of Fort Nassau in 1614 and the arrival of the "Nieu Nederlandt" in 1624. On the whole, this last date seems the most probable.

These, and many similar questions, rise in the mind of the student, and demand further investigation and analysis. On one point there is no longer room for reasonable doubt; the "Nieu Nederlandt" (the "Nieu Verdriet" of the Van Rappard documents) arrived at Manhattan in May or June, 1624, with the first officially organized company of colonists for New Netherland. The question which still puzzles historians is whether any of her passengers remained on Manhattan Island, forming the nucleus of a permanent settlement, the vanguard of that firmly established by Minuit, in 1626. On this point the information now available, although not absolutely conclusive, is distinctly affirmative.

One apparently important source, at least, has not been adequately examined,—the collection of papers representing the semi-public records of Dutch notaries in the 16th and 17th Centuries. These records are contained in several hundred volumes, and are preserved in the National Archives at The Hague. This great mass of material has only recently become accessible. In 1919, Dr. F. C. Wieder made, for the author, a cursory examination of the records for the years 1623, 1624, and 1625, but without important results. It is hoped, however, that a more thorough inspection, covering a longer period, now being made for the author by Dr. A. Eekhof, may yield at least a few facts of interest for inclusion in the Addenda to the fifth volume of the Iconography. Other important Dutch and English sources will doubtless be discovered, and a further comparison and analysis of the known sources will surely bring out new information. Of one thing, especially, the author is convinced; a thorough study of the 16th and early 17th Century maps and voyages would richly repay the patient scholar. Harrisse and others have nobly blazed the way, but a great deal remains still to be done in this fascinating field.

After careful consideration, the difficult question of how best to deal with the perplexing problem of Old- and New-Style dates was settled by following the Gregorian Calendar (or New-Style) from October 5/15, 1582, when its use began on the Continent, until Sept. 6/16, 1664, when this method of dating was dropped from the city records, after the capture of New Amsterdam by the English. From Sept. 22/Oct. 2, 1664, when the Julian system of reckoning was first used in the court records, until Sept. 3/14, 1752, when England adopted the Gregorian Calendar, Old-Style is used. To avoid confusion, double dates are introduced during periods of transition, and also in connection with all English dates during the Dutch occupation of the city, and all Dutch and other Continental dates during the English occupation.

In bespeaking the indulgence of the reader in connection with the many faults which he is all too conscious this work contains, the author feels that a special word of apology is due for frequent inconsistencies throughout the four volumes in the use of upper- and lower-case; inconsistencies which are primarily due to the considerable number of persons who, from first to last, have collaborated in its production. These did not become conspicuous until the page proof of the Chronology was so far advanced that a revision was impracticable. This apology must be extended to include also, specifically, the gelatine plates in Volumes IV and V, which are far less satisfactory than those made in Holland for the second volume. Although the greatest care was taken in the preparation of the original photographs from which the plates were made, it has proved impossible to get from these, in this country, prints comparable with those made abroad.

In addition to the acknowledgments made in previous volumes, it is a pleasure to add here a further word of appreciation regarding the work of Mr. Thomas W. Hotchkiss, who has devoted more than ten years to researches for the Chronology, a large part of which is the direct result of his pains-taking labour and enthusiasm.

The author is also particularly indebted to Dr. A. E. Peterson, who has contributed much valuable material, especially in connection with the last decade under Dutch rule, and the Revolutionary Period, including extracts from the important collection of William Smith Papers recently acquired by the New York Public Library, and examined for the first time, critically, for this work; to Professor A. J. F. van Laer, who, in addition to supplying a number of translations from Dutch printed and manuscript sources, has read the proof of the Dutch Period, and made many constructive criticisms and additions; to Mr. Alexander Wall, now Librarian of the New York Historical Society; to Mr. Peter Nelson, Assistant State Archivist, who has cheerfully answered frequent inquiries regarding documents in his charge; to Mr. Samuel Oppenheimer, who has furnished many important items regarding the Jews in early New York; to Miss Zula Ziebach, whose notes on the early taverns and their keepers shed new light upon a phase of our city's life which, from the earliest days, has been a potent factor in its development; and finally to Miss Ellen C. Ahern, for three years a keen and helpful collaborator in this work.

If we except the legends emanating from Plato’s mythical island of Atlantis, perhaps the earliest definite suggestion of a voyage of discovery from Europe to the far west is embodied in the legend of St. Brendan. In or about A.D. 565, Brendan, an Irish monk, having heard of the existence in the west of an “Isle of Saints” (perhaps St. Kilda—from “Holy Culdees”—the Erse name of which was Hirta or Western land), and, seized with a pious desire to see it, embarked with seventeen other monks in an osier boat covered with tanned hides and well greased. After sailing for forty days the monks reached an island with steep scarped sides where they received hospitality and took in provisions. Thence they were carried by the winds to an island covered by countless flocks of sheep (perhaps the Fâros, from far, a sheep). They took a lamb and then continued to a barren island close by where they intended to celebrate the Easter festival. When they had landed and started to cook the lamb the island began to move. The monks fled to their ship and then discovered that they had been on the back of a whale instead of on an island. Next they came to an island where they found a multitude of birds. They remained here until Pentecost, then wandered several months on the ocean. At last they reached an island of which St. Patrick was patron; here they celebrated Christmas, embarking again after the Octave of the Epiphany. A year had passed in these journeys. During the next six, the monks continued the same round, visiting the same islands. During the seventh year they found, to the north, a rocky barren island of the Cyclops’ forge; this was the mouth of hell (perhaps Hecla in Iceland). Finally, they entered a zone of mist and darkness, and discovered the long sought Isle of Saints. They remained here for forty days, and then an angel appeared and told them to return to their own country.

The next important legend relating to this subject records that, or in 714 or 734, the Archbishop of Oporto, with six other Spanish bishops, discovered Antilla or the Isle of the Seven Cities (evidently a revival of Plato’s Atlantis myth—vide supra), and settled upon it with a number of companions of both sexes.

Antillia, represented as a large island in the mid-Atlantic, in about 35° north latitude, first appeared on a map of 1424, preserved at Weimar, and it is found on the principal maps made during the rest of the century. The sixteenth and seventeenth century maps show it as a smaller island, with the name of “Sete Ciudades.” Behaim gave the legend in a note on his globe of 1492.

Next in chronological order, and the first to be based on information susceptible of scientific analysis, came the discoveries of the Norwegians along the north-east coast of the American continent, in the tenth and eleventh centuries, starting from Greenland as a base. Our information regarding these discoveries is derived mainly from three sources, the Flatey Book, the Saga of Eric the Red, and Hauk’s Book. These documents will be described presently, and an attempt made to identify the principal features of our coast therein described. In the year 986, the Greenland Colony was founded, by Eric the Red of Jaerden in Norway, who a few years before had settled in Iceland. In the summer of the same year, Bjarni, whose father, Herjulf, had accompanied Eric, and had settled in Greenland, arrived in Iceland from Norway with a cargo, and, finding his parents departed, determined to follow them. (The following extract is taken from the Flatey Book.) With his crew he put to sea . . . and they sailed for three days before the land was laid but then the fair wind ceased, and north winds and fogs came on, and they did not know where they were going, and they went on for many days. After this they saw the sun, and so were able to get their bearings, whereupon they hoisted sail, and after sailing that day they saw land, and they discussed among themselves what land this could be, but Bjarni said he fancied that it could not be Greenland. They asked whether he would sail to this land or not, ‘I am for sailing in close to the land,’ he said, and on doing so they soon saw that the land was not mountainous, and was covered with woods, and that there were small knolls on it, whereupon they left the land on the port side, and let the sheet turn towards it. Then after sailing two days they saw another land. They asked Bjarni if he thought this was Greenland; he said that he did not think this was Greenland any more than the first place, "for it is said that the land to the north of Greenland is wooded, and that there are many glaciers in it." They sailed by this land, and saw that it was a flat country and covered with woods. At this point the fair wind dropped, whereupon the crew suggested that they should land there; but Bjarni would not. He ordered them to hoist sail, which was done, and they turned the bows from the land, and sailed out to sea for three days before a south-westerly breeze, when they saw the third land; now this land was high and mountainous, with ice upon it. So they asked if Bjarni would put in there, but he said he would not, since—as he put it—"this land appeared to be good for nothing. Then without lowering sail they kept on their course along the coast, and saw that it was an island: once more they turned the bows away from the land, and held out to sea with the same breeze; but the wind increased, so that Bjarni told them to reef, and not crowd more sail than their ship and rigging could stand. They now sailed for four days, when they saw the fourth land. Then they asked Bjarni if he thought this was Greenland, or not. Bjarni replied, 'This is most like what was told me of Greenland, and here we will keep our course towards the land.' So they did, and that evening they came to land under a cape, which had a boat on it, and there on the cape lived Herjulf, Bjarni's father, and it is from him that the cape was named. This land had since been called Herjulfur.

As we shall presently see, there is good reason to believe that the first land sighted by Bjarni was within the limits of the present United States, and that he was therefore the first European to discover the new continent.

In the year 1000, Leif, son of Eric the Red, introduced Christianity into Greenland. In the following year, he bought a ship of Bjarni, engaged a crew of thirty-five men, and, in the year 1002, sailed forth, going first to the country last visited by Bjarni. (The following extract is taken from the Flatey Book."

They sailed up to the land, and having come to a low cape, where there was neither wood nor grass on the ground. The back-ground was all great glaciers, and all the intermediate land from the sea to the glacier was like one flat rock, and the country seemed to them, destitute of value. Then Leif said, 'We have not failed to land, like Bjarni now I will give this country a name, and call it Helluland (the land of flat stone)." Thenupon they returned on board, after which they sailed to sea and discovered the second land. Again they sailed up to the land and cast anchor, then lowered the boat and went ashore. This land was low-lying and wooded, and wherever they went there were wide stretches of white sand, and the whole land was covered under the snow; and they, Leif, said, 'This land shall be given a name from its resources, and shall be called Markland (woodland)," after which they returned to the ship as quickly as possible. And they sailed after that in the open sea with a northwest wind, and were out two days before they saw land, towards which they ran. There they saw a cape, and to the north of the main-land they landed on it, the weather being fine, and looked round; and they perceived that there was a dune on the grass, and it came about that they put their hands in the dune, and carried it to their mouths, and thought that they had never known anything so sweet as that was. Then they went back to the ship, and sailing into the sound which lay between the island and the cape which ran north from the mainland they steered a west-eyed course past the cape. It was very shallow there at low tide, so that their ship ran aground, and soon it was a long way from the ship to the sea. But they were so very eager to get to land that they would not wait for the tide to rise under their ship, but hurried ashore where a river came out of a lake; but when the sea had risen under their ship they took the boat and rowed to the ship, and took her up the river and afterwards into the lake, where they cast anchor, and carrying their leather kibads ashore they put up shelters, and, after eating and drinking, pitched their large tents. [The last part of this description of the surroundings of Leif's camp, as will appear later, is, in all probability, copied from the earlier and fuller description in the Saga of Eric the Red."

"There was no want of salmon, either in the river or the lake, and bigger salmon than they had seen before: the amenities of the country were also good, as they found in the same place fodder there in the winter; there came no frost in the winter, and the grass did not wither there much. Day and night were more equally divided there than in Greenland or Iceland: on the 1002nd shortest day the sun was up over the (Icelandic) marks for both noon and breakfast time (vide infra)."

Now when they had finished building their houses, Leif said to his men, 'Now I will divide our country into two, and have one half of it, and so I shall stay at home in camp while the other explores the country, going no further than they can return by the evening, and not separating.' And so for a time they did this, Leif sometimes going with the explorers, and at others staying at home in camp.

‘It happened one evening that a man of their party was missing, and this was Tyriker the southerner [Germaine]. But [returning] a little later he said in Norse, 'I have found something fresh to report. I found vines and grapes.' 'Is that true, foster-father!' said Leif. 'Certainly it is true,' he replied, 'for I was born there where there was no lack of vines or grapes."

'Now they slept that night, but in the morning Leif said to his crew, 'We will now do two things, keeping separate days for each; we will gather grapes and cut down vines, and fell wood, to make a cargo for my ship,' and this suggestion was adopted. The story goes that their pincane was full of grapes. So a cargo was cut for the ship, and in spring they made ready and sailed away (to Greenland); and Leif gave the country a name according to its resources, on a subsequent voyage (p. infra) and called it Wineland."

(The following extract is from the Flatey Book; other versions make Thorvald a companion of Kjalnefoss, on a subsequent voyage (p. infra)) "Now (probably in 1004, the year after Leif's return) there was much discussion of Leif's expedition to Wineland, and Thorvald, his brother, thought that the exploration of the country had been confined to too narrow an area. So Leif said to Thorvald, 'If you wish, brother, you shall go to Wineland in my ship."

Thenafter Thorvald prepared for this expedition, taking thirty men...

Afterwards they made their ship ready and held out to sea, and there is no report of their voyage before they came to Wineland to Leif's camp. There they laid up their ship, and remained quiet that winter, catching fish for their food. But in the spring they thought they could make ready their ship, and ordered the ship's pincane with some of the crew to go to the west of the country and explore there during the summer. It seemed to them a fine wooded country, the trees coming close down to the sea, and there were white sands. There were many islands, and many shalows.

They found no traces either of men or beasts, except that on an island to the west they found a wooden barn. Finding no further human handicraft they returned, and came to Leif's camp in the autumn.

But the next summer Thorvald sailed to the east with his trading ship, and along the more northerly part of the country: then a sharp storm arose off a cape, so that they ran ashore, breaking the ship's rigging and making it unserviceable. Then Leif said, 'This land shall be given a name from its resources, and shall be called Markland (woodland)," after which they returned to the ship as quickly as possible. And they sailed after that in the open sea with a northwest wind, and were out two days before they saw land, towards which they ran. There they saw a cape, and to the north of the mainland they landed on it, the weather being fine, and looked round; and they perceived that there was a dune on the grass, and it came about that they put their hands in the dune, and carried it to their mouths, and thought that they had never known anything so sweet as that was. Then they went back to the ship, and sailing into the sound which lay between the island and the cape which ran north from the mainland they steered a west-eyed course past the cape. It was very shallow there at low tide, so that their ship ran aground, and soon it was a long way from the ship to the sea. But they were so very eager to get to land that they would not wait for the tide to rise under their ship, but hurried ashore where a river came out of a lake; but when the sea had risen under their ship they took the boat and rowed to the ship, and took her up the river and afterwards into the lake, where they cast anchor, and carrying their leather kibads ashore they put up shelters, and, after eating and drinking, pitched their large tents.

The saga says, 'We must set the war-shields on the side, and defend ourselves as well as we can, while assuming the offensive but little.' So they did, but the savages, after shooting at them for a while, afterwards fled away, each as quickly as he could. Then Thorvald asked his men if they were wounded at all; they said there were only a few of them cut by the arrows under my arm," said he; 'an arrow flew between the gunwale and the shield under my arm and here it is, and it will be my death. Now my
Then they went out to the island, in the hope that this place might yield something in the way of fishing or jetsam. But there was little food to be obtained on it, though their cattle threw there well. Soon afterwards there came a whale, and they went to it and cut it up, as before.

The cooks boiled this whale, and they ate it; but were all ill from it. The state of the weather then improved and permitted them to row out, and from that time there was no lack of provision during the spring. They went into Straumsfjord, and got supplies from both places, hunting on the mainland, and eggs, and fishing from the sea.

Then they consigned the ships, and were divided.

Then Thorvald died, but they carried out all his instructions, after which they went and met their companions, and told each other such tidings as they knew, and they stayed there that winter, gathering grapes and vines for their ships. Then in the spring they prepared to go back to Greenland, and arrived with their ship in Eiriksfjord, with great news to tell Leif.

The following extract is from the Saga of Eric the Red, collated with that of Hauk's Book; passages in italics from Hauk's Book only. About the year 1020 Karlsefni, a Norwegian, in a ship with forty men, sailed on a trading expedition to Greenland, where he spent the winter with Eric the Red, at Brattahlid, and married his daughter, Gudrid. At this time, there was much discussion about a search for Wineland the Good, and it was said that it would be a profitable country to visit; Karlsefni and Snorri [Thorbrandson] resolved to search for Wineland, and the project was much talked about, so it came about that Karlsefni and Snorri made ready their ship to go and look for a country in the summer. Then Bjarni Grimsson and Thorhall Gamilson joined the expedition in another ship. The total force on both ships was 180 men. (The Flatey Book version reads: "They had with them all kinds of cattle, because they proposed to colonize the country if they could. Karlsefni asked Bjarni to stay long before he decided that he would lend his horses but not give them. Afterwards they put out to sea with their ship, and arriving at Leif's camp safe and sound they carried up their baggage.")

The Saga of Eric the Red continues: "After this they sailed away to the Western Settlement and the Bear Isles. They sailed away from the Bear Isles with a northerly wind. They were at sea two days. Then they found land, and rowing ashore in boats they examined the country, and found there a quantity of flat stones, which were so large that two men could easily have laid sole to sole on them: there were many arctic foxes there. They gave the place a name and named it. Then they sailed for two days with north wind, and changed their course from south to south-east, and then there was land before them on which was much wood and many beasts. An island lay there off shore to the south-east, on which they found a bear, and they called it Bjarnes (Bear Island), but the land where the wood was they called Markland (woodland). The naming of Helluland and Markland, as well as Keenness—see below—is evidently borrowed from the account of Leif's voyage.

When two days were passed they sighted land, up to which they sailed. There was a cape where they arrived. They beat along the coast and left the land to starboard; it was a desolate place, and seemed to them, and to many others, an enchanted land. They rowed ashore, and found there on the Cape the keel of a ship, so they called the place Keenness; they gave the beaches also a name, calling them Furdurstrands (the Wonder Beaches) because the sail past them was long. Next the country became indented with bays, into one of which they steered the ships. [The following passage, as far as the words "They took the ships into the fjord! is a repetition of the last paragraph, and is clearly borrowed from another source."

"Now when they had coasted past Furdurstrands . . . . , they cast anchor and lay there . . . . , and when three days were passed, two Scots, Halli and Hap, who were recognized as steadfast men, went forthward along the land to explore the resources of the country . . . . came running down from the land, and one of them had in his hand a grape-cluster while the other had a wild [self-sown] ear of wheat. . . . They received them into their ship, and went their ways, till the country was indented by a fjord. They took the ships into the fjord. There was an island outside, about which there were strong currents, so they called it Straumsey (Tide or Current Island). There were so many birds on the island that a man's feet could hardly come down between the eggs. They held along the fjord, and called the place Straumsfjord, and there they carried up their goods from the ships and prepared for the voyage.

The Saga of Eric the Red.

It happened that a bull belonging to Karlsefni's party ran out of the wood, and bellowed loudly: this terrified the savages, and they ran out to their canoes, and rowed south along the coast, and there was nothing more seen of them for three consecutive weeks. But when that time had elapsed they saw a great number of the boats of the savages coming from the woods like a rushing torrent, and this time all the staves were waved widdershins, and all the savages yelled loudly. Upon this Karlsfœn's men took a red shield and raised it in answer. The savages ran from their boats and thereon they met and fought; there was a heavy rain of missiles; the savages had war-slings too. Karlsfœn and Snorri observed that they arranged their line of battle on a pole a yard and a half above the ground, closely resembling a sheep's pascal; and dark in colour, and it flew from the pole up on land over the party, and made a terrible noise where it came down. Upon this a great fear came on Karlsfœn and his party, so that they wished for nothing but to get away up stream, for they thought that the savages were setting upon them from all sides, nor did they halt till they came to some rocks where they made a determined resistance...

"It now appeared to Karlsfœn's party that though this country had good resources yet they would live in a perpetual state of warfare and alarm on account of the aborigines. So they prepared to depart, intending to return to their own country. They coasted northward, and found five savages in skins sleeping by the sea; these bad with them receptacles in which was beast's marrow mixed with blood. They concluded that these men must have been sent from the country: they killed them. Later on they discovered a promontory and a quantity of dung, had the appearance of a cake of dung, because the beasts lay there in the winter. Now they came to Straumsfjoerd, where there was plenty of every kind."

"Some men say that Bjarni and Freydis [Hauk's Book gives Gudrid] had two with a hundred and were no further, while Karlsfœn and Snorri went south with forty men, staying no longer at Höp than a scant two months, and returning the same summer. . . . They considered that those mountains which were at Höp and those which they now found were all one, and were therefore of the same nature. And that the distance from Straumsfjord was the same in both directions. They were at Straumsfjord the third winter."

"There Karlsfœn's son, Snorri, was born the first autumn, and he was three winters old when they left."

"In the following spring they came to Mäckland. . . . Here they captured two boys, from whom they learned that "another country lay on the other side, opposite to their own, where people lived who wore white clothes, and uttered loud cries, and carried poles, and went with flags. It is thought that this was Hvítarmanland, or Iceland the Great. So then they came to Greenland, and stayed with Eric the Red for the winter.""

"The brothers reached Wineland first, and took possession of Leif's camp. When Freydis arrived with her husband, Thorvarda she insisted that her brother Leif had lent her the houses, and they therefore "made themselves a camp, which they placed further from the sea by the shore of a lake."

"Now when winter set in the brothers suggested that games should be started to pass the time. This went on for a while, until a quarrel arose which led to discord between them, and the games stopped, and no one went from the one camp to the other."

"After this state of affairs had continued for some time, Freydis persuaded Thorvard to murder all the men in the other camp, and the herself killed all the women. In his fit of passion Freydis beat the pastor with "all the good things which they could collect, and the ship would hold," and after a rapid voyage, "came with their ship to Eric'sfjord early in the summer."

"As we have seen, these voyages to Wineland all took place between the years 1001 and 1013. What we know concerning them was derived originally entirely from oral traditions. These traditions first began to be recorded in written form in the third quarter of the eleventh century, in the Descriptio of the "islands" or countries of the North, which was written then by the well-known Adam of Bremen, but not printed until 1595. This work contains the following reference to Wineland,—"He (King Svein) told me of yet another island besides, discovered by many in that Ocean, which is called 'Wineland,' from the fact that there vines grow naturally, producing the fruit. Moreover, the large globe, closely resembling a sheep's pascal, and dark in colour, and it flew from the pole up on land over the party, and made a terrible noise where it came down. Upon this a great fear came on Karlsfœn and his party, so that they wished for..."

"At a slightly later time, probably during the first quarter of the twelfth century, Ari the Learned, the pioneer among Icelandic historians, composed his Heimskringla, which has come down to us only in a highly condensed summary by the author, which, however, contains one passage of great value as corroborative evidence of the recognized existence of Wineland and of some of the episodes related by the sagas at a period scarcely a century after the occurrences described. This passage reads,—"The country which is called Greenland was discovered and colonized from Iceland. It was a man called Eric the Red from Breidafjord who went out from this country, and took land in the place which was afterwards called Eric'sfjord: he named the country and called it Greenland, saying that the fact that the country had a good name would attract men to journey thither. They found there, both in the east and the west of the country, dwellings of men, and fragments of canoes, and stone implements of a kind from which one could tell that a race had come (fairly) there of the kind that inhabited (bygg) Wineland, and whom the Greenlanders call Skraelinga. Now the date when the settlement was made here was from fourteen to fifteen winters before Christianity came here to Iceland [in 1000], according to an account given to Thorkel Gellison in Greenland by one who himself accompanied Eric the Red out."

"The Lundsmanabok, in the authorship of which Ari evidently played an important part, although dealing almost exclusively with the history of Iceland, contains also one statement of corroborative importance in this connection. Speaking of Ari Marsso, who is there said to have been cast out upon Hvítarmanlanda, it continues,—"In the time of Knút the Great, it was that the land of Greenland, the Good," from which casual reference it seems evident that the existence and position of Wineland were perfectly established and generally known.

"Our prima-facie knowledge of the Wineland voyages is derived from two apparently independent sources, Hauk's Book, and the Flatey Book. The story as known to Hauk has come down to us in two very similar, but not identical, manuscripts, one contained in his book (Hauk's Book), and written partly in his own hand, probably in the first quarter of the fourteenth century, the other written in an early fifteenth century hand, and known as the Íslendingabok. Both manuscripts are probably based on a common written archetype, dating from the early thirteenth century, and can therefore not properly be said to corroborate each other.

"The Flatey Book version, on the other hand, contains much internal evidence of an independent origin; although it was the last of the three to be recorded. Formally, the existing manuscript probably having been written between the years 1370 and 1387, whereby, from internal evidence, it is clear that the existing manuscript of Hauk's Book follows an intermediate text written about 1315, and that similarly the Saga of Eric the Red probably embodies an even earlier and better intermediate text.

"Leaving aside for the moment the question of the relative trustworthiness of the two sources, that represented by Hauk's Book, and that embodied in the Flatey Book, there can be no doubt that, on the whole, the latter contains the fuller and more interesting details of the Wineland voyages, although it is distinctly inferior to the other versions in connection with the most important of them all, Karlsfœn's."

"Quoting Gathorne-Hardy, the latest writer on the subject of the Norse voyages to America,—"Bjarni Herjulfson and his adventure are recorded in the Flatey Book, and nowhere else in literature. Leif's voyage is repeated in the Flatey Book in a highly condensed form, the existing manuscript probably having been written between the years 1370 and 1387, whereas, from internal evidence, it is clear that the existing manuscript of Hauk's Book follows an intermediate text written about 1315, and that similarly the Saga of Eric the Red probably embodies an even earlier and better intermediate text."

"After this state of affairs had continued for some time, Freydis persuaded Thorvard to murder all the men in the other camp, and the herself killed all the women. In his fit of passion Freydis beat the pastor with "all the good things which they could collect, and the ship would hold," and after a rapid voyage, "came with their ship to Eric'sfjord early in the summer."

"As we have seen, these voyages to Wineland all took place between the years 1001 and 1013. What we know concerning them was derived originally entirely from oral traditions. It is also difficult to reconcile the statement that “Karlsfæri coasted south” with the fact that Sandy Hook lies much more nearly west than south from the eastern entrance to the Sound.

It is quite possible, as suggested by the author, that the combination of cape, island, and lake in the Flatey Book description of Leif’s camp was borrowed bodily from the earlier description of Karlsfæri’s Höfði, as it is entirely improbable that Leif ever reached so southerly a point. “The writer of the Flatey Book, imbued with the idea that Leif and Karlsfæri occupied identical camps, has evidently felt himself at liberty to draw his description of the scene of Leif’s landing from the fullest report available, which, as he tells us, was Karlsfæri’s. Given the notion [which exists in the Flatey Book] that all explorers made the same landfall, this was natural and legitimate enough, but it adds an [other] element of confusion to our already difficult task.”

While it is clearly impossible, with the information at our disposal, to harmonize or explain the many confusing, and often contradictory, statements contained in the sagas which have come down to us, and while it is therefore impossible to definitely fix the various localities therein referred to, nevertheless, the general conclusions here stated seem to the author, on the whole, to constitute the best working hypothesis, and to afford the most consistent and likely solution of this much vexed problem. At all events, there seems no sufficient reason to warrant the identification of Wineland as Nova Scotia, which is the only other location that can be seriously defended from a geodetic point of view.

As to positive and demonstrable facts regarding the Norse settlements in Wineland, Fischer is obviously right when he states, in The Discoveries of the Norsemen in America, that, “If we sum up in brief the result of previous researches, we arrive at certain definite facts: the Norsemen for centuries possessed tolerably thriving colonies in Greenland. For this we have historical, geographical and cartographical proof, supported by Papal Briefs, and the accounts of the Papal Legates, and there are also the numerous ruins of churches, homesteads, and other buildings, besides numbers of Norse relics. Wineland, Markland, and Helluland in short, the continent of America, there-by occasionally visited but were not colonized as intended. Every theory in support of a lasting colonization of Wineland has proved untenable, and, most important of all, no amount of research has brought to light [there] any Norse remains or Norse ruins.”

The author is quite aware that the above conclusions differ in important particulars from those of the majority of recent writers on the Norsemen, who exclude altogether southern New England, Connecticut, and New York, when considering the location of Wineland.

Mr. George Parker Winship, who is entitled to speak with high authority on all matters regarding the early voyages to our coast, and who represents the point of view of advanced modern criticism, sums up briefly the facts, as he understands them, in a recent letter to the author, from which the following extracts are taken. He writes:

“Before the end of the tenth century, Scandinavian voyagers had found their way to the land south-west of the colonies on the Greenland coast. This land seemed to them quite as good for purposes of settlement as the sea-coast villages in Iceland from which they came. An attempt was therefore made to establish here a new colony. By the year 1000 A.D. houses had been built, cattle pastured, and a child born at this westernmost outpost of mediaeval European wanderings. The Norse seamen, who had first been carried to this land by the ocean currents during a prolonged and dense fog, were able afterward, on several successive voyages, to lay their course to the place selected for a settlement there and back again to the earlier outpost colonies in Greenland, apparently with comparative certainty. This much may be stated, with considerable confidence, as a summary of all that is known regarding the earliest European visits to America.”

After reviewing briefly the voyage of Bjarni, Leif, Thorvald, and Karlsefni, in substantial agreement with the narrative outlined above, he continues:

“In the original Saga text there are only two statements which lend themselves to serious scientific analysis as evidence regarding the region visited by the Norse explorers. One is that, at the settle¬ment, on the shortest day in the winter, the sun rose and set again in “Dagmal” position. There can be no possible doubt that the seafarers knew precisely what this meant, and that their observation was trustworthy. Unluckily, the modern astronomer
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

The Engroneland to which Chevalier Nicola made his voyage was doubtless Greenland. If the story of his trip to East Bygd be true, or his visit has a peculiar interest as the last distinct glimpse afforded us of the colony founded by Eric the Red. From the description of Estolland, it has proved impossible to identify the island with any assurance: but the common conjecture has identified it with Newfoundland. Concerning Drogue, there is more certainty. Its description, and that of the vast stretch of country beyond it, peopled by naked savages who lived by hunting and who were ruled by chiefs, is doubtless a description of America.

The authenticity of the Zeno narratives has long been a subject of contention among geographers. By some, the story has been looked upon as a Venetian claim to the discovery of America, but Nicola sets up no such claim. He gives the story simply as an interesting narrative of his ancestors' voyages. Putke, in The Discovery of America, thinks it reasonable to conclude that Nicola reproduced the ancestral documents faithfully, because his book shows knowledge that he could not have got in any other way. Bearely, in Dawn of Modern Geography, III: 456—60, and elsewhere, and Lucas, in Annals of the Zeno Voyages (1893), regard the narratives as sixteenth century forgeries, whereas Miller cleverly reproduces the Silver Map of the World (1900), at least partially accepts them.

The exploration and settlement of the Carolines by the French seigneur, Jean de Béthencourt, from 1402, and of Madeira by Zarco and Vas, in the service of Prince Henry, from 1420, gave European enterprise a new and more advanced base for western expeditions. Last among the forays of the great Atlantic discoveries of 1492 and subsequent years, come the systematic colonization of the Azores, from about the year 1456, and the Portuguese expeditions, from the Azores as a starting point, into the tropics of further discoveries. Before the death of Prince Henry (1460), exploration had pushed some way into the Atlantic, south-west as well as due west from Europe, in the direction of Brazil and the West Indies, and therefore towards the distant shores of North America.

Jean Cousin, of Dieppe, is claimed by Desmarquets and other writers to have discovered South America in this year.—See Vol. II: 34.

On Aug. 3, Columbus sailed from Palos with three ships, the "Santa Maria" (the flagship), the "Pinta," and the "Niña," and, on Oct. 12, landed at Guanahani (doubtless San Salvador or Watlings Island), one of the Bahama group, and took formal possession in the name of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain. On the 18th, he landed on the island of Cuba, and shortly afterward discovered Haiti and built a fort on the shore named "La Navidad." Here he left a garrison, and sailed for home on Jan. 4, 1493.

Columbus's account of his first voyage, in a Spanish letter to Lorenzo de SanzAngel, was first printed in April, 1493. See Chronic Catalogue, p. 8. His journal and maps are lost, but extracts from the former are preserved in Historia del Indios, by Las Casas. See also Rudolph Cronau, The Discovery of America and the Landfall of Columbus (N. Y., 1921).

On May 4, 1493, Pope Alexander VI, issued a "Bull" fixing the "Line of Demarcation" between Spain and Portugal on a meridian passing through a point 100 leagues west of the Azores. The convention at Tordesillas, on June 7, 1494, moved the line to a point 370 leagues west of the Cape Verde Islands.

On Sept. 5, 1493, Columbus sailed from Cadiz, with 17 ships and 1,200 souls, largely colonists. On reaching La Navidad, he found it a waste, but at once started to build a city, which he named Isabella, a short distance to the east. He did not return to Spain until 1496.

On May 30, 1498 (p. v.), he sailed from San Lucar on his third voyage, and, on Aug. 5, set foot for the first time on the continent, on the north coast of South America.—Harrison, Disc. of N. Ami., Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., Vol. II.

In this year, presumably shortly after May 2, John Cabot—sailed from Bristol on his first American voyage, probably in the "Matthew," returning about Aug. 10, the date of the king's private reward to "him that found the new isle." Pasqualigo, writing 1497 on Aug. 23, says: "the Venetian, . . . who went with the ship from Bristol, in quest of new islands is returned, and says that 700 leagues hence he discovered land, the territory of the Gran Cam. He coasted for 300 leagues and landed; he saw no human beings. . . . He was then three months on the coast."

It is more probable that Cabot's landfall took place between Cape Breton and the Strait of Belle Isle. Although Harrisse, and other writers, have placed this landfall in New Foundland, north of Cape Race, it seems much more likely that it took place on Cape Breton Island, or at the north end of Nova Scotia; as, otherwise, it would be difficult, even making due allowance for fog and off shore winds, to explain why Cabot, in search of a western passage, should have passed by the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

On this voyage, which lasted about three months, or more likely on the second, undertaken during the following year, with five vessels, or during both of these voyages together, he sailed along the North East Coast.

Cabot's journals and charts are lost, and our contemporary information in regard to this second voyage is confusing and contradictory, even such as is derived from Cabot himself. Indeed, the very existence of this voyage, or rather the period of the expedition in American waters has been questioned. It seems altogether probable, however, that the voyage took place and that Cabot followed the coast, at least as far south as Cape Hatteras, and very likely sighted Sandy Hook. It is even possible that he coasted as far south as Florida, and there is good reason to believe that he landed, and explored the coast at a number of points.

The celebrated world-map drawn by Juan de la Cosa in 1500 (C. Pl. 1, Vol. II) is, doubtless, the first map to embody the results of Cabot's explorations on these voyages. This important map, with its mysterious and insinuating coast-line, is also the first to show any part of the North American continent. That this coast line was intended for America, and not for Asia, is evident, from the fact that the names which it contains are entirely different from those found at the time along the Asiatic coast, as well as for other reasons, fully discussed by Harrisse in Discurso, of N. Am. (p. 8.)

From the description of our coast on this map, it seems clear that Cabot (or the author of the map, whoever he was) followed pretty closely the sinuosities of the shore, and that it does not require much imagination to recognize, in the prominent headland thereon delineated, Cape Cod. One might even venture to wonder whether the well-defined bay full of islands, south-west of the prominent cape, and just where the land begins to trend distinctly to the south, may not have been intended to represent the bay of New York; but this, of course, is mere surmise. See Harrisse, John Cabot, the Discoverer of North America, and Sebastian, his Son (London, 1858) The Discovery of North America (London, 1882), S. W. Bailey, John and Sebastian Cabot, the Discoverers of America (London, 1898).

May 10, 1497, Vespucius sailed from Cadiz, and about July 1 sighted land, which he believed to be the continent, in 16° N.L. (probably in the Gulf of Honduras). Thence he followed the coast in a general northerly direction until he reached a place which is called Lariab in the Italian version of his journal (Lettera), and Parias in the Latin version (Cosmographiae Introductio). Vide infra.

This place, we are told by Vespucius, was "in 23° beneath the parallel of Cancer," and probably corresponds to the modern Tampico, the most westerly port on the Gulf of Mexico. The name Parias is found in this location on Schöner's globe of 1515. His globe of 1520 has Paria. See Thacher, The Continent of N. Am., Index, under Parias.

From this point, Vespucius says, he continued, always following the sinuosities of the coast, a distance of 870 leagues—about 3,200 miles—in a north-eastly direction. This is evidently an error for north-easterly, as otherwise he would have travelled, overland, almost to California. At the end of this course, he reached "the finest harbour in the world," where he remained 37 days.

Leaving here in July, he sailed 100 leagues, in an E.N.E. direction, to an archipelago, which he supposed to be Bermuda, but which in that latitude is equally good reason to identify with the islands off the coast of Maine. Thence he returned to Cadiz, reaching there Oct. 15, 1498 (the Latin edition gives 1499, evidently an error), after an absence of 17 months.

Vespucius' original journals of his four voyages, to which he referred his Mundi Naviges, and his Lettera, under the same "Quatro Giornali," as having been submitted to the King of Portugal, have disappeared. They were, however, mentioned by Jean Vespucius, his nephew and successor as pilot-major, May 3rd, as being, after his uncle's death, in his possession.

All the information that we have on the subject of the first voyage is contained in La Lettera (a letter addressed to Pietro Soderni, "Veneziano Perpetuum") of Florence, signed by Vespucius, and dated from Lisbon, Sept. 4, 1504. This letter contains a résumé of Vespucius' four voyages.

The Lettera is known by two versions, the original, in Italian, with the title Lettera de Amerigo Vespuccio delle isole nuovamente trovate in quattro suoi viaggi, being a small quarto of 16 leaves, uncut, but probably printed at Florence, in 1505 or 1506, for Pietro Pacini, by Gian di Carlo di Pavia. The only copy in America of this rare and important work is in the Princeton University Library. The first Latin version was printed in the Cosmographiae Introductio, by Walsermüller (Hylatoomus), at St. Die in the Voges mountains, from a French edition, now lost, and is dated April 25, 1507. The best English translation of the Italian and Latin texts is that of Michael Kerney, published in 1893, and reproduced, on the same page with the Italian and Latin texts, in John Boyd Thacher's The Continent of America, from which the following extract, describing Vespucius' first voyage, is taken:

"This land [Lazur] is within the torrid zone, close to or just under the parallel which marks the Tropic of Cancer, where the pole of the horizon has an elevation of 23 degrees, at the extremity of the second climate. Many tribes came to see us and wondered at our faces and our whiteness, and they asked us whence we came: and we gave them to understand a number of points, and that we were going to see the world, and they believed it. In this land we placed baptismal fonts, and an infinite number of people were baptized, and they called us in their language Carabi, which means men of wisdom. We took our departure from that port: and the province was called Lazur; and we navigated along the coast always in sight of land, until we had run 870 leagues of it, still going in the direction of the maestre [north-west] making in our course many halts, and holding intercourse with many peoples: and in several places we obtained gold by quarter but not by quantity, for we were not yet well enough in discovering the land and learning that they had gold. We had now been thirteen months on the voyage: and the vessels and the tackling were already much damaged, and the men worn out by fatigue: we decided by general council to haul our ships on land and examine them for the purpose of staunching leaks, as they made much water, and of caulkling and tarring them afresh, and [then] returning towards Spain: and when we came to this determination, we were close to a harbour the best in the world: into which we entered with our vessels: where we found an immense number of people who received us with much friendliness: and on the shore we made a halting with barrels and cakes, and our artillery, which commanded every point: and our ships having been unloaded and lightened, we drew them upon land, and repaired them in every thing that was needful: and the land's people gave us very great assistance: and continually furnished us with water and provisions: and so that in that part of the coast we took a whole people of our own, which suited our game well: for the stock of provisions which we had for our return passage was little and of every kind: where [i.e., there] we remained 37 days: and went many times to their villages, where they paid us the greatest honour: and now desiring to depart upon our voyage, they made complaint to us how at certain times of the year there came over from the sea to this their land, a race of people very cruel, and enemies of theirs: and by means of treachery or of violence slew many of them, and ate them: and some they made captives, and carried them away to their houses, or to country: and how they could scarcely contrive to defend themselves from them, making signs to us that [those were] an island-people and lived out in the sea about a hundred leagues away: and so piteously did they tell us this that we believed them: and we promised to avenge them of so much wrong: and they remained overjoyed herewith: and many of them offered to come along with us, but excused us, not to take with us, for fear that we might save that we took seven of them, on condition that they should come [i.e., return home] afterwards in canoes because we did not desire to be obliged to take them back to their country: and they were contented: and so we departed from those people, leaving them very friendly towards us: and having repaired our ships, and being for seven days out to sea: we arrived at the end of the seven days we came upon the islands, which were many, some [of them] inhabited, and others deserted: and we 1497 anchored at one of them: where we saw a numerous people who called it Iri. . . . We arranged our departure, and the seven men, of whom five were wounded, took an island-canoe, and, with seven prisoners that we gave them, four women and three men, returned to their [own] country full of gladness, wandering at our strength; and they are gone to a prison sail for Spain, while we slaver and reached the port of Cadiz on the 15 day of October 1498, where we were well received and sold our slaves. Such is what befits me, most noteworthy, in this my first voyage.

Starting at Larib, or Paris (Tampico), and following the sinuosities of the coast at a distance of 80 leagues (measured on the globe, or on Lambert's projection), in a general north-easterly direction, carries us a little beyond New York, which may therefore be considered as the northernmost possible limit of Vespuccus' explorations. It is, however, perhaps, safer to identify the fine harbour which he mentions as the northern limit of this voyage as Chesapeake Bay, as, owing to the many bays and river mouths that he must have explored, he is more likely to have over-estimated than under-estimated the actual length of the coast-line between his starting point in 23° and the harbour which marked the northern limit of his exploration of the coast.

Varnhagen, in his Le Premier Voyage d'Amérique Vespucci Dénitivement Expliqué (Vienna, 1896), maintains that 770 leagues, rather than 870, should be accepted as the length of the voyage, when we take into consideration the distance covered going into bays, rivers, etc., which he figured would bring the northern limit of his voyages about to Cape Hatteras. He draws attention to the fact that a cape, and not a harbour, marks the northern limit on the map of Ruych, 1508, and on that in the Ptolemy of 1513.

The archipelago, which Vespuccus tells us lay 10 leagues from the fine harbour, and which they reached in seven days, sailing in a direction "between N.E. & W.," corresponds more nearly, in distance and direction, to the islands in the neighbourhood of the Peoboscot than it does to the Bermudas, which, moreover, there is every reason to suppose were uninhabited at this time, as they are known to have been a few years later.

This voyage of Vespuccus seems undoubtedly to be embodied in the De Lasa Cos a map of 1500 (C. Pl. 1, Vol. II) the northern portion of which is, with equal probability, derived from the Cabot voyages of 1497 and 1498, while the South American coast-line probably follows the accounts brought back by Hojeda and Pinzon, with the former of whom De Lasa himself sailed.

Vespuccus' first voyage is also the basis of the Cantino chart of 1501-2 (C. Pl. 3, Vol. II), and of the Cantino chart of c. 1505 (C. Pl. 3, Vol. II), as well as of the large Waldseemüller map (C. Pl. 5, Vol. II) made to accompany the Cosmographiae Introductio, of 1507, on all of which the Asiatic coast is also clearly shown. It is interesting to remember that the Cantino chart was made at Lisbon, at the very time when Vespuccus was there, on his return from his first voyage.

For a full discussion of Vespuccus, and of his first voyage, see Henry Vignaud, Americi Vespucci (Paris, 1917), the various works of Harrisse, especially his Discovery of North America, and the Iconography, Vol. II, page 6 et seq.

July 18 He doubled the Cape of Good Hope in November, 1497, and anchored at Calicut on May 18, 1498. Charles VIII dies, and Louis XII becomes King of France. He regned until 1515.

May 30 Columbus sets out from San Lucas, Spain, with six ships, on his third voyage. On July 31, he discovered Trinidad, later entered the Gulf of Paria, in South America, and then sailed north along the coast of the mainland. He reached the southern coast of Hayti on Aug. 30, and returned home on Nov. 20, 1498.—Major, Select Letters of Christopher Columbus, with other Original Documents relating to his Four Voyages to the New World. Hakluyt Society, 1847. See also 1492.

In the early summer of this year, Gaspar Cortereal sailed from Lisbon for a voyage to the north-west. He probably visited Newfoundland, the Hudson Straits, and Greenland. In December, he returned to Portugal.—Harrisse, Les Cartes. This voyage seems to have been followed by a second, in the same year, from which Gaspar never returned, and by a third, in 1501 or 1504, in which his brother, Miguel, lost his life. Although unsuccessful in finding a passage to Cathay, these expeditions helped to open up Portugal a source of profitable trade.

In this year, Juan de la Cosa, who had accompanied Columbus on his first and second voyages to the West, compiled his map of the world, on which he delineated all he knew of the discoveries in the New World, this information being undoubtedly derived, as we have seen, primarily from the voyages of Vespuccus and Cabot, probably with some help from those of Hojeda and Pinzon. This is the earliest map known on which the western discoveries are shown, and it therefore constitutes the starting point in a study of the cartography of the North-East coast. The original, drawn on an ox hide, is preserved in the Museo Naval at Madrid. As the names along the coast of North America show no Asiatic influence, and for other reasons, there can be no doubt that the author intended to represent America, not Asia.

This very important map is reproduced (in part) in Vol. II, C. Pl. 1, and is described on p. 151. See also Harrisse, Discovery.

The Cantino map or chart (C. Pl. 2, and pp. 6 and 131, Vol. II; Stevenson No. 8) was made in this year.

The Canerio chart (C. Pl. 3, and pp. 7 and 131, Vol. II) was made between 1502 and 1504.

In this year, the Casa de Contratación was created. It was a state institution, intended to concentrate all transactions relating to the New World; it had its own pilots, under a pilot-major, and a school of cosmography. On Aug. 6, 1508, the Spanish government ordered the creation of an official pattern map, called the padrón real, by a commission of pilots (juntos), chosen from among the most competent men of the kingdom, under the leadership of Americus Vespuccus, who was then pilot-major, an office expressly created for him that same year. This model map was "to embrace all lands, and isles of the Indies until then discovered, and belonging to the Crown." Thenceforth, the use of other maps was forbidden, under penalty.

All pilots were required to report "every land, island, bay, harbour, and other things new and worthy of being noted," discovered by them, as soon as they returned to Spain. In this way the official map of the new world was intended to be always kept up to date, and copies could be obtained at a fixed price from the Casa de Contratación.

On Aug. 2, 1527, Charles V ordered that the padrón real, thenceforth called padrón general, should be verified by the pilot-major twice a year. For further information on this subject, see Vol. II, Cartography; and Harrisse, Discovery of No. Am., 235 et seq.

The earliest book containing a collection of voyages to America was published at Venice in this year. It is entitled Libretto di tutte la Navigazione del del di Spagna delle Isole, e Terreni nouamente scoperti. Per Alberto Fertilese. There is a copy of this book in the John Carter Brown Library. The only other copy known is a defective one which once belonged to Fernando Columbus, and is now preserved in the Biblioteca Marciana.—Harrisse, Bibl. Amer. The British Museum contains a unique small black-letter octavo (imperfect), once belonging to Garrick, and bearing the title A new Interlude and a mery, of the nature of the iiij. Elements (etc.). This little drama, which is one of the earliest of the English moral, or morality, plays, was reprinted by the Percy Society (Vol. XXII) in 1848, edited by J. O. Halliwell. In the cosmo graphical part of the play, "Experience" relates to "Studious Desire" many things regarding "dyuers strange regones and of the noue founde landys" of America. The following extract is taken from this part of the book:

Harrisse, in his Bibliotheca Americana Vetusissima, Additions (1875), No. 58, assigns the date 1517, but copies note on the book, reading: "First impression dated 25 Oct. II Henry VIII," which would indicate 1505. In his Terra-Neova, published in 1900, after discussing the Interlude at some length, he concludes that it was written "vers 1517," 20 years after Cabot's first voyage. The British Museum catalogue, however, gives the date "1520," and seems to have made a special study of the subject, places the date at "1520.

One of the most interesting features of this poem is the reference, at this early date, to a continuous continental coastal-line of "above v. thousande myle," from Labrador to South America, which can hardly be said to have become an established fact until the voyage of Gomez, in 1525, and appeared for the first time in approximately accurate detail on the Mantua Map of the same year (C. Pls. 7 and 8, Vol. II). See Harrisse, Terra-Neova; IV: 1525.

31 Martin Luther posts on the door of the church at Wittenberg, Germany, his ninety-five theses on indulgences. In 1520, he published his Address to the Christian Nobility of the German Nation on the Improvement of the Christian Estate and The Babylonian Captivity of the Church. On June 15, 1520, a papal bull was issued against him, but Luther burnt it publicly on Dec. 10. This led, in 1521, to his excommunication and to the Edict of Worms, which put him under the ban of the Empire. These events ushered in the Reformation.

One of these ships eventually was the first to circumnavigate the globe. In 1520, Lucas Vasquez de Ayllon, one of the auditors of the Island of St. Domingo, despatched a vessel, under the command of Francisco Gordillo, with directions to sail northward through the Bahamas to the shores of the continent. Near the Island of Lucayoneque, Gordillo met a ship commanded by Pedro de Quexos, and the two decided to continue their explorations together, and, contrary to Ayllon's instructions, to engage in a slave trading expedition. After a sail of eight or nine days, they reached the coast of the continent, about in latitude 33° 50' (Chicora and R. Jordan). They landed, and, on June 30, 1521, formally took possession of the country. Then, without further exploration, they returned to St. Domingo, carrying with them some 70 natives.—Testimony of Pedro de Quexos; Act of taking possession by Quexos; Act of Possessions; Testimony of Aldama, cited in Wisnor, Nar. & Crit. Jan.

Giovanni da Verrazzano, a Florentine, is sent by Francis I, to July

King of France, in the "Dauphine," in search of a western passage to Asia. His point of departure was a "deserted rock" in the neighborhood of the island of Madeira, probably the small island now known as Porto Santo. From his letter to the king (the Ciller Codex, C. Pls. 60-81, and pp. 169-71, Vol. II), written at Dieppe on July 8, 1524, after his return, we know that he entered New York Bay, and saw the mouth of the Hudson River.

On March 7, after sightseeing the American continent in the neighborhood of Pamlico N.L. (probably the coast southward for about 50 leagues (presumably to a point just north of Charleston), Verrazzano, observing that the coast trended continually to the south, and finding no "port or any place where we was possible to stay with the ship," turned to the north, and having made a brief excursion on shore near the point of his first landing, proceeded again northward along the coast, to which he gave the names "Forest of Laurels," and "Field of Cedar."

Skirting the coast, which he now found turned to the east, as far as Cape Lookout, which he named "Anuncincita," he "... saw an isthmus a mile in width and 200 long." These words accurately described the continuous sandbar separating the ocean from Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds, which Verrazzano evidently mistook for "the Oriental sea ... which is the one without doubt which goes about the extremity of India, China, and Cathay." The isthmus he gave the name "Verraziano," a name which it retained for more than 50 years.

After leaving Cape Lookout, and passing Cape Hattersal, "... following always the shore, which turned somewhat to the north [he writes], we came in a space of 30 leagues to another land which appeared much more beautiful and full of the largest forests." This is referred to as the land of vines, wild roses, violets, and lilies, and corresponds with the Acacoma Peninsula of Virginia.

Up to this time, it will be noticed, no mention is made of anchoring at night, which probably accounts for Verrazzano not having explored the five thences on Chesapeake Bay, which, moreover, on account of its wide mouth, and the oblique direction of the river, has, from the sea, the appearance of a rather shallow indentation.

After remaining three days in the vine country, they proceeded, "... always skirting the shore [the coast of Maryland] ... which we baptised Am. ^ Possession; [near Cape Lookout]... the first promontory the isthmus of the trees, towards the north and east, navigating by daylight, and casting anchor at night."

Verrazzano next reached "a coast very green with forests but without ports, and with some charming promontories and small rivers [Delaware and New Jersey]." We baptised the coast "di Lazafo;" then "Lazaretto," the first promontory; the second 'Bonivetto' [Cape May]; the largest river 'Vandona' [the Delaware], and a small mountain which stands by the sea 'di S. Polo' [Navesink Highlands].

"At the end of 100 leagues [from the starting point in 34°], we found a very agreeable situation located within two small promontory hills [Navesink Highlands and the high ground at the east end of Staten Island], in the midst of which flowed to the sea a very great river [the Hudson]."

This is the first time that Verrazzano mentions hills in his account, and the Navesink Highlands are, indeed, the first hills of any importance found on the whole stretch of coast from Florida northward.

Beyond these hills, he describes, "... within the land about half a league [inside the Narrows], a very beautiful lake with a circuit of about three leagues [the Upper Bay]."

"... Verrazzano called the bay 'Santa Margarita,' and the river and the surrounding land 'Angolame,' all in honour of the royal family."

In a small book (uno librito), he collected technical observations made during his voyage, notably the longitudinal distances and the movements of the tides. This librocto is, unfortunately, lost.

It is interesting to compare Verrazzano's account of his approach to New York with the accounts of the same neighbourhood written in later years by Van Meteren, Joet, and De Laet. Van Meteren (Jameson, Nar. N. Nath., 7) describes Hudson's entrance, on Sept. 18, 1609, as follows: "They found a good entrance between two headlands [at the Narrows] and entered ... into as fine a river as can be found, wide and deep, with good anchoring ground [vegetation] on both sides."

Joet (Jameson, Nar. N. Nath., 17) writes (Sept. 2, 1609): "We were disposed to the Northward off us we saw high Hills. ... This is a very good Land to fall with, and a pleasant Land to see." He adds (Sept. 3): "The Land is very pleasant and high, and bold to fall withall. At three of the clocke in the after-noone, we came to three great Rivers" (the Raritan, the Arthur Kill, and the Narrows). But De Laet (Van. N. Nath., 18), observes: "Continuing their course along the shore [New Jersey], they observed a white sandy beach and drowned land within; beyond which the land was full of trees, the coast running northeast by north and southwest by south. Afterwards the direction of the coast changed to north by east, and was higher land than they had yet seen, aloft a lofty promontory [the Highlands], behind which was situated a bay
The discoveries of Verrazzano are found first on a map of the world by Vesconte di Maggibio, dating from 1527 (C. Pl. 12, Vol. II); secondly, and most clearly, on a large sea-chart drawn by his brother, Giovanni di Maggibio, which was engraved and published at Florence (C. Pl. 11); and thirdly, on a map of Nova Francia, in Ramusio, 1556 (C. Pl. 14, Vol. II), which is probably derived from some now lost map by Gastaldi, closely resembling his map of 1566 shown in outline on C. Pl. 17, and the unsigned Italian map of 1560 shown on the same plate, which also is probably by him.—See Vol. II, p. 15, footnote 44, and Addenda, 1560.

For a description of these maps, and others of the "Verrazzano type," and a discussion of Verrazzano's voyage as therein depicted, see Vol. II, Cartography, page 15 et seq. See also pages 169-71, and C. Pls. 60 to 85, Vol. II, for a description and reproduction of the Céllere Codex, and a discussion of Verrazzano's other letters and the texts based thereon; and also Prof. Bacchiani's critique, with an introduction by Edward Haggaman Hall, in the 15th Annual Report (1910) of the Am. Scenic & Hist. Preservation Soc. Dr. Hall's translation of the Céllere Codex (occasionally modified) is given here in full, as follows:

(Anote.—The letters R., F., C., and Rm. refer, respectively, to the Céllere or Roman Codex [reproduced in full in Vol. II, C. Pls. 60-81], the Florentine Codex, the fragment in the Academy of Cimento, and the account in Ramusio. The italics in the text of the Céllere or Roman Codex (R.) indicate words not found in the Florentine Codex (F.). The notes in parentheses are interpolations, marginal notes, etc., in R., in a hand differing from that of the amanuensis, and were probably written by Verrazzano himself. Variations from R., found in F., C., and Rm., are given in brackets. If these include additions to the R. text, such additions are in italics.)

"After the storm had moved towards the north, the Most Serene King, I did not write to Your Majesty concerning that which was experienced by the four ships [The R. document uses the word "navi" (ships), commenting "Legi"); meaning something similar. In the following notes, which refer to similar variations which have no special significance, or which cannot readily be expressed in English, or which (as is sometimes the case) make nonsense, I have referred the reader to the Italian text following—Translator.] which thou hadst sent through the Ocean to discover new lands, thinking that thou hadst been informed of everything—how we were compelled by the impetuous force of the winds to return to Brittany with only the distressed Normanda and Dauphine; where having made repairs, Your Majesty will have learned of the voyage we made with them, armed for war, along the coasts of Spain [Rm. "armed with a good arm and armament of war and naval munitions for eight months"]; departing, we sailed westward with an east south-east wind blowing with sweet and gentle mildness [F. lightness]. In XXV days we sailed eight hundred leagues. The XXIII1 day of February [Rm. on the 20 February] (perhaps 16 hours) we experienced as severe a storm as ever any man who has navigated experienced. From which, with divine aid and the goodness of the ship, enabled by its glorious name and fortunate destiny [F. goodness and praise of the glorious name and fortunate achievement. Rm. goodness of the ship together with the good fortune of its name] to resist the violent waves of the sea [Rm. "in order to resist the violence of the waves resulting from the depths of the sea"] which Your Majesty will have learned by the profit which we made thereby.) Later, it was ordered that we should continue the original voyage with the Dauphine alone [Rm. later, with the Dauphine alone, the discovery of new countries was considered in order not to leave incomplete the voyage already accomplished.—See Italian text] having returned from which, I will tell Your Majesty what we have found.

"We started from the deserted rock near the Island of Madeira belonging to the Most Serene King of Portugal [commencing 1524. (The same hand had written 1513, then changed the 3 to 4)] with the said Dauphine, on the XVII of the month of January past, with fifty men, furnished with virtual arms and other muniments of war and naval munitions for eight months; departing, we sailed westward with an east south-east wind blowing with sweet and gentle mildness [F. lightness]. In XXV days we sailed eight hundred leagues. The XXIII1 day of February [Rm. on the 20 February] (perhaps 16 hours) we experienced as severe a storm as ever any man who has navigated experienced. From which, with divine aid and the goodness of the ship, enabled by its glorious name and fortunate destiny [F. goodness and praise of the glorious name and fortunate achievement. Rm. goodness of the ship together with the good fortune of its name] to resist the violent waves of the sea [Rm. "in order to resist the violence of the waves resulting from the depths of the sea"] which Your Majesty will have learned by the profit which we made thereby."

We pursued our navigation continuously toward the west, bearing somewhat to the north. In XXV more days we sailed more than 400 leagues, where there appeared to us a new land never before seen by anyone, ancient or modern.

"We were on land, and I shall tell Your Majesty briefly what we were able to learn of their life and customs:

"They go altogether naked except that at the private parts they wear some skins of little animals similar to martens, a girdle of fine grass worn with various tails of other animals which hang around the body as far as the knees; the rest, nude; the head likewise. Some wear certain garlands [F. similar garlands] of feathers of birds. They are of black color not much unlike the Ethiopians [Rm. they are of berretta color and not much different from the Saracenii]; their hair is black and thick, and not very long, which they sometimes cut or clip in different ways. We could not find any regulation as to the symmetry of the men [F. likeness of the men], they are well proportioned, of medium stature, and rather exceed us. In the chest they are broad, their arms well built, the legs and other parts of the body well put together. There is nothing else to remark, except that they incline somewhat to broadness in the face; but not all, for in many we saw the face clear-cut. The eyes are black and large, the glance intent and quick. They are not very strong, [but] of keen intelligence, swift and the greatest runners. From what we were able to learn by experience, they resemble in the last two respects the Orientals, and many others of those who dwell in the region of China. We were not able to learn in detail of the life and customs of these people because of the shortness of the stay we made on land, on account of there being few people and the ship anchored in the high sea [see Italian text]."

"We found on the shore, not far from these, other people whose mode of life we think is similar. I will tell Your Majesty about it, describing at present the site and nature of said land. The sea-shore is all covered with fine sand five feet high, extending in the form of little hills about fifty paces wide [Rm. rising about 15 feet, extending in the form of broad little hills]. After going ahead [Rm. After going ahead] (of the said navigation vessel), some of the Spaniards, who enter through some mouths, coursing the shore [Rm. washing the shore] on both sides as it follows its winding [F. its shore. Rm. its turning]. Near by appears the spacious land, so high that it exceeds [overtops] the sandy shore, with many beautiful fields and plains [F. provinces], full of the largest forests, some thin and some dense, clothed with as many colors of trees [F. of various colors. Rm. various sorts of trees], with as much beauty and delightful appearance as it would be possible to express. And do not think, Your Majesty, that these are like the Hayrcanian Forest or the wild solitudes of Scythia [Rm. solitudes of Tartary] and northern countries, full of rugged trees [F. full of vines and trees. Rm. wild trees], but adorned and clothed with palms, laurels, cypresses [Rm. tall cypresses ("tall" was also written in R. but was cancelled)], and other varieties of trees unknown in our Europe [We baptised this land "Forest of Laurel" and a little farther down in account of the beautiful cedars it was given the name "Field of Cedars"]; which, for a long distance, exhale the sweetest odors [We smelled the odor a hundred leagues, and further when they burned the cedars and the winds blew from the land] the property of which we were not able to learn, for the cause above narrated, not that it was difficult for us to travel through the forests [F. through the forest], because their size and the thinness of their structure [Rm. the thinness of the structure] was not evident to us. We think that, partaking of the Orient, on account of the surroundings, they are not without some drugs or aromatic liquor. And other riches: gold [F. gold and other], to which land of such a color has every tendancy. It abounds in many animals, stags, deer, bears, bears—likewise in lakes and ponds, with many kinds of birds, adapted and convenient for every delectable pleasure of the hunt [Rm. pleasure of the chase]."

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

This land lies in 34 degrees (like Cathage and Damascus). The air salubrious, pure and with moderate heat and cold; in those regions gentle winds blow, and those which prevail most continuously are west-north-west and west [see Italian text], in summer time, at the beginning of which we were (in those regions); the air fresh and with frequent rains, and if sometimes cloudy it is because the south winds the air gathers in clouds or darkness [see Italian text], in an instant, not lasting, it is dispersed, and the air again becomes pure and clear; the sea tranquil and not boisterous, the waves of which are placid. And although the shore always tends to lowness, and is barren of ports, it is not troublesome to sailors [Rm. tressises for sailors], being entirely clear and without any rocks; so that within only four or five paces from land are found, regardless of flood or ebb, XX feet of water, the depth of the sea increasing in uniform proportion [see Italian text]; with such good holding-ground [P. territory. Rm. anchorage] that any ship howsoever affected by the tempest can never perish in those parts unless it breaks its rope [Rm. cable]. And this I have proved by experience; because many times at the beginning of March when the [full force of the winds usually prevails in all countries, being anchored in the high sea, oppressed by storms, we found the anchor broken before it dragged on the bottom or made any movement. We have seen it how in a part of the coast, which we found turned to the east. Seeing everywhere great fires on account of the multitude of inhabitants, anchoring there off the shore [Rm. anchoring off that shore] because it did not contain any port, on account of the need of water we sent the little boat to land with XX feet of water, so that the sea cast up on the shore, on account of the strand being open, it was not possible, without danger of losing the boat, for any one to land. We saw many people on shore making us various signs of friendship, motioning us ashore; among whom I saw a magnificent deed, as Your Majesty shall hear.

"Seeing ashore by swimming one of our young sailors, carrying to them some trinkets, such as little bells [Rm. in order to send them some of our things, by the Indians much common desired and valued, as are sheets of paper, little bells], mirrors, and other pretty trifles, and having approached within 4 fathoms of them, throwing the goods to them and wishing to turn back he was so tossed by the waves that, almost half dead, he was carried to the edge of the shore. Which having been seen, the people of the land ran immediately to him; taking him by the head, legs and arms, they carried him some distance away. Whereupon, the youth, seeing himself carried in such a way [P. in such shapel, stricken with terror, uttering a scream, which they drew out and showing him that he should not fear. After that, having placed him on the ground in the sun at the foot of a little hill, they performed great acts of admiration, looking at the whiteness of his flesh, examining him from head to foot [Rm. omitting "examining him from head to foot"], taking off his shirt and stockings, and looking him naked, they made a very large fire near him, placing him near the heat. Which having been seen, the sailors who had remained in the small boat, full of fear, as is their custom in every new experience, thought that they wanted to roast him for food. His strength recovered, having remained with them awhile, he showed by signs that he desired to return to the ship who [the natives], with the greatest kindness, holding him always close with various embraces, accompanied him as far as the sea, and in order to assure him more, stationing themselves on a high hill, stood watching him until he was in the boat. Which young man learned of this people that the land was thus of black color like the others, the flesh lustrous, of medium stature, the face more clear-cut, much more delicate of body and of limb, of much less strength and of keen intelligence. He saw nothing else [Rm. I saw nothing else. (we called it Amozica from the day of arrival, where is found an isthmus a mile in width and about 200 long, in which, from the ship, was seen the straital sea between the west [before had been written "the east"] and north. Which is the one, without doubt, which goes about the extremity of India, China and Cathay. We navigated along the said isthmus with the constant hope of finding some strait [after which is written, but cancelled, "to the end of or, in order to find—"] or true straititude at which the great land end toward the land north in order to be able to penetrate to those blessed shores of Cathay, to which isthmus was given by the discoverer [the name Isthmus of] Verrazzanis as all the land found was named Francesca after our Francis.).

"Having departed thence, following always the shore which turned somewhat toward the north, we came in the space of fifty leagues to another land which appeared much more beautiful and full of the largest forests. Anchoring at which, XX men going about two leagues inland, we found the people through fear had fled to the woods. Searching everywhere, we met with a very old woman and a very old man, [VII] to XX years of age, who through fear had hidden themselves in the grass. The old one had two little girls whom she carried on her shoulders, and back on her neck she carried a boy, all of eight years of age [P. of about eight years. Rm. a little boy of about eight years]. The young woman had as many but all girls. Having approached towards them, they began to throw stones to make signs to us that the men had fled to the woods. We gave them to eat of our food, which the old woman accepted [P. they accepted] with great goutus; the young woman refused everything and with anger threw it to the ground. We took the boy away from the old woman to carry him to France, wishing also to take the young woman, who was of much beauty and of tall stature, it was not however possible for us to conduct her to the sea, on account of the very great cries which she uttered. And having to pass through some woods, being far from the ship, we decided to leave her, carrying only the boy.

"These we found lighter colored than the previous ones, dressed in certain garments of their own, and they are boats, or, what is more, they are of the very large trees, and which they weave with various ends of wild hemp [Rm. cords of wild hemp]. The head bare in the same way as the others. Their food in general consists of pulse which they have in abundance, differing in color and size from ours, of excellent and delightful flavor, besides, from hunting and birds, which they take with bows and with snares. They sow [Rm. bear] many, both high and low, and arrows of reeds, placing at the extremities bones of fishes and of other animals. The beasts in this part are much wilder than in our Europe because they are continually molested by the hunters. We saw many of their boats constructed from a single tree twenty feet long, four wide, which are not fashioned with stones, iron or other kind of metals, because in all this land, in the space of two hundred leagues which we traveled, only one stone of any kind was seen by us. They aid themselves with the fourth element [Rm. they help themselves with fire], burning such part of the wood as is necessary for the hollowing of the boat, also of the stern and prow, so that, sailing, it is possible to plough the waves [Rm. to endure the waves] of the sea.

"The land in situation, goodness and beauty, is like the other; the forests open [scarce—r]; full of various kinds of trees, but not of such fragrances, on account of being farther north and colder. We saw in that land many vines growing wild, which, rising, entwined themselves around the trees, as they do in Cispain Gaul [Rm. as they are accustomed to do in Lombardy]; which, if they had a perfect system of culture by agriculturists, without doubt would produce excellent wines, because we found many times the dry fruit of those [P. drinking and stocking] and the dry fruit of those [Vines] sweet and agreeable, not different from ours. They are held in esteem by them [the inhabitants], because wherever they grow, they live up the surrounding bushes [see Italian text] in order that the fruit may be able to mature. We found wild roses, violets and lilies, and many sorts of herbs, and fragrant flowers different from ours. We did not learn about their habits on account of their being within, inland. We think, on account of many signs which we saw, they are composed of wood and grass, and we believe also from various indications and signs that many of them, sleeping on the ground, have nothing fear cover except the sky. We did not learn anything else of them. We think all the others of the land [by which we passed lived in the same manner.

"Having remained in this place three days, anchored off the coast, we decided, on account of the scarcity of ports, to depart, always skirting the shore (which we baptized Arcadia on account of the beauty of the trees. In Arcadia we found a man who came to the shore to see what people were; who stood hesitating and ready for flight. Watching us, he did not permit himself to be approached. He was handsome, nude, with hair fastened back in a knot, of olive color. We were, about XX in number others, and yielding to our teaching he appeared to us about and said, pointing with his hand to the sky, as if to offer us fire. And we made fire with powder and flint-ended and he trembled all over with terror and we fired a shot. He stepped as if astonished and prayed, worshipping like a monk, lifting his finger toward the sky, and pointing to the ship and the sea he appeared to bless us] toward the north and east, navigating only during the day

we have found on this voyage. They excel us in size; they are of bronze color [F. of very white color], some inclining more to whiteness, others to tawny color; the face sharply cut, the hair long and black, upon which they bestow the greatest study in adorning it; the eyes black and auburn, and a gentle, imitating much the ancient [manner]. Of the other parts of the body I will not speak [F. I do not speak] to Your Majesty, as they have all the proportions which belong to every well built man [F. to one well built]. Their women are of the same beauty and charm [F. form and appearance] with the men, with hair of all colors, and a face delicate and gentle, imitating much the ancients. Many of them, as were all the women I have seen, are more agreeable to the sight than the men, because they are more regular in their proportions, as to beauty, and agreeable aspect; of habits and behavior as much according to womanly custom as pertaining to human nature; they go nude with only one skin of the stag embroidered like the men [F. nude except the private parts, which they cover], and some wear on the arms very rich skins of the lynx; the head being clothed with various arrangements of braids, composed of their own hair, which hang on one side and the other of the breast. Some use other hair-arrangements such as the women of Egypt and of Syria [F. Scoria] use, and these are who are advanced in age and are joined in wedlock. They have in the ears various pendant trinkets as the orientals are accustomed to have, the men like the women, among which we saw many plates wrought from copper, which is prized by them more than gold; which, on account of its color, they do not esteem; but among all [colours] it is held by them the most worthless [F. because it is held very worthless on account of the yellow color which they have by nature], and it is valued higher as it is dark or black. Some things which were given to us and which they most valued were little bells, blue crystals and other trinkets to place in the ears and on the neck. They did not prize cloth of silk and of gold nor even of other kind [F. kind of cloth], nor did they care to have them; likewise with metals like steel and iron; for many times showing them our arms they did not conceive admiration for them nor ask for them, only examining the workmanship. They did the same with the mirrors; suddenly looking at them, they refused them, laughing. They are very liberal, so much so that all which they have they give away. We formed a great friendship with them, and one day, before we had entered with the ships into the port, respecting on account of the unfavorable weather conditions anchored a league at sea, they came in great numbers in their little barges to the ship, having painted and decked [F. tattooed and beaded]. Rm. all painted the face with various colors, showing us it was evidence of good feeling, bringing us of their food, signifying us we were safe the safety of the ship we ought to anchor in the port, continually accompanying us until we cast anchor there.

In which [F. on account of which] we remained XV days, supplying ourselves with many necessities; where every day the people came to see us at the ship, bringing their women, of whom they were very careful [F. and remained miles [Dutch miles, or leagues] according to their estimation, where they found a beautiful river. Thence the coast again turned eastward, which they followed for nearly fifty miles and then discovered an island which had the form of a triangle, lying ten miles off the main land, which they explored and found it well populated, which they called Claudius." De Laet names Hakluyt among his sources, and probably derived his account from Hakluyt's publication. It is interesting to notice that he uses the name Claudius, which appears on the Dutch maps of the period.

The Cillere Codex continues: "We came to another land, distant from the island XV leagues, where we found a very beautiful port, and before we entered it, we saw about XX small boats of the people which came with various crises of wonder round about the ship. Not approaching nearer than fifty paces, they halted, looking at the edifice [i.e., the ship]. Rm. the workmanship, our figures and clothes; then all together they uttered a loud shout, signifying that they were glad. Having measured them somewhat, imitating their gestures, they came so near that we threw them some little bells and mirrors and many trinkets, having taken which, regarding them with laughter, they entered the ship, and all the people on the ship for various articles among themselves, remaining a long time, they made their women stay in the boats, and however many entreaties we made them, offering to give them various things, we did not succeed in persuading them to allow them to enter the ship. And one of the two Kings coming one time and finding many attractions, it was their desire to see us, at first always stopped at a place distant from us two hundred paces, sending a boat to inform us of his coming, saying he wished to come to see the ship; doing this as a kind of safe-guard [F. security. Rm. sign of security]. And when they had the response from us, they came quickly, and having stood awhile to look, hearing the noisy clamor of the sailor crowd [F. hearing the shouts and clamor of the mariners], sent the Queen [Rm. madam the Queen . . . remained] with her damsels in a very light boat to stay on a little island distant from us a quarter of a league; he himself remaining a very long time, expressing himself by signs and gestures of various fanciful ideas, examining all the equipments [Rm. all the apparatus and furniture of the ship], asking especially their purpose, imitating our manners [Rm. he also took pleasure in seeing our clothing], tasting our foods, then parted from us benignly. And one time, our people remaining two or three days on a little island opposite the islands, of which they were desirous to see, we came with seven or eight of his attendants, watching our operations, asking many times if we wished to remain there for a long time, offering us his every help. Then, shooting with the bow, running, he performed with his attendants various games to give us pleasure.

Many times we were from five to six leagues inland which we found as pleasing as it is possible to express, adapted to every kind of cultivation—grain, wine, oil. Because in that place the fields are from XXX to XXX leagues wide [of broad, open and devoid of any impediment of trees, of such fertility that any seed in them would produce the best crops. Entering then into the woods, all of which are penetrable by an army of any size in any way whatsoever, we found European oaks, cypresses, ashes, oaks, cypresses, and many kinds of trees different from ours. Animals there are in very great number, stags, deer, lynx, and other species, which they capture in the same way as the other animals with arrows and bows which are their principal arms. Whose arrows are worked with great beauty, placing at the end, instead of iron, emery, Jasper, hard marble, and other sharp stones, which they used instead of iron in cutting trees, making their boats from a single trunk of a tree, hollowed with wonderful skill, in which from fourteen to XV men [of and Rom. 10 to 12 men] may go comfortably; the oar short, broad at the end, worked solely with the strength of the arms at sea without any peril with as much speed as pleases them.

"Going further [See Italian text. Rom. omits, we saw their habitations, circular in form, of XIII to XV paces [or and Rom. 10 to 12 paces] compass, made from semi-circles of wood [i.e., arched saplings, best in the form of an arch] separated one from the other, without system of architecture, covered with mats of straw ingeniously worked, which protect them from rain and wind. There is no doubt that if they had the perfection of methods [Rom. the system by its perfection which we have], they would build magnificent edifices [Rom. grand and superb edifices], for all the maritime coast is full of blue rocks [See Italian text], crystals and alabaster; and for such cause is full of ports and shelters for ships [Rom. shelters for animals. Rom. for ships]. They change said houses for the change said things, as they transport the said houses] from one place to another according to the fertility of the site and the season in which they live. Carrying away [of experience of the site and the season. Having lived in that place they carry away only the mats, immediately they have other habitations made. There live in each a father and family to a very large number, so that in some we saw XXV and XXX souls. Their food is like that of the others: of pulse (which they produce with more system of culture than the others, observing the full moon, the rising of the Pleiades [Rom. Inade. Rom. some stars, and many customs derived from the ancients], also of the chase and fish. They live a long time and rarely become ill; if they are oppressed with wounds [of sign of omission], without crying [Rom. with any infirmity without physician] they cure themselves by themselves with fire, their end being of old age. We judge they are very compassionate and charitable toward their neighbours, making great lamentations in their deaths. We deplore mind all these customs. The relatives, one with another, at the end of their life use the Sicilian lamentation [Rom. omits "Sicilian"], mingled with singing lasting a long time. This is as much as we were able to learn about them.

The shore is situated in the parallel of Rome, in forty and two-thirds degrees [and, and Rom. parallel of Rome in forty-one and two-thirds degrees], but somewhat colder on account of chance and not on account of nature, as I will narrate to Your Majesty in another part, describing at present the situation of said port. The shore of said land runs from west to east. The mouth of the port (which on account of its beauty we called "Refugio") looks toward the south, half a league wide, after entering which between east and north it extends XII leagues, where, widening itself, it makes an ample [very ample] bay of about XX leagues in circuit. In which are five little islands of much fertility and beauty, full of high and spreading bushes, among which a flock [of birds] which islands any number of fleets [Rom. any huge armada], without fear of tempest or other impediment of fortune, could rest securely [very secure]. Turning thence toward the south to the entrance of the port, on one side and the other are very charming hills with many brooks, which from the height, to the sea discharge clear waters.

"In the midst of the mouth is found a rock of petra viva produced by nature, adapted for the building [on it] of any desired engine or bulwark for its protection [Rom. fortress for protection]. [With] theadjacent rocks, at the mouth of the river, we called [La Pelosa Vina] on which side to sail said mouth of the port is a promontory which we called "Jovis Promontory"."

"Being supplied with our every necessity, the 6th day [Rom. 5th day] of May we departed from said port, following the shore, never losing sight of the land. We sailed one hundred and fifty leagues (within which space we found shoals which extend from the continent into the sea go, others, are only covered 3 feet of water; on account of which great danger in navigating, we survived with difficulty and baptized it "Armillata [the shoals off Cape Cod]"), finding it of the same nature and somewhat higher with some mountains (with a high promontory which we named "Polismita") which all indicated minerals. We did not stop there because the favorableness of the weather served us in sailing along the coast [Rom. omits "in sailing along the coast"]: we think it must conform to the other (people[ ]). The shore ran to the east.

"Within the space of fifty leagues, holding more to the north, we found a high land full of very thick forests, the trees of which were pines, cypresses [Rom. and Rom. cypresses] and such as grow in cold regions. The people all different from the others, and as much as those passed were of kind manners, these were full of uncouthness [Rom. rusticity] and vices, so barbarous [Rom. faces so barbarous] that we were never able, with howsoever many signs we made them, to have any intercourse with them. They dress in the skins of bear, lynxes, sea-owls, and other animals. The food, according to that which we were able to learn through going many times to their habitations, we think of is the chase, fish and some products which belong to a species of roots which the ground yields, and neither by its own self. They do not have pulse, nor did we see any signs of cultivation, nor would the ground, on account of its sterility, be adapted to produce fruit or any grain. In trading [Rom. refusing] at any time with them, we desired their things, they came to the shore of the sea upon some rock where it was very steep, and we remained in the boats—with a cord let down us what they wished to give, continually crying on land that we should not approach, giving [Rom. demanding] very quickly the barter, not taking in exchange for it except knives, hooks [See Italian text] for fishing, and sharp metal. They had no regard for courtesy, and when they had [Rom. we had] nothing more to exchange, departing from them the men made at all time an act of contempt and shame [Rom. inmodesty] which any brute creature [Rom. any inhuman and discourteous creature] (such as showing the . . . and laughe) could make. Contrary to their wish, XXX of our armed men were inland two and three leagues (they are in 45's) and when we descended to the shore they shot at us with their bows, sending forth the greatest cries, then fled into the woods. We do not know any thing of any considerable value in this land except the very great forests, with some hills which possibly have some metal, because on many [natives] we saw "pater-nosters" of copper in the ears.

"On the other side, there are two mountains, one and north which we found very beautiful, open and bare of forests, with high mountains back inland, growing smaller toward the shore of the sea. In fifty leagues we discovered XXXII islands (among which we called the three larger "The Three Daughters of Naxos") all near to the continent, small and amusing appearance, high, following the curving [Rom. greenness, Rom. many turns] of the land, among which were formed most beautiful ports and channels, as are formed in the Adriatic Gulf, in the Illirias [Rom. in the Adriatic Gulf in Slavonia and Dalmatia. We had no knowledge of the peoples and think they were [Rom. they stand], like the others, devoid [Rom. omits "devoid"] of morals and culture.

"Navigating between east-south-east and north-north-east, in the space of CL leagues we came near the land which the Britons found in the past [See Italian text], which stands in fifty degrees, and having consumed all our naval stores and victuals, having discovered six hundred leagues, and more of any size [of Rom. of new land, lengthening ourselves with water and wood, we decided to turn toward France.

"How much religion these peoples whom we have found have, we were not able to learn, through lack of language, either by signs or by gestures. We cannot understand a word [Rom. nor know a first cause or author [Rom. nor know one by one cause and author], nor worship the sky, sun, moon or other planets nor have any species of idolatry, nor did we learn that they make sacrifice or other prayers; nor that their people had temples or churches for prayers. We think they may have not any creed and live in entire freedom [Rom. in this freedom], and everything proceeds from ignorance, for they are very easy to persuade, and did with as much enthusiasm

A comparison of these maps with those containing the discoveries of Verrazzano shows that the explorations of these two pioneers together form a complete whole, the combination constituting a fairly accurate survey of the east coast of North America from the Carolinas to Nova Scotia.

For further discussion of Gomez' explorations, as shown on these and other maps of the Gomez type, see Vol. II, Cartography, page 18 et seq., and authorities there cited.

The explanation of the principal difference between the Verrazzano type and the Gomez type perhaps lies in the fact that Gomez, coming from the north, and tacking along the coast, was embayed by Cape Cod, which he, therefore, very distinctly noted, whereas Verrazzano, approaching from the south, evidently kept off shore, and, therefore, missed the cape itself, although he clearly records, under the name "Aremdine sirtes," the extensive shoals lying to the south and east of it. A glance at the modern map shows that the cape is not nearly so prominent when approached from the south as from the north. That Gomez apparently gives no exact information regarding the coast southwest of Cape Cod may he explained by supposing that he feared the shoals, which must have been clearly visible as he rounded the Cape, and therefore, having first stood well out to sea, laid a straight course for Cape Hatters.

Early in this year, Ayllon, in order to preserve his rights under the royal cédula granted him on June 12, 1523, and extended on March 23, 1524, to cover the year 1525, despatched two caravels under Pedro de Guzman to the land of which his expedition of 1520-21 had visited. Quexos succeeded in regaining the good will of the natives, and explored the coast for a distance of 250 leagues, setting up stone crosses bearing the name of Charles V and the date of taking possession.—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 240, and authorities there cited.

The so-called "Wolffenbüttel-Spanish Map" (Iconography, II: 26; Stevenson No. 8) was made at about this time (1535-36).

Ayllon himself sailed, with three ships and 600 colonists of both sexes, from Puerto de la Plata. He reached the coast in about 33° 40' N.L., where he lost his largest vessel, which he replaced by a "gavarra," the first recorded instance of ship building on our coast, and then sailed northward until he came to Guadalupe. There he started the settlement of San Miguel where the English in the next century founded Jamestown. Before the colonists were housed, winter came on and sickness broke out. Ayllon died on Oct. 18. The others decided to return to St. Domingo, but only about 150 succeeded in reaching home.—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 240 et seq., and sources there cited; Harrisse, Dict. de N. Am., 199 et seq.

In this year, the sack of Rome took place. This event is sometimes given as marking the end of the Renaissance.

In this year, Gines Navarro was told by John Rut that, while fishing off the Banks of Newfoundland, he had seen more than 50 Spanish, French, and Portuguese fishing banks—MS. cited by Navarrete, in Harrisse, Terra-Neue, LVI.

The so-called "Weimar-Spanish Map" (C. Pl. 9, and pp. 18, 124, Vol. II; Stevenson No. 9) is made.

The Magnudo Map (C. Pl. 12, Vol. II, and II: 13, 124; Stevenson No. 10) bears this date.

In this year, the Riber Map (C. Pl. 10, Vol. II, and II: 18, 1331 Stevenson No. 11); and Girolamo Verrazzano's Map (C. Pl. 15, Vol. II, and II: 13, 133; Stevenson No. 12) were made.

In the winter of 1554–5, Cortés marched with a land force from Acapulco to Chiapas. Here he joined his fleet and sailed to the west coast of Mexico on May 1, 1555. Then, landing at the Bay of Santa Cruz on May 3, he took possession of the country and started a settlement. After exploring the lower portion of the Californian peninsula, he returned to Acapulco. —Navarrete, Colección de los viajes y descubrimientos que hicieron por mar los Españoles desde fines del siglo XV, IV: 190.

Jacques Cartier, with two ships, sets out from the port of St. Malo on his first voyage to America. On May 10, he reached Newfoundland, and from there until Aug. 15 he explored the Gulf and the coast as far north as Labrador, discovering the Straits of Belle Isle, but he failed to discover the mouth of the St. Lawrence River. At Gaspe Bay he met the Indians and found a large draft of a ship stranded there. He inlanded at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, and the motto "Vive le Roy de France." Having been unsuccessful in his attempt to find a northwest passage to the Indies, Cartier started on his return voyage on Aug. 15, and arrived at St. Malo on Sept. 5. —Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1600), III: 201–11.

With three ships, the "Great Hermina," the "Little Hermina," and the "Hermillon," given to him by Francis I, Cartier starts from St. Malo on his second voyage to the new world. On this trip he discovered and explored the St. Lawrence from its mouth to Hochelaga, made friends with the Indians, and fortified the harbour of St. Croix. He returned to St. Malo on July 6, 1556. —Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1600), III: 315–32.
Three manuscript versions of the narrative are preserved in the Bibliothèque Nationale.

— Some time shortly after May 20, 1555, Queen Isabella of Portugal called upon Fernando Columbus to cause the immediate completion of the revision of the padrón real, ordered by Charles V in 1526. Probably this was not actually accomplished until the following year, when a junta of pilots and cosmographers met at Seville for the purpose of composing a very accurate sea-chart, which should be the model from which all maps for navigating the Indies should in future be copied, as we are told by Alfonso de Santa Cruz, in his Historia. The padrón general de Alfonso de Chaves was probably the direct result of this junta. Unfortunately, this important map has been lost, and was until quite recently known to us only by the references to it found in Oviedo's Historia de las Indias, written probably in 1537, but not published until the sixteenth century. In this work Oviedo gives a description of the coast, following Chaves' map, as he expressly states. Although more or less unsuccessful attempts have been made, by Kohli, De Costa, and others, to reconstruct from this description the outline of the North-East Coast, no really serious effort has yet been made to compare Oviedo's text with existing maps, or rather, an thorough search has been made for a map or maps which might correspond with that text. Recently, however, the discovery in Florence by Dr. Wieler of the world-chart drawn by Lopo Homem in 1554 (C.P.L. 11, Vol. II) and in Madrid of a hitherto unknown manuscript by Chaves himself, containing a very complete description of the American coasts, has thrown new light on the subject, and, from a comparison of these new documents with Oviedo's text, it is now possible, for the first time, to judge, with much precision, how our coast must have appeared on Chaves' lost map. This comparison is shown in tabulated form in Vol. II, following p. 40. See also p. 21 et seq.

Hernando de Soto sails from San Lucar, Spain, with about 600 men, five ships, two caravels, and two pinaces. He reached Cuba safely; in May, he sailed from Havana. On May 25, he arrived at a bay on the Florida coast, to which he gave the name Espiritu Santo; on the 30th, he landed his army, and, on June 1, took possession of the country. Then he began his long and toilsome journey in search of a land rich in gold and precious stones. He passed through what is now the states of Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi, fighting with the Indians every step of the way. In June, 1541, he crossed the Mississippi River at the lowest Chickasaw bluff, and marched northward to Little Prairie. Desiring of finding his El Dorado in that direction, De Soto finally turned south, and then south-west and, on Sept. 1, 1541, reached Colima. Here the expedition crossed the Mississippi and began to march south-east, arriving at a town at the mouth of the Red River on April 17, 1542. At this place De Soto fell ill of fever, died on May 21, and was buried in the Mississippi. —Winser, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., II: 245–53, 585–92, 924–95, and authorities there cited.

In 1541, the prospect of the settlement of Canada under the French gave such a stimulus to merchants that, in January and February, 1541, and 1542, no less than 60 ships went from France to work for cod off the Banks of Newfoundland. In 1541 and 1542, his armada was sustained, and during the months of January and February about two ships left every day from Havre, Rouen, Dieppe, and Honfleur. —Gosselin, Documents authentiques et indiscrets pour servir à l'histoire de la marine, Normande et du commerce Rouennais, pendant les XVIe et XVIIe siècles (Rouen, 1876), 57.

Carriere starts on his third voyage to America. He reached St. Croix on Aug. 23, soon after started a fort four leagues above it, at Charlesbourg Royal; and then continued his ascent of the river. He stayed awhile at Hochelaga, then went on to the Lachine Rapids and Sault de St. Louis, and finally returned to the fort, where he spent the winter of 1542–43. In the summer of 1543, Carriere returned to France. —Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1600), III: 235–42.

Jean Allefonsce de Saintonge sails from Honfleur as pilot to Robert de Roberval on a voyage to Canada. On this voyage, or possibly on an earlier one of which we have no record, he claimed to have explored the Atlantic coast from Labrador to Florida, and to have made several maps and sketches of the region. The original manuscript, entitled "Cosmographie avec espée et régime du Soleil et du Nord en notre langue françois," signed by Allefonsce, and dated 24 May, 1544, is in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. An abridgment of this manuscript was first printed in 1559, with the title Les Voyages avançateurs du Capitaine Jean Allefonsce, Saintongeois. An account of this voyage is also found in Hakluyt's Principal Navigations (1595–1600), and in Champlain (1613 ed.).

The following account of that part of the voyage of Saintonge which covers the North-East Coast is taken from the printed text (translated of the "Cosmographie," published and annotated by George Musset, Paris, 1804, and entitled La Cosmographie... par Jean Fonteneau, dit Allefonsce de Saintonge, Capitaine-pilote de François 1er...; it contains several maps.

After leaving Canada, the first feature of the coast that can, with reasonable assurance, be identified is the Penobscot. From this point the narrative proceeds as follows:

"From the river Norumbega (probably the Penobscot) the coast turns to the W.S.W., full 200 [!] leagues, to a great bay which runs up into the land about 20 leagues and is fully 29 leagues wide, and within this bay there are four islands, joined one to the other [possibly the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, and the large islands lying between it and Cape Cod—f]." The entrance to the bay is in about 38° [sic], and the said islands are in the neighbourhood of 39°. I did not see the end [fondo] of this bay, and do not know whether it passes beyond. The water rushes out as does the river of Norumbega. This entire coast is peopled but I did not communicate with them, and do not know what law they follow. . . . [Although at this point no mention is made of any prominent cape, the manuscript contains an earlier reference to a "Cap de la Franciscane," in latitude 48°, W. of "Cap de Norumbega" (Cape Sable), which should probably be identified as Cape Cod."

"From the said bay the coast turns to the W.S.W. [sic], about 46 leagues, and here there is a great river of fresh water [Hudson River—I], and there is at its entrance a sandy island [Sandys Hook—Nauset Island is near the 48th [sic] degree. . . .
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

"From this river the coast turns N.E. & S.S.W., a quarter East and Aug.
West, 60 leagues, and here there is a cape which juts out into the sea full 56 leagues [Cape Henlopen as part of the Accomac peninsula, etc.]. The cape is in about 36° latitude, and is high, with a white cliff [a conspicuous object on entering Delaware Bay]; and from here the coast turns to the W.N.W., [sic] 46 leagues, as far as a large river full 20 leagues [Sir John Wade (Chesapeake Bay)—?]. From this cape Hatteras—?, and behind it a great gulf [Pamlico and Albemarle Sounds—?]. I don't know how far it enters into the main. At its entrance there are several reefs. Said cape is in about 36°. From here I was quite a day and a half with the cape in the west without seeing land until reaching 36°. And I estimate sailing about 35 leagues before I reached the coast again.

"And from this point the coast turns toward Florida, N.N.E. and S.S.W., and the distance from here to Florida may be 100 or 15 leagues, the whole coast being straight... and along this entire stretch of shore there are islands large and small. I was unable to make out any rivers. The cape of Florida is in about 32°, and is more than 25 leagues wide, and in front of it is several islands of sand, and there is a reef that juts out into the sea two or three leagues from the main-land, and is no broader at one end than at the other, and extends more than 20 leagues along the shore in a N.N.E. and S.S.W. direction; and between the land and the reef there seemed to be good sailing, but I could find no entrance. At the end of this reef there is a cape, and a good port... The said cape is in 32°, and is at the N.N.E. of Florida, a fine country... Along this whole coast from N.N.E. to S.S.W., as far as Florida, one dare not approach the shore nearer than 3 leagues because of the reefs, etc.

Although the above description contains many inaccuracies in latitude, dates, distances, and several irreconcilable statements, nevertheless it constitutes, in the main, a fair description of the North-East Coast, and is, I believe, based on personal observations, notwithstanding Harsine's circumstantial evidence to the contrary (see his Terre-Neuve, 1532 et seq.).

July

King Edward VI dies, aged 16 years. The Duke of Northumberland having persuaded him to bequeath the crown to his cousin, Lady Jane Grey, she was proclaimed Queen in London on July 10. The people, however, showed no enthusiasm for Lady Jane, and, on July 19, Mary, daughter of Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, was declared the ruler. Mary was crowned on Oct. 1, and reigned until 1558.

The first collection, in English, of accounts of the various voyages to America was published at London in this year, by Richard Eden. The book was called The Decades of the New World or West India.—Church Catalogue, No. 101. It was a translation from Peter Martyr's De Orbe Novo... Decades, II. 1550—ibid., No. 6a.

André Thevet, a Franciscan monk, sails from Havannah (Pamlico) to the French settlement sent out by Admiral Coligny to Brazil under the command of Vильлегоная. The French made a settlement, in November, near the River Gannaara, but Thevet remained with the colony only about ten weeks, leaving on his homeward voyage, Jan. 31, 1556. He claimed to have coasted, on this voyage, the entire eastern shore of the United States.—Thevet, Les Singularités de la France antarctique autrement nommée Amérique, et de plusieurs terres & îles découvertes de notre temps (Paris, 1558) Thetev, La cosmographie universelle d'André Thevet, cosmographe de roy (Paris, 1572). The following interesting extract (translated) is taken from his Cosmographie, reprinted by Kohl, who has added the explanations in parentheses:

"Having left La Florida on the left hand, with all its islands, gulfs, and capes, a river presents itself, which is one of the finest rivers in the whole world, which we call 'Norumbega,' and the aborigines 'Agency,' and which is marked on some marine charts as the Grand River (measuring Penobscot Bay). Several other beautiful rivers enter into it and upon its banks the French formerly erected a little fort about ten or twelve leagues from its mouth, which was surrounded by fresh-water, and this place was named the Fort of Norumbega.

"Some pilots would make me believe, that this country (Norumbega) is the proper country of Canada. But I told them that this was far from the truth, since this country lies in 43° N., and that of Canada in 50 or 52°. Before you enter the said river appears an island (Fox Island?) surrounded by eight small islands which are near the country of the green mountains (Cammed Hills), and to the Cape of the idlets (Cabo de muchas islas). From there you sail all along unto the mouth of the river, which is dangerous from the great number of thick and high rocks; and its entrance is wonderfully large. About three leagues into the river, an island presents itself to you, that may have as many leagues in circumference (Lîng Island, now Isleboro'), inhabited only by some fishermen and birds of different sorts, which island they call 'Alayasenc,' because it has the form of a man's arm, which they call so. Its greatest length is from north to south. It would be very easy to plant on this island, and build a fortress on it to keep in check the whole surrounding country. Having landed and put our feet on the adjacent country, we perceived a great mass of people coming down upon us from all sides in such numbers, that you might have supposed them to have been a flight of starlings. Those which marched first, were the men which they call 'Auphuns.' After them, the women, which they call 'Peragrusats,' then the 'Adestegas,' being the children, and last were the girls, called 'Aniusgestas.' And all this people were clothed in skins of wild animals, which they call 'Rahattas.' Now considering their aspect and manner of proceeding, we mistrusted them, and were afraid to go on board, because they, perceiving our fear, lifted their hands into the air, making signs that we should not mistrust them; and for making us still more sure, they sent to our vessel some of their principal men, which brought us provisions. In recompense of this, we gave them a few trinkets of a low price, by which they were highly pleased. The next morning, with some others, was commissioned to meet them, and to know whether they would be inclined to assist us with more victuals, of which we were very much in need. But having entered into the house, which they call 'Canouque,' of a certain little king of theirs, which called himself 'Peranmusch,' we saw several animals hanging on the beams of small houses, which he had prepared (as he assured us) to send to us. This chief gave us a very hearty welcome, and to show us his affection, he ordered to kindle a fire, which they call 'Azinta,' on which the meat was to be put and fish, to be roasted. Upon this some rogues came in to bring to the king the heads of six men, which he saw with the widest and most terrified face, fearing that they might treat us in the same way. But toward evening we secretly retired to our ship without holding good-by to our host. At this he was very much irritated, and came to us the next morning accompanied by three of his children, showing a moody countenance, but which we thought that he had been dissatisfied with him and said in his language: 'Cazigno, Cazigno Casnouy danga addagria' (that is, let us go let us go on land: my friend and brother); 'Coaquca Ame Coausone Kazaeceny' (come to drink and eat, what we have); "Arca somniopachÆtuchlas ðangus ysmay assumulaka" (we assure you upon oath by Lawdun seventy, and stars, that you shall fare not worse by our own persons.

"Seeing the good affection and will of this old man, some twenty of us went again on land, every one of us with his arms; and then we went to his lodgings, where we were treated, and presented with what he possessed. And meanwhile great numbers of people arrived, caressing us and offering themselves to give us pleasure, saying that they were our friends. Late in the evening, when we were willing to retire and to take leave of the company with actions of gratitude, they would not give us leave. Men, women, children, all entreated us zealously to stay with them, crying out these words: "Cagigio agyada hoa" (my friends, do not start from here; you shall sleep this night with us). But they could not harangue so well as to persuade us to sleep with them. And so we retired to our vessel; and having remained in this place five full days, we weighed anchor, parting from them with a marvellous contentment of both sides, and went out to the open sea."—Kold, Discovery of North Am., 416-19. If the "Grand River," to which Thvetet refers, is the Penobscot, as Kohl believed, and not the mouth of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and if Thvetet is right in regard to the fort, this must have been the first settlement of Europeans in New England since the Norsemen. Harris, however, and other modern critics, place very little reliance on Thvetet's claim in connection with this voyage.

Sept. The religious Peace of Augsburg is agreed to by Lutherans and Catholics. All accepting the Augsburg Confession are declared exempt from the jurisdiction of the Holy See, and guaranteed equal rights in everything with the Catholics.

Oct. Charles V transfers to his son, Philip II, the sovereignty of the Netherlands. On Jan. 16, 1556, the Spanish possessions, also, were conferred upon him. Philip II reigned until 1558.

Oct. With four ships, John Hawkins sets out from Plymouth on a voyage to the West Indies and America. After spending some time in Guinea and the West Indies, carrying on the slave-trade, he began to explore the coast of Florida in the summer of 1566. He came to the relief of Laudonnière's struggling colonists on the "Ruer of May," and left them a ship in which they might return to France. Hakluyt records, from the account written by "John Sparke the Younger," who accompanied Hawkins, that on the Florida coast they anchored every night, and in the day time, in the ship's pinnace, sailed along the shore, and went into every creek. In this case they were particularly searching for good water, but the specific recital of the fact that they anchored at night indicates that this was not the usual custom, and therefore helps to explain how so often important landmarks were passed by unseen, and were therefore not recorded in the journals or on the maps. On July 28, Hawkins left Florida and, probably keeping at no great distance from the coast, sailed north to Newfoundland, which he reached on Aug. 24. Thence he continued his journey homeward, and arrived in England on Sept. 20.—Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1589), 523-45.

A sentence of the Inquisition condemns to death, as heretics, all but a few of the inhabitants of The Netherlands.—Motley, Rise of the Dutch Republic, II: 158.

David Ingram, who, with two companions, had been set on shore on the northern coast of the Gulf of Mexico by Sir John Hawkins, in the autumn of this year, claimed, in an account of his adventures, reported "unto Sr. biauncys Walsingham Kt. . . ." in 1582, and first printed by Hakluyt in 1589, to have traversed the south, central, and eastern portions of what is now the United States, and to have reached "the head of a river called Garinda, which is 60 Leagues West frø Cape Briton . . . Whereupon they made their repair to the Sea-side, and there found a French Captaine named Monseur Champagne, who took them into his Shippe and brought them unto Newhaun, & from thence they were transported into England, anno Dom. 1669." In the course of his travels, which extended over a period of about twelve months, of which about seven were spent north of the "river of May," "in which time (as the said Ingram thinketh) he travelled by land two thousand miles at the least . . . towards the North, found the maine sea [Great Lakes?] upon the Northside of America, and travaulled in the sight thereof the space of two whole dayes, where the people signalized unto him, that they had seene shippes on that coast, and did draw upon the ground the shape and figure of shippes and of their sails and flagges, Which thing especially proueth the passage of the Northwest, and is agreeable to the experience of Vaques de Coronado, which found a shipe of China or Catala upon the Northwest of America." One of several contemporary manuscript accounts of this journey is preserved in the British Museum (Sloane MS. No. 1447), and is printed in Weston, Documents connected with the history of South Carolina (London, 1876). The main narrative as printed by Hakluyt in 1589 (from which version the above extracts are taken), was omitted from his 1599-1600 publication, probably because of its dubious veracity, as we are told by Purchas, IV: 1179. This date is found on a beautifully executed small world map in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; which map is signed by Jean Cosin, a well known cartographer of Dieppe. The map is remarkable for its unusual representation of the coast in the neighbourhood of the Hudson River, which is shown in greater detail and more accurately than on any other map of the period. This representation proves, without question, that the author, or the voyager whose map or notes the author used, not only penetrated into the inner harbour of New York, but actually sailed around Staten Island, and perhaps through Long Island Sound, which seems to be laid down on this very interesting map, which is reproduced in Vol. II, C. Pls. 15 and 16, and described on pages 33 et seq, and 134.

In this year, Abraham Oerteliu published at Antwerp the first edition of his celebrated Thesaurus orbis terrarum.

—In this year, Richard Hakluyt's Divers Voyages Touching the Discoveries of America was published at London.—Church Catalogue, No. 118. This, Hakluyt's first book of voyages, contained the Michael Lok map (C. Pl. 17, and pp. 58, 154, Vol. II) and the Thorne Map (C. Pl. 17, and p. 132).

—The Duke of Anjou (see 1581) arrives in the Netherlands. In this year, Pope Gregory XIII reformed the calendar to conform to the true solar year. Ten days were dropped out of this year, October 5 becoming October 15. Leap year was removed from the calendar at the close of each century (except when it was a multiple of 400), thus gaining three days in 400 years, or about 11 minutes a year.

—The Gregorian calendar was introduced into Spain, Portugal, and part of Italy, on the same day as at Rome (Oct. 5). It was accepted in France in December 1582, and in the Catholic states of Germany in 1583. In the various provinces and cities of The Netherlands, New Style was adopted at different times between 1582 and 1702. In the Protestant states of Germany, the Julian calendar was adhered to until 1700, when the diet of Regensburg decreed that the New Style be adopted. Denmark and Sweden also accepted it about 1700. In England, Scotland, and the American colonies, the Gregorian calendar was established by the parliamentary act of March 18, 1752 (g. v.), and went into effect Sept. 3/14, 1752 (g. v.). Ireland followed in 1788. Russia retained the Julian reckoning until 1918, when the revolutionary government adopted the New Style. From 1582 until the surrender of New Amsterdam to the English, in 1664, the Chronology follows the Gregorian Calendar, or "New Style." From the beginning of English rule in New York until 1752, when England adopted the Gregorian Calendar, "Old Style" is used. To avoid confusion, double dates are introduced during periods of transition (the year of transition, being O. S. or N. S.), and also in connection with all English dates during the Dutch occupation of New Amsterdam, and all Dutch and other continental dates during the English occupation.

Sir Humphrey Gilbert, the first Englishman to attempt colonization in the new world, starts on a voyage to America, with five ships and about 260 men. On Aug. 5, he took formal possession of Newfoundland in the name of Queen Elizabeth, but many of the colonists soon died of disease. Gilbert sailed south on Aug. 20, and, on Aug. 29, his ship was wrecked on Cape Breton Island and he was drowned.—Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1589), 679-99; Peckham, A True Report of the late discoveries and possession taken in the right of the Crowne of Englands, of the Newfound Landes: By that valiant aduenturer Sir Humphrey Gilbert (London, 1583), reprinted in Mag. of Hist., Extra Number 68, pp. 1-99; Burrage, Early English and French Voyages, 175-222.

Sir Walter Raleigh receives a charter from Queen Elizabeth empowering him to plant colonies in America.—Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1589), 725-28.

Raleigh dispatches two vessels, under the command of Capts. Arthur Barlowe and Philip Amadas, on a reconnoitering voyage to the east coast of America, to decide upon a site for a settlement. Barlowe and Amadas sailed south to the Canary Islands, then crossed to the West Indies, and, on July 4, reached the American coast. They went northward along the coast for 120 miles, entered the first inlet they found, and, after sailing a short distance, landed and took possession of the country in the name of Queen Elizabeth. Their landing-place was one of the more southerly islands in Pamlico Sound, and the country which they claimed afterwards received the name of Virginia. After establishing friendly intercourse with the Indians, Capt. Barlowe and some of his men sailed 20 miles to Roanoke Island. They explored the rivers and islands in the vicinity, and returning reached England in the middle of September. In the spring of 1585, Raleigh sent a hundred more men, under command of Ralph Lane, in seven ships, to Virginia, who stayed on Roanoke Island from Aug. 17, 1585, to June 18, 1586. With this expedition went John White, the artist, who made two charts of the country. In the spring of 1586, a third expedition was dispatched commanded by Sir Richard Grenville, to try to relieve the settlers in Virginia, but by the time the ships arrived, the colonists had started for home, having been rescued by Sir Francis Drake and carried back to England. When Grenville arrived at Roanoke, believing that the colonists had transferred their settlement to some other site, he left supplies and a guard of 15 men. A fourth trip to Virginia was made in 1587, under John White, and 120 men, women, and children were left on Roanoke Island, with one small vessel, to start a settlement, while White returned to England for aid. War between Spain and England prevented Raleigh's sending relief to his colonists until 1590. When the ship arrived in Virginia in that year, White could find no trace of the settlers he had left there in 1587.—Hakluyt, Principal Navigations (London, 1589), 723-48, 742-73; ibid. (London, 1600), III: 288-93; Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV, 1645-46; Fiske, Old Virginia and Her Neighbours, I, 31-79. The fate of this "lost colony" has never been ascertained. They were probably killed by the Indians, or captured and in time assimilated with the natives.

Richard Hakluyt wrote in this year his Discourse on Western Planting, the original manuscript of which he presented to Queen Elizabeth, probably at the request of Sir Walter Raleigh, who sought Elizabeth's assistance for his colonization schemes. Hakluyt, in twenty-one chapters, described the discoveries already made along the North-East Coast, and propounded the various reasons why England should establish colonies in America. The original manuscript is lost, but a duplicate contemporary copy, evidently in the same hand, exists and probably made for Wilkins. It has preserved for us its contents. This duplicate was found in the library of Sir Peter Thomson, after his death in 1770, and is now in the author's collection. It was printed, 1577, as Vol. II of Maine Hist. Soc. publications, with notes by Dr. Chas. Deane.

King Philip II of Spain having organized the “The Invincible Armada,” a fleet of 130 vessels carrying about 35,000 men for the invasion of England, it sails from Lisbon. Soon afterward it was dispersed by a storm, but was reassembled, and in July entered the English Channel. During the week of July 21-29, an English fleet, commanded by Lord Charles Howard, Sir Francis Drake, and Sir John Hawkins, in several encounters, supported by a Dutch fleet, almost destroyed the armada, the remaining vessels of which sailed northward, most of them being demolished by storms.

The first three ships equipped by the English general to search for a north-east passage to India sailed from the Texel. They are commanded, respectively, by Willem Barendsz, Gerrit de Veer, and Jan Huuygen van Linschoten. After having reached the Wyagat Strait, the ships separated on July 21 and took different directions. The strait was open, but farther on the passage was so obstructed by ice that all three commanders decided to return to the Wyagat. They met there on Aug. 15. On Aug. 18, they started on their homeward trip, arriving in the Texel on Sept. 16.—Versteeg, Manhattan in 1628, 57-58. The first printed account of this expedition is contained in Voyage, ofsche Schip-Vaar van Jan Huuygen van Linschoten (1601), Church Catalogue, No. 324.

In this year, Gerrit Bicker Petersz., of Amsterdam, and Jan Cornelisz. Leyen, of Eekhuyzen, under the patronage of the States of Holland, organized separate companies for the West India trade. “Their enterprise was the forerunner of eventual success.”—Broadhead, Hist. of State of N. 1598

Perhaps the earliest reference to a possible sojourn of Europeans in the Aleutian Islands. It is probably contained in a complaint addressed on Oct. 25, 1634, by the “Assembly of the Dutch...” to the states-general, in relation to the representations of one Jacob Jacobsen Elkins, a trader, who, in April, 1633, came to the North River in the service of one William Kibber, an Englishman, with the ship “William,” and, although refusing to exhibit “his Majesty’s Instruction or Commission,” made public claim that “said river and adjacent country were in, and of, the domain of his Majesty of Great Britain.” Although the complaint states that “the said river and adjacent countries had been discovered in the year 1609, at the cost of the East India Company,” it adds: “... Likewise, that one or more little forts were built also under your High Mightinesses’ chief jurisdiction, even before the year 1614, and supplied with people for the security of the said trade; Further, that, after these countries had passed into the hands of the incorporated West India Company, not only were the above named forts renewed and enlarged, but said Company purchased from the Indians, who were the indubitable owners thereof, the Island of the Manhattes, situation at the entrance of the said river, and there laid the foundation of a city.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 93. This reference to an early fort on the North River is repeated, and the date 1598 assigned to the first frequenting of these parts, in “A Report and Advice on the Situation of New Netherland...” drawn up from documents and papers placed by commission of the Assembly of XIX, dated 15th Dec. 1644, in the hands of the General Board of Accounts...” This report begins as follows—“New Netherland... extending from the South river lying in 43° degrees, to Cape Malabar, in the latitude of 41° degrees, was first frequented by the inhabitants of this country in the year 1598, and especially by those of the Greenland Company, but without making any fixed settlements, only as a shelter in the winter. For which purpose they erected on the North and South Rivers there two little forts against the encursions of the Indians. A charter was afterwards, on the 11th of October, 1614, granted by their High Mightinesses...”—Ibid., I: 149.

There is no proof, or even suggestion, that such a fort, even if built on the North River, was on Manhattan Island. No record has been found of a “Greenland Company” at so early a date as 1598. If such a company existed, it was probably composed of a small group of merchants who sent out expeditions to Greenland (probably Spitzbergen) prior to the organization of the Noordische Compagnie in 1614. In this connection, the following statement is found in the Histoire Der vermaerde Zee-en Koop-staets Enthuissien, by Geerardert Brandts, 2d ed. ed. by Sebastiaan Ceuten (Hoors, 1747), suppl. p. 191. “For some time there had been discussions regarding the formation of a Groenlandischs Maatschappij (Greenland Company), and to that end various subscriptions had been made in Holland and Zealand. At last, in this year (1614), this company took its beginning under the name of the Noordische Compagnie.” It is also possible that there was some confusion in the minds of the authors of the report of 1644 between the North and South Rivers in New Netherland and the West and South Rivers mentioned by De Laet in his Nieuwe Wereld (1610), 567-68, in describing...

During this year, steps were taken to bring about the formation of the Dutch East India Company, the first of the great Dutch trading companies of the seventeenth century, which in less than fifty years built up a world empire comparable to the British Empire. This extraordinary expansion of Dutch commerce and navigation, which occurred in the very midst of the war with Spain, is explained partly by the geographical situation of The Netherlands and partly by the political conditions of the surrounding countries.

Situated midway between the Danish Sound and the Strait of Gibraltar, the Dutch people from an early date had carried on an extensive trade between the countries of northern and southern Europe. During the first years of the war with Spain, this trade suffered a serious setback, but with the destruction of the Spanish Armada, in 1588, the chief danger to Dutch shipping disappeared, and from that time trade began to revive.

The fall of Antwerp, in 1585, caused thousands of the ablest and most industrious citizens, among them such men as Unsselincx, Plancius, De Moucheron, De Laet, Bloemmaert, and others, to emigrate to Holland, especially to Amsterdam. This large increase of population, which forced the city of Amsterdam twice within a decade, in 1585 and in 1593, to extend its walls, gave a fresh impetus to Dutch commercial enterprise. The Baltic trade soon rose to an unprecedented height, Dutch merchants applied them-

See A. Dec. 31st, 1803.

Early in this year, Capt. Bartholomew Gosnold and Capt.
Bartholomew Gilbert were sent out, largely through the efforts of the Earl of Southampton, to discover a convenient place for a new colony in the north part of “Virginia.” Sailing from Falmouth, Gosnold was driven by an unfavourable wind as far southward as the Azores, whence he steered directly across the Atlantic, striking the continent of America in latitude 43°, near Portsmouth, New Hampshire. After some time spent in visiting and trading with the natives, he “found himself inbaied with a mighty headland,” which he named Cape Cod.

Gosnold reached a point as far south as Buzzard’s Bay, where he prepared to plant a colony on the westernmost island, which he named “Elizabeth” (Cuttyhunk), in honour of the queen. Here he built a house, expecting to send the next year the “Concord,” “in charge of Gilbert, returned to England “for new and better preparations;” but his men could not be prevailed upon to remain, and Gosnold therefore returned to England in July.

Pirring’s expedition of the next year (g.v.) was the direct result of this enterprise. The history of Gosnold’s expedition, which constituted the first English attempt to settle New England, was found in A Briefe and true Relation of the Discoverie of the North

The "chiefest Merchants of Bristol" (moved largely by the example of their neighbors in Hakluyt), having resolved to send an expedition "for the farther Discovrie of the North part of Virginia," and having obtained permission of Sir Walter Raleigh, patentee, sent out a small vessel called the "Speedwell," under Captain Martin Pring, and a bark, the "Discoverer," under Captain William Bourne. For trading purposes, they carried clothing, hardware, and trinkets. The expedition was in no sense solely a voyage of discovery, one of its objects being to procure sassafras, in search of which Pring coasted in and out among the islands in the neighbourhood of 43° 36', and at length anchored in a harbour on the south shore of Cape Cod Bay, at 41° 25', to which he gave the name Whitson Bay (probably Barnstable Harbour, which, although it lies in 41°, 45', in other respects exactly corresponds with Purchas's description). Here they erected a "small baricado for shelter and protection. Seven weeks were spent gathering sassafras and experimenting with the soil, which they ploughed up and planted. On Aug. 8 or 9, they left "this excellent Haven" and returned to England, reaching there early in October.—Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1654-56. This voyage of Pring stimulated afresh England's awakened interest in New England. For his later voyage, see Aug. 14, 1606.

Capt. George Waymouth, during this period, explored the 31st coast of New England. His expedition, which was fitted out at the expense of the Earl of Southampton and his brother-in-law, Lord Arundel, was intended for the coast of Maine. Sailing from the Downs, Waymouth struck the American coast near Nantucket, whence, running northeasterly along the coast, he sailed for "sixty miles up the most excellent and beneficial river of Sacadebec."

After an absence of four months, Waymouth returned to England, taking with him five natives, two or three of whom were immediately "settled upon" by Sir Ferdinando Gorges, who afterward declared that "this accident must be acknowledged to the mean, under God, of putting on foot and giving life to all our plantations" (see Aug. 12, 1606). King James, by patent, divides Virginia into two colonies; the southern, called "the first colony," being granted the privilege of occupying and governing a strip 100 miles long extending along the coast between the thirty-fourth and the forty-first degrees; he grants to the London Company; the northern, called "the second colony," lying between the thirty-eighth and the forty-fifth degrees, he grants to the Plymouth Company. In order to prevent collision between the two colonies, the charter expressly provides that the colony which shall be planted last shall have its boundaries at least 100 miles from that of the prior establishment.—Hazard, Historical Collections, consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents, I: 51-58.

Aug.
Capt. Henry Challoung (Challoung) is sent by Sir Ferdinando Gorges and others on a voyage of discovery to the New England coast, accompanied by two Indians who had been brought to England by Waymouth, and who had imparted to Gorges much information regarding that country, and especially its principal rivers. Soon after leaving the Canaries, Challoung fell ill, and his ship was carried by the prevailing winds to St. John De Porterico. Shortly afterward, the ship and crew were captured by a Spanish fleet coming from Havana, and carried to Spain.

In October, Martin Pring was dispatched from Bristol by Popham to join Challoung "where by his instructions he was assigned," but not finding him, after he had "sowrd the coast all about . . . and had made a perfect discovery of all those Rivers and Harbours of which he was informed by his instructions, (the season of the year requiring his return) brings him the most exact discovery of that Coast that ever came to my hands since, and indeed he was the best able to perform it of any I met withal to this present, which with his relation of the Country, wrought such an impression in the Lord Chiefe Justice, and us all that were his associates, that (notwithstanding our first disaster) we set up our resolutions to follow it with effect, and that upon better grounds, for as yet, our authority was but in motion."—Ferdinando Gorges, A Briefe Narration, etc., and "A Description of New England," in America Painted in the Life (1659).

A very full account of Chalions's voyage, written by John Stoneman, pilot, is printed in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 183-37. It is not clear how far south Pring's explorations on this voyage extended. His instructions provided that, after "they had discovered the Main . . . as high as Cape Britton," they were to "bear it up to the Southward, as the Coast tended, till they found by the Natives they were near the place they were assigned unto . . .", possibly the Hudson, the Delaware, or Chesapeake Bay. In Oct. the New England coast, leaves "Port Fortuné [See plan in Chapmen, 1613 ed. p. 154 . . . in 44 degrees & one third latitude, & some 12 or 13 leagues from Malebarre] (Nausset Harbour, or Pleasant Bay, on Cape Cod. See plan in Chapmen, 1631 ed. p. 88.) From this point, he continued some six or seven leagues in sight of an island (?), which he named "La souaponeuse" and which was evidently the first of the land-locked appearance; evidently he at first took it for a part of the main land. On the 20th, having been driven back by a storm, he again left Port Fortuné and skirted "the coast to the south-west about 12 leagues," to a small river and one difficult of approach because of shallows and rocks at its entrance. At this point, a strong and contrary wind caused him to turn toward "the water" (the open sea).

A careful comparison of the maps contained in the 1613 and 1614 editions of Chapmen's Voyer and with the modern map, taken in connection with the distances and directions noted in Chapmen, several descriptions of the different parts of the coast seem to indicate that Port Fortuné was the modern Stage Harbor; that "la souaponeuse" was perhaps Point Gammon, or possibly some island now submerged, such, for instance, as Bishop and Clerc Island; and that the deep gulf which, on the map of 1612, marks the southern limit of his explorations, was in all probability Vineyard Sound, which is now a land-locked appearance from a point a few miles east of its entrance.

William Useloffe, who had already (in 1591) suggested a Dutch association to trade in the West Indies, now urges the immediate establishment of a West India Company modelled after the East India Company, which new company, however, did not materialize until June 3, 1621 (q.v.).—Brodhead, Hist. State of N. T., II: 23.

Colonists, under Capt. Newport, dispatched to America by the London Company, start the first permanent English settlement in the western hemisphere, with a settlement at Jamestown, Virginia. "The fourteenth day of [May] we landed all our men, which were set to work about the fortification [James Fort], and others some to watch and ward as it was convenient."—Observations by Master George Ferry, 1607, printed in Tyler's Narr. of Early Virginia, p. 15.

The "Gift of God," under George Popham, and the "Mary and John," commanded by Raleigh Gilbert, the nephew of Sir Walter Raleigh, sail from Plymouth with 120 colonists to make a settlement on the Kennebec River. They arrived in August, and began their settlement at the mouth of the Sagadahoc. They named their fort "Saint George." In a short time, 50 houses were constructed, and a "practic Barke" built—perhaps the second vessel constructed by Europeans in the territory now known as the United States, the only earlier one recorded having, apparently, been built by Aylen on the coast of South Carolina in the summer of 1526 (p. 25). The winter of 1607-8 was very severe, and in the midst of it fire destroyed their store-house, provisions, and most of their lodgings. On Feb. 5, Capt. Popham died and was succeeded by Raleigh Gilbert. In the following summer, several vessels visited the English in Maryland, by one of which Gilbert learned of the death of his brother and the necessity of his return to England. Thereupon, the colonists, discouraged by their sufferings (to which, doubtless, the mosquitos contributed largely), and disappointed also because of their failure to discover any valuable minerals, abandoned the colony and returned to England, being assisted in this by the vessel they had built, the "Virginia."—"A briefe Discouerie of the Discouerie and Plantation of New-England," in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 182-33; Ferdinando Gorges, "A Brief Narration," 8, in America Painted to the Life (1659).

In this year, the Separatists, of Scrooby, Eng., emigrated to Amsterdam. In 1609, they removed to Leyden and established their church—Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 261-62 and authorities there cited.

Probably between 1666 and 1608, the so-called "Virginia Company Chart," an English manuscript chart of the Atlantic coast of America from New Foundland to Brazil, and of England and Asia from Ireland to the coast of Guinea, was drawn. This map, which is reproduced in Vol. II, Cartography, C. Pl. 21-4, and described on p. 49 et seq., apparently embodies the information possessed by Hudson when he undertook his memorable third voyage. The stretch of coast which was unknown to the author of this map is exactly that portion which was still unmapped when Hudson sailed, and which he evidently intended to explore, should his ships have not been forced by the weather to return to the Orient by way of the Arctic Ocean. On this chart, we find recorded for the first time a relatively accurate knowledge of the coast-line north and east of the expected passage in the neighbourhood of 40° N. L., including Cape Cod, and extending to a point midway between the 41st and 44th degrees.

The first permanent settlement in New France is made at Quebec. "The rock and the surroundings of the old Iroquois city of Stadoacon [Stadacona] attracted Champlain as it has fascinated millions since his day. So Champlain cast anchor there on July 3, 1608, and laid the foundations of a city which he called Quebec, from the Indian name meaning the Narrows."—Tracy, Tercentenary History of Quebec, p. 86.

In the latter part of this year, at the invitation of the directors of the East India Co., Henry Hudson, having been unsuccessful in two expeditions, sent out respectively in 1607 and 1608 by the London Company, to seek a shorter passage to the Orient by way of the polar regions, was sent to the Hudson colony in encouragement and help in connection with a new enterprise. After negotiating with the Dutch East India Company at Amsterdam for a voyage in its service, he was advised that no expedition could be immediately undertaken. Isaac Le Maire, the commander of theقيل Hudson's service for the King of France, but, when the rumour of these negotiations reached the Dutch East India Company, Hudson was at once recalled.—Letter (dated Jan. 25) of President Jeannin, French ambassador at The Hague, to Henry IV, in Asher's Henry Hudson the Navigator, 244-54. See also Murphy, Henry Hudson in Holland, this letter quotes Hudson and Planckius as believing that the climate as one approaches the Pole becomes milder, and the sea more open, and as advising therefore an attempt to sail eastward in c. 58° rather than in c. 74°.

The directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the East India Co. commission three of their members to draft a contract with Henry Hudson, and prepare the necessary letters to the other chambers. At the same time they give their instructions to Hendrick van Keulen for a suitable vessel of from 25 to 35 last (50 to 70 tons) for Hudson. The contract was made out and signed on Jan. 8, 1609 (p. v.)—Resolutien van de Kamer van Amsterdam, trans. in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 115, 142.

... the Voyage [to Virginia] is not long nor tedious, five weeks at ease will send us thither, whereas five months suffice not to some other places where wee Trade: our course and passage is through the great Ocean, where is no leare of Rocks or Flattes, nor subject to the strights or restraint of forrigne Princes: most Winds that blow, are apt and fit for vs, and none can hinder vs: when wee come to the Coast, there is continuall depth enough, with good Bottome for Anchorhold, and the Land is faire to fall with all, full of excellent good Harbours, the world affords no better for Ships of all sorts: the English establishments now made thither, are nothing of great concernment, beyonding the Coast: Two goodly Rivers are discovered, winding farre into the Mayne, the one in the North part of the Land is a reference to the Sagadahoc, which was abandoned by the Popham colony in 1608 (see May 31, 1607), or, possibly, to the Hudson River, to our instruction, and the English Gentlemen of Execter, Plymouth, and others: The other in the South part thereof, by our Colonne of London: Upon which River being both broad, deep, and pleasant, abounding with store of fish, our Colonne have begun to fortifie themselves, and have build a Towne, and named it (in honoe of our King) James Towne, fourscore miles within Land, upon the Northside of the Riuere...—Robert Johnson, Nova Britannia (1609), page 9 (unnumbered).

Henry Hudson enters into a contract with the Dutch East India Company for a voyage of discovery (his third in search of a short route to the Orient), in which he is to seek a new route to the Indies, by way of the north-east, that is along the northern coast of Russia and Siberia, passing "around by the North Side of Nova Zembla," and through the Straits of Anian (Bering Strait).

The original contract has disappeared, but a copy, made by Pieter van Dam, counsel of the company from 1652 to 1706, for his unpublished history of that corporation, is preserved in the archives at The Hague (see Pl. 1, Vol. IV), together with an abstract of certain "Instructious," which Van Dam states were issued to Hudson at the same time. The contract and "Instructious" are printed in Dutch and in English by Murphy in his Henry Hudson in his History of the Dutch, II, 359, and are reproduced in Murphy's History of Exploration, 357. The contract provides that "the said Directors shall in the first place equip a small vessel or yacht of about thirty last [60 tons] burden, with which, well provided with men, provisions and other necessities, the above named Hudson shall about the first of April, sail, in order to search for a passage by the North, around by the North side of Nova Zembla, and shall continue that along that parallel until he shall be able to sail Southward to the latitude of sixty degrees. He shall obtain as much knowledge of the lands as can be done without any considerable loss of time, and if it is impossible return immediately. In order to make for the coast in the voyage, as for the support of his wife and children, the sum of eight hundred guilders [$80.] and, in case (which God prevent) he do not come back or arrive hereabouts within a year, the Directors shall further pay to his wife two hundred guilders [$80.] in cash; and thereupon they shall not be further liable to him or his heirs unless he shall either afterwards or within the year arrive, and have found the passage good and suitable for the Company to use; in which cases the Directors will reserve the reward before named Hudson for his dangers, trouble and knowledge in their discretion.

The Directors think proper to prosecute and continue the same agreement, and agreed with the before named Hudson, that he shall make his residence in this country with his wife and children, and shall enter into the employment of no one other than the Company.

The following reference to the original "Instructions" to Hudson is given by Van Dam (ibid., 37) in support of his censure of Hudson for seeking a passage through the continent of America:

"This Company in the year 1609 fitted out a yacht of about 30 lasts burthen and engaged a Mr. Henry Hudson, an Englishman, and a skilful pilot, as master thereof, with orders to search for the aforesaid passage, both north and south, and afterwards towards the lands or straits of Anian [Bering Strait] and then to sail at least as far as the sixtieth degree of North latitude, when if the time permitted he was to return from the straits of Anian again to this country. And he was further ordered by his instructions, to think of discovering no other routes or passages, except the route around by the North and North-east above Nova Zembla; with this additional proviso, that if it could not be accomplished at that time, another route would be the subject of consideration for another voyage." Not being able to force a passage by the north-east, because of the ice and cold encountered in the neighbourhood of Nova Zembla, and harassed by dissensions among his crew, which, as we shall see later, he probably accepted as a ready excuse, he turned westward on the 20th of November. Before turning, however, he had before the ship's company two letters of private and the same date, one of which, the other. He had before the ship's company two letters of private and the same date, one of which, the other

Alexander Brown, in his Genesis of the U. S., I: 184, suggests that Hudson may have taken with him to Holland, in the latter part of 1608, a copy of Smith's True Relation and his sketch map of the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, which accompanied it. It is not inconceivable that the Relation, which, it will be remembered, was "Written by Captaine Smith Coronell of the said Collony, to a worthifull friend of his in England," was actually addressed to Hudson, and that this and the map were among the documents referred to by Van Meteren as having been sent to Hudson by Smith. The North Nova Zembla was probably, it is said, deeply interested in the question of a passage to the western sea, the existence and location of which he frequently discussed with the Indians, who successively led him to seek it via Chesapeake Bay, the Susquehanna River, and the Potomac, and finally suggested that the passage was by way of "the river of Canada." From various statements made by the Indians, and quoted by Smith, Strachey, and others, it is clear that the sea which they had in mind, and which Smith and others mistook for the western ocean, was in reality Lake Ontario, which is evidently the sea that Strachey tells us "should be about ten dailes [above the falls of the James River], allowing, according to a march, some fourteen or sixteen miles a day."—The History of Travals into Virginia Britania, Hakluyt Soc. Publ. (1849), 34. It is true that Velasco, in his letter of March 22, 1611, to the King of Spain (reproduced in Brown, Genesis of U. S., I: 455 et seq.), says "in the North it is more than 60 leagues off and very many mountains are there and vast deserts which the Indians themselves never yet have explored." Among other references to this unknown sea are Smith's statement that "Beyond the mountains from whence is the head of the river Patawanome, The Savages report, inhabit their most mortall enimies, the Massawomces upon a great salt water, which by all likelihood is either some part of Cammada [Canad]a some great lake, or some inlet of some sea that falleth into the South sea."—A Map of Virginia (etc.) (1612), 26. King Powhatan evidently realized that any statements made by the Indians to the effect that a salt sea existed beyond the mountains, to the west, were without foundation, as he told Smith that, "for any salt water beyond the mountains, the relations you have had from my people are false."—Smith, The Generall Historie of Virginia (etc.), 68.

It is altogether likely that the Relation, which came to a somewhat abrupt end on the 16th of December, is a copy of the "Phoenius," which sailed on that date, and reached England early in July. From this document, which was entered for publication on Aug. 15, we know that Smith had, by June 2, explored most, if not all, of the possible approaches to the western sea in the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, and it is quite possible that the position in the first and second editions of the "Relation," which is "to be printed," contained the reference to "a sea leading into the western ocean, by the north of the southern English colony," to which Van Meteren refers; or, it is possible that Hudson may have received some further information from Smith on this subject.

In the "Report of What Francisco Maguel, an Irishman, learned in the State of Virginia, during the eight months that he was there," probably from Sept., 1607, to April, 1608 (reproduced under cxxxii, in Brown, Genesis of U. S., I: 393-99), we find the following statement:

"...the natives of Virginia assure the English that they can easily take them to the South-Sea by three routes. The first route which on them will take them is by land, from the head of that river, on which the English have a fort, to the South Sea, as the Natives affirm [in ten days' march]. The second route is, because in a day's march and a half from the head of that river inland, there is another river so long that it falls into the South Sea. The third route is that twelve leagues from the mouth of this river, where the English are, towards the N. W. there are four other rivers, to which there came [southern] one of those English Captains in a pinnace, who says that one of these rivers is of great importance, and the Natives affirm, that fourteen leagues from them come two or three rivers towards the N. W. there is another great river, which flows very far into the country, until it meets another large river, which flows to the South Sea."—The Pisanus Map (C. Pl. 21, Vol. III).

These are clearly references to the story which Capt. Smith brought back to the colony on returning from his captivity in January, 1615, and show that Smith, at the time when he wrote to Hudson, believed that the passage would be found somewhere to the north of the Bay of Fundy.

Magdalen's further statement that "the anxiety they [the English] feel that the secrets of this country shall not become known, is so great that they have issued orders prohibiting any one from taking letters with him beyond the frontiers, and also from sending any letters as he was, of course individuals cannot be seen and read by the Governor," is an indication of the pains taken by the English to prevent foreigners, especially Spaniards, from getting possession of maps and descriptions of the country.

It is of course possible that Hudson, in accordance with the principle of elimination, drew his own inferences as to the likelihood of a passage between 58° and 41° 30', which embraced the only section of the coast not already thoroughly explored. It seems also clear that Hudson believed that the chances of finding the passage in the neighbourhood of 40° were at least equal to those of finding it by way of the north-west, and that he did not greatly care which section of the coast he searched first, expecting, in case of failure in his first attempt, to try as soon as possible the other alternative.

Hudson's foreknowledge in possessing himself of the above-mentioned passage at first, in order that he might believe that even before sailing he had in mind the possibility of departing from the strict terms of his contract, and of seeking a passage by way of the east coast of America, should difficulties be encountered on the north-east route. That he confidently anticipated such difficulties, as a result of his experience on his second voyage, is more than likely. Indeed, in one place in his journal of this voyage, while describing his explorations in Nova Zembla, he remarks: "It is no marvel that there is so much Ice in the Sea towards the Pole, so many Sounds and Riers being in the Lands of Nova Zembla, and Newland [Spitsbergen] to ingenior by; besides the coasts of Pocherka, Russia, and Groenland [Greenland], with Laapiga, by as examples I finde by my trauell in these parts: by means of which I see I suppose there will be no navigable passage this way." Again he remarks: "... for at my being at Nova Zembla, the axt of July, oude de hope of a North-east passage, (except by the Vygats [Weygats] straits separating Nova Zembla from Russia), for which I was not fitted to trie or prove." I therefore resolved to use all means I could to sayle to the North-west; considering the time and means we had, if the wind should friend vs, as in the first part of our Voyage it had done, and to make trilfe of that place called Langes Inlet [Hudson Strait], and the furious out-fall by Captayne Dauis, hoping to rune into it an hundred leagues, and to returne as God should enable me."—Purchas His Pilgrimes, III. 479-80.

There seems, therefore, reason to suspect that he had, from the beginning, virtually determined upon a westward course.

Although Van Meteren clearly states that the proposal to direct their search through Davis Strait met with general approval, it seems clear, from subsequent events related by him and by Juet, that Hudson himself preferred, or at least accepted, the alternative of seeking first a passage in "the latitu of 40°," which course there is even reason to believe he had pretty well determined upon before sailing. Smith's theory of a probable passage through America in the neighbourhood of 40° was probably based upon the Indians' accounts of the Great Lakes, which he evidently mistook for the western sea, which, in his True Relation, written in 1610, he refers to as "the large se that east of the land where was salt water." It may also be noted in this connection that Popham, writing to King James from Sagadahoc, on Dec. 13, 1607, said: "Besides, they [the natives] positively assure me, that there is a certain Sea in the opposite or western part of this province, more than seven leagues South of Port St. George in Sagadahoc: a sea large, wide and deep the boundaries of which are wholly ignorant; which cannot be any other than the Southern Ocean, reaching to the regions of China, which unquestionably cannot be far from these parts."—Breton Dictionary, I: 460. See also the Velasco Map (C. Pl. 23), where, as has already been noted, it corresponds in location with Lake Ontario, and is connected with the Atlantic Ocean by Hudson River (through the Mohawk) and the St. Lawrence. The Velasco Map also shows Lake Champlain.

Hudson also had with him copies of George Waymouth's journals, describing his attempt, in 1602, to discover a north-west passage through Davis Strait, and more particularly through Lenoe's (Hudson's) Straits, in 41° 40', which he penetrated to a distance of 100 leagues (Gall., 1615, 2, 4). Thus his voyages along the New England coast as far south as 41° 30', in 1605. These journals had been furnished him by Peter Plancius, the great Dutch geographer, with whom he consulted in 1608-9, before his departure, and with whose own maps of the north-east coast he sailed. Plancius's theory of a westerly passage in this direction to be fallacious, "from the account of one who had explored the land in the west and had declared it to be continuous" (i.e., to contain no strait or passage).—Hessel Gerrits., Descriptio at delineatio Geographic n Divinationis Purti Sive, Transiti ad Occasionem in terras Americanis, in Chinam aty Laponem ductaris, in Aetheris Henry Hudson the Navigator, 89, 191-92.

A full translation of this tract will be found in Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, p. 49 et seq. This translation contains some errors: for example, in the sentence "Hence the opinion prevailed that by that way already there was a passage open to the Indies," the important word alone is omitted; and, further, the passage beginning "Hudson ... sailed Westwardly, in order that he might see if there were any hope remaining, not in a direct course, as is usual, but in some profit for our country and the Directors" can better be rendered: "Hudson nevertheless determined that towards the East, and Nova Zembla, the way was closed by ice and snow, sailed towards the west, so that he might investigate whether any hope remained; not by a direct route (as is related) that this our country and the Directors might profit, only that he might in New France exchange his merchandise, for skins, he returned safely to England, where he was accused ..."

From Juet's account, it is clear that, after leaving the Piscate Islands, Hudson shaped his course south by west, rather than towards Davis Strait, which would have required a more northerly course. It is instead true that on July 3d, off the coast of Newfoundland, the "Half Moon" passed a "great Fleet of Frenchmen, which lay Fishing on the Banks," and that from this point on, until they reached the coast of America, ships were sighted at frequent intervals. Having landed, on July 18, in the neighbourhood of Penasbuck Bay, to replace a broken foremast, and his crew, after a few days sojourn there, having quarreled with the natives, he again sailed south-west, with the probable purpose of making land in the neighbourhood of Chesapeake Bay, where Smith and his 500 colonists were settled, at Jamestown, in "the region of searching thence the little known coast, in a northerly direction, for a passage which should lead to the western sea. Waymouth, in 1602 and 1605, and Gosnold, in 1606, had pretty well explored the coast between the entrance to Hudson's Straits in the north and Nantucket in the south, and although from the southern colonists of Virginia had coasted as far north as about 45°. No previous explorer, however, had ever examined the intervening coast, although Verazzanno, Gomez, Alfonse de Saintouge, perhaps Jehan Crossin, or the explorer whose discoveries his maps record, and several others about whose voyages even less is known, had sailed along this stretch of shore. Approaching Cape Cod from the north, Hudson became embarrassed, and in seeking to pursue his southward course was greatly harassed by the shoals lying off its eastern extremity. Finally reaching the open sea, he did not again approach land until he found himself in the neighbourhood of Cape Charles. Probably, on several occasions before, he had turned to the south, and his voyage toward the south was doubtless due to the fact that its shoal waters convinced him that this could not be the entrance to the sought for passage. It seems clear that, from the information in his possession, he looked rather for success in the neighbourhood of 40°, probably having in mind Verazzanno's "goodly and clearly shown" in about the same latitude on the Pisous and Cosin maps. Some such as that Hudson, following closely in the track of his predecessor, Giovanni da Verazzano, entered in his turn, on Sept. 11, 1609, the land-locked harbour which Verazzano had visited eighty-five

Robert Juet, who had been master's mate ("the Master his Mate") on Hudson's second voyage, in 1608, and was an officer of the "Half Moon" (probably the navigator, but clearly not fully in Hudson's confidence, in so far at least as related to the motives and politics underlying the expedition), gives the best account of his voyage that is extant.

On Saturday the five and twentieth of March, 1609, after the old Account, we set sail from Amsterdam; and by the seven and twentieth day, we were downs at the Texel: and by twelve of the clocke we were off the Land, it being East of vs two leages off. And because it is a journey usually known, I omit to put downe what passed, till we came to the height of The North Cape of Finmark, which we did performe by the fitt of May (8th same) being Tuesday. On which day we observed the height of the Pole, and found it to bee 71. degrees and 46. minutes; and found our Compass to vary six degrees to the West: and at twelve of the clocke, the North Cape did bear South-west and by South, tene leagues off, and wee steered away East and by South, and South.

There is no further entry until the 19th, when, without a word of explanation regarding the sudden abandonment of the original intention of seeking a south-east passage, or the breaking of the contract, Juet records the "Hill Moon" again off the North Cape, on a westerly course. They reached Strúmše, to the F৷eroe Islands, on the 30th, and left again on the first of June, steering "South-west and by West," until on the 22d they found themselves in 44° and 58'. From here they "steered away West for Newfoundland Land." On July 12, they "had sight of the Land between 43° and 44° (the south coast of Nova Scotia)." The sixteenth, in the morning it cleared vp, and we had sight of five Islands lying North, and North and by West from vs, two leagues. Then wee made ready to set sayle, but the miste came so thick, that we durst not enter in among them.

The seventeenth, was all mystie, so that wee could not get into the Harbours of the mouth of it [Barnegat Bay]." But on the 11th of the month we had seen and entered eight vs, with sixe of the Saviours of the Countrey, seeming glad of our coming. We gaue them triffles, and they eate and dranke with vs; and told vs, that there were Gold, Siluer, and Copper mynes hard by vs; and that the French-men doe Trade with them; which is very likelie, for one of them spake some words of French. So wee rode still all day and all night, the weather continuing mystie.

"The eighteenth, faire weather, wee went into a very good Harbour" (Pomenbroe) where, on the 23d, they rigg'd their new forecast. After fishing and trading with the natives, they finally, before departing, plundered "Drake the Shaggers from their Houses, and tooke the spoyle of them, as they would haue done of vs." On the 26th they came out of the Harbour and sailed again south-west. On the 3d of August they "went on Land [on the north side of Cape Cod], and found goodly Grapes, and Rose trees."

On the 29th we cleared the cap, which they recognized as Cape Cod, and on the 6th the out lying shoals, and "steered away South and by East."

On the 9th they found themselves in 38° 39', "in an unknowne sea." On the following day they tacked about to the westward. On the 17th, at sunrise, they began to look for land, which they sighted at about 11 o'clock, in 37° 26', just north of "the Entrance of the Kings River in Virginia, where our English-men are." From the 18th to the 26th, they cruised about off the shore in a storm. On the latter date, at noon, their "height was 37. degrees 15. minutes. And wee found that we were returned to the same place, from whence we were put off at our first seeing Land." On the 27th, Juet records: "The Coast lyeth South-west South-east, and is a white Sandie shorre, and sheweth full of Bayes and Points. The streame setteth West South-west, and East North-east. At site of the clocke at night, we were thwart of an Harbour or River [Chincoteague Inlet—or Bay], but we saw a Barre yee before it;" On the Northward, the water was as clear as with many Islands in it. At site of the clocke we Anchored, and sent our Boate to sound to the sound-ward, and found no less then foure, and halfe, sixe, and sevene fathoms.

The eight and twentieth, faire and hot weather, the winde at South-west, and about seven o'clock, wee weighed, and steered away North twelve leagues till noone, and came to the Point of the Land [Cape Henlopen]; and being hard by the Land in fие fathomes, on a sudden wee came into three fathomes; then we bare vp and had but ten fowte water, and join'd to the Point. Then as soone as wee were ouer, wee had fие, six, seven, eight, and nine fathoms; and when wee would not come. Then wee found the Land to trend away North-west, with a great Bay and Rivers [Delaware Bay]. But the Bay wee found sound; and in the offing wee had ten fathomes, and had sight of Breaches and drie Sand. Then wee were forced to stand backe againe; so we stood backe South-east by South, three leagues, and shore of the clocke wee Anchored in eight fathomes water; and found a Tide set to the North-west, and North North-west, and it riseth one fathome, and showeth South South-east. And hee that will thoroughly Discover this great Bay, must have a small Pinnace, that must draw but foure or fие fowte water, to sound before him.

At fие in the morning wee weighed, and steered away to the Eastward on many courses, for the Norther Land is full of sholds."

On the 29th they coasted along the shore, which they "found to bee all Islands." On the 30th they "stood to the Eastward," and were out of sight of land until the 2d of September. On this day, early in the morning, they "saw a great Fire, but could not see the Land, then we came to ten fathoms, whereupon we brought our tackles aboord, and stood to the Eastward East-South-east, four Glasses" (4 hours). Then the sun arose, and, says Juet: "we steered away North again, and saw the Land from the West, to the North, to the North-west, to the North-east, to our soundings were eleven and ten fathoms." This corresponds exactly to the formation between Atlantic City and Little Egg Inlet.

"Then wee looed in for the shorze, and faire by the shorze, we had seuen fathoms. The course along the Land we found to be Northeast by North," which corresponds to the map. They continued from "the Land which we had first sight of, until we came to a great Lake of water, as wee could judge it to bee, being drowned Land, which made it to rise like Islands, which was in length ten leagues [Barneget Bay]. The mouth of that Lake hath many sholds, and the Sea breakeeth on them as it is east out of the mouth."

From that Lake or Bay, the Land lyeth North by East [which again corresponds exactly with the map], and wee had a great streame out of the Bay; and thence our sounding was ten fathoms, two leagues from the Land. At five o'clock they anchored, probably a few miles north of Barneget Inlet. From this point Juet records, "For [far to the Northward of us] we saw high Hills" (Nave-sink Highlands, and perhaps the Staten Island hills), and, he adds, "This is a very good Land to fall with, and a pleasant Land to see."

The next day, September 3rd, they weighed anchor at ten o'clock, and, with the wind south-west, stood to the Northward until three in the afternoon, when they came to "three great Rivers," which can have been none other than Raritan Bay, the Narrows, and Rockaways Inlet. From this point the narrative continues: "So we stood along to the Northernmost [the Narrows] thinking to have gone into it, but we found it to have a very strong barre before it [Rogers Shoal]. We then steered to the Southward [towards Sandy Hook] . . . till we came to the Southester side of them [the shoals] . . . and Anchored [a short distance to the north of Sandy Hook]. So wee sent in our Boate to sound [towards the Hook], and they found no less water then foure, five, sixe, and sevene fathoms, and returned in an houre and a halfe. So wee weighed and went in, and rode in fieue fathoms, Ozie ground" (probably just inside the Hook). Here Juet records the latitude or "height" as 40° 30'.

"The fourth, in the morning as soone as the day was light, wee saw that it was good riding farther vp . . . and found that it was a very good Harbour; and fivee and fieue fathoms, two Cables length from the shore [this undoubtedly was Horsehoe Bay or Harbour]. Then we weighed and went in with our ship. Then our Boate went on Land [Sandy Hook] . . . At night the wind blew hard at the North-west, . . . and wee droue on shoare, but tooke no hurt, thankd be God, for the ground is soft sand and osie."

"The fift, in the morning . . . we heased off our ship against into fieue fathoms water, and sent our Boate to sound the Bay, and we found that there was three fathoms hard by the Souther shore. Our men went on Land there, and saw great store of Men, Women, and Children, with the clocke being weighed, and steered away North twelve leagues till noone, and came to the Point of the Land [Cape Henlopen]; and being hard some Currants. For one of them came aboard and brought some dryed, and gave me some, which were sweet and good. This day many of the people came aboard, some in Mantles of Feathers, and some in Skins of divers sorts of good Furrer. Some women and children came aboard also. They brought English Tobacco, and other things of Copper they did weare about their neckes. At night they went on Land again, so we rode very quiet, but durst not trust them.

The sixth . . . our Master sent John Coleman [doubtless the same Coleman who is mentioned as master's mate in the account of Hudson's first voyage], with four other men in our Boare oute to the Northside, to sound the other Rier, being foure leagues from vs [evidently the Narrow]. They found by the way shoud water two fathom [Romer Shoul, etc]: but at the North of the Riffer eighteen, and twentie fathomes, and very good riding for Ships [He probably refers here to Quarantine]; and a narrow Rier to the Westward betweene two bands [the Kill Van Kull, between Staten Island, of the insularity of which Hudson probably had been informed by the Indians, and Bergen Neck, which, from its shape, they might easily have mistaken for an island] . . . So they went in two leagues and saw an open Sea [Newark Bay], and returned; and as they came back it was set up by two Canoes, the one hauing twelve, the other fourteene men . . . and they had one man slaine in the fight, which was an Englishman named John Coleman . . . and two more hurt. It grew so darke [he sayde] that they could not find the ship next night, but labored too and fro on their Oares. They had so great a streame, that their grapnell would not hold them [this evidently refers to the very strong tide setting through the Narrow].

The seventh . . . by ten of the clock they returned aboord the ship [which was still at anchor near Sandy Hook]; and brought our dead man with them, whom we carried on Land and buryed, and named the place after his name, Coleman's Point." (This must have been on Sandy Hook.)

The eighth they rode at anchor all day. "The people came aboard vs, and brought Tobacco and Indies Whence, to exchange for Knives and Beadles, and offered vs no violence.

On the ninth they "weighed and went off into the channel of the Rier [towards the Narrow], and Anchored there all night." At noon on the tenth they "weighed and went ouer, and found it should all the middle of the Rier . . . and rode all night to soft Ozie ground. The banke is Sandy." (It is readily seen from an examination of the government coast chart that these conditions correspond closely with those existing between Sandy Hook and Coney Island.)

On the eleventh, at one o'clock in the afternoon, they "weighed and went into the Rier [the Narrow]. Our soundings were seuen, sixe, five, seuen, eight, nine, ten, twelve, thirteene, and foureteen fathomes [Such depths can only have been found in the Narrow]. Then it should ainge, and came to foure fathomes [which corresponds to conditions existing a yard or Bay Ridge Bay]. Then wee Anchored, and saw that it was a very good Harbour for all windes . . ." (the Upper Bay).

On the twelfth, at two o'clock in the afternoon, they weighed and "turned into the Rier two leagues and Anchored" (This would bring them to the mouth of the Hudson, off the Battery.). This morning at the first (watch) they rode in the river and "there came eight and twentie Canoes full of men, and children . . ." (probably from Manhattan Island). Juet here records: "It [the river] floweth South-east by South within," which, of course, Island.

On the thirteenth they weighed anchor again and turned four miles into the river and in the afternoon ran up 23 leagues farther and anchored all night. (This would correspond to a point near Fort Lee.) From here Juet records that "they had an high point of the Country to vs, bearing by East foure leagues off vs." (This was undoubtedly the highland back of Tarrytown which has this appearance from Fort Lee.)

Hudson proceeded to the "end of the Rier Naugahlednese," which Van Meteren gives as in latitude 42° 40', and De Laet as "about 43°," and, having sent the master's mate and four men in a small boat east or the leaghes near Cape & thence to an high point of the Mohawk, to sound the river, was convinced that it could not afford a passage to China, and therefore retraced his course, passing out of sight of Sandy Hook on October 4th, thus reluctantly relinquishing his cherished hope, and returning with the sad conviction that the thoroughfare which he had hoped to find did not exist, at least in those parts. Further explorations were, for this voyage, out of the question, and from the bay of this mighty river a Commerce. They made sail down the river England, and, after seeing any Land by the way . . . And on the seventh day of November, stile 1609, being Saturday: by the Grace of God . . . safely arrived in the Range of Dartmouth in Devonshire, in the yeare 1609."—Farrar's His Pilgrimes. III. 591-95, 594.

The only other known contemporary account of Hudson's third voyage was written by Emanuel van Meteren, and appears for the first time in the 1st edition, pages 275-76, of the folio edition of 1610 of his celebrated work, with the title Commentarien Van den Nederlantens Staat, Handel Overwyghen ende Gezeideren van onsen tyden, etc[et], the preface of which is dated "Anno 1610 in Februario."—See Nijhoff's reprint of Murphy's Henry Hudson in Holland, 64, 70; the same authority contains a transcription from the 1611 edition, and a rather unsatisfactory translation. Jameron's translation (Nov. N. Neth., 6-9), which is "revised from the text of the 1614 edition," shows that this edition differs materially from that of 1610, which was the last revised by Van Meteren himself, the 1611 quartos being a pirated edition, issued by the same publisher, and bearing the same title, as the well known issue of 1614. For notes regarding the various editions of this important hook, see Bibliography. For reproduction, see PLB, Vol. IV. See also the 1st volume of this work, which was written in London, apparently in the early part of 1610, soon after Hudson's return to England, and contains some facts which Juet does not give. It was probably based on information obtained from Juet's Dutch mate. It begins (translated by A. J. E. Van Laer): "We have said in the preceding book [an error, as the last book contains nothing relating to this subject] that the Directors of the East India Company in Holland had sent out last March [1609], in order to seek a passage to China by the northeast or the northwest, a brave English pilot, named Henry Hudson, with a Vlie boat, having a crew of about 18 or 20 men, part English and part Dutch, well provided.

This Henry Hudson sailed from Texel the 6th of April, 1609, he doubled the Cape of Norway the 5th of May and kept his course toward Nova Zembla along the northern coasts, but found the sea there as full of ice as the preceding year, so that they lost all hope [of succeeding] that year. Whereupon, on account of the cold, which some who had been in the East Indies could hardly endure, they, being English and Dutch, fell to quarrelling among themselves, whereupon the skipper, Hudson, proposed to them two things. The first was to go in latitude of 40 degrees to the coast of America, moved thither mostly by letters and promises which one Olaus Smith had sent him from Virginia, whereby he indicated to him a sea [which would enable him] to sail around their southern colony on the north side and from there to pass into a western sea, which, if it had been true (since [albeit] experience as yet points to the contrary) would lead them by a very short and easy route to India. The other proposition was to seek a way through Davis's Straits, to which they generally agreed; hence they sailed thitherforthe 14th of May and with a fair wind arrived on the last of May at the Island of Faro, where they stayed but 24 hours to take in fresh water. After leaving [there], they sailed until, on the 18th of July, [they came to] the coast of Nova Franca, in [latitude of] 44 degrees, where they were obliged to run in to get a new foresmast (having lost theirs), which they found there and set up. They found this place suitable for cod-fishing and also for the traffic of good hides and pelts and game, which was to be had there for trilling things. But the ship's crew behaved badly toward the natives, taking things by force, about which they began to quarrel with each other, the English fearing that they were outnumbered and the weakest and being therefore afraid to explore further. So they left there on the 26th of July and continued at sea until the third of August, when they approached the land in latitude of 42 degrees. Hence they sailed on until, on the 12th of August, they again came near the coast in latitude of 37° 45' just north of the entrance to Chesapeake Bay. Thence they sailed along the shore until they reached 40° 45', where they found a passage north, and so entered it on the 12th of September [and discovered] as beautiful a river as one could find [the Hudson], wide and deep, with good anchoring ground, and vegetation ["wat", probably for genus] on both sides. Finally they came in latitude of 42 degrees and 30 minutes with their big ship, but their ship’s boat went higher up the river. Near the entrance of the river they found bold and warlike people, but inland, at the farthest point, they found friendly and civil people, who had an abundance of provisions and many skins and peltries, mantlets and furs and many other commodities, birds, fruits and even white and red grapes. They traded politely with the people and brought a little of everything with them. Now when they had been about fifty miles (leagues) up the river, they returned on the fourth of October and again put to sea.

More could have been accomplished if there had been good-will among the crew and if the want of some necessary provisions had not disturbed them.

At sea, they held counsel together and were of different opinions. The mate, a Dutchman, advocated to winter in Terra Nova [Newfoundland] and to explore the northwest passage of Davi.
The skipper, Hutsen, was opposed to this; he feared his muttonous crew, because they had at times threatened him roughly, and also that in the cold of winter they would consume their entire provisions and then be obliged to return, many of the crew being weak and sickly. No one, however, spoke of returning home to Holland, which gave the skipper various grounds for suspicion, so that he agreed to return to Ireland, which they all agreed. So at last, they arrived in England, at Dartmouth, 7 on the 7th of November, whence they notified their employers, the directors in Holland, of their voyage, stating that they were willing to explore the northwest, provided fifteen hundred guilders in money were spent in provisions, in addition to their wages and those of the mates, Lens, and Hutsen, and what the seven of his crew changed, bringing the number up to 20 men, etc. They were to sail from Dartmouth about the first of March, to be in the northwest toward the end of March and to spend there the month of April and the half of May in killing whales and [other] animals near the island of Panar and then to sail to the northwest, to pass the time there until the middle of September and thereafter to return to Holland around the northeast of Scotland. Thus this voyage ended and before the directors could be advised of their arrival in England a long time elapsed through contrary winds.
They ordered the ship and crew to come home at the first opportunity and as this was about to be done, the skipper, Henry Hutsen, was by the authorities there ordered not to depart, but to serve his own country, [the same being required] also of the other Englishmen who were on the ship. To many, however, it seemed strange that the skippers were not allowed to render an account and make a report of their service and doing, etc., to the masters, having been sent out for the general benefit of navigation. This took place in January 1610, and it was thought that the English themselves wished to send him with ships to Virginia to explore there the sourestad river further.

Although not strictly contemporary, Johan de Laet, in the first edition of Murphy’s Nieuw Werelt, Book III, “Virginia,” section “Nieuw-Nederlandt,” Chap. 7, gives an account of Hudson’s discovery, that was probably based on the last journal of Henry Hudson, or on his preliminary report, which, perhaps, the Amsterdam directors of the East India Company lent to the compiler. He says: “As to the first discovery, the Directors of the Chartered East India Company, in 1609, dispatched the yacht Half Moon, under the command of Hendrick Hudson, captain and supercargo, to seek a passage to China by the northeast.
But they changed their course and stood over towards New France; and abolished the banks of New and western lands. This 53° 33’, made the land in latitude 41° 47’, which they supposed to be an island, and gave it the name of New Holland, but afterwards discovered that it was Cape Cod, and that, according to their observation, it lay fully seventy-five leagues to the west of its place on all the charts. From here they fell down to 37° 15’, where they laid up the coast on the east and west for south; and along it stretched a bank or shoal, inside of which there was a depth of eight, nine, ten, eleven, seven, and six and a half fathoms, with a sandy bottom. They called this place Dry Cape [probably Cape Charles].

“Running thence to the southwest, they again discovered land in latitude 38° 9’, where there was a white sand beach, and within it an abundance of green trees. The direction of the coast was north-northeast and south-southwest for about eight leagues, then north and south for seven leagues, and afterwards southeast and northwest for five leagues. They continued to run along the coast to the north, until they reached a point from which the land stretched to the west-northwest, and thence they ascended a drano which several rivers discharged. From this point land was seen to the east-northeast, which they took to be an island; but it proved to be the main land, and the second point of the bay, in latitude 58° 54’. Standing upon a course northwest by north, they found themselves embayed in the Delaware Bay. They then breakers, stood out again to the south-southwest. They suspected that a large river discharged into the bay, from the strength of the current that set out, and caused these sands and shoals.

“Continuing their course along the shore, they observed a white sandy beach and drowned land within, beyond which the land was full of trees, the coast running northeast by north and southwest by south. Afterwards the direction of the coast changed to north by east, and was higher land than they had yet seen, along to a lady prominent, behind which was situated a bay, where they ran into a low sandy shoal, in the 20° 18’ Sandy Hook. There they were visited by two savages clothed in ell-skins, who showed them every sign of friendship. On the land they found an abundance of blue plums and the finest oaks for height and thickness that one could ever see; together with plentifuls other kinds of wood useful in ship building. Sailing hence in a north-by-east direction, they ascended the river to about 45° north latitude, where it became so narrow and of so little depth that they turned back.”—Jameson, Nav. N.
Neths, 35-36.

An interesting contemporary side light is contained in a letter written on Dec. 2, 1611, by the Marqués de Guadaleonte from Brussels to the Spanish king on affairs passing in Holland. See Vol. II, p. 44. This letter states that the “Company had equipped two famous ships, in order to trade with China, going by the way of Tartary; and also that an Englishman was willing to execute the plan, and that his master had not allowed it.” In other words, if the information be true, Hudson sailed against the express will or order of the English King, which would go far toward explaining his retention in England after his return. The reference to the two ships may possibly be explained by the fact that the yacht “Half Moon” or “Good Hope” sailed for the Wei-fats (the strait between Nova Zembla and the mainland) about the same time that the “Half Moon” left with instructions to sail north of Nova Zembla. It is conceivable that they sailed together, and that the “Good Hope” returned to Holland when Hudson turned and sailed westward. See the “Ship Book” for 1668 (1609), and Register of the East India Co., in M. Phy’s Nieuw Nederlant, “Henry Hudson in Holland,

A description of the “Half Moon,” based on investigations undertaken in Holland and America at the time of the construction of the replica for the Hudson-Fulton Celebration, may be found in The Hudson-Fulton Celebration, I, 92-104, and in an article entitled “Henry Hudson and the Discovery of the Hudson River,” by and Hist. Pres. Soc. (1910), 259-71. See also Murphy’s Henry in Holland and Halv Hand, 57-60, where extracts are given from the “Sailing book (Unterplochekh)” and “Memorandum book” (Memoir), which were rediscovered in the archives of the East India Company at Amsterdam by Brodie, in 1841, and which are referred to in his Hist. State of N. T., notes pp. 24 and 45, as the “Ship book.”
There are four entries referring to the “Half Moon”; the first, from the “Sailing book,” records the fact that the yacht “Halve Maen” of 40 lasts, left Amsterdam in 1608 (evidently a mistake for 1609), destined for the north, and returned in 1610 (see Pl. 1, IV). The second, also from the “Sailing book,” under the date of May 2, 1611, records the sailing of the “Halve Maen” for the West Indies, in company with the “Banda,” and under command of Captain Commander Laurens Roseland. This entry also records the wreck of the “Banda” on March 6, 1615, on the island of Mauritius, and states that the “Halve Maen” remained (there). The third, in the “Memorandum book,” under the heading “Ships outgoing A 1608” (evidently an error for 1609) from Amsterdam, records the yacht "half mane," 40 lasts, "Schipper Heijnrick Heiten" (see Apr. Pl. 1, Vol. IV). The fourth, also from the "Memorandum book," under the heading "Ships sent under Commander Laurens Reael, to 2d May 1611, from Amsterdam," gives the ship "Banda" and the Nov. yacht "Halve Mane," the latter in command of Melis Andries.

The last mention of the "Half Moon" is found in a list of ships which were in various places in the (West) Indies from July, 1616, until the end of the same year. In this list, which is contained in Begin en Voortgang der Oost-Indische Compagnie, II: 129, the "Half Moon" is mentioned as being at the island of Sumatra. Her ultimate fate has never been ascertained. See also Iconography, III: 54-55.

Broeders' statement (Hist. State of N. Y., 42) that the "Half Moon" returned to Amsterdam on July 15, 1616, is not supported by any authority that we have been able to discover.

Hudson's course or "track" on his memorable third voyage is shown on the two maps of "Early Explorations" contained in Vol. II, C. Pls. 58 and 59. For a contemporary cartographical representation of the information which he must have possessed, before sail- ing, see "The Virginia Company Chart," C. Pl. 21a, Vol. II, and for a similar representation of his discoveries on this voyage, and those made by his immediate successors in 1610, see the Velasco Map of 1610, C. Pl. 22 and 22a, and Cartography, pp. 51-61, Vol. II, end of Chaps. II, III, and Vol. II.

Acher, in his Henry Hudson the Navigator, cxxiv, concludes that Hudson had two vessels, the "Good Hope" and the "Half Moon," and that the "Good Hope" may have returned after the mutiny near Nova Zembla: he also concludes (ccli) that one of the "maps belonging to the expedition" (IV pl. 12, Vol. II), and that another may have been Ribero's (C. Pl. 10, Vol. II).

Hans Bretonmantel, the well-known Dutch annalist and anti- quary, and one of the directors of the Dutch West India Company, made a memorandum, sometime between 1653 and 1659, in regard to the first discovery of New Netherlands. The country was first found and discovered in the year 1609 at the charge of the chartered East India Company by the ship de halve maen [Half Moon], on the way to discover a passage to the Kingdom of China. The skipper thereof was a merchant, a certain Henry Hudson, an Englishman by birth, but who had had intercourse a long while among the Netherlands, and was now in the service of the East India Company on monthly pay. This ship, sailing away from the Canary Islands, set its course toward the northwest. Having thus sailed with moderate speed for twenty days, they met land, according to their conjecture in 90 degrees west, and made various proofs that no other Christians had been there before them, but that the land was now first discovered by them. Land then appearing, and observing the fitness of the coast and strand, they approached toward it. They took possession of the prospect at convenience, and gave to it the name of Nieu Nederlandt. It lies in the western part of the new American wilderness, commencing north by the equinocial line, 38° 53', along the seacoast to 42° degrees north latitude; these are the same elevations as those of Sardinia and Corsica, in the Mediterranean Sea, and of Spain and France along the ocean."—New Netherland Papers, original manu- scripts in N. Y. Pub. Library, from which this item is an abstract, in translation, from folio 1217.

What is known concerning the aborigines of Manhattan Island and vicinity, at the time of Hudson's visit, in 1609, has been studiously analyzed by Alamson Skinner, assistant curator of Anthropology in the American Museum of Natural History, and published by him in two monographs. The first of these is an introductory statement on "The Manhattan Indians," in the N. Y. State Mu- seum Bulletin, No. 158 (1911), printed also as a separate by the N. Y. State Education Dept. (Albany, 1912); the second is The Indians of Greater New York (Cedar Rapids, Iowa, 1913). No. 3 in a series from "Life," "History," "Struggles," "North America," and "Culture," titled "Some Customs of the Delaware Indians," in the Journal of the Museum of the Univ. of Penn., Vol. I, No. 3, and "Vestiges of Material Culture Among the Canadian Indians," in the American Anthropologist, which Skinner describes as "forerunners of a much larger work [not yet published, 1921] based on personal archival research about New York City, and ethnological study among the surviving Dakotas of Canada and Oklahoma, which, when given to the public, will be the dernier mot on the subject."

Mr. Skinner has himself done considerable field work in and around New York, and has published a map showing the locations of shell deposits on Staten Island, Long Island, and in Westchester Co., as well as a book on the "Indians of Greater New York and the Lower Hudson" (1909). Particularly note- worthy is the account by Reginald Pelham Botan, entitled "The Indians of Washington Heights," in which he combines the stories of their eventual life and of his successful hunt for their relics. Similar papers, by Rev. W. M. Beauchamp, are pub. in the Bulle- tins of the N. Y. State Museum, Nos. 16, 18, 23, 31, 41.

Skinner also calls attention to a curious document, known as the "Walum Olum" or "Red Score of the Delawares," purporting to be a copy of an original history of the Delaware nation, described by D. G. Brinton in The Lenape and Their Legends (Philadelphia, 1885). It was translated by the latter, and printed, together with other and other sources of information, Skinner has been able to point out broadly the history and characteristics of the Indians of this vicinity, as well as to tell some of the tragic incidents, known to us in connection with New York City history and pre- sented in the Chronology from original records. He presents, by means of interesting quipus (IV pl. 12, Vol. II), a complete picture of the physical features, dress, dwellings, utensils, ceremonies, hab- its, and customs of the Indians of this region, in peace and war, and describes their relics unearthed in this vicinity in recent years.

He states (1913) that "Some time before the advent of the Dutch at New Amsterdam, a party of the Wyckquasegck or De- ware Indians split off from the parent stock, which had its abode south and west of the Hudson, and moved eastward and north- ward, forming the Mahikon tribe. They occupied Manhattan Island and the east bank of the Hudson as far north as the southern boundary of the Mohawk Indians. In time they became subdivi- ded into several subdivisions and bands, the chief of which, known as the Wappinger Confederacy, was composed of the Wappingers, Kitchawancks, Sintincks, Siwanyow, Weckquasegck, and Reckgwa- wands. Of these people, the two tribes last mentioned were found by the Dutch inhabiting Manhattan Island. At that time, the Weckquasegck occupied the upper part of the island, above a line drawn from the Reckewa's creek (later Harlem creek) to the ravine at what is now Manhattanville, and the Reckgawand occupied the lower part of the island. Both of these tribes also held territories on the mainland, where their principal abodes were situated.

"The name Manhattan referred to the portions of both tribes dwelling on the island, and it is said to mean 'Islanders.'" (For derivation of the name Manhattan, see remarks under Etyymology in Vol. II, Chap. VII, pp. 111-22, and authorities there cited.)

In his treaty of 1613, Skinner names each tribal band in vari- ous localities of Greater New York and the surrounding country. "As for the Manhattans or Reckgawawks, as they are sometimes called, there is some little doubt as to whether they were a Mohocean or a Delaware band. The evidence seems to show that they were a subtribe of the Unami Delawares. They also occupied part of the mainland nearby."

As shown in the Chronology, Verrazano (see 1524) gives us our first records of the Indians in the neighborhood of Manhattan Island, and their kindred. These did not differ, he said, from the natives whom he had met elsewhere along the coast. They were of medium height, well proportioned, severe, industrious, and living by hunting (see N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., IV 45). He describes the dress of two of their kings, and of their women.

The next records in which a description of the natives is found is the journal of Juet (see Jameson's Narr. N. Yeth., 18). Henry Hudson's own account in his Recht (see above, p. 329) of the neighborhood of Manhattan Island, taken from De Laet's narrative, which is based on Hudon's lost journal, will be found (translated) in ibid., 48. Van der Donck (see ibid., 300-03) gave further first-hand evidence of the personal appearance and customs of those he saw. Good accounts are also given by Wassenaer, De Laet, De Raisère, Michællus, Megaaphenous, and others, all of which will be found translated in 1609. Ibid. One of the fullest descriptive accounts is that of Denton, in 4 1670 (p. 3). See also Bibliography, Vol. V.
10 In this connection, although of very little historical importance,
Nov. 17 DeLamars, Momsley, and Mahicanet near forty years ago. It is copied from notes and manuscripts taken on the spot.

The Indians said:

"A long time ago, when there was no such thing known to the Indians as people with a white skin, some Indians who had been out a-fishing, and where the sea widens, espied at a great distance something remarkably large swimming, or floating on the water, and such as they had never seen before. They immediately returning to the shore apprised their countrypeople of what they had seen, and pressed them to go out with them and discover what it might be. These together hurried out, and saw to their great surprise and wonder that it could not be the whale; some concluding it either to be an uncommon large fish, or other animal, while others were of opinion it must be some very large house. It was at length agreed among those who were spectators, that as this phenomenon moved towards the land, whether or not it had life in it, it would be best to do anything that had a tendency to inform all the Indians on the inhabited islands of what they had seen, and put them on their guard. Accordingly, they sent runners and watermen off to carry the news to their scattered chiefs, that these might send off in every direction for the warriors to come in. These arriving in numbers, and themselves viewing the strange appearance, and that it was actually moving towards them, (the entrance of the river or bay,) concluded it to be a large canoe or house, in which the great Mannito (great or Supreme Being) himself was; and that he probably was coming to visit them. By this time the chiefs of the different tribes were assembled on York Island, and were counselling (or deliberating) on the manner they should receive their Mannito on his arrival. Every step had been taken to be well provided with a plenty of meat for a sacrifice; the women were required to prepare the best of victuals; idols or images were examined and put in order; and a grand dance was supposed not only to be an agreeable entertainment for the Mannito, but might, with the addition of sacrifice, contribute towards appeasing him, in case he was angry with them. The conjurers were also set to work, to determine what the meaning of this phenomenon was, and what the result would be. Between hope and fear, and in confusion, a dance commenced. While in this situation, a man, declaring himself to be the chief of the country, and crowded with living creatures. It now appears to be certain that it is the great Mannito bringing them some kind of game, such as they had not before; . . . full of people, yet of quite a different color than they (the Indians) are of; that they were also dressed in a different manner from them, and that one in particular appeared altogether red, which must be the Mannito himself. They are soon hailed from the vessel, though in a language they do not understand yet they shout (or yell) in their way. Many are for running off to the woods, but are pressed by others to stay, in order not to give offence to their visitors, who could find them out, and mean no harm to them. Shortly after this house (as some have it,) stops, and a smaller canoe comes ashore with the red man and some others in it; some stay by this canoe to guard it. The chiefs and wise men (or councillors) had composed a large circle, unto which the reddishman with two others approach. He salutes them with friendly countenance, and they return the salute after their manner. They are lost in admiration, both as to the colour of the skin (of these whites) as also to their manner of dress, mixed yet as to the habit of him who wore the red clothes, which alone with something [face] they could not account for. He must be the great Mannito (Supreme Being) they think, but why should he bring them beads, axes, hoesses, stockings, &c. They say that they had become familiar to each other, and were made to understand by signs; that they now would return home, but would visit them next year again, because they would bring them more presents, and stay with them awhile. That the vessel arrived the season following [If this whole legend has any foundation in fact, this may be a reference to the mysterious expedition of 1610 (p. 47), to which De Laet refers, and they were much rejoiced at seeing each other; but that the whites laughed at them (the Indians,) seeing they knew not the use of the ax, hoe, &c., they had given them, they having had these hanging to their breasts as ornaments; and the stockings they had made use of as tobacco pouches. . . . They took every white man they saw for a Mannito, yet inferior and attendant to the supreme Mannito, to whom were red and yellow, to the one which is gold, and white. The probability daily increasing between them and the whites, the latter now proposed to stay with them, asking them only for so much land as the hide of a bullock would cover (or encompass,) which hide was brought forward and spread on the ground before them. That they readily granted this requisit; whereupon the whites took a knife and beginning at one place on this hide, cut it up into a rope not thicker than the finger of a little child, so that by the time this hide was cut up there was a great heap. That this rope was drawn out to a great distance, and then brought round again, so that both ends might meet. That they carefully avoided its breaking and that upon that they were ready to pick up a piece of great length. That some of the (Indians) were surprised at the superior wit of the whites, but did not wish to contend with them about a little land, as they had enough. That they and the whites lived for a long time contentedly together, although these asked from time to time more land of them; and proceeding higher up the Mahicanituck (Hudson River), they believed they would soon want all their country, and which, at this time was already the case."

After 40 years of warfare under William of Orange and his son, Prince Maurice, the federal republic of the United States, now approaching the height of its greatness, concludes (at Anwerp) with Spain a 12-years' truce. The provisions include an acknowledgment by Spain of the independence of the Netherlands.

A second charter is granted to the London Company (the southern colony of the Virginia Company), erecting it into "a corporation and body politic," and enlarging and explaining its privileges. This new charter extended the bounds of the colony to over 1,000,000 square miles, stretching 200 miles north and 200 miles south of Point Comfort, and from sea to sea. Under these limitations, the northerly boundary was fixed at about the fortieth degree, instead of the forty-first which was the limit fixed in the charter of 1606.

The Plymouth Company continued for eleven years longer to enjoy a nominal existence under its first charter; but, although several attempts were made to form new settlements, not a single permanent English colony was established, north of Virginia, until 1606.

The York River was settled by the English, 1605.

Samuel de Champlain is engaged in a great fight with the Iroquois near Ticonderoga, on Lake Champlain.—Champlain, Voyages (1612), 149-52.

The settlement at Jamestown, Va., is augmented by the arrival of seven ships, containing over 300 colonists. The "Adventure," bearing the leaders of the expedition—Somers, Gates, and Newport—and about 200 colonists, was wrecked near Bermuda, so that these colonists (140 when they reached Virginia) did not arrive until May roth of the following year. Capt. John Smith's Works, I: 161; Smith, Hist. of First Discovery & Settlement of Va., 102.

October 4-14.

The Hudson River was explored in a large ship by some who had been two years in the Jamestown colony and had lately assumed the chief command, was sent back to England, suffering from injuries received in an explosion, "to answer some small medememos, whereof I persuade me he can scarcely clear himself from great imputation of blame." Smith sailed on one of the ships of the Gote and Somers fleet, which had reached Jamestown Aug. 21, 1609, and which left for home shortly after Oct. 4. —Letter of John Radcliffe to Lord Salisbury, dated from Jamestown, Oct. 4, 1609, reproduced in Brown's Genesis, I: 355.

Hudson reaches Dartmouth, England, from his return from the Hudson River, 1606, being formally elected to the directors of the Dutch East India Company a preliminary report, probably accompanied by a rough draft of his discoveries.—Van Meteren, History of the Netherlands, 328; see also Cartography, II: 45, et seq.
In February of this year, Emanuel van Meteren completed his "Commentaries and Memorial" of The Netherlands, which was printed under this year’s date. This great work, which in its final form is known to us by a single copy, brings the history down to the Spring of 1610 (he died in England on Apr. 3/16, 1614), and contains Hudson’s narrative in virtually the same form as that found in the pirated editions of 1613 and 1615—See Apr. 4-Nov. 7, 1609, and 1611.

Although De Lact tells us that Henry Hudson returned to Amsterdam (in 1610) with his report, no evidence has been discovered to substantiate this assertion; and, as we know from Van Meteren that both Hudson and his companions, after their return from America, were forbidden to leave England, and in January, 1610, were still there, and that on April 17 Hudson sailed on his fourth voyage, in the employ of the Muscovy Company of London, it seems hardly likely that he returned to Holland in the interval.

Van Meteren says: "A long time elapsed, through contrary winds, before the Company could be informed of the arrival of the ship in England. Then they ordered the ship and crew to return as soon as possible. But, when this was about to be done, Skipper Henry Hutson and the other Englishmen of the ship were commanded by the government there not to leave [England], but to serve their own country. Many persons thought it strange that captains should thus be prevented from laying their accounts and reports before their employers, having been sent out for the benefit of navigation in general. This took place in January, [1610]; and it was thought probable that the English themselves would send ships to Virginia, to explore further the aforesaid river."—Jameson, "N. Am. Navy," 9-9.

De Lact, whose statements can generally be relied upon, tells us further that "in the year 1610 some merchants again sent a ship thither—that is to say, to the second river discovered, which was called Manhattes from the savage nation that dwells at its mouth. And in the subsequent years [on Oct. 11, 1614, &c.] their High Mightinesses the States General granted to these merchants the exclusive privilege of navigating this river and trading there; . . ."—Ibid, 38. The versions of 1633 and 1640 add: "And our people wittered there.

It has been suggested that this 1610 expedition may have been the one promoted by Isaac Le Maire in the ship "De Vos," which is supposed to have sailed from Amsterdam in February or March, 1610, in Hudson’s track. New light has been shed on the mysterious voyage of this year by Dr. Wieder’s recent discovery in the Bijzarchief at The Hague, among the records of the admiralty, of memoranda to the effect that, on Feb. 2, 1610, Le Maire hired the yacht "De Vos" from the admiralty for a period of eight months, paying 160 fl. a month, expecting to return it earlier. He waited the ship "for a certain voyage which he intended to have undertaken," for which he declared it to be very desirable and profitable to the country, provided the said voyage be made "with all possible opportunity, and as expeditiously as possible, without a doubt he hoped it would." On Feb. 10, he proposed to buy the yacht; on Feb. 12, the admiralty put a price of 2,400 fl. upon it, and on the same day he bought it for 1,700 fl. It will be noted that this transaction took place immediately after the report of Hudson’s return must have reached Holland.—See Vol. II, p. 65. Nevertheless, in view of all the facts, it seems unlikely that "De Vos" should have visited the Hudson in this year, and that no positive record of the fact should have survived. Moreover, it is a matter of record (jeannin’s letter to Henry IV, referred to under 1608) that Le Maire’s interest at this time was centred upon a passage by way of the north-east, and not the north-west. Furthermore, Le Maire was not one of the thirteen merchants to whom a charter was granted on Oct. 11, 1614, and who, as we are told by De Lact, were the same who sent out the expedition of 1609. Moreover, it seems obvious that the expedition sent out by the merchants of Amsterdam was primarily, if not wholly, a trading venture, whereas we know that Le Maire’s chief object was the discovery of a passage to the Orient. Finally, from jeannin’s letter, it seems more than likely that Le Maire’s expeditions of 1609 and 1610 were backed by the French monarch, in an attempt to rival the English. Moreover, De Lact very clearly recalls the fact that Le Maire was a bitter rival of the East India Co., and was bent on finding a passage to the Orient that lay outside the limits of that company’s charter, it is conceivable that, when Hudson’s failure to find a passage by way of the north-east became known, and at the same time his hope of still finding one by way of the north-west, Le Maire may have dispatched the yacht "De Vos" in Hudson’s track again with the determination of forestalling him, this time in the west.

In this connection, reference may be made to a letter of May 5, 1612, from the West India Co. to the states-general, complaining of the detention in Plymouth, Eng., by command of the English king, of the ship "Dunsearch" with Dierick Minuit and Jan Lambo aboard. In this letter, reference is made to the Dutch rights in New Netherlands, as follows: "We have deemed it to be our duty to inform your High Mightinesses that, subsequent to the first discovery, by your subjects in the year 1609, of the North River (commonly called the Manhattans, also Rio de Montaigue and North river), and after some of your inhabitants had resorted thither, in the year 1610 and following years, your High Mightinesses had finally, in the year 1615 [sic] granted some of your inhabitants a charter to trade to those countries, to the exclusion of all other persons, and that they established a fort and garrison there, which were maintained until the charter granted to the West India Company included these and other countries."—From N. T. Col. Docis., I: 51. For further details and references, see Vol. II, Chap. III.

It is possible that De Lact, writing in 1625, may have made a mistake of a year, and that the expedition referred to was sent out on the "Fox" and "The Crane," which expedition was undoubtedly planned in 1610, although it did not sail until March 28, 1611. (q.v.)

In or about this year, the expedition of Piscataway (C. Pl. 21, and pp. 49, 50, 141, 153, Vol. II), which is very advanced in its delineation of the North East Coast, and apparently shows the Hudson River, was issued.

Hudson, in the service of the Muscovy Company of London, Apr. starts in the "Discovery" on his fourth and last voyage. He sailed through Hudson (Lumley’s) Strait, probably discovered by Cabot in 1497, into Hudson Bay, wintertid in James Bay, and was cast adrift by his mutinous crew on June 21, 1611, shortly after leaving his winter quarters.

The "Discovery," after many vicissitudes, returned to England on Sept. 6, and the remnant of the crew made their way to Sir Thomas Smith, governor of the English East India Company, to whose custody Hudson’s journal and maps of this voyage were in 1611 (see Vol. II, p. 46, citing letter of Dec. 1, 1611, in Simancas archives).

It is clear from such meagre information as has been preserved that Hudson died believing that he had discovered the entrance to the long sought for north-west passage.

For contemporary accounts of Hudson’s fourth voyage, see "An Abstract of the Journall of Master Henry Hudson," in Purchas His Pilgrimes, I: 116-117; Acabavit Pricket’s "Descouverie" (ibid., III: 597-600); "A note found in Dept of the Mathematieks, bee being one of them who was put into the Shallow" (ibid., III: 609-10), and Hesse Gerrits, second Latin ed. Capt. Samuel Argall, in company with Sir George Somers, sailed on June 29 from the Chesapeake for the Bermudas, but, owing to contrary winds, they were obliged to change their destination, and to steer instead for Sagadahoc. Before reaching the coast, the two ships were separated in a heavy fog. Argall, after spending some time cruising along the coast between Sagadahoc and Cape Cod, set his course for home, and, on August 22, was in the neighbourhood of Sandy Hook. He reached Delaware Bay on the 27th, and Cape Charles on the 31st.

In his own journal (printed in Purchas, IV: 1758), Argall makes no mention of having explored the coast or of having entered and charted between Cape Cod and Delaware Bay, although Strachey, first secretary of Virginia, in his history, apparently referring to this voyage, says: "Likewise, from the north point of our bay, which (as aforesaid) the Indians call Accomacwok, and we Cape Charles, hath the coast all along bene discovered, even to the river of Sachadelo; for Captain Argall, in his return from the sea of the Bermudas, on Sept. 11, 1614, reported that he had shot Sir George Somers, 28 July, in a dangerous fog, well beaten to and fro, fell with the mayne, standing on Cape Cod, and made good, from 44 degrees, what Captayne Bartho. Gosool and Captayne Waymouth wanted in their discoveries, observing all along the coast," and drawing the plots thereof, as he steered homewards, unto his bays, and divers tythes went ashore, offering acquaintance and trade unto the people: and in the latitude of 39 discovered another good bay [Delaware], into which fell many tayles of faire and large rivers, and which might make promise of some westerly passage; —"Strachey, The Hist. of Travail of Virginia Britannia, in Hakluyt Soc. Publications (1849), 42-43.

On March 23, 1613, Don Alonso de Velasco, Spanish ambassador in London, sent to the Spanish King (Philip III) a copy of a map, now known as the "Velasco Map" (C. Pls. 22 & 22a, Vol. II), which, in an accompanying letter, he described as having been drawn by a surveyor, or engineer, sent to America during the preceding year and here about three months ago (Dec., 1610, probably in the ship "Dainty"—see Brown's Genesis, 1: 428). The portion of the letter referring to the map reads as follows: "This King [James I] sent last year [1610] a surveyor to survey that Province, and he returned here about three months ago and presented to him [King James] a plan or map of all that he could discover, a copy of which I send Y. M. Whose Catholic Person . . . —"Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 457.

The Velasco Map delineates the coast from the straits of Belle Isle to Cape Fear. The characteristics of the coast-line north of New England do not vary materially from the usual, rather inconsiderable, the coast of the New England and Virginia—and the still unoccupied stretch between these two settlements, including the tract explored by Hudson, all of which are shown with considerable detail and accuracy, there is every reason to believe from Hudson's own survey, or from information furnished by him personally.

The name Manhattan ("Manahata" and "Manahatin") appears for the first time on the Velasco Map.

The authorship of this very important document, in its final form, is unknown, although it evidently embodies, besides the surveys of Champlain and other foreigners, information derived from some at least of such English explorers and surveyors as White, Gosnold, Waymouth, Pring (see Oct. 1606), Popham, Hudson, Argall (see Aug. 22, 1610), Tyndall, Powell, Madison, and possibly others.

Strachey, as we have seen, referring to Argall's voyage from June to August, 1610, says that Argall "made good, from 44 degrees, what Captayne Bartho. Gosnold and Captayne Waymouth wanted in their discoveries, observing all along the coast, and drawing the plotts thereof, as he steered homewards, unto our bays."—Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 457. This statement, if it could be substantiated, would satisfactorily establish the identity of the mysterious surveyor who visited the Hudson River and Manhattan Island in 1610, and doubtless complete this map, adding to Hudson's discoveries, and those of his predecessors, the stretch of coast between the Hudson River and Nantucket. Unfortunately, however, the copy procured by the American Historical Magazine (IV: 175) does not bear out Strachey's statement, as it seems clearly to indicate that Argall did not sight land between Cape Cod and Delaware Bay. Furthermore, it seems probable that the unknown surveyor of 1610 sailed along the coast from south to north, as otherwise he could hardly have failed to note the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound.

The copy of this map procured by Velasco is now in the Simancas archives in Spain. The original has not been found.

For a reproduction and such additional facts as are known regarding this map, including a discussion of the reasons for connecting it closely with Hudson, see Vol. II, Chap. II, Frontispiece, and C. Pl. 22. See also Brown's Genesis, I: 457, and First Republic, 146-47.

In this year, the English translation of the Bible authorized by James I, generally known as the "Royal Version" or "King James's Version," was first printed, at London, in a massive folio volume. It resulted from a conference of English divines, representing both the Established Church and the Puritans, called at Hampton Court by the king in 1604.—Anderson, Annals of the English Bible, 95-96. The Conference are given contemporaneously by Barlow, Summa et Substantia of the Conference, London, 1604.

In this year, the second edition of Emanuel van Meteren's well known history, with the title Recueil Des Nederlanck Oorlogen ende Ograchtamdenissen (Belgian or Dutch Wars and Events) was published. This pirated quarto, which was printed, shortly before Van Meteren's death, from his official folio edition of 1610 (p. under Apr. 4-Nov. 7, 1609), has long been taken for the first edition. The recent discovery, in the Library of Congress, of the only known copy of the splendid official folio edition of 1610, has robbed it of this long usurped honour. The existence of this book, which belonged originally to Mr. John Boyd Thatcher, although unknown to bibliographers, was noted in 1909 by Mr. Paltsits and Mr. Van Lasz.

In this year, publication of the Mercure Francois, a journal of current events containing much material relating to voyages on the west coast of North America, was begun in Paris. It continued until 1646.—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV: 390, and authorities there cited.

It is likely that in this year Hendrick Christianesen, of Cleves, visited the vicinity of Manhattan Island, although it is equally possible that his visit, referred to in the following extract, occurred a year or two later, and even conceivable that it took place in 1610:

"This country, or the River Montagne, called by ours Mauritius, was first sailed to by the worthy Hendrick Christianesen of Cleves, when he had been on a voyage to the West Indies, he happened near there. But his vessel being laden, and a ship belonging to his own company wrecked in quite a manner, he durst not approach that land; this he postponed, being desirous to do so another time. It so happened that he and the worthy Adrian Block showed a charter with the skipper Rysers, and accomplished his voyage thither, bringing back with him two sons of the principal sachem there. The sight of which they were expert enough in knavery."—Wassenaer, *Historisch Verhael.

Jameson's translation (Nar. Neth., 78), by the use of a period, where a comma is apparently intended, after "Cleves," makes Wassenaer state that Christianesen was the first to sail to the Mauritius River, which, of course, he cannot have intended to say. At all events, it seems evident that Christianesen's accidental approach to the Hudson River, "when he had been on a voyage to the West Indies," even if made in 1610, was not the carefully planned trading expedition which De Laet tells us was sent out by the Amsterdam merchants in that year. After dissolving partnership with Block, he "made ten voyages thither, under a grant from the Lords States, who gave him that privilege for the first opening up of the place," that is, under the charter of Oct. 11, 1614 (p. 11). On one of his voyages he took, by order of his employers, some bucks, goats, and rabbits, but they were killed by poisonous plants.—Wassenaer, in Jameson's *Nar. Neth., 81.

On this day, in the states-general, was "Received and read a letter from the Commissioners of the Admiralty at Amsterdam, dated the 19th Inst. wherein they advise that the Ships destined to look for a Northern passage to China are so nearly ready for the voyage that they are beginning to embark their crew. Requesting, as much as it is in their power, to have provided Letters with the Lords States General or His Excellency to the Princes or Kings of the countries at which they may arrive, written in such languages and characters as may be most useful, that their High Mightinesses would be pleased to have a draft made of such letters as their High Mightinesse shall think proper to give them, together with proper Commissions for the captains who will be in command; leaving the names of these in blank; the Ships being called the Little Fox ["The Fox," or "De Vos"] and the Little Crane ["The Crane," or "De Craen"]."

"After deliberation it is ordered, that the required Letters be drawn up, and the draft sent to the aforesaid Commissioners, to have it translated into such languages, as they shall consider necessary: And it is further resolved that his Excellency be requested to issue as High Admiral the aforesaid Commissions for the captains." —N. T. Col. Dicti, 3: 3-4.

On March 28, the two vessels sailed under the command of Jan Cornelis May and Pieter Franz.—Muller, De Reit van Jan Cornel. May (etc.), Linschoten Vereeniging (1909), 3. The journal of the voyage, written by May, has been preserved, but the maps of the coast of Maine and New England, made by Pieter Franz, are lost. The explorers did not reach a point farther south than Cape Malabar.—See Princely Voyages, II: 66. The Conference is given contemporaneously by Barlow, Summa et Substantia of the Conference, London, 1604.

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1611
Fathers Peter Biard and Enemond Masse, Jesuit priests, arrive at Port Royal to do missionary work among the Indians.

1612
Biard visited all the coast as far as the Kennebec. Finding that lower, he could not do the service projected in an independent mission settlement elsewhere. Their protector, Madame De Guerccheville, obtained from the French king a grant of all the coast from the St. Lawrence to Florida. A vessel was sent out, the missionaries were taken on board, and a settlement was begun at St. Sauveur on Mount Desert Island. There a cross was planted, and Mass was said at a rustic altar. But English vessels under Argall, from Virginia, attacked the ship and settlement, and the settlers were sent to France or carried prisoners to Virginia. This was the first Jesuit mission begun under French auspices.—Winser, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV., 49, 52, 590, and authorities there cited.

Sept. 7
A petition is presented by "Planters Merchants and Inhabitants, residing in the United Provinces" to the assembly of the states of Holland and Westfriesland, "regarding certain newly discovered Navigation," and the cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Hoorn, and Enkhuizen request a copy of the petition for their constituents, "which is delivered them."—N. T. Ged. Decs., I: 4. The records do not contain the petition or the answer thereto, but without doubt it referred to the newly discovered regions about the Hudson. Favorable action was probably taken upon this petition, and one or more of the five ships mentioned in the charter of Oct. 11, 1614 (p. 279), were dispatched to the Hudson River in the following year (1614). Hendrick Christiaensen, who, as we have seen, first visited the neighbourhood of Manhattan in 1611, but who postponed his visit there until he had formed a partnership with Block, was, presumably, one of the 1612 adventurers.

1612
In this as well as in the following years, Christiaensen, Block, and probably Jacob Elken, as well as other Dutch adventurers whose names are familiar to us through their association in later years with the United Netherlands Company were doubtless engaged in exploration along the New Netherland coast, which eventually led to the granting of the charter of 1614—See Sept. 7, 1611, and Oct. 11, 1614.

Apr. 25
"Upon the petition of some merchants, native subjects of the United Provinces, it is resolved as follows: The States, etc., declare that if the remonstrants are found to be the first to have discovered and navigated the route around the north to China or Japan, they shall receive the reward offered for that purpose by the resolution of the 13th of April anno 1596 [280]; and furthermore, that then their further request will receive favorable attention and that proper action will be taken. Done in the Venetian, 13th of April, 1612."—Muller, De Reiss van Jan Corneliss. May, 192.

Jozaf Witze (Witzen), member of the city council and former secretary of States and Symon Willemsen Noomen, one of the organizers of the New Netherlands Co. (See Johan E. Eliaen, De Vroedschap van Amsterdam, I: 431), appear before the admiralty, declaring that they have realized with their company to equip a small vessel in order to search for a northern passage to China. They ask for the yacht "De Voss," and promise, if successful, a share in the reward of 15,000 florins offered by the states-general on April 13, 1596 (p. 26), which offer was renewed by a resolution of April 25, 1612 (p. 712), for the discovery of such a passage. The admiralty agrees to lend the yacht, and to equip it with six guns, the further expenses, such as monthly pay, provisions, etc., to be calculated to the point they appear at the end of the first year. The amount of the valuation and the expenses for equipping to be the "share of the admiralty," and stipulate that the reward or eventual trade profits shall be divided in proportion to this amount, but that the admiralty shall have no further expense in case of failure. (Apparently, the statement in Vol. II, 65 to the effect that "De Voss" was purchased from the government, on March 29, 1613, is incorrect.)

The date of the sailing is not given, but on July 24, 1614 (p. 26), Jan de Wit, master of "V Vosman," appeared before the admiralty, having been appointed an unsuccessful candidate. The Register of the Amsterdam Admiralty, in Muller, Geschichte der Niederlische Compagnie, 206, states: From the same source, we know that "De Voss" was sent to the American coast in command of Pieter Franse, who had accompanied Jan Cornelis. May, as pilot.

He was to visit the Hudson River and to trade with the Indians. Franse, on this expedition, was killed by the natives, and his successor, Jan de Wit, did not reach the Hudson River, as is clearly stated on Aug. 13-14, 1614 (p. 71), after he had returned to Holland.

In this month, Captain Samuel Argall returned to Virginia from his second Acadian expedition. In 1613 there was published in London a pamphlet under the name of Nathaniel Plowman, entitled A Description of the Province of New Albion, in which, among other baseless fabrications, it was stated that "Sir Thomas Dale and Sir Samuel Argall," on a return voyage from the French settlements in Acadia, "landsled at Manhates Isle in Hudsons river, where they found four or five Indian and a Portuguese nau, under the West-India Company of Amsterdam share or part, who kept trading boats and trucking with the Indians: but the said Knights told him their Commission was to expel him and all aliens Intruders on his Majesties Dominion and Territories, this being part of Virginia, and this river an English discovery of Hudson and [sic] English man, the Dutch man contented them for their charge and voyace, and by his Letter sent to Virginia and recorded, submitted himself, Company and Plantation to his Majesty, and to the Government and government of Virginia, and now pretended Dutch İsland in the New Netherland. Cards, calling this part New Netherlands, failing in paying of customers, at his return to Plymouth in England, was there with his Bever goods and person, attached to his damage of 2000 l. whereupon at the suit of the Government and Council of Virginia, his now Majesty by his Embassadour in Holland, explaining of the said Intruders intrusion on such his Territorys Dominion, the said Lords the States of Holland by their publique instrument declared, That they did not avow, nor would protect them, being a private party of the Amsterdam West-India Company, but left them to his Majesties wil & mercy." (pp. 16-17).

For an argument against the authenticity of this account, and upholding the general unworthiness of the tract, see the Bibliography, Vol. V, under Plantagenet. See also Voyages from Holland to America, A.D. 1620-1621, by David Peterson de Vries, translated from the Dutch by Henry C. Murphy (New York, 1853). Note A, which presents an interesting and very complete survey of the progress of the Dutch, as given by themselves, in the territory of the state of New York, up to the time of the first settlement.

The above item was prepared by Mr. Pausht. In the author's opinion, an equally plausible theory can be developed from the meagre facts to sustain the long-established tradition of Argall's finding a settlement in the "Fornormant," on Manhattan Island. It has been supposed here and elsewhere in the Chronology, where opinions have differed, to state briefly the opposing deductions, as well as the facts themselves, so that the reader may be in a position to judge for himself. In this particular case, it seems to the author that, although no general is more creditable, nevertheless, the statements which it contains relating to Manhattan may be substantially correct. As Fort Nassau, which we know from De Laet was built in 1614, is shown on Block's Figurative Map, which is based on information carried back to Holland by Block and Christiaensen, who reached Amsterdam before July 24, 1614 (p. 712), it must have been built in the winter of 1613-4. As we know also from De Laet that Christiaensen "first commanded here [Fort Nassau], and in his absence Jacques Elkebus [Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 47], he must have spent this winter there, and left Elkebus in charge in the early spring, when he went down the river in the "Fornormant," on Manhattan Island. It Cape Cod, sailed for home, leaving Hendricks in the "Restless" to continue the exploration of the New Netherland coast,—De Laet, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 50.

If Block's ship, the "Tiger," had been burned in the vicinity of Albany, in the autumn or winter of 1613-4 (p. 71), it seems almost certain that Block would have attempted to join forces with his old partner, Christiaensen. This he did not do; and we know, further, from the account of the Indians (Doc. Hist. N. Y., 40 vol., ed., IV: 65), that they supplied him with food during two (doubtless intended for one) years. In the spring of the year, Furthermore, De Laet, in referring to the cruise of the "Restless" in the early spring, starts in by saying that she "sailed through Hellegat into the great bay." If she had been launched up the river, or elsewhere than in the neighbourhood of Manhattan
Island, he would naturally have used some such expression as "sailed down the river, and through Hellegast," etc., or "up the cost, and through Hellegast," etc.
It seems to me, therefore, that there is no valid reason for assuming that the "Tiger" was not burned in the neighbourhood of Manhattan Island, and that the "Restless" was not built on the island, or in its vicinity. I would go further. Argall's visit took place late in November, 1613. Why should not his statement regarding a "pretended Dutch Governoir" and "four houses" orefer to Block and his crew, and to their encampment? I do not think that a convincing argument against a "prehistoric" sojourn on Manhattan Island can properly be based upon the traditional cruelty or treachery of the local Indians, as there are as many instances of their friendliness to the whites as of the reverse.
The argument sometimes advanced that Father Biard, in his letters and Relation (See Brown's Genesis, III. 700 et seq.; also Champlain's Voyages), does not mention the visit to Manhattan falls to the ground when we examine the text of the Relation carefully; as it then becomes clear that he was not on the ship with Argall on the return to Virginia from the second voyage, but was with Capt. Turner on another ship, which, not being able to reach the Virginians, because of a great storm, sought refuge in the Azores, from whose shores he found his way to France.
The statement that Argall sailed from Port Royal "straight to Virginia" occurs in the record of the first, and not the second, voyage. In connection with the second voyage, we are told by Biard that he "reached Virginia in three weeks thereabouts" after leaving Yarmouth, 9, which would have allowed ample time for a visit to Manhattan Island.
In a complaint made on Oct. 25, 1614, against Jacob Jacobsen Egkins, for trading up the North River, on the pretence "that said river and adjacent country were in, and of, the Domain of his Majesty of Great Britain," the deputies of the "Assembly of the XIX," reminded the states-general that the right to trade had been conferred by them (in 1614) on certain merchants, and that, likewise, "one or more little forts were built," also under the jurisdiction of the states-general, "even before the year 1614, and supplied with people for the security of the said trade."—N. Y.
Col. Doct., I. 95-95.
In a "Report of the Board of Accounts on New Netherland," Dec. 15, 1614, it is said: "For which purpose [i.e., as a shelter in winter] they erected on the North and South Rivers there, two little forts against the incursions of the Indians. A charter was afterwards, on the 11th October, 1614, granted," (etc.) N. Y.
Col. Doct., I. 149.
These statements are evasive, uncertain, and largely unreliable; their origin can be traced to the work of De Laet, whose account is misleading, and that of De Floris, who is, on occasion, in error. He was erected in 1614, and there was no Dutch fort on the South or Delaware River until after 1623, when a fort, also called Fort Nassau, was built there; moreover, the Dutch first explored that river, under Hendrickson, in 1614 or 1615. Again, in 1646, Father Isaac Jogues, S. J., wrote his Novum Belgium, in which he gave his observations of a visit to New Netherland in 1643, but which was evidently elaborated from the French edition of De Laet, published in 1640. He wrote: "It is about fifty years since the Hollander came to these parts. The fort was begun in the 1613; they began to settle about twenty years ago. ... The first companies of lands fit for use, deserted by the savages who formerly had fields here. We have here an exaggeration in the first sentence and the rest is taken from De Laet. He makes De Laet's statement of the fort "up the said river" refer to a fort on Manhattan Island; although, as the statement appears first in the 1630 edition, the reference, obviously, is to the fort built there by Minuit's arrival in 1626. Jogues refers to Fort Orange as "a miserable little fort called Fort Orange, built of logs, with four or five pieces of Breitreul cannon and as many pedereros." Cf. Jameson's 'Nat. N. Neth.,' s. 38 and 44, with 261.
In conclusion, or brief and clear account of the situation of New Netherland" (etc.), in N. Y. Col. Doct., II. 133, transmitted on Nov. 5, 1660, we have an almost literal copy of the De Laet statement, with an interpolation of the words "about the Island Manhattans," hence again a misinterpretation. Such positiveness as is found in Moulton's Hist. of State of N. Y., part 2, p. 144, and in Booth's Hist. City of N. Y., 39, is wholly unwarranted by the evidence.
In this year, Pocahontas was baptised at Jamestown, Va., under the name of Rebecca.—Smith, Generall Historie (1624), 116-17, 131, 122.
That the French frequented the Massachusetts coast between 1614 and 1619 is proven by accounts of the destruction of two of their ships there at that time.—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I. 208-10; Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., IV:
110 (footnote), and authorities there cited.
The Dutch, of which Argall, as skipper, was accidently burned in New Netherland in the beginning of this year. (See Nov., 1613, for a statement of reasons for supposing that the "Tiger" was burned at an earlier date.) Block spent the remainder of this winter in building a small yacht, which was named the "Onrust." (Mr. Van Laer calls attention to the fact that the name
"Onrust," given to Block's new vessel, is generally translated Restless, or Unrest, and looked upon as an appropriate and even proprietor name, although, as the Dutch are not an imaginative people, it is doubtful that the name was bestowed with any such inconvenient interpretation. More likely the ship was so named after the Mall Island of Onrust, between the north point of the province of North Holland and the Island of Texel, the last bit of land which ships pass in leaving Holland on sailing from the Texel. Cf.
Oct. 9, 1618.) The "Onrust" was "of about eight last [sixteen tons] burchten," having "a keel thirty-eight feet long, forty-four and a half feet from stem to stern, and eleven and a half feet wide [or beam]." In 1614, Block to sent a ship of East River [i.e., East Rives Island, Long Island Sound], and explored all the places thereabout; and continued therewith as far as Cape Cod, whence he came home in the ship ["Fortune"] of Hendrick Christiaens, leaving the yacht on that coast for further trading, in charge of Cornelis Hendrickson, skipper, who continued to make new discoveries with her.—De Laet, in Jameson's 'Nat. Neth.,' 44, 50-51 (De Laet tells us, in the same place, that the Dutch built there [on the Hudson] several sloops and tolerable yachts."); N. Y. Col. Doct., I 12, 13, 15. Although it has been asserted in numerous secondary authorities that the "Tiger" was burned at or near Manhattan Island, and that the "Onrust" was built on Manhattan Island, in 1614 or 1615, no positive evidence has been found for these claims. The only direct evidence is contained in the citations given above and it lends no hope to the Manhattan theory.
There is, however, strong circumstantial evidence in the works of Van Meteren, De Laet, and Wassenaer, in support of the possibility that Block was in the vicinity of Albany during the experiences of this winter.
There is also no evidence in favour of the view expressed by some writers that Block and his party built huts near the southern point of Manhattan Island and that they were supplied with food by the Indians of that vicinity during that winter. One error has naturally followed upon another. The contemporary evidence, though meagre, shows that the Dutch traders carried on their barter with the Indians near Albany; that voyages were made there each year; that some people even wintered there for the purpose of trafficking with the natives; that Christiaens and Block had been partners before the "Tiger" was burned; that Christiaens was the first regular trader in New Netherland; that the first fort there had been built on Castle Island, near Albany, in 1614, "for the greater security of the traders," and that Christiaens was the first who commanded in New Netherland; that the region of the upper Hudson was noted for its blackwood productivity, then as now, and for its fine timber, from which even Hudson's carpenter had made a fore-yard for the "Half Moon," and that the Mohawks near Albany, met by Hudson and his successors, were "friendly and polite people," and cultivated intercourse and friendship with the Dutch, whilst those resident near Manhattan Island, called the "Manhattans," were "warlike people," "a bad race of savages, who have always been very obstinate and unfriendly towards our countrymen." These latter are clearly not the same Indians who, at this early period, would have supplied them [Block and his party] with tobacco, or other necessaries, and have "taken care of them for two [sic, for one] winters, till the ship was finished," as, we are told in the "Breden Racids," those Indians did who refused the demands made by Gov.
Kieft, alleging that they were under no obligation to the Dutch.

CHRONOLOGY: THE PERIOD OF DISCOVERY: 1605-1626
Sarah Rapelje, daughter of Joris Jansen Rapelje, is often called the "first white girl born in New Netherlands." She was born on September 7 or 9, 1625, and became a "citizen and subject of the United Netherlands..." The necessary shelter for Block and his men, and the hospitalities they received from natives in New Netherland, seem to have been associated with the upper Hudson in the vicinity of Albany. For the circumstantial evidence here analysed, see Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 220, 38-39, 45; 47, 59-61, 67, 75, 81; Dec. Hist. N. Y., 470 et al., IV: 62.

The above item was prepared by Mr. Palatins, and embodies his interpretation of the known facts; for a statement of the author's reasons for reaching a different conclusion—that the "Tiger" was based on the vicinity of Manhattan Island, probably in the autumn of 1613-14, and that Argall did find a "pretended Dutch Government" encamped on Manhattan Island—see 1613, November.

Fort Nassau was erected early in this year by Hendrick Christiaensen, on Castle Island, in latitude 43°, a short distance south of the present city of Albany (see Brodhead, I: 5). "The fort was built in the form of a redoubt, surrounded by a moat eighteen feet wide; it was mounted with two pieces of cannon and eleven pedereros, and the garrison consisted of ten or twelve men. Hendrick Christiaensen, first commanded here, and in his absence Jaques Elkens, on behalf of the company which in 1646 received authority from the States-General, the States-General. This fort was constantly occupied for three years, after which it partly went to decay."—De Lait, Nieuwe Wereld, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 47-48.

Fort Nassau is shown on the Figurative Map of 1614, and must therefore have been built during the winter of 1613-14. It is in the time of Adriaen Block's wintering in this harbor, in 1613-14, and possibly still earlier, it is likely that traders occasionally landed, and even camped, upon Manhattan Island. We may, however, be sure that nothing deserving the name of a settlement was established here during this early period, and that if any houses were built by Europeans they were of the most primitivtive type, and served merely for the occasional and temporary shelter of explorers or traders and their stores. See Vol. II, Cartoography, pp. 103-4.

Early in this year, the states-general, anxious to encourage the foreign commerce of Holland, granted a charter to an association of merchants for prosecuting the whale-fishery in the neighbourhood of Nova Zembla, and for finding a new passage to China. The name of this company was De Noordsche Compagnie.—Great Jean Vinge (or Vox), son of Guillaume (also Gullan, Guylem, William) Vinge and Adrienne Cuville, Wallouen, is named by numerous modern historians to have been born in this year on Manhattan

Island, and to have been the first child of European parents born in New Netherland. This conclusion they base upon a statement made, in 1679, by the Lubalast missionaries, Danikers and Shuyer, in the journal of the first missionary in Netherland, for the Island

Hist. Soc., 114: but these merely say "in Netherland, and that he was about sixty-five years of age when they wrote, in 1679 (Sept. 24, 9-9). Jean Vinge died in New York City, on Dec. 21, 1689. See his will in Collections of N. Y. Hist. Soc.

(1897), 404. His father probably died before April 30, 1672, on which date a report was made by two referees for his widow relating to an antenuptial contract for a settlement upon her children by her first marriage, as she was now to be married to Jan Jansen

Damen. The date of the report has been questioned. It is given

As the original instrument (N. Y. Cal. MSS., I: 6) was destroyed in the Capitol fire, the date cannot be verified, although an English translation which survives gives the date as 1612. Rachel Vinge married Cornelis van Tienhoven, and it is possible that they came into possession of this contract and recorded it in 1678, and that this date is entered in the Calendar. In his instrument under 400 Jean and daughter Rachel are spoken of as minors and provision is made for their education and for a trade to be taught to Jean, who was the younger of these two children. Had he been born in 1614, he would have been about eighteen in 1632, and it seems more probable that at this age he would have been made for his education and the learning of a trade, as a "minor," and for the education of his sister, who was even older, although under the Roman-Dutch law the legal age was 25. Mr. Van Laer, who has a clear recollection of the report, is confident that it was dated 1625, and not 1632.

Chronology: The Period of Discovery: 1565-1626

The aforesaid discoveries and adventures, in order, on bearing thereof We may adjudge and declare, according to circumstances and distance, within what time the aforesaid four voyages must be completed. Provided that We do not understand to prejudice hereby or in any way to diminish our former Charters and Constitutions, and, if they were prevented thereby, to the king James's Charter of 1606 to the Plymouth or Northern Co. In an open boat, with eight companions, he explored and surveyed the coast from Penobscot to Cape Cod, while the rest of his company remained employed in fishing.—Smith's General History (1624), 204-5.

June 1614. Sir Ferdinando Gorges dispatches a ship, commanded by Capt. Hobson, to New England to discover gold mines. Hobson, accompanied by an Indian named Epenow who was to guide him to new lands, was chartered by John Smyth and John Pococke (1613), as a result he published his book A Description of New England, London, 1616; it was also issued as a "sep. vol." For a full description of the various states of this important map, the first accurate map of New England, see the Church Catalogue, No. 396.

July 1614. Hendrick Christiaensen, skipper, having "lately returned from the most northern parts of America, carrying with him beaver skins," appears before the admiralty, accompanied by Tys Volckartz. Mouset, a citizen of Hoorn named Pieter, and Jan de Wit, skipper of the vessel "V Veskei" (Little Fox). The person referred to as "Pieter" may have been Pieter Clementus Brouwer—see Oct. 11, 1614—or possibly Cornelis Jacobz. May. Muller, in his History of the Dutch in the New World, says that "On the American coast, de Vos had found four other Dutch ships, on which Corneils Jacobz. May, the nephew of our commander, and three others, were in command," Christiaensen is instructed by the admiralty not to unload his vessel or store the beaver skins before he has notified the freighters of the vessel "V Veskei," to which he agrees.—From the Register of the Amsterdam Admiralty, in Muller's Geschiedenis der Noordse Compagnie, 368.

Aug. 1614. Jonas Wit (Witten) and Symon Nooms report to the Admiralty that their expedition in "De Vos" was a failure. They intended to sail north on the River Hudson with their cargo of "different articles of merchandise," but were prevented thereby, to the King James's Charter of 1606 to the Plymouth or Northern Co. In an open boat, with eight companions, he explored and surveyed the coast from Penobscot to Cape Cod, while the rest of his company remained employed in fishing.—Smith's General History (1624), 204-5.

The two resolutions embodying this action, and bearing the abbreviations, respectively, contain the earliest known application of Henry Hudson's name to the river by which he was discovered, which appears as "de rivière Hudson" in the manuscript book of "Resolutions." The name apparently did not appear in print until 1622 (q.v.), when it is mentioned in a Brief Relation of the Discovery and Plantations of New England, etc., published in London. See also Vol. II, Cartography, page 92.

Thirteen merchants of Amsterdam and Hoorn, claiming to have "discovered and found New Netherland, situate in America between New France and Virginia, the sea coasts whereof lie in the Latitude of forty to forty-five degrees," jointly ask for the grant of exclusive trading and exploring rights to their "High Mightinesses the States-General," and a "Figuretive Map" (C. F. 23, Vol. II). The states-general promptly grant their request, for four voyages, to be made within three years, beginning January 1, 1615, or earlier. This document, which contains the names of the merchants and their ships, reads (translated) as follows:

"The States General of the United Netherlands to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. Whereas Gerrit Jacob Witten, former burgomaster of the city of Amsterdam, Jonas Witten and Simon Morissen [Jan] error for Simon Willemsen Noorns—see Aug. 13, 1614; which error occurs also in the 1644 report of the board of accounts (q.v.), owners of the ship called the Little Fox, (het vosje), Captain Jan de Wit, master; Hans Hoeners [Hunger, in the charter of the Dutch East India Co.], art. XVIII, Paul Meldrum, and Lambrecht van Tweekusyn, owners of the two ships called the Tiger and the Fortune, Captains Adrian Block and Hendrick Costaensen [Christiaensen]; Adriaen Lybergren, Wessel Schenk, Hans Claessen, and Barent Secteas, owners of the ship the Nightingale, Nauktzegel, [Nachtzegel] Capt. The first printed map of the New World, is preserved in the National Archives at The Hague. It is reproduced on Pl. 2, Vol. IV. The map, beautifully drawn in colours on vellum, is also preserved there.

The name "New Netherland" is first given to these lands on Block's Figurative Map, and in this charter of the United New Netherland Company, which title was assumed by the associated merchants soon after the charter was granted.

J. F. Bruyningh, notary public at Amsterdam, declares that on this day, at the request of the directors of the United Chartered Company of the landed situated between Virginia and Nova Fracitza, by us called New Netherland, he was present at the place of residence of skipper Erasmus Pietersz, and Albert Gerritz Ruyl, and in their absence served notice on the wife of said Pietersz, and the father of said Ruyl, that the directors on the 11th of October obtained from the states-general a charter granting to them for four voyages the exclusive privilege to sail to and traffic in the said lands between Virginia and Nova Fracitza; that the directors understand that said Pietersz, and Ruyl, and their associates, with a ship equipped at Amsterdam, intend to sail to the region included in the charter, for the purpose of trading there, in direct violation of the charter; that for this reason the directors gave them timely warning that they must refrain therefrom and that, if they persist, the directors will hold them responsible for all loss and damage which will result from such voyage, and will recover the loss by execution against their persons, ship, and cargo as they shall see fit. Done at Amsterdam, in the presence of Sybrant Cornelisz, and Andries van der Laen, witnesses.—Protocol of Notary J. F. Bruyningh, Notarial Archives at Amsterdam, 1614-5, No. 119, fol. 114.

J. F. Bruyningh, notary public at Amsterdam, declares that on this day, at the request of the directors of the United Chartered Company of the lands situated between Virginia and Nova Fracitza, by us called New Netherland, he went to Albert Gerritz Ruyl, supercargo of the ship named "it fortuyo," and in the name of the aforesaid directors served notice on him, and through him on all his associates and participants, that the directors, in reply to the answer of the participants to the notice served on them on the 24th of October (q.v.), are willing to purchase the aforesaid ship with its appurtenances and such merchandise as may be useful to them in the localities covered by their charter, according to an appraisement by impartial and competent men. The directors request the participants to accept this valid offer, and they declare that in default or refusal thereof, or in case of departure or attempt to do anything to the prejudice of the aforesaid charter, they will hold them responsible for all loss and damage, the same to be recovered as the directors shall see fit. Whereupon, the said Albert Gerritz Ruyl gave for answer that he persists in his former offer and proposes to purchase a copy of the present notice. Done at Amsterdam in the presence of Elbert van Dien and Adrian van der Laen, witnesses.—Protocol of Notary J. F. Bruyningh, Notarial Archives at Amsterdam, 1614-5, No. 119, fol. 130.

This item, and that of Oct. 25, show clearly the attitude of the newly formed directorate of the New Netherland Co. toward private expeditions to New Netherland, and, by analogy, strengthen the supposition that the "Mackerel" expedition of July 16, 1613 (q.v.), was in reality undertaken by the West India Co., probably as a sort of reconnoitering expedition, as is suggested under 1626 (q.v.).

So far as known, the earliest reference, in print, to the voyages of the Dutch in New Netherland, prior to and during the year 1614, and to the naming of the lands then discovered, is contained in a Consilium conspicuum de J. Franciscum, Historia continuitatis, . . . issued at Frankfort a. M., in 1615. The passage reads (pp. 44-45, translated): "About this time [1614-October?] there arrived at Amsterdam some Dutch ships which had discovered a new country beyond Virginia and not far from New France, which they named New Holland, bringing with them from there the natives. [This might possibly be a reference to Block and Christiaansen to and Valentine and Orson, unless Francis is mistaken in the date of arrival of the ships.—See 1616: Sept. 7; 1611; 1622; Nov. 1013;] It is said to be a very rich and productive country, especially in grain; therefore the Lords States determined to lay hold thereof, and to occupy the seacoasts with strong forts; the voyage from Holland, there and return, it is said, can be made within six weeks." See Bibliography.

"The Deduction, or Brief and Clear Account of the Situation of New Netherland," etc. (N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 133), presented by the West India Co. to the states-general in 1660, after referring to the grant of trading privileges to New Netherland made on Oct. 11, 1614 (q.v.), continued: "It is important for us, it is said, in the year 1615, built on the North river, about the Island Manhattan, a redoubt or little fort wherein was left a small garrison, some people usually remaining there to carry on trade with the Natives or Indians. This was continued and maintained until their High Mightinesses did, in the year 1622 (1621), include this country of New Netherland in the charter of the West India Company." The "Deduction" cannot, however, be accepted as authoritative in connection with this very early period.

Under this date, Champlain, while on an exploring expedition in the country of the Hurons, refers in his journal to a place "on the 49° where the Dutch go to trade."—Champlain's Voyages (1619 ed.). As Fort Nassau was in 42° 46', this reference would seem rather to be to Manhattan Island. In the same place, he refers also to three Dutchmen who, in the preceding year (1614), had been captured by the Indians. This reference may be to Klevoytes and his companions, a note concerning whom, written by Hendrickse, is found upon the second Figurative Map (Pl. 24, Vol. II). It is possible that these Dutchmen were captured while on an exploring expedition from Fort Nassau to the Susquehanna and Delaware Rivers, as suggested by Brodhead, and that the discovery of this neighborhood shown on the second Figurative Map were made by Hendrickse on an expedition to ransom them. See II: 73 et seq., and Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 78. See also Aug. 18, 1616.

"Sir Richard Hakings [Hawkins] undertook by authority from the Council of the second Colonie to trie what service he could do them as President and Navy Warden. . . ."—Champlain's Voyages (1619 ed.).

"Having received his Commission and Instructions, he departed in October 1615, and spent the time of his being in those parts [New England] in searching of the Country, and finding out the commodities thereof, but the [Indian] war was at the height and the principal Natives almost destroyed, so that his observation could not be such as could give account of any new matter, more than formerly had been received, from thence he past along the coast to Virginia, & stay'd there some time, in expectation of what he could not be satisfied in, so took his next course for Spain, to make the best of such commodities he had got together, as he coasted from place to place having sent his Ship laden with Fish to the Market before, and this was all that was done by any of that year."—Gorges, A Briefe Narration etc., 17 in Am. Painted to the Life (1693).

In this year, Pochantas visited England, and was received at court.

In this year, the Dutch navigator, Jacques Le Maire, who had been sent out by his father, Isaac Le Maire, on a voyage of exploration to the South Sea, which he purported reaching through the Strait of Magellan, accidentally stumbled upon a much more direct passage, to the east of Tierra del Fuego, which passage was named after him, Strait of Le Maire. This discovery was one of the great geographical "finds" of the day.—See Vol. II, p. 79 et seq.

"Cornelis Henryk's, Skipper," appears beside the states-general, "assisted by Notary Carol van Gelder," to make report of his discoveries between 38° and 40° N. L. in behalf of his patrons, the thirteen merchants whose names appear in the grant of Oct. 11, 1614 (q.v.). Before taking action, the assembly orders the report submitted in writing.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 12. See Aug. 18.

In a memorial, accompanied by a second Figurative Map, and submitted this day, "Gerrit Jacob Witsenburgman at Amster-

... who style themselves "Directors of New Netherlands extending from 40° to 45° degrees, situate in America between New France and Virginia," represent that "they have, at great and excessive expense, discovered and found a certain country, bay, and river, in like manner as is described in the Latitude of from 38° to 40° degrees, (as is more fully to be seen by the Figurative Map hereunto annexed) in a small Yacht of about eight lasts burthen, called the Realees, whereof Cornelis Hendriczv of Munnickendam is Skipper — Which little yacht they, the Petitioners, caused to be built in the country there, and employed the aforesaid Cornelis Hendriczv, in the aforesaid Countries during the space of [part of] three years, in the above mentioned little Yacht, looking for new countries, havens, bays and rivers. . . ." They ask that their High Mightinesses may be pleased to hear the report of Hendrickse, and examine the map, and that they, the petitioners, may secure a grant of exclusive trade to the new territory for four years, according to the placard (of March 27, 1614). The report made by Hendrickse was submitted on the following day. It reads thus: "Report of Captain Cornelis Hendriczv of Munnickendam to the High and Mighty Lords States General of the Free, United Netherlands, in order to represent on the board for August 16, 4° North latitude of the countries, bay and three rivers situate in the Latitude from 38° to 40° degrees, by him discovered and found for and to the behoof of his Owners and Directors of New Netherlands, by name Gerrit Jacob Witten Burgomaster at Amsterdam, Jonas Witten, Lambrecht van Tweenhuyzen, Paulus Pelgrom and others of their Company . . . First, he hath discovered for his aforesaid Masters and Directors, certain lands, a bay and three rivers situate between 38° and 40° degrees. . . . And did there trade with the Habitants; said trade consisting of Sables, Furs, Rabes and other skins. . . . He hath found the said Country full of trees, to wit:—Oaks, hickory and pines; which trees were, in some places, covered with vines. . . . He hath seen, in the said country, Bucks and doe, turkeys and partridges. . . . He hath found the climate of the said Country very temperate, Judging it to be as temperate as that of this country, Holland. . . . He also traded for, and bought from the inhabitants, the Minquaes, three persons, being people belonging to this Company; which three persons were employed in the service of the Mohawks and Machicans; giving for them kernels, beads and merchandize."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 13–14. See also Aug. 17, 1615. The states-general postponed consideration of the grant, and Witten and his partners again petitioned on Sept. 12. But the matter was again postponed. Further petitions were equally fruitless, and on Jan. 16, 1618, their previous grant expired. From this time until the formation of the West India Co., in 1621, trade was open to all.—Ibid., I: 14, 15, 21, 22.

This second Figurative Map, drawn (on paper) by Cornelis Hendrickse, and accompanying and illustrating his brief report of discoveries made between 38° and 40° N.L., for his patrons (p. 14), is of special importance and interest, as possibly being in the original autograph of the actual surveyor, whereas the Figurative Map of 1614, as well as the Velasco Map, are both copies from originals, now lost. The Hendricks map, which extends from 37° 15' to about 42° 45', and which ends at the north in what resembles, but cannot pretend to be, a representation of the St. Lawrence river, is important as recording, for the first time, a series of Dutch names along Hudson River—the oldest names bestowed by Europeans to these localities. On this map, Sandy Hook ("Sandsheek") appears for the first time. Curiously enough, Manhattan is not shown as an island. Retrogression from the delineation of the first Figurative Map, which it is hard to explain. This map, which, also, is preserved in the National Archives, is reproduced and described in Cartography, Vol. II, Pl. 24, and pages 72–75.

Gerrit Jacob Witten and partners again appeal for a charter (see Aug. 16 and 18), but "the disposal thereof is again postponed."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 15. This charter, apparently, was never granted.—See 1618, Oct. 9.

A story that has had currency among historians of New York is the allegation, said to have a traditional origin, that the first formal treaty of alliance between the red man and the Hollander" in New York was concluded in this year with the Five Nations, "on the commanding eminence which the Mohawks called Tawaasgunthee, overlooking the river at the mouth of the Tawasentha, the present Norman's Kill.—Brohead, Hist. State of N. T., I: 81.

More modern writers, however, hesitate to cite the so-called treaty of Tawasentha. There is absolutely no contemporary evidence to support it, in documents or printed works. The first formal treaty with the Iroquois was made by the English, at Albany, on Sept. 24, 1664 (p. v.)—Beauchamp, Hist. N. T. Iroquis (Albany, 1905), 172–73, 216; Ruttenber, in Proceedings of N. Y. State Hist. Soc., VII: 180; General Entries, I: 41 (N.Y. State Library Bulletin, History No. 2, 110).

A map by Willem Jansz. Blaeu, undated, but issued at about this time, the insularity of Manhattan Island is first shown on a printed map. This important map bears the title "Paskaart van Guinca, Brasilien en West Indien, [etc.]," and is reproduced in Vol. II, C. Pls. 25 and 27. See also Cartography, Page 78 et seq. This is also the first printed map on which New Netherlands ("Nieu Nederland") appears, and the first approximately accurate detailed map of the east coast of North America.

A ship erected in 1617–14 on Castle Island, which has been several times overflowed, was almost completely destroyed by high water and ice, and was therefore abandoned for a new position, on the west bank—the site of the later city of Albany.—Wassenae, Historisch Verhaal, in Jansen's Nov. N. Nék., 67; Brohead, ep. cit., 81.

The following petition of the owners of the ship "Bontecoe" to the states-general, although not relating directly to New Netherland, is interesting as containing the names of David Pietersen (de Vries), Lambrecht van Tweenhuyzen, and Jan Jansen Bleeker (perhaps the father of the early Albany settler of that name): "To the High and Mighty Lords the States General, etc. Show with due reverence, Pieter Janszen Liornio, burgomaster of the city of Hoorn, Cornelis and Clac Veen, also burgomasters, Outger Jacobes, Cornelis Tenuiss, Willem Jansen Becker, Davidt Pieteresz., Lambrecht van Tweenhuyzen and Hendrick Camperbeek, all owners of the ship named the "Bonte Koe," of which Willem Tibrants van Hoorn is master, which ship, being of more than one hundred and thirty lasts burthen, sailed in August 1617 from Amsterdam in this country, laden with all sorts of merchandize, and which aforesaid ship with its cargo was taken by the Turkish freebooters. And whereas it has now come to the knowledge of the petitioners that the aforesaid ship and goods have again been taken from the said pirates by the Spaniards and been brought in at Gibraltar, the petitioners intend to send Jan Jansen Bleeker to bring about that the petitioners may obtain the restitution of the aforesaid ship and goods, for so far as they have been taken by the Spaniards to Gibraltar. The petitioners therefore request that your High Mightiness may be pleased to grant them favorable letters of recommendation to his Royal Majesty of Spain and to the Governor and Admiral commanding at Gibraltar, in order that they, the petitioners, may obtain restitution of the aforesaid ship and goods, for so far as they may have been brought up." Which doing," etc.—Historisch Genootschap te Utrecht, Bijdragen en Mededeelingen (1879), II: 111–12.

The charter granted by the states-general to the New Netherland Co. expires. It was not extended, but trade was hereafter thrown open to all until the grant of the charter of June 3, 1624 (p. v.) to the West India Co. See Oct. 11, 1614.

The "Thirty Years War" begins with a revolution in Bohemia.

The "George" sails from Virginia carrying letters from Argall, Rolfe, and others. In onee, the governor writes to the lords of the Council of Virginia that he has "provided sundry stuff for ye Colledge.

Brown, The First Republic in America, 278–79. The Intro. to the Records of the F. A. Company mentions "a letter (of March 29, 1618) to the mayor of Salisbury concerning a college for Virginia," and states that this letter is printed in the New Eng. Hist. & Genealog. Register. This periodical is only partially indexed, and fills seventy-four volumes; although a careful search for the index has been made, it has not yet been found. This is determined by the first reference to the founding of an institution of learning in North America. See, further, May 26, 1619.

Aug. 10 Willem Jansz. (Blau) is granted permission to publish his chart of "the new passage" discovered by the Australian Company (of the Streets of Le Maer) - N. T. Col. Doc., I: 21. See also Cartography, II: 79 et seq.

Oct. 4 "Read the petition of the Company trading to the island of New Netherland, requesting the continuance of their charter for some years longer to trade exclusively to the aforesaid Island. But it is resolved, without disposing of the same, first to see and consider the aforesaid petitioners' charter." - N. T. Col. Doc., I: 21.

9 The exclusive charter of the New Netherland Company has already expired by its own limitation on Jan. 1, 1618, and the states-general having refused to renew it, Hendrick Eellins and Adriaen Jansen Engel, with others, all partners in the New Netherland Co., now petition for the privilege of sending a trading vessel, the "Schilt" (probably named after "Het Oude Schilt," the principal seaport on the island of Texel), which they have "already prepared," to New Netherland without prejudice to or from their former associates (see list of merchants, Oct. 11, 1624) - N. T. Col. Doc., I: 21.

Nov. 8 Sir Walter Raleigh is beheaded "in Parliament yard" by order of King James I. "He was, next to Drake, the scrouge and heterogeneous of the Spanish." - Prince, New England Chronology (3d ed.), 149.

The records of the privy council previous to May 1, 1619, were destroyed in the great fire of Whitehall, which occurred late in this year. Hudson's maps and papers were probably consumed in this fire.

The following items, belonging to the years 1617, 1618, and 1619, although they do not relate directly to New Netherland, indicate a strong likelihood that, as there was a regular trade between Holland and the Spanish colonies in the West Indies and Brazil at that time, some of the ships went to Virginia, and even as far north as New Netherland.

On Dec. 16, 1617, Wyannt Keyser, consul at Algiers, wrote to the states-general: "Having written this two days ago, there came in Soliman reys, who took at once two prizes a small vessel from the West Indies, laden with tobacco, so that he has a good prize. He also took a flute from Schiedam, which after having robbed it of its guns and sail, he let go. . . ." - Heeringa, Bromen tot de Geschiedenis van den Levensaad Handel, Rijks Geschiedkundige Publicatien, 10, Vol. 1, part 1, p. 76.

Under date of Feb. 1-17, 1618, he recorded: "The Rib, being again at the paga and having obtained there a slave, who had come with a ship from the West Indies, where he had been a slave, I tried in every way to induce the captains to come ashore, but did succeed in nothing." - From journal of Wyannt Keyser, in Heeringa, Bestien (etc.), 777.

On July 16, 1619, "They brought in also a ship from Brazil, floating the prince's flag, thinking thus to escape. . . ." - From letter of Keyser to the states-general, Sept. 2, 1619, in Heeringa, Bromen (etc.), 806.

In papers submitted to the common council on July 7, 1618, relating to the repeal of the Boling Act, the statement is made that in the "Year of Our Lord 1619 The City of New York was founded. . . ." - Pepys's Diary, Jan. 1619-20.

Further, one of the leaders of the Dutch Nation and had Granted to the Inhabitants then Settled by the States General of the United Provinces And the West India Company the Several Rights and Priviledges Recited in a Schedule hereunto Annexed . . . ." - M. C. G., II: 36, 43.

As the West India Company did not recognize the recommendation of the colony, their statement is manifestly in error, in so far at least as that company is concerned.

During the summer of this year, Capt. Thomas Dermer, who in 1616-8 had been associated with Capt. John Smith in Newfound-land, was employed by Sir Ferdinando Gorges, of the Plymouth Company, for explorations along the coast, the principal object of which was the discovery of a western passage. He sailed from Kennebec to Virginia, having determined, as he wrote Purchas, "with God's help to search the Coast along, and at Virginia to supply our sultries for a second discovery, if the first failed." On this voyage, he passed through Long Island Sound, Hellgate, and the Narrows. He described his experiences as follows:

"In my way I discovered Land about thirty leagues in length [Long Island] before I came to the sea: but this I cannot be true, where I feared I had been imbalanceed, but by the help of an Indian I got to the sea again, through many crooked and straight passages. I let passe many accidents in this journey occasioned by treacherie, where we were compelled twice to goe together by the eates, once the Sausages had great advantage of us in a straight, not above a Bowe shot, and where a multitude of Indians let fay at us from the banke, but it pleased God to make us victoures: neere unto this we found a most dangerous Catract amongst some rockie Ilandes, occasioned by two unequall tydes, the one ebbing and flowing three hours before and after, this was destroyed by the strength of the current, but found it deepe enough: from hence we were carried in a short space by the tydes swiftesse into a great Bay (to us so appearing) but indeed is broken land [the Upper Bay], which gave us light of the Sea here, as I said, the Land tredeth Southerly. In this place I talked with many Saluages, who told me of two sundry passages to the great Sea on the West [the Hudson and the St. Lawrence (?), or possibly the Delaware], offered me Pilots, and one of them drew mee a Plot with Chalke upon a West, whereby I found it a great Iland, parted the two Seas [i.e. C. Fl. 14, Vol. III]: they report the one scarce passable for ships, perilous current & greatsuccess. Having receied these directions, I hastened [ed] to the place of greatest hope, where I purpose to made triall of Gods goodness toward us, and use my best endeavoour to bring the truth to light, but we were but only shewed the entrance, where in seeking to passe wee were forced buke with contrary and overblowing windes, hardly escaping both our lives. Being thus overcharged with weather, I stood aloast the coast to seecle harbours, to attend a favouruable gale to recover the straitest, but being a harboursse Coast for ought we could then perceiue, wee found no succour till wee arriued between Cape Charles and the Maine on the East side the Bay Chastepahke."

Dermer arrived at "James City" and went from there to "Cape Warde his Plantacon," where he, with others of his crew, while engaged in deckeing the pinaker, was "brought even vnto deaths dore" by fever. Winter (1619-20) having in the mean time set in, Dermer decided to "choose a more temperate season" for further exploration, "both for the generall good and our own safeties. And thus," his letter to Purchas adds, "I have sent you a broken discourse, though indeed very unwilling to have given any notice at all, till it had pleased God to have blesed mee with a thorow search, that our eyes might have witness the truth. I have drawn a Plot of the Coast, which I dare not yet part with for fear of danger, let this therefore serue for confirmation of your hopes, till I can better performe my promise and your desire. . . ." Dermer ends his letter by the assurance that there is a great sea to the west upon which ships come "many and great." The letter was dated from Captain Marty's plantation, Dec. 27, 1619, - Thomas Dermer's Letter, in Purchas His Pilgrimes, IV: 1778-79.

Another account of Dermer's voyage in 1619 is contained in A brief Relation (etc.), London, 1612, not paginated (see also Purchas, *IV?: 1827-32). Having arrived at the Kennebe from Newfoundland, expecting to join Rocrast, Dermer found him absent, and later heard from Virginia, "by a Ship that came thence to fish for the Colony," of Rocrast's death. Dermer thereupon decided "to take the Pineace, that the yere before was assigned to Rocrast, for him to make the Trade with, then yesterday had an Anchored on his designe, and so embarking himselfe and his provision and company in her. And leaving the Fishers-men to their labour, he coasted the shore from thence, searching every Harbour, and compassing every Cape-land, till hee arrived in Virginia; where hee was in Sep. 27, 1619. Upon this statement is manifestly in error, in so far at least as that company is concerned.

The former directors of the New Netherland Company, to whom a charter was granted on Oct. 11, 1644, appeal to the Prince of Orange for two war vessels to accompany a band of colonists. They explain that, their charter having expired, "so that every one is now at liberty to trade there, they have again sent thither two ships, in order to preserve the reputation [continuity—f] of said trader, and that some reverence and awe is much more often bestowed by other traders, exclusive of the Company. Now it happens," they say, "that there is residing at Leyden a certain English Preacher, versed in the Dutch language, who is well inclined to proceed thither to live, assuring the petitioners that he has the means of inducing over four hundred families to accompany him thither, both out of this country and England, provided they would be guarded and preserved from all violence on the part of other potestates...." They declare that the King of Great Britain is disposed to "people the aforesaid lands with the English nation, and by force to render fruitless their possession and discovery, and thus deprive this State of its right, and apparently with ease surprise the ships of this country to which are there, and are ordered to remain there the whole year."

They ask that the aforementioned preacher [John Robinson] and four hundred families [the "Pilgrims"] may be taken under the protection of the United Provinces and that two ships of war may be provided for them. Consequently, the island land must be provisioned and equipped, for the islanders and the clergy, as well as for the clergy, in order to secure a patent from the States-General, which was issued in 1646. This patent was in the name of Governor John Carver. It was signed by the Governor, and the charter was sent to the Superior Court, which would then issue the charter.

This is the first entry in the diary of John Carver, who is the first Englishman to set foot on New England soil. He was a faithful and zealous servant of the Pilgrims, and he showed great courage and determination in the face of all difficulties. He was a true leader in the early settlement of Plymouth, and his memory is held in high esteem by all who have studied the history of the Pilgrims.

Another account of Derrmer's voyage in this year is given in A briefe Relation of the Discovery and Plantation of New England, London, 1622, not pagd, but on the recto of signature C^2, and without a date (contained, also, in Purchas, IV: 1827-34). After describing Derrmer's voyage from Kennebec to Jamestown in 1619, the delays due to the illness of his crew, and the winter season, the account states that Derrmer,"in time convenient [probably in the early spring of 1620] put himselfe to Sea againe, resolving to accomplish in his journey back to New-England, what in his last Dis-covery he had omitted. In his passage he met with certaine Hollanders, who had a trade in Hudsons Riuere some yerees before that time, with whom he had conference about the state of that coast, and their proceedings with those people: whomes answere gav him good content. He betooke himselfe to the following of his business, discerning many goodly Riuers, and exceeding pleasant and fruitfull Coasts and Islands, for the space of eightie leagues from East to West, for so that Coast doth range along, from Hud-sons Riuere to Cape James."

Disputes over the patent to New England lasted for two years, "as to all men were afraid to joyn with vs," and it was decided to recall Derrmer; "but this worthy Gentleman confident of the good likely to ensue, and resolutey resolving to pursue the ends he aymed at, could not be persuade to looke backe, as yet; and so refusing to accept our offer, began againe to prosecute his Dis-covery, wherein he was betrayed by certaine new Sauages, who sodainly set upon him, giving him fourteen or fifteen wounds; but by his valour and dexteritie of spirit hee freed himselfe out of their hands, yet was constrained to retire into Virginia againe the second time, for the cure of his wounds, where he fell sick of the informity of that place, and became so weak that the worthye Gentleman his dayes, after he had remained in the discovery of that coast two yerees, gaine vs good content in all hee vander-tooke. "

Sir Ferdinando Gorges, in his "Briece Narration" (pp. 19-20, 30), in America Painted in the Life (1659), refers to Derrmer's dis-coveries in the years 1619, 1620, and 1621 as follows, but gives no exact dates: After failing to find Capt. Rocraft in the north, Derrmer "shaped his course from Sagadalack in forty-four degrees, to Capawike, being in forty-one and thirty-six minutes, sending me a journal of his proceeding, with the description of the Coast all along as he past." Passing by Capawike, he continued his course along the coast from Harbour to Harbour till he came to Virginia, where he expected to meete with Rocraft (as afore) but finding him dead, and all lost that should have supply'd him, he was forced to shift as he could to make his returns. ""On the returne hee vndertook the Capawike, and returned thither, and returned to Virginia with fourteen wounds. "At the second returne he had the misfortune to fall sick and die of the inftirmity many of our Nation are subject unto at their first coming unto those parts. . . . "From "A Briece Narration" (etc.), 19-20, in America Painted in the Life (1659), in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collec-tions (1857), 63.

It now seems clear that Derrmer did not appear in person before the Virginia Co. on July 10, 1614, as is stated in Vol. II, p. 95, but that a report (edatou) prepared by him was presented to the meeting.

Of Derrmer's visit to the Hudson River in 1620, Gorges writes further as follows: "But as Captaine Derrmer, who (as i said) was coating that Country, met with some Hollanders that were sett in a place we call Hudson's River, in trade with the Natives, who in the right of our Patent forbad them the place, as being by his Majesties letter, thereunto was granted to these Subjects who were such thing, nor found any of our Nation there, so that they hoped they had not offended; However, this their communication removed them not, but upon our complaining of their intrusion to his Ma-jesty, order was given to his Embassadors to dealing with the States, to know by what warrant any of their Subjects took upon them to entitle within those limits by his grant to his Subjects who were royally seized of a part thereof; to which was answered, that they knew of no such thing, if there were any, it was without their authority, and that they had only had executed the company for the affaires of the West-Indies; this answer being returned, made us to prosecute our business, and to resolve of the removing of those Interlopers to force them to submit to the Government of things which belonged to that place, and grant the, that plad who were, "you may see how many burthen I travailed under of all sides, and yet not come near my journeys end."—Ibid, 31.

The protest made by Sir Ferdinando Gorges against the Dutch "Interlopers" resulted in an inquiry by the privy council at Whitehall, to Sir Dudley Carleton, English ambassador to the Nether-lands, on Dec. 15, 1621 (g.s.). Gorges' reference to "some Hol-landers that were settled in a place we call Hudson's River" is, so far as known, the earliest reference in print, in English, to a Dutch settlement on the Hudson River, and the earliest known designa-tion, in an English journal, of the river by Hudsonian names. See under 1614 for earliest use of the name. See also Vol. II, Car-tography, p. 93 et seq.

The original merchants who had operated under the charter of Aug. 10, 1614, now represent to the states-general that, "having had a charter to trade exclusively to New Netherland, discovered by them, situate from the thirty-fourth to about the fiftieth degree, no exclusive grant can properly be given to others "regarding The Trade on the Coasts, or any of the Rivers of New Netherland," and beggin that "the petitioners and other merchants of this Country be allowed "to continue in the free trade they are purusing there, and further that they be granted permission to equip some ships which they have in a sufficient state of forwardness." This petition is made because the owners of a ship named the "Blyde Boockschap" (Bootstrap) (Glad Tidings), commanded by Cornelis Jacobsen [May] of Hoarn, "having discovered some new Countries [between the Hudson and South Rivers] populous and fertile, abounding in all sorts of Timber and never discovered be-for," have asked for a grant or charter covering this territory. The petitioners, pro and con, are told to "consult together and see if they can agree in a friendly manner."—N.T. Col. Docs., II 17-18.

It is to be noted that, whereas the original grant, of 1614, and the petition of 1616, included the territory from the 38th to the 45th degree, N. L., the petitioners now claim that their grant extends from the 34th to the 59th degree. As it proved impossible to recon-cile the two groups of merchants, the "requested Charter" was refused, and the trade remained open to all.—Ibid., I: 15.

The "May-Flower" (Bradford does not give this name in his Sept. history; its first mention is found in his record of "The Falles of their grounds which came first fower in the May-Floure, according as their late were cast, 1623)—Plymouth Col. Rec., XII 4;), with the Pilgrins aboard, sails from Plymouth under a patent or charter granted by the Virginia Company on Feb. 21/2, 1620, to "John Peerce [John Pierce] and Associates, their heirs and Assignes." We know from Bradford's journal that the charter which had been granted the "May-Flower" had expired by the time they departed on June 5, 1619 (Records of the Virginia Co., II: 220-28), has been finally abandoned. Although no absolute documentary proof has been found that they finally sailed under the Pierce patent, nevertheless, the available circumstantial evidence strongly sup-ports such an assumption, which is now generally accepted. This evidence consists almost solely in the fact that Pierce's patent was "called in" at a court of the Virginia Company held on July 16, 1621, on the ground that the proposed settlement had never been made, Pierce having "taken a Patent of St Ferdinando Gorges and ther vppoa seated his Company w^in the lynete of the Northerne Planta^on as by som was suppon^ed and thence to relinquish the benefit of the Patent lee tockle of this Company, that threfore his said patent might be called in unless itt might appeare hee would begin to Plante w^in the lynete of the Sotherne Colony, Hereupon the Court propon^ed to Roberte, Mt Geoffrey, and Smith, as by them was signified, to look about it and certify at the next Courte what Annexes they should receive from him."—Records of the Virginia Co., II 515. No further reference to the patent appears in the records. The statements contained in this minute seem clearly to refer to the "Mayflower" expedition, the Pilgrims, as we shall hereinafter see, having sailed at this time. The place being the "May Flowr" in the territory directly controlled by the Virginia Company, or rather by its subsidiary, the London Company, which, in accordance with the second charter, of May 23, 1606 (p.v.), extended as far north as the 40th degree, or to a point just south of the mouth of the Sept. Hudson.

Although, at the time of the "Mayflower's" departure, a new and enlarged charter, within the limits of the original patent to the northern colony (40° to 45°), was under consideration, this was not granted until Nov. 3, 1620 so that the provisions of the first charter affecting this territory had never been revoked or modified, and were still in force.

In this northern territory, the only settlement which had been made was that of Popham and Gilbert, at the mouth of the Kennebeck River, which had been abandoned in 1608. As the southern boundary of this company, in accordance with the terms of the original grant, fell somewhat to the north of Boston, the country lying between this point and the Hudson constituted a sort of "No Man's Land." Cape Cod, where the Pilgrims landed, lay in this unassigned district. The Pilgrims may have had this fact in mind when they selected it as the site of their settlement, after they had been forced by the dangerous shoals and breakers off the Cape to abandon their original purpose of finding "some place aboute Hudsons river for their habitation."

Realizing that the selected site lay without the confines of the London Company, within whose jurisdiction their patent from the king was in force and in full effect, they, therefore, not be specifically subject to the control or regulations existing in the London Company's territory, nor to any other established government, they evidently thought it desirable, before landing, to bind themselves together under a "Compact," or reorganized company, by which, as Morton says, it "might be as firme as any patent, and in some respects more sure."

In taking this action, they may also have been influenced by an order of the Virginia Company, issued on Feb. 2, 1620, the very day that the patent to John Pierce and his associates was granted. This order provided that "such Captaines or leaders of Particular Plantations that shall goe there to inhabite by vertue of their Graunts and Plant themselfs their Tenantes and Servantes in Virginia, shall have liberty till a forme of Government be here settled for them, Associating unto them divers of the gratest and discreetest of their Companies, to make Orders, Ordinances and Constitutions for the better orderinge and dyrectinge of their Servants and business Provided they be not Repugnent to the

Under the Pierce patent, and within the general jurisdiction of the Virginia Company, although outside of the boundaries of the London Company's patent, they were still possessed of certain powers of framing regulations for their own government, and in signing the "Compact" they clearly recognized and claimed this right.

Nov.

A new patent for New England is granted by the king to Sir 3v13 Ferdinando Gorges, Sir Francis Popham, and "their associates and successors," forty in all, who are incorporated as "the council established for the plantation of New England in America," or the ruling, and governing of New England in America." By the terms of this patent, the corporation was wished "with the absolute propriety and exclusive jurisdiction of the territories thenceforth to be known as 'New England in America,' extending from the easternmost eight degrees of northerly latitude, and in length, by all the breadth aforesaid, throughout the mainland, from sea to sea." A qualifying clause provided that the premises intended to be granted "be not actually possessed or inhabited by any other Christian prince or estate," nor be within the bounds of Virginia.—Broadhead, op. cit., I: 95-96, citing Hazard, I: 103-
10. (The Virginia patent is one of the earliest charters of any Nathaniel Morton, in New England's Memorial (Cambridge, 1669), after relating the details of the voyage of the "Mayflower," with the Pilgrim contingent on board, records (p. 12) their arrival off Cape Cod on Nov. 10, 1620, and refers to their intended destination as follows:

"After some little deliberation had amongst themselves with the Master of the Ship, they tacked about to stand to the Southward, to finde some place about Hudsons River, (according to their first intentions) for their Habitation: But they had not cailed that Course aboue halfe a day, but they fell amongst perilous Sholes and Breakers, and they were so fraught therewith, as they consceived themselves in great danger; and the wind shriking upon them withall, they resolved to bear up again for the Cape aforesaid: the next day, by Gods Providence, they got into the Cape harbour. Thus they arrived at Cape Cod, ahs Cape James, in November 1620." Cf. Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I: 152, which differs in some important particulars.

Then Morton, who had been the secretary of New Plymouth, adds this accusation: "Nevertheless, it is to be observed, that their putting into this place was partly by reason of a storm [Bradford, speaking of the deliberations, and of the 'stande for the sounde and weather being faire'] by which they were forced in, but more especially by the fraudul cy and contrivance of the aforesaid Mr. Jones, the Master of the Ships for, their Intention, as is before-noted, and his Engagement, was to Hudsons River: but some of the Dutch having notice of their intentions, and having thoughts about the same time of erecting a Plantation there likewise, they fraudulently hired the said Jones by delays while they were in England, and now under pretence of the danger of the Shoales, &c. to disappoint them in their going thereby: But God out-shoots Satan oftentimes in his own Bow; for had they gone to Hudsons River as before expressed, it had proved very dangerous to them: for although it is a place fare more commodious, and the Soil more fertile, yet then abounding with a multitude of pernicious Salvages, whereby they would have been in great peril of their lives" (etc.). In the marginal note to the passage in which he charges the Dutch with fraudulently diverting the course of the "Mayflower," Morton adds: "Of this Plot bewitcht the Dutch and Mr. Jones, I have late and certain Intelligence."

Worthington C. Ford, commenting upon the destination of the "Mayflower," in his edition of Bradford's Hist. of Plymouth Plantation, I: 159-60, remarks that, in Morton's view, the reported intention of the Pilgrims as recorded by Morton mentions or suggests the incident, and it has been surmised that Thomas Willett, of the Leyden congregation, and the agent of the Plantation at Kennebeck, was the source of Morton's intelligence.

"Willett had gone to New York when it was captured by the English in 1664, and became the first mayor of the city. It is conjectured that Willett there learned of the intended 'perfidy' of Jones, and passed the information to Morton.

"As Secretary of the Colony Morton would hardly have given currency to a mere rumor or unsupported narrative. On the other hand, the claims of the Dutch in New York at the time would not be the best source of history, whether the reporter was friendly or otherwise to the conquering English. There exists no really valid reason for rejecting the story, while no entirely acceptable theory can be formed to account for its remaining so long untold.

"One piece of corroborative evidence may be cited:—Sir Joseph Williamson, when preparing papers to serve as a justification of hostilities against the Dutch in New Netherland, wrote in 1663 as follows: 'Now in the year 1620 the difference formerly between Archbishop Whigft and Mr. Cartwright, the leader of the Nonconformists, and others about church matters, was again revived, so that many person the country hereafter recovered the peace of the dissenters, and by the ordination of one minister in science, whereas afterwards being desirous to enlarge his Majesties empire in the west parts of the world, they in order thereunto, yrdd a ship at Tarsere [Ter Verrf] in Zeeland of 500 tunns to transport themselves, beinge the number of 460 persons, to Hudson's river aforesaid, at the west end of Longe Island, having eene informed they were places of encouraginge, in respect of the temperature of aire, situation and convenience for tradings.
But the Dutch which transported the said English brake faith with them most perfidiously, landinge them, contrary to the agreement, at their shippinge, 140 leagues from the place, N. E.
the Seaven called Plymouth in old Netherland, and from N. E.
England where the Dutch having thus deceitfully lodg'd our English, they in the latten end of the same yeare 1621, settell a Dutch factorie in the said Hudson's River, through fraud and trechery, to the warringe out of our English interest in that place, and contrary aile to their engagement given to Sir Samuel Argall that they would come thither noe more. See that in pursuance of the said engagement, all they have there, both ships and goods, stands lyable to confiscation.'".—Letter of Sir Joseph Williamson, Ford continues: "It would be without profit to dissect this statement, and point out the many errors of fact contained in it.

What gives it interest lies in the charge of treachery on the part of the Dutch against the Pilgrims, recorded one year before the taking of New Netherland, and in a paper prepared to justify that act. The charge, in all probability, accompanied the English Commissioners sent to take possession of New York, and by this channel reached the ears of Thomas Willett. Such a conclusion must proceed to an English origin, and does not indicate the source from which Sir Joseph Williamson obtained it."

In John Pory's (Poor's) manuscript description of Plymouth Colony, written about 1622, now preserved in the John Carter Brown Library and recently (1918) printed by Houghton, Mifflin Co., Boston, Pory's account of his lessons in the vicinity of Cape Cod, in a letter from Pory to the Lord of Southampton, occurs the following passage:

"For whenas your Lordship knowes, their voyage was intended for Virginia, being by letters from Sir Edwaine Sandis and Mr Deputie Ferrar recommended to Sir Yarly, then governor, that they should have there the best advantage of the Hudson river, whether it were by contrariety of winds, or by the backwardnes of their master or pilot, to make (as they thought it) too long a journey, they fell short both of the one and the other, arriving first at that stalle harbour called Cape Cod, ... " See Aug., 1622.

Thomas Dudley, in a letter to the Countess of Lincoln, begun at Boston on March 14, 1614, but not completed until March 28, 1615, says:

"Concerning the English that are Planted here: I find that about the Year 1620, Certain English set out from Leyden in Holand, intending their Course for Hudson's River.

"These being much Weather beaten and wearied with seeking the River, after a most tedious Voyage, Arrived at length in a small Bay, lying North-East from Cape Cod; where Landing about the Month of December, by the favour of a calm Winter, such as was never known before, began to dwell in these parts; which, now is called New-Plimouth."—Massachusetts or The First Planters of New-England, The End and Manner of their coming thither, and Abode there: In several Epistles (Boston, 1650), 5.

In this year, war was renewed between Spain and the United Provinces of the Netherlands.

Capt. John Mason, in a letter dated Apr. 2, 1621, endorsed by Secretary Coke, and probably addressed to him, says: "In ye 9th year of ye Lord Gnd 1621 or Thereabouts certaine Hollanders were uppon the coast of New England trading with ye Indians betwixt Cape Codde and Bay de la Warre. The said Hollanders as Interlopers fell into ye middle betwixt the said Plantations and at their returne of their voyage aforesaid, published a Mapp in ye Low Countries of ye said sea coasts comprehended betwixt Virginia and Cape Codd, under ye title of New Netherland, giving ye name of ye Prince of Orange to ye country and river of Manahata, where ye Dutch are now planted, (he said country was many yeares before discovered by the Englishmen in their voyages to Virginia) and giving other Dutch names to other places to ye Eastward of ye trade and ye Manahata river at Cape Cod, which was then called ye Cape de la Warre. The said Mapp of ye said New Netherland was by the Dutchers in their pecdiing untill King James, upon compallment of my Lord of Arundel with ye said Ferdinando Gorges Kn., and the said Samuell Argall (formely Govt. of Virginia) and Capt. John Mason of ye said Dutch Introduers in An. 1621 had, by his Majestye order a le to ye Lord of Dartmouth for their Ambassadore at ye Hapge, questioned the States of ye Low Countries for that matter. [I.e. ante, 1620, Summer.]

"Which ye Lords ye States by answer (as I take it) of their ambassadore Sir Nowell Carrune did disclare, dismissing any such act that was done by their people with yeur authority; ye said my Lord of Arundel and I think ye Lord Baltimore (then Secretary of State) doe remember, and ye said Ferdinando Gorges and Captain Mason can witnesse ye same. Nevertheless ye year following, 1622 (as I take it) was 1622, ye said Dutch under a pretended authority from ye West India Company of Holland, maintayned as they sayd by commision from ye said Prince of Orange did return to ye foresaid river of Manahata and made plantation there, fortifying themselves there in two several places, and have built ships there, whereof one was sent into Holland of 600 tonnes or thereabouts. And albeit they were warned by ye English plantation at New Plymouth to forbear trade and not to make any settlement in those parts, letting them know that they were the territories of ye King of England, yett nevertheless with prudence and constemation (yea on the contrary, against such as should disturbe their settlement) did they persist to plant and trade, vileyng of Nation to the Indians and extolling their own people and country of Holland, and have made sundry good returns of commodities from thence into Holland; especially this year they have returned (as is reported) 15000 Beaver Skynnes, besides other commodities."—N. T. Cal. Doc., III: 16-17.

A charter is granted by the states-general to the West India Co., to take effect July 1, and to cover a period of 24 years. For a transcript of the more important provisions of this charter, see above. It was to be used for trade only. It was to be renewed on Feb. 11, 1623, and again on Feb. 11, 1623, to amplify the charter respecting the methods of subscription to the company, and concerning the salt trade.

The official Dutch text of this charter was printed originally in 1621, as a pamphlet. In the same year, an English translation appeared, also in pamphlet form. For bibliographical data, see West India Company, in the Bibliography, Vol. V. The full Dutch text of the charter, with an English translation by A. J. F. van Luer, appears in the Van Renselaer Bouwer MSS., from which, for purposes of easy reference, the essential features are transcribed in full (translated), as follows.

"The States General of the United Netherlands to all who shall see these presents or hear them read, greeting. Be it known, that we, noticing the prosperity of this country and the welfare of its inhabitants consist principally in navigation and trade, which from time immemorial has been carried on by this country with much advantage and to our great trade and to our Welfare, and desiring that the aforesaid inhabitants not only be maintained in their former navigation, commerce and trade, but also that their commerce may be increased as much as possible, especially in conformity with the treaties, alliances, conventions and covenants concerning commerce and navigation formerly made with other princes, republics and nations, which we intend shall be punctually kept and observed in all their parts; and finding by experience that without the common help, aid and means of a general company, no profitable business can be carried on, protected and maintained in the parts hereafter designated on account of the great risk from pirates, extortions and the like, which are incurred on such long and distant voyages; we, therefore, many other and different pregnant reasons and considerations also us thenceunto moving, after mature deliberation of Council, and for very pressing causes, have resolved that the navigation, trade and commerce in the West Indies, Africa, and other countries hereafter designated, shall by the States General of this United Netherlands be carried on otherwise than with the common united strength of the merchants and inhabitants of this country and that to this end there shall be established a general company which, on account of our great love for the common weal and in order to conserve the trade and the merchandize of the said Coasts as well as of the trade and the merchandize of any other part of the said United Netherlands, shall be able to maintain and strengthen with our help, favor and assistance, so far as the present state and condition of this country will in any way admit, and for that purpose furnish with a proper charter and endow with the privileges and exemptions hereafter enumerated, to wit:

"1. That for the period of twenty-four years no native or inhabitant of this country shall be permitted, except in the name of this United Company, from these United Netherlands nor even from any place outside of them, to sail to or trade with the coasts and countries of Africa, from the Tropic of Cancer to the Cape of Good Hope; nor to or with the countries of America, or the West Indies, beginning at the south end of Terra Nova, through the Straits of Magellan, la Maigne, and other straits and passages situated thereabouts, to the Strait of Anjou (Bering Strait), neither on the North Sea nor on the South Sea, nor to or with any islands situated on the one side or the other, or between both, nor to or with the Australian or South Lands, extending and lying between the two meridians of the Cape of Good Hope in the east, and of the east end of New Guinea in the west, inclusive: except only, that they, who before the date of this charter shall have sailed from these or any other countries to any of the aforesaid coasts, shall be permitted to continue their trade till they have sold their goods and come back to this country, or otherwise until the expiration of their charter if they have been granted any before this date, and no longer. Provided that after the first of July, sixteen hundred and twenty-one, the day and time of the commencement of this charter,

No one shall be permitted to send any ships or goods to the places comprehended in this charter even if this Company should not be fully organized before that date...

"II. That further the aforesaid Company, in our name and by our authority, in the limited-sea, shall have power to make contracts, leagues and alliances with the princes and natives of the countries therein comprised also to build any fortresses and strongholds there; to appoint, transfer, discharge and replace governors, troops and officers of justice and for other necessary services, for the preservation of the places, the maintenance of good order, police and justice, in general for the furtherance of trade, as according to circumstances they shall see fit; moreover, they may promote the settlement of fertile and uninhabited districts, and do all that the service of this country and the profit and increase of trade shall require. And the [directors] of the Company shall regularly communicate to us and transmit such contracts and alliances as they shall have made with the aforesaid princes and nations, likewise [report] the situation of the fortresses, strongholds and settlements by them begun.

"III. Provided that when they have chosen a governor general and prepared instructions for him, the same must be approved, and the commission given by us; and further, that such governor general, as also other vice governors, commanders and officers, shall be obliged to take the oath of allegiance to us and also to the Company.

"XI. That the Company may have the benefit of good government, to the greatest profit and satisfaction of all the participants, we have ordained that the said government shall be vested in five Chambers of directors—one at Amsterdam which shall have the management of four ninths; one Chamber in Zea-land, of two ninths; one Chamber on the Main, of one ninth; one Chamber in the Noorder-quartier, of one ninth; and the fifth Chamber in Friesland together with Stadt ende Landen [province of Groningen], also of one ninth—upon the conditions set forth in the register of our resolutions and the agreement drawn up respecting it. And the provisions which there are no Chambers shall be accommodated with as many directors, divided among the respective Chambers, as the number of hundred thousand guilders which they shall furnish to the Company.

"XII. That the Chamber of Amsterdam, shall consist of twenty directors; the Chamber of Zeeland of twelve; the Chambers of the Main and of the Noorder-quartier each of fourteen; and the Chamber of Friesland together with the Stadt ende Landen also of fourteen directors....

"XVIII. That so often as it shall be necessary to have a general assembly of the aforesaid Chambers, it shall be by Nine-teen persons, of whom eight shall come from the Chamber of Amsterdam, four from Zeeland, two from the Main, two from the Noorder-quartier, two from Friesland and Stadt ende Landen provided, that the nineteenth person, or so many more as we shall at any time think fit, shall be deputied by us for the purpose of helping to direct the affairs of the Company in the aforesaid Assembly.

"XIX. By which general Assembly of the aforesaid Chambers, all matters relating to this Company shall be considered and decided; provided, that in matters of war, our approbation of their resolution shall be asked.

"XX. The aforesaid general Assembly being summoned, it shall meet, whenever they are about to fit out, to resolve how many ships they shall send to each place for the account of the Company in general, and no individual Chamber shall be permitted to undertake anything not included in the aforesaid common resolution but [all] shall be bound to carry it into effect and to execute it.

"XXI. The said general Assembly shall be held the first six years in the city of Amsterdam, and the following two years in Zeeland; and so on alternately in the aforesaid two places.

"XXV. The ships returning from a voyage shall come to the place they sailed from; and if, by stress of wind and weather, the vessels which sailed out from one district shall arrive in another—as those from Amsterdam or the Noorder-quartier in Zealand or the Main, or from Zeeland, Amsterdam or the Main, to Stadt ende Landen, in another district—each Chamber shall nevertheless retain the direction and management of the ships and goods it sent out and be allowed to send and transport the goods to the places whence the vessels sailed, either in the same or other vessels.

"XXXVII. Whenever any ship shall return from a voyage, the admirals or commanders of the fleet, ship or ships shall be obliged to come and report to us the success of the voyage within ten days after their arrival and shall make out and deliver a report in writing, if the case requires it.

"XXXIX. We have, moreover, promised, and do promise, that we will maintain and defend this Company against every person in [their] right[s] free navigation and trade....

"XLV. We further promise that we will maintain and uphold the Company in the contest to which this our charter, by all treaties of peace, alliances and covenants with the neighboring princes, kingdoms and countries, without suffering anything to be done or transacted that might tend to diminish its value."

—From a translation by A. J. F. van Laer of the original charter in Van Rensselaer Bowier MSS., 87-115.

Sir Dudley Carleton writes to Secretary Calvert from the Hague (extract): "Here hath been with me of late a certain Walloon [Jesse de Forest—see 1621, July 16], an Inhabitant of Leyden, in the name of divers Families, Men of all Trades & Occupations, who desire to go into Virginia, & there to live in the same condition, as others of his Majesty's Subjects, but in a Town or Incorporation by themselves; which being a matter of some consideration, I required of him his demands in writing, with the Signatures of such as were to bear part therein, both which I send you Honor herewith [i.e., the well-known "Round Letter" document—see A Walloon Family in America, by Mrs. Robert W. de Forest, Vol. 1; & howeover the demands are extravagant in some points, yet if his Majesty like of their going thither, they may be made more capable of the nature of the Plantation, to which purpose they will send one (upon the first word they shall have from me of his Majesty's pleasure) expressly to treat with our Company in England. The States [General] have by public Placart authorised a West-India Company (as I formerly advertised your Honor) to which Officers are appointed, & they have made their publications in the general Assembly of the provinces, etc. They will do it slowly, & no Man can see where the Money for this purpose will be raised, yet do great effects many times succeed of less beginnings. I send your Honor herewith a translait [sic] of the States octroy for that Company."—Sir Dudley Carleton's Letters and Despatches, 1620-1624, being Vol. 25 of the Hardwicke Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library. See also Baird, Huguenot Emig. to America, I: 158-62.

The reply of the directors of the Virginia Co. was not favourable, and de Forest therefore presented his petition, in April, 1622, to the states of Holland and West Friesland, who referred the matter to the directors of the West India Co., still in process of formation....

See April 21, 1621. The eventual result of this petition was that de Forest and the other petre de familles sailed for Dutch Guiana, in the "Pigeon," on July 16, 1623 (q.v.).

Traders to Virginia (New Netherland) petition the states- general "to be allowed to send out some ships to bring their returns thence to this Country, as the trade and commerce thither are not to be lost before the West India Company be formed and ready."

The petition is granted, on condition that the traders return to Holland before July 1, 1622.—N. T. Col. Doc., I: 25. On Sept. 15, a similar request was granted to Henrick Eickens, Hans Jooris Houten, and Adriaen Janssen Engel, "cum sociis, merchants in Amsterdam, to send a ship forth named the "Bijzond" and others for the West Indies;" also to Janssen Houten, master, to "New Virginia," also upon condition that they return by July 1, 1622.—Ibid., I: 26. On Sept. 24, still another similar petition was granted upon the same terms to Dierck Volckertse, Doctor Verus(Velius?), and Doctor Carthusius, of Hoorn, Pieter Nannic of Medemblik, and Cornelis Volckertse and Pieter Dirckzen Schooth.—Ibid., I: 26. On Sept. 29, other merchants, including Petrus Plancius, "minister of the Holy Word," and Chas. Jacobs. Harincarspel, "Councillor and archdeacon of the City of Amsterdam," who were permitted to send two vessels, one to New Netherland, "and the other to the aforesaid New River, ... to trade away and dispose of their old stock which they have there, and afterwards to bring back into this country, their goods, cargoes, clerks and seamen, on condition that they must be home with their ships and goods before the first of July, 1622."—Ibid., I: 27.

On June 18, 1622, Harincarspel, heir of Petrus Plancius, petitioned for an extension of six months "to bring over the returns from New Netherland," but the decision was postponed.—Ibid., I: 18. The state-general seem to have made no further requests of private traders to sail to New Netherland.

In a letter addressed to Sir Dudley Carleton, English ambassador to The Netherlands, sent on this day by the privy council at Whitehall, England, it is stated that, "Whereas, his Maj[eas]t[y] Subjects have many yeares since taken possession of the whole precinct, and inhabited some parts of the North of Virginia (by us called New-England) of all which countries his Maj[eas]t[y] hath in like manner, some yeares since by Patent granted the quiet and full possession unto particular persons, Nevertheless wee understand that the yeares past the inhabitants have entered upon some more thereof, and have left a Colonia and given new names to the several parts appertaining to that part of the Country, and are now in readiness to send for their supply six or eight ships, whereof his Maj[eas]t[y] being advertised, weee have received his royall commandment to signifie his pleasure that you should represent these things unto the States-General. ... the title Ma^^...'' Councillor and archdeacon of the City of Amsterdam," "Sir Dudley Carleton sends a protest to the states-general against any Dutch settlement in the lands to which the King of England has already given a patent, "he having incontestably the right to the said country." The Dutch are warned not to send the ships "already equipped for said voyage," and to stop "the ulterior prosecution of said plantation."—N. T. Col. Dots., III: 8. See also Dec. 15, 1621, and March 16, 1622.

Sir Carleton, Ambassador from the King of Great Britain, recommended that their High Mightinesses would adopt a resolution to his propounder his Maj[eas]t[y]s desire in that respect, resolved to request Burgomaster Pawe that he would be pleased to write to the partners in the trade to the Island of New Netherland, to the effect that their High Mightinesses desire to be informed of the state of the matter contained in the aforesaid proposition. —N. T. Col. Dots., I: 27. See also Jan. 30, 1622, to the directors of the West India Company, having examined the paper relative to the families to go to the West Indies, approve of the plan, but think it better to postpone action until "the Directors should be formed."—N. T. Col. Dots., I: 23. See also July 19, 1621. The families who were thus planning to settle in the West Indies—"a term then used to designate not only the islands now known as the West Indies but North and South America as well—were the Walloons, under Jesse de Forest. Their sailing was postponed for over a year, but on July 16, 1621, eleven "pères de familles," including Jesse de Forest and Jehan Moumier de la Montagne, "student en médecine," left for the "Wild Coast" (Guiana), in the "Pigeon," it being deemed advisable by the directors of the W. I. Co. to risk the lives of women and children until a site for a colony had been selected and some preparation made to safeguard the families. Accompanying the "Pigeon part way, went the "Mackerel," bound for New Netherland. No record exists of the name of the captain, nor of the number or character of the passengers on the "Mackerel," except that we know from Wassaens that the "worthy Daniel Van Kriekebbeck" went along as supercargo, and that she arrived at the Hudson River on Dec. 12, 1623 (69).—De Forest, A Wallon Family in America: 191 et seq. See also Wassaens, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's New Neth., 75, 76. Ambassador Carleton having "recommended that a resolution be passed on the communication he had made on the part of his Majesty, regarding the Island of Virginia," the states-general resolve "that the said communication shall be examined, together with what has been published in print at Amsterdam on this subject. —"N. T. Col. Dots., I: 18. At its meeting on Nov. 21, 1621, the Virginia Co. granted a commission for fishing and trading to Capt. Thomas Jones, master of the "Discovery," a vessel of 60 tons. Jones reached Jamestown in April, and on his return to England visited New Plymouth in August. Bradford, in his History, records his arrival, and that of a gentleman by name Mr. John Poorly; he had been secretary in Virginia, and was now going home passage in this ship. Speaking of Jones and the "Discovery," he says, "they were set out by some merchants to discover all the harbours between this and Virginia, and the shoules of Cap-Codi, and to trade along the coast where they could."—Bradford, History of Plantation Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 276-78. John Porye wrote a journal, which was recently acquired by the John C. G. Brown Library. This journal was published in 1818, with an introduction and notes by Champign Burrege. From Part III of this book, the following "coppe of a parte of Mr Porye's Letter to the Governor of Virginia" is taken:

... Now whether there be ane col or noe to the south
It is alleged, evidently through an error, that New Netherland in this year became a political entity, was formally constituted a "Province," and formally granted the armorial rights of a countship. The error has descended from Dr. O'Callaghan who, in Disc. Hist. N. T., IV: 1 (40 ed.), presents an item on the "Seal of New Netherland," and in Vol. I. (4to ed.), 1664. Copied from an impression in the Office of the Secretary of State.

In his account of this seal, O'Callaghan says: "This is the first public seal of the Province, and is thus described: Argent, a Beaver, proper; Crest, a Coronet; Legend, Sigillum Novi. Belgii. In a paper by Van der Donck, entitled, "Further observations on the Petition of the Comonality of New Netherland," it is stated that New Netherland was called a Province, because it was invested by their High Mightinesses with the arms of an Earl. The engraving is copied from an impression of the seal in the office of the Secretary of State." His footnote reference shows that the seal he copied was found in the first volume of the series known as Land Papers. There is, however, no very early document in this volume with a seal of New Netherland. It is evident that an impression of a seal on a late document of the Dutch period was used for the plate, and that the date 1623 was assumed here, as also in his Hist. N. Neth., II: 99, because he had found in a volume of transcripts, known as Holland Documents, IV: 39, the attribution cited by him as by Van Der Donck. The transcript was one of a series procured in Holland by J. Romyen Broedaa. Later, the series was printed as Vol. I. and II. of N. T. Col. Docs., where, in II: 162, the statement attributed to Van der Donck appears as the first English translation of the Petition of the Provinces to the States-general by the petitioners representing the commonality of New Netherland. The additions were signed by the "Eleven Men," July 26, 1649. In explanation of the name "Province," the annotation says: "It is called a Province because it was invested, by their High Mightinesses, with the Arms of an Earl.

Although nowhere else in the records has a reference to the earldom or countship been found, it is possible that the reference implies an expressed intention on the part of the states-general to constitute New Netherland a province of equal standing with the seven home provinces forming the Dutch Union, with all the privileges and advantages which were entitled to bear the arms of a countship.

No seal is extant of 1623, as alleged. Not even in Holland was a province always in coordinate relations a country. The explanation is perhaps found in the fact that a seal was adopted by the directors of the West India Co. in 1630 (see Dec. 28, 1630, and Frontispiece, Vol. IV), which is surmounted by a coronet. When the petitioners of 1649 sought the support of the states-general, they endeavored to make their appeal rest upon convincing grounds, not without exaggeration, in this case as in others. The statements of O'Callaghan have been accepted by later writers, sometimes with expressions of surprise that they ever doubted. But Lord Chancellor Coke preceded in the same way in his "Report," and he was never without accuracy. For example, see Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. T., I: 41. For further data regarding countship, see Dec. 28, 1630.

1623. M.C. Veningham, a man of experience in those parts, do seem to doubt, yet a Flemish pilot, who is to conduct Captain Argoll his pinnace into Hudsons river, putteth down his pilt, a place some 15 leagues to the west of Elizabeths Island which he calleth Cod Island. And by the way that you may know how strongt the Pinnace was armed, from 40 to 44 fowre, as all Hudsons river Prince Maurice his river; Cape Cod the Stakes Hole; Sagadahoc or therabouts Prince Henricks river and the great bay (wherein Port-Royall taken by Captain Argoll from the French was seated), Grave Williams Bay. And in the same place they confirmed the title, of the Cape Henrick & Charlest, as if it had no further extension both north & south. Also to the south of Hudsons River they name the country Aguashanacke.

Sir Ferdinando Gorges and John Mason obtain a patent for lands between the Merrimac and Kennebec Rivers, called Lancunia. Within this patent, which included the present states of New Hampshire and Maine, settlements were made, in 1623, on the sites of Dover and Portsmouth.—Col. of State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1666, 331; Belknap, Hist. of New Hampshire, I: 4-5.

In a memorial addressed Nov. 25, 1671, by K. Van Reeneheus to the Low. Lords, it is said that the Dutch make no representation of French presence of reference is made to the fact that "sundry colonies, as early as 1623, had been conveyed thither [New Netherlands] with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to carry on trade, principally in the fur's abounding in that country.

In this year, the first collected edition of Shakespeare's plays was published in London.

It has been stated that about this year a blockhouse was erected on Manhattan Island, on the site where Fort Amsterdam was later built.—Moulton, Hist. State of N. T., II: 367; Innes, N. Amsterdam and Its Past, 153-52, etc. There is no valid basis for this assumption. Innes makes the statement, but does not assign a date. Moulton is very often untrustworthy. In this case he refers to unverifiable tradition and to Lumbrichtsen's Korte Beschrijving (1813); but Lumbrichtsen bases his statement upon De Laet's Nieuwe Wereld (1620), and De Laet plainly refers to 1624. The Dutch did not intend to "another fort of greater importance at the mouth of the same North River, upon an island which they call Manhattes or Man-terlands Island," clearly relates to the fort staked out in 1626, when the purchase of the island was made by Minuit.—Jameson, N. Neth., 54; also p. 47, in relation to the earlier Fort Nassau, on Castle Island, and 1624, for building and settlement of Fort Orange. The governor [of New Plymouth] also, with Hobamak and others, go to Manomet [in Buzzard's Bay], a town near twenty miles south of Plymouth...; hitch the Dutch or French or both used to come...—Prince, N. Eng. Chron., 208.

Mar. While the captain was at Manomet, news comes to Plymouth that Massassuet is like to die, and that a Dutch ship is driven ashore before his house so high that she could not get off till the tides increase...—Prince, N. Eng. Chron., 211.

May? According to the second statement of Catalina Trico, she arrived in New Amsterdam at about this time, on the ship "Unity." For a discussion of her two statements, and conclusions therefrom, see 1624 (May).

In the spring of this year, the first settlement in New England was made, by David Thomson at Little Harbor, on the south side of the Narragansett Bay, on the site of the present Providence. Var. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 326, 366, and authorities there cited.

In the month of June, Francis West arrived at Plymouth in New England, with a "commission to be admiral of New England, to restrain interlopers and such fishing ships as came to fish and trade without a license from the Council of New England." Finding he could accomplish nothing in this matter, West went to Virginia. He returned to New England in August and probably joined Robert Gorges.—Winsor, N. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 304, and authorities there cited.

Inward the end of June, but evidently before the 21st, "The Directors of the West India Company, finding that the inhabitants of these lands [Netherlands], by order of the Lords States, have left the coasts of the West Indies, in order to maintain the continuance of trade, send three ships out of the country: The Orange Tree, the Griffon, and the Love, in the hope of securing the first advantage for the Company [the organization of which is not yet consummated. [This may refer to the fact that the subscriptions had not yet been completed.—See June 21, article IX.] The Lord give them happiness and good fortune, whose glory all serves.—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, part v, fol. 102, (translated). These ships sailed to the West Indies and had to return on subsequent entries by Wassenaer, who records the return of the "Grypende Arent" in December, 1621, of the "Liefde" in January, 1624, and "Orange Boom" in March, 1644. In marginal notes, Wassenaer states that these were, respectively, the first, second, and third ships sent out by the West India Company. It is clear
At last, after numerous "conferences, communications and deliberations," extending over a period of two years, the directors and chief participants of the Chartered West India Company now adopt certain articles of agreement, which are finally approved by the states-general.

The present paper provides that subscriptions to the company must all be in by the first day "after the last of October," and that within eight days thereafter a copy of the subscription-list to every chamber must be sent to the other chambers, "provided, that the equipment already begun shall continue for the use of the Company, and that those who have furnished money, or committee apparatus to shall yet furnish it, shall receive interest thereon at the discretion of the Nineteen." The organization of the West India Co. is now complete, and it is ready to prosecute with energy the objects of its incorporation. The agreement, which was made between the directors and the chief participants of the West India Company, reads (translated) as follows:

"Agreement made between the directors and the chief participants of the West India Company, with the approval of the High and Mighty Lords the States General. Dated June 21, 1621.

The States General of the United Netherlands, to all to whom these present meetings, greetings, and it is known, that whereas, in a memorial directed to us by certain deputies of the chief participants of the chartered West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam, setting forth that they presented themselves several times before the Assembly of the directors and also held a number of meetings, the committee appropriated to them by the end that in due time proper rules and regulations might be adopted and established to the satisfaction of the good participants and that the business might be better and with the more profit be set in motion as soon as possible and subsequently be brought into proper operation, our application was requested of several articles presented to us for that purpose, either in the way of an amplification of their charter or else by framing an order for the aforesaid Chamber of Amsterdam or in such manner as we should find advisable; and whereas, before adopting any resolution thereupon, we thought fit, to send a copy of the articles to the respective Chambers of the West India Company, that they might carefully examine them, confer with the chief participants and send to us deputies from themselves, as well as from the chief participants, fully empowered and authorized, for this purpose and whatever might serve to promote so necessary a business, to meet in mutual conference and if possible to come to final agreement, subject to our approval; and whereas these deputies of the respective Chambers, directors and chief participants, therewith came here in proper number and, in the presence and on the suggestion and persuasion of our delegates, after the holding of several conferences, conferences and the deliberations, directed to by the chief participants, without prejudice to the provinces and respective cities, for promoting the West India business mutually agreed upon the following articles (the most important parts of which, only, are here given):

I. That no alteration, extension or interpretation of the charter or acts depending thereon shall be sought by the directors or by the chief participants or any others, except after previous meeting, discussion and the approval of a majority of the directors and chief participants who shall be present at the meeting.

II. That all accounts mentioned in the fifteenth article of the charter shall be rendered in business form to the committee to be nominated by the chief participants, and admitted under oath, within the time mentioned in the said fifteenth article, which committee shall make report thereof, only in gross to the other chief participants. The said committee shall be bound by oath not to divulge, but to keep every thing secret which the directors must keep secret. They shall moreover during the time of two years be subject to the prohibition in regard to buying or selling placed upon the directors by the thirty-first article of the charter.

III. And that the other Chambers also may know of the business transacted by the said Assembly, the associate member from the Chamber of Amsterdam shall inform the chief participants of the Noorderquarter and Stad En Lage Landen and the associate member from the Chamber of Zeeland those of the Most of the business of the aforesaid Assembly, as far is it shall be communications.

IV. Whereas, in order to satisfy everyone, it is necessary that the time for subscribing and contributing to this Company shall be extended further, for the satisfaction of our own inhabitants as well as of foreigners, therefore, be the aforesaid subscriptions extended for inhabitants to the last of August, and for foreigners to the last of October next, both new style, and the fact made known by posting of notices; after that date, no person may be received or admitted, but every Chamber must close its subscription lists the first day after the last of October, and eight days thereafter send a copy to each of the other Chambers, that the provision mentioned shall continue for the use of the Company, and that those who have furnished money in advance of others, or shall furnish it, shall receive interest thereon at the discretion of the Nineteen.

X. And as to the general accounting, mentioned in article sixteen of the charter, and the changing of a third part of the directors in article fourteen, to maintain good order and a general basis in all the Chambers, it is deemed necessary that the said general accounting be made (six years from the date of granting the charter, beginning the third of June 1621, new style) according to mercantile custom in public, in the presence of the aforesaid committee of the chief participants of the respective Chambers, and so on regularly every six years a like general accounting, . . .

And the first change of a third part of the directors shall take place six years after the ninth of June this year 1623, and so on regularly every two years agreeable to the charter. (The copy of the Agreement in the introduction to De Verhael is, &c.) Verhael has the third of June this year 1623, which is evidently the date intended.)

Therefore having examined and considered the foregoing [it] articles and being desirous of promoting unity and concord between the directors and chief participants as well as the advancement of the West India Company, we have, with the advice of the Prince of Orange, thought fit to agree to and approve of, and do hereby agree to and approve the same and demand that they with the articles of the charter shall be strictly followed and observed by the directors, participants and every person concerned therein, in the same manner as if they were inserted in the charter; for we find this to be for the best interests of the West-India Company.

"Given under our great seal, paraphe and the signature of our secretary, at the Hague, the twenty-first of June, sixteen hundred and twenty-three."—\textit{Aan Remissier Eerste MSS.} (translated by A. J. F. van Lier), 127-55.

Jameson, in \textit{Naur. N. Neth.}, comments upon the formation and purposes of the West India Co. as follows: "The chief event of New Netherland history, in the period between the voyages of Brederode and the West India Company, was the incorporation by the States General of the West India Company, June 3, 1621, under whose control New Netherland remained from that time to the English conquest in 1664. Willem Usselins, the founder of that company, . . . had been for thirty years agitating the formation of a West India Company which might repeat in the western world the achievements and prosperity of the Dutch East India Company, and might also play a more warlike part by attacking the King of Spain in his own colonial dominions. Party divisions in the Dutch republic had hindered the promotion of the project, and the Twelve Years' Truce had stopped it for a time; but with the overthrow of Oldenburg and the resumption of war with Spain it was revived, and the company was chartered.

"The Chartered West India Company was given a monopoly of trade between Dutch ports and the west coast of Africa and all the coasts of America. Within these ample limits it could form alliances with native princes and tribes, appoint and discharge governors and other officers, administer justice and promote trade and colonization. Under the superior control of the States General, its government was vested in five federated chambers or boards of managers, the chief one at Amsterdam, others representing the provinces of Zeeland, of the towns on the Maas, of North Holland and of the northern provinces of Friesland and Groningen. General executive powers were vested in the College of the Nineteen; and the government promised aid and protection. New Netherland was not specifically mentioned, and in all colonies the position and rights of colonists were left to be defined by a corporation formed for war and commerce. Throughout all the earlier part of the company’s history, its interest in New Netherland was far less than in the conquest of Brazil from Spain, the maintenance of Brazil as a Dutch colony, and the war against the Portuguese for its retention, ending with the peace of 1609.

It was two years from the granting of the charter (June, 1621–June, 1623) before the West India Company had perfected its internal organization and become ready to prosecute with energy the objects of its incorporation. Meanwhile voyages of private adventurers had continued, Filip van de Wetering, and the Dutch government had begun the long series of diplomatic attacks upon the Dutch title to New Netherland which ended in the English conquest of 1664. — N. Neth., June, 1623–46.

The yachts “Mackerel,” bound for New Netherland, sails from the Texel in company with the “Pigeon,” which carries Jese de Forest and his band of Walloons, destined for the Amsterdam (see July 19, 1623). The vessels are to accompany each other “as far as the Amazons.” On Sept. 14, however, they parted company near the Madeira Islands, in 32° 54’, N., the “Mackerel” taking her course towards New Netherland. — Journal du voyage . . . pour visiter la côte de Guinée (Shane MS. 1798; in British Museum) translated and adapted by W. de Forest’s A Walloon Family in America, II: 251, 195, 205.

The “Mackerel” did not arrive in New Netherland until Dec. 12, which “was indeed somewhat late, but it wasted time in the savage islands, to catch a fish [a Spanish prize],” and did not catch it, so ran the luck. The worthy Daniel van Kruykebeek, for breech called Beek, was supercargo on it, and so did his duty that he was thanked. (Mr. van Laer thinks that this statement is ironical, and means that he was discharged.) The “Mackerel” remained in the river (probably near Castle Island) during the winter of 1623–4, and was still in the river in the spring of the latter year. The yachts, according to an account written by a party of Walloons in the Texel, after they had sailed from Amsterdam. See April 1624.— Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal in Jame’s-Island’s, Nar. Neth., 76. Wassenaer gives the date of sailing of the “Mackerel” as June 16, but in the Journal of Jese de Forest both the “Pigeon” and the “Mackerel” are recorded as finally sailing from the Texel at two o’clock on the afternoon of July 16 (perhaps June 16 was the day on which the latter left Amsterdam). The “Pigeon” had left Amsterdam on the first of the month, a few days only after the “Orange Tree,” “Eagle” ("Griffon’’), and “Love,” which, as “the fleet fitted out for Guinée,” the author of the Journal refers to seeing outside of the Texel on the 16th. The Journal further states that the intention of the “Eagle” “should sail in company with this fleet, but that on account of a few hours delay caused by a mishap to the “Mackerel,” they were left behind.

Aug. or Sept.

In August or September of this year, Robert Gorges arrived in Massachusetts Bay with passengers and families. He decided to settle at Wessagusset, but remained only a short time; his colonists dispersed, some returning to England and some going to Virginia. — Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., III: 304, and authorities there cited.

Nov.

At a session of the “Assembly of the XIX” of the Dutch West India Company there was heard also Adrian Joriss. Tienpoint, shipwright, and others, by our Dutch friends with the company of the chamber of Zeeland, for Middelburgh, having been in the Virginins [New Netherland] and declaring they still have there in the rio de Montague [Hudson R.] some goods, 2 sloops and people. Requests therefore that they may have permission to make ready a yacht to trade their merchandise and bring home their people (palts). Whereupon, deliberation being had, it is resolved that those who have any goods or merchandise left there shall be dealt with fairly, in the same way as shall be done with those on the Gold Coast, for which a committee has been appointed to draft an order, with the advice of the Commandeur.

As bringing home the people, it is thought necessary to send a ship to the Virginins, which shall be equipped by the Chamber of Amsterdam with the necessary cargo to continue the trade, for which purpose they may also take with them 5 or 6 families of the colonists (ex officij Familien van de Colonen), in order to make a beginning of settlement there and on that occasion bring back here the goods secured in return for the aforesaid merchandise and the people. — Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, item 45, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer. See also Jessurun, Kilium van Renseleraer, app. 1.

If the theory developed under 1626 (q. v.), that the “Nieu Vegetri” was in reality identical with the “Mackerel,” or rather that the former name is merely a mistranslating of the latter in the Muller catalogue description of Van Rappard Document A, the only place where it is known to appear, proved to be erroneous, the natural conclusion would follow, that, as a direct result of this conclusion, the “Nieu Vegetri” sailed about March 30, 1624 (Van Rappard Doc. A), preceded early in the same month by the “Nieu Nederland.” — See March, 1624.

This document, described for the first time in Vol. II of this work, goes far to corroborate the story of Catelina Trico that she came to New Netherland in 1624, under “Gouvernoor Arie Jorisse” (Tienpoint), or, as the latter deposition reads, “with a Ship called ye Unity, whereby was Commander Arie Jorisse,” although she was probably mistaken in giving the “Unity” as the name of the ship on which she sailed. — See 1623–4. Further corroboration of at least a part of her account is contained in a report dated Dec. 1623, by our Dutch navigator of New Netherland. In this report occurs the following statement: “In the years 1622 and 1623 [probably an error for 1623 and 1624], the West India Company took possession, by virtue of their charter of the said country, and conveyed thither, in their ship, the New Netherland, divers Colonists under the direction of Commander Arie Jorisse, Tienpoint. — N. T. Col. Doc., I: 149.

Again, in the Representation of N. Neth. (1649), it is stated that: “After their High Mightinesses, the Lords States General, were pleased, in the year XVI and twenty-two [1621], to include this Province within the Charter of the West India Company, the latter considered it necessary to take complete possession of this naturally beautiful and noble Province; this, indeed, did follow in course of time, but according as circumstances permitted, as in all beginnings; for since the year of our Lord XVI and twenty-three, four forts have been built there by order of the Lords Majors, one on each of the four points of Manhatn, of New York, East and North rivers, and named New Amsterdam, where the staple right of New Netherland is designed to be. Another, called Orange, is in the Colonie Reenselaerswyck, thirty-six leagues higher up on the west side of the last named river, three leagues below the Kahoorn, or Great falls of the Mohawk kill; but there never has been, as yet, any difference with foreigners about that (North) river. On the South river stands fort Nassau, and on the fresh river, the Good Hope. In these four forts there has always been some garrison from the beginning to the present time, though just now they are all in a very poor condition, both as regards theirse- lves and the garrison.”

These forts, as well north and south, were located not only to close and command the said rivers, but as far as property by occupation extended, to possess as well all the lands comprehended between them as round about them, and on the opposite side of the river, to declare them the Hap. Company’s own, and to guard them against all nations whether foreign or indigenous, that would attempt to seize the same against its will and consent . . .

“All the islands, bays, harbors, rivers, kills and places, even a great way on the other side of New Holland or Cape Cod have Dutch names, which were given them, long before they had any property by occupation; whereon it was that they first began to discover and trade to those places. . . .” — Ibid., I: 284–85.

In the Deduction also, one of the documents submitted to the states-general in 1660 (q. v.), concerning the boundaries of New Netherland, the statement is made that the W. I. Co. had built, “since the year 1605, four forts, to wit: two on the North river, namely Amsterdam and Orange; one on the South river, called Nassau, and the last on the fresh river, called The Hope. From the beginning, a garrison has been always stationed and maintained in all these forts. . . .” — Ibid., II: 455. It should be noted that the Representation and the Deduction make the same error in giving 1623 as the date of incorporation of the West India Co., and that both are, in other respects, inaccurate.

In his letter to Samuel Blumenaart, possibly written in the autumn of 1627, but more probably in the autumn of 1628 (q. v.), or Isaac de Rastère says: “The six farms, four of which lie along the River Hellgate, stretching to the south side of the island, have at Nov.
least 60 morgens of land ready to be sown with winter seed, which at the most will have been ploughed eight times." As it was the cus tom of the colony to plant wheat in May and September—this may indi cate that the colonists had planted eight seasons (twice in 1627, twice in 1628, twice in 1629, and twice in 1632), which, in itself, were the letter written in 1627, would constitute pretty good proof that the settlement was established as early as 1625, as it would have taken some time to clear so large an amount of ground and prepare it for cultivation. If, however, the letter was written in 1638, which is more probable (see Autumn, 1638), the argument would, of course, suggest 1624 as the year of settlement.

— In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 25,569 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in two ships to New Netherland.—De Lact, Keri Verhaell, 46, in his Historie (1644). There were imported from Holland to New Netherland 4,000 beavers and 700 otters, valued at 27,125 guilders.
visitor of the sick. When Krol had been prevented by illness from sailing in December, 1623, Gerty Pieters went in his place.

Feb. Wassenaer, records, under this month, the preface to the section being dated June 1, 1624, as follows: "Numerous voyages realize so much profit for adventurers: that they discover other countries, from which afterwards sail ships of the Virginia, a country lying in 24 degrees, is one of these. It was first peopled by the French, afterwards by the English and is to-day a flourishing colony."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 67. (For reproduction of title-page of Vol. I, see Pl. Vol. IV.)

Also under February (preface dated June 1), Wassenaer (see Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 73) records: "A ship is being fitted out [Jameson erroneously translates "was fitted out"] under a commission from the West India Company, and freighted with families, to plant a Colony among this people [the reference is to New Netherland]. But to go forward safely, it is first of all necessary that they be placed in a good defensive position and well provided with forts & arms, since the Spaniards, who claims all the country, will never allow anyone to gain a possession there..." This reference, which occurs in a section the preface to which is dated, I have acted upon, and afterwards sent them. They sailed in the Netherlands expedition, which sailed shortly after March 30 (q. n.).

In a letter written by J. Sherley, from New Plymouth, and addressed to "Most worthy and loving Friends," in England, there were enclosed " sundrie objections [against Plymouth as the site of a permanent settlement]." He thus wrote: "These are the same objections which they that are now return made against you and the country. I pray you consider them, and answer them by the first convenience." These objections were made by some of those that came over on their particular and were returned home, as is before mentioned, and were of the same suite with those that this other letter mentions.

Objection 11 is as follows: "The Dutch are planted near Hudson Bay [the bay of Hudson's River], and are likely to over throw the [jouf] trade." The answer given to this objection is: "They will come and plant in these parts, also, if we and others doe not, but goe home and leave it to them. We rather commend them, then condemn it for them."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), I: 354-67.

Jan. A letter bearing this date (possibly 1625, as given by Brodhead and Acts of Privy Council, Colonial Ser., London, 1910), written Feb. at Whitechapel to Sir John Eliot, vice admiral, the mayor of Plymouth, and sir Ferdinando Gorges, authorizes the arrest of a Dutch ship "ryding in the haven at Plymouth called the Orange Tree of Amsterdam, being of the burthen of one hundred and fifty tunes, or thereabouts, and bound to a place in America which is comprehended in a grant made by him Ma to upon just consideration to divert the trade of this March and the sale of the ship must exhibit his commission "and the plat which he hath," and in the meantime a "stay of the ship" is commanded.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 12. It is possible that Bastiaen Jansz. Krol sailed on this ship.—See Jan. 25.

Wassenaer, writing under the month of April of the settlement or in New Netherland, in part VII of the Historisch Verhael (Jameson, Narr. N. Neth., 74-76), the preface to this part being dated Dec. 1, 1624, says: "The West India Company being chartered to navigate these rivers, did not neglect so to do, but equipped in the spring a vessel of 150 lasts, called the New Nederlands, whereof Cornelis Jacobsz. May of Hoorn was skipper, with a company of 30 families, males, women, and children, a colony to beginning of March [see March 28 and 39], and directing their course by the Canary Islands, steered towards the Wild Coast [Guiana], and gained the west wind which luckily [took] them in the beginning of May into the river called, first Rio de Montagnes, now the River Mauritius [Hudson], lying in 40 degrees. He found a Frenchman lying in the mouth of the river, who would erect the arms of the King of France there; but the Hollanders would not permit it, forbidding it by commission from the Lords States General and the Directors of the West India Company; and in order not to be frustrated therein, with the assistace of those of the yardage, which are at present on the ship they had, they caused a yacht of two guns to be manned, and convoyed the Frenchman out of the river, who would do the same thing in the South River, but he was prevented by the settlers there.

"This being done, the ship sailed up to the Maykans, 44 leagues, and they built and completed a fort named 'Orange' with four bastions, on an island, by them called Castle Island." (Wassenaer continues: "They also placed a fort which they named 'Wilhelmina' on Princes Island, heretofore called Murderer's Island; it is open in front, and has a curtain in the rear and is garrisoned by sixteen men for the defence of this river below.") Jameson adds, in a footnote, after Murderser's Island, "Site not certain." It is, perhaps, possible that this is a reference to Nutten or Governors Island. It is also possible that it may refer to the fort at the mouth of the Delaware, which, on the Buchelius Chart (C. PL. 38, Vol. II), bears this name. "They forthwith put the spade in the ground and began to plant, and before the yacht Massekerd sailed, the grain was nearly as high as a man so that they are bravely advanced. On leaving there [Hudson River], the course lies for the west wind, and having got it, to the Bermudas and so to the Channel and in a short time to the Fotherland."

Wassenaer errs, in this account, respecting the settlement of Fort Orange (Albany), which was not on an island. He and De Laet evidently confused Fort Orange with the earlier Fort Nassau, which was on an island. His statement that the "Nieu Nederland" sailed "in the spring" has been interpreted by Brodhead, Jameson, and other historians to mean the spring of 1623, but more recent investigations prove that the first spring of 1624, when "the Mackeral" is known to have been in New Netherland. Mrs. De Forest, in A Walloon Family in America (I: 32-35), discusses the date of arrival of the "New New Netherland" as follows:

"We have said that the date of the arrival of the New Netherland has for years been a subject of dispute among historians, some claiming that it was 1623 and some that it was 1624. Our journal would clearly settle the date even were there no other positive evidence, for from it we learn that the Mackeral left the Pigeon off the Island of Madeira, in September, 1623, her objective point being New Netherland. The meeting with the ship New Netherland could not, therefore, have taken place until May, 1624, because it would have been manifestly impossible for the little Mackeral to have been in the harbour of Manhattan Island in May, 1623, and to have returned to Holland in time to have sailed from there on the sixteenth of June [July, 1623], according to van Wassenaer's contemporary testimony."

Mrs. De Forest suggests the possibility, even the probability, that among the Walloons sailing on the "New Netherland" were some of the pères de familles who went to South America on the "Pigeon" with Jesse De Forest in 1623, for they left the Waspaco on Jan. 1, 1624, which would have given them two months to reach Holland and reembark for New Netherland.

The following "Articles" are taken from a contemporary copy made from the "Resolution Book" of the "Assembly of the S. Nineteen," Algemeen Rijksarchief, The Hague, "W. I. C. Oude Compagnie, No. 1, 1623, published in twenties, the "XXVIIIth of March, 1624. Ante Meridiem."

"And whereas the colonists [colonen] who go to New Netherland for the Chamber of Amsterdam will be enrolled [gemonster—literally, mustered] to-morrow, the articles for the colonists [colonen] drawn up by Messrs. Albert Coenraets, Samuel Godyn and Johannes de Laet (the committee herefore appointed for the purpose by the Chamber of Amsterdam) are read and approved, and accordingly adopted, as follows:

"Provisional conditions on which the respective colonists are engaged and sent out to New Netherland in the service of the West India Company, to sail up their abode on the River of Prince Maurice, or at such other places as shall be assigned to them by the Commandeur and his Counsell."

"1. The colonists, besides observing the respective articles and instructions, shall during the voyage and their residence and in changing their location be bound to obey and carry out without contradiction the orders of the Company already given to them or yet to be given, as well as all regulations as to matters of police and justice received from the aforesaid Company.

"2. They shall within their territory hold no other services than those of the true Reformed Religion, in the manner in which they are at present conducted here in this country, and thus by their Christian life and conduct try to lead the Indians and other blind persons to the knowledge of God and his Word, without however persecuting any one on account of his faith, but leaving to every one freedom of conscience. But if among them or within their jurisdiction any one should wantonly revile or blaspheme the
3. The Commander and other officers already set or yet to be set over them shall in accordance with the authority given them by the Company have power to enter into alliances and treaties with foreign princes and potentates located there in the country and near their colonies, on such conditions as may be judged most advantageous to the service of the Company, without seeking by such treaties to further any one's private interests. Which conditions the colonists collectively and each of them individually shall be held to fulfil, although by so doing they should be involved in war with some of their other neighbors, and even have to take the field.

4. They shall take up their permanent residence at the place to be assigned to them by the Commander and his Council and use all diligence to fortify the same by common effort and also jointly to erect the necessary public buildings and to establish the trade there as far as possible. And if any one should be found remiss therein, or the Company or the colony through his negligence should suffer damage, he shall be fined or punished according to the circumstances of the case.

5. In all public proceedings of a political or military character as well as those of justice, the Nether-Dutch tongue only shall be employed by them, on pain, if this be not done, of having all public despatches and proceedings that are written in other languages considered as null and void and of no effect.

6. The colonists shall without paying any recognition thereto for the sake of the Company the duties, and as the places and lands which shall be assigned to them for cultivation by the Commander and his Council, according to the size of their families and the instructions given on that subject.

7. Furthermore, whereas in the beginning all necessaries will have to be sent over from this country, the Company will make arrangements that the colonists for the space of two years shall be provided with the necessary supplies and clothes from the Company's storehouses and that at a reasonable price, which the colonists receiving such supplies, if they can not pay the amount at once, shall be bound to pay and satisfy from time to time in installments. And they shall be debited on the Company's books for the goods received by them and must deliver signed receipts thereafter to the receivers of the Company. The Commander and the commissary are ordered to take good care that there be no neglect herein; also, that they give out no supplies on credit, except to the needy, without letting any squanderers, or those who neglect their property, enjoy the benefit hereof, but letting them bear the discomfort which they bring upon themselves.

8. The colonists shall be free to carry on and prosecute the inland trade without objection on the part of any one, on the express condition that they shall sell their purchased or collected wares to no one save the Company's agents, and in this provisionally, until other arrangements are found necessary.

9. They shall also be free to engage in all sorts of sport of fowling, hunting and fishing, and this provisionally as above.

10. All minerals, newly found or yet to be discovered mines of gold, silver, copper, or any other metals, as well as of precious stones, such as diamonds, rubies and the like, together with the pearl fisheries, shall be worked and exploited exclusively by the servants of the Company.

11. But if any one of the colonists, during his sojourn [there], should happen to discover anything of the kind aforementioned, he and his heirs shall receive one tenth of the net proceeds of the aforesaid mines and pearl fisheries, and this for the period of the first six consecutive years, to be reckoned from the day that the Company took over or exploited the same.

12. Whereas deliberating that all costs of exploitation and of the necessary tools pertaining thereto shall first be subtracted and deducted. And as the first discoverer shall be regarded he who first reported the same to the Commander [there], or here to the aforesaid Company. And in case, any such discovery being made, it is deliberately kept silent, the discoverer shall according to circumstances be arbitrarily punished, yes, even receive corporal punishment.

13. They shall also have no right to engage in, or teach others, any handicraft involving commerce, especially wearing, except by special consent from the Company or its agents, under penalty, if any one should act to the contrary, of being excluded as a perjurer and of being arbitrarily punished according to the circumstances of the case.

14. They shall not permit any strangers (whereby are meant all persons who are outside of the Company or its authority) to come to their shores to do any trading, nor enter into any understanding with them whereby they in any way may learn the profits, needs, or situation of the place, on pain of being punished therefor according to the circumstances of the case.

15. Furthermore, the colonists shall under solemn oath promise to keep secret all transactions and affairs of the Company which may in any way come to their knowledge likewise, they shall not be at liberty to divulge the same to any one without the Company's consent; nor shall they at any time hereafter be free to associate themselves with any but those of the Company to come within the limits of the charter, wherever it may be.

16. They shall also be bound to remain with their families for the space of six consecutive years at their destined place, unless a change therein be made by order of the Company; but at the expiration of their term, or sooner, in case of removal by order of the directors or their honours' agents, they may trade or sell their houses, cultivated fields and live stock to some one else of the remaining colonists. [The text as printed by Jessurun has niemand ander, no one else, which is evidently a mistake.]

17. They shall at first plant and seed their lands and fields with such crops and fruits as the Commander and his Council shall order them to plant, without making any changes therein on account of any personal views, on pain of subjecting the offender to any personal punishment according to circumstances.

18. They shall especially see to it that they faithfully fulfil their promises to the Indians and their other neighbors, whether in connection with trade or other matters, and that without occasion they give them no offense, whether in regard to their persons, their wives, or their property, on pain of being severely punished thereafter.

19. The directors shall at all times have the right to transport thither as many people as in their good judgment they shall think fit.

20. Finally, they shall take the oath of fidelity and allegiance to the High and Mighty Lords the States General and to the Company, and in all things comport themselves as good and loyal subjects are bound to do.
CHRONOLOGY: THE PERIOD OF DISCOVERY: 1624-1626

(wheras lately few or no ships, except those of the Company, have departed from this country to the Coast of Guinea, to New Netherland, or to the West-Indies) the Company's Charter and the consequences thereof shall be maintained with vigor, without any excuse or exception. And the commissaries, skippers and crews in the Company's service shall have instructions to attack ships, which have sailed from the United Provinces, against the provisions of the Charter. And after having mastered any such ship, they shall send it home with its crew to a province or a city, different from the one from which it had formerly sailed. — Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, items 54-55. Referred to from the original document by Dr. Wieder, in 1912, and translated from another copy of the original by A. J. F. van Laer, in 1920.

Does this, perhaps, refer to the "Mackere" expedition? — See Nov. 3, 1642, and July 16, 1625.

A resolution, passed on this day in the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., reads: "And it is . . . further resolved (as it is understood that there are but few if any more ships from this country [Holland], outside of those of the Company, on the coasts of Guinea, New Netherland, or the West-Indies), that henceforth the Charter [of the West India Co.] with the amplification thereof, as hereinafter made . . . shall be hereinafter observed and enforced. — Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, item 56, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer. See July 6 and 13, 1626.

The agents of the West India Company at Hoorn write to the "Assembly of the XIX": "Whereas we repaired this morning to the meeting of the Directors of this city, and, after sundry conversations, explained to their Honors that we understood that a certain ship was fitting out here with design to go to the Virginias under French commission, intending to take along good carpenters and shipwrights to construct a store, houses and ships there in order to be employed elsewhere within the limits of the charter. This then appearing to be a matter of great consequence, we both deemed it proper to wait on the Magistrates of Hoorn, as we did forthwith, and after explanatory introduction, requested them, as Judges and administrators of the laws, to maintain us against this contravention of the charter, and its amplification. Whereupon they answered, that we might certainly rely on them, and they resolved, with our previous advice, to summon the Skipper, he was busy taking out his ship, and about to sail forthwith, to demand of him an inventory thereof, and of all that is, or will be received on board. The Skipper appearing in our absence, refused to comply, saying he wishes to go to France, wanting to know who acted thus, threatening to complain, as if the King of France's crown were attacked. The Burgomasters finding him thus obstinate, said that he was then arrested until he should give satisfaction herein, against which we had to contend, and demand reparation. We thought proper that this should be done in the name and on behalf of the Assembly of the XIX., though we are not expressly authorized hereunto. We request your advice whether the arrest shall continue, and what further shall be done in the premises. You may be assured that a certain person of credit is here, who was lately offered a share of that ship, well knowing that some owners reside here and at Amsterdam: therefore, the matter ought, in our opinion be prosecuted, for the sake of example, and thereby to discourage others, who are disposed to go the same road. — Y. Cal. Doc., I. 31. For the action of the "Assembly of the XIX," see March 29.

In a session of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co., "Mr. Schotte delivers . . . a letter brought by his servant from Hoorn from the delegates of the XIX., which being read, it is learned that they, having understood that a certain ship was being equipped there at Hoorn, the home of Skipper David Pieterse de Vrie to the Virginias in the name of those of Rochelle, were nevertheless informed that the owners thereof reside in this country, for which reason they had decided to attack the said ship and to inform the Burgomasters, whereupon the skipper, in turn, had attached himself to all of which they are to be informed and advice as to what they are to do further to the matter. Meanwhile, Mr. Godvy can state that the skipper, or supercargo, is called Mr. Gysen, he having come only last fall from the Virginias on account of Lambert van Twenhuyzen and Co. And that the copper utensils (Copemuck) were made on the Niewendyck, in the Coper Meulen, which said copper articles are serviceable nowhere but in the Virginias; and Mr. Menten [declares] that the skipper is called David Pietersz. [de Vrie]." It is further resolved, "that a letter shall be sent by the Assembly to the States General, enclosing a copy of the letter of the delegates of the XIX., with the request that their High Mightinesses would be pleased promptly to provide therein in such a more amplified manner, if force may not be violated, the States of Holland to be requested that the rudder and sail may be taken from that ship until the facts in the matter can be ascertained." — Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 3, items 58-59, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer. See April 6, 1626.

This date (according to the Muller catalogue) is found on a contemporary MS. copy of the "provisional order" issued by the West India Company to colonists about to sail for New Netherland on the "Nieu Verdriet" (New Sorrow), which left Holland for New Netherland on or about March 30 (Van Rappard Document A). This order, translated from another contemporary copy, dated March 28, 1624, is given in full under that date. For a discussion of the facts leading to the conclusion that the name of this vessel has been wrongly transcribed, and should be "Nieu Nederland," see 166. These manuscripts are contemporary copies of six separate documents, the originals of which have disappeared. The copies, according to Dr. Wieder, are in Zeeland Dutch, and were, he believes, made for the Zeeland chamber of the West India Company.

These manuscripts, which, as already noted, belonged to the Colliers Van Rappard, and were sold at auction on June 16, 1910, by Frederik Muller & Cie. of Amsterdam, are known as "The Van Rappard Documents." They were bought by John Anderson, Jr., Mr. Stokes being the under-bidder.

Mr. Anderson had them translated by J. A. J. de Villiers, chief of the Map Room of the British Museum. They were afterward bound by Rivière, with the accompanying translations, and are now in the collection of Mr. Henry E. Huntington, see Cartography II: 106 et seq. These documents are believed to contain information which would throw much new light upon the settlement or settlements on the Hudson River during the years 1624 and 1625 (and possibly earlier). As Mr. Huntington contemplates their separate publication, he has, quite naturally, been unwilling to have them extracted, or even examined, for inclusion or comment in the present work. Except for Document A, of which a duplicate copy, as already noted under March 28, was found by Dr. Wieder in 1912, and which is printed under that date (March 28) in full, the only information available regarding these manuscripts is that contained in the catalogue of the sale; that obtained by Mr. Stiles, of Henry N. Stevens, Son & Stiles, who represented Mr. Stokes at the auction, and was permitted to make a cursory examination of the manuscripts; and, finally, that supplied to the writer by Mr. de Villiers' translation in the author's presence, and commented briefly upon a few of the salient facts therein contained. Although it has been impossible to verify these facts or statements; nevertheless, in view of the absence of more definite information, it has seemed desirable to print them here for what they are worth. The catalogue descriptions are as follows, the material following in brackets being added from the information supplied by Mr. Stiles and Mr. Anderson, and referred to above: "Item 1795. Documents concerning New Netherland, 1624-1626."

(Translated from the Dutch) "Copy of the [Provisional Order] in accordance with which the respective Colonists are accepted and despatched in the service of the West India Company to New Netherland, in order to take up their abode on the river of the Prince Maurice, or at such other places as the Commander and his council shall indicate to them." (Cataloguer's note, translated from the French).—29 March 1624, Manuscript of the period, 9 pages. 10d. Copy of the regulations with which the colonists sent by the West India Company to New Netherland on the vessel "Nieu Verdriet" were required to comply." For a full translation of this document, see March 28. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from Decies: Their Celestial Empire: the chart of the province over the land by Jan Lambertus van Meurs. May; they contained full directions in connection with the first attempt at colonization in the vicinity of New Amsterdam.]"

[Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from MR. DE VILLiERs' translation: This document contains further instructions for the guidance of the Colonists. It was sent from Amsterdam to Van Hulst after he was on the spot, by a messenger, whose name is given. The instructions are given in greater detail than in Document C.]

E. (Translated from the Dutch) "(Copy of the) Particular instructions for the engineer and surveyor Cruy Frederick, as also for the Commis and Councilors to regulate themselves accordingly, concerning the fortifications and the building of houses when the Council shall have discovered a suitable place to settle down. Instructions for the instructions with the Council's note, translated from the French.) — 22 April 1625. Manuscript of the period. 19 pages. Fol. Copy of the instructions given for the construction of a Dutch fortress and for a town in New Netherland, emanating from the West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam, 22 April 1625. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from MR. DE VILLiERs' translation: "This document was sent over by Cruy Frederick. It includes references to a plan (now lost) for laying out the settlement and for the building of the fort; the specifications are given in detail — nothing left to chance. Every street in the city is laid out in feet and inches. Even where the people shall live is indicated." [Information supplied by Mr. Stiles: "Instructions for the building of a Fort and Town in New Netherland. The Fort was to be four sided, one side of which was to face the water, but no definite position is assigned. The three sides facing land were to be surrounded by a rampart and moat, dimensions of which are given. A bridge over the moat was to give access to the fort on one side, but which side it is difficult to determine, as the references are lettered to correspond to an accompanying plan which is not attached to this copy of the specification. All the male population were to be imprisoned into the work of the fort so that it should be built as soon as possible. Indians were also to be employed as well as sailors of the Fleet, special rates of pay being given to the latter. Ten houses were to be built outside under the wall for the use of the architects and foremen of the works. The dimensions and style of these houses are mentioned. A school, hospital, prison and church were to be built, and dimensions are given. The fort was to be named Amsterdam."

A broad street was to be laid down one side of the fort, and smaller streets, which were to be numbered, were to lead out of the broad street at regular intervals, the intervening ground to be used for growing supplies. The number of houses to be built on each street and their size are stated."]"

F. (Cataloguer's note, translated from the French.) — Copy of the report by the Engineer, R., to the Directors of the West India Company, written in the fortress of Amsterdam on the island Manhattan, 10 September 1626. Manuscript of the period. 40 pages. Fol. Copy of a detailed report in which is found a full description of the life and of the difficulties which the first Dutch colonists encountered in New Netherland. [Information supplied by Mr. Anderson from MR. DE VILLiERs' translation: "This document is a copy of the first known letter written from New Amsterdam, containing the Michi lungs letters and the De Raat's letter of 1626. It gives a most intimate relation of the doings and happenings in New Amsterdam, including the acts of the Council and other important matters."]

The cataloguer adds: "We have been unable to find any trace of the originals. These documents seem to us to be of the greatest importance for the history of New Netherland."

Mr. Anderson, commenting on the documents as a whole, says: "In these papers are many instructions to be executed to buy the Island of Manhattan from the Indians. They determine definitely the fact that the Dutch did not settle first on Manhattan Island, but on Governor's Island. They also bring out the fact that Minuit was here two years before his supposed arrival in May 1624."

In this connection we have an extract from de Raat's letter, which reads as follows: "On our arrival [by ship from Holland] we did not find Minuit here [New Amsterdam], he having gone to Fort Orange [Albany] to inquire into a calumny caused by Krieeckenbeek's outrageous conduct, and whereas nothing of this transpired in the council, I will refer your Honors to his [Minuit's] letter. On Minuit's arrival here [i.e., his original arrival in New Netherland] he was placed in command by the council because of the ill behaviour of Verhulst [then Commander of New Netherland]. On the evening of Friday the 31st [July] the Director [Minuit] arrived here [i.e., on his return from Fort Orange in New Amster dam], and on the 7th of August I handed him your honors letters in the council." [Information supplied by Mr. Stiles: "This document, although of great historical importance, does not give any special topographical details, but relates to the state of the colony as it existed on the arrival of Isaac de Redjatte [Raft]. He states that very little progress had been made with the building of the Fort, that the governing of the Colonists was in a bad state, and that great insubordination existed, which he had been obliged to repress with a firm hand. The fines and punishments inflicted are stated. He also states that a fort was to be built at Orange for the protection of the animals."

He also states that: "This document, although of great historical importance, does not give any special topographical details, but relates to the state of the colony as it existed on the arrival of Isaac de Redjatte [Raft]. He states that very little progress had been made with the building of the Fort, that the governing of the Colonists was in a bad state, and that great insubordination existed, which he had been obliged to repress with a firm hand. The fines and punishments inflicted are stated. He also states that a fort was to be built at Orange for the protection of the animals."

The interest and importance of the Van Rappard documents is apparent from these extracts and comments, and it is much to be hoped that they will soon be published, or at least made accessible to students.

The states-general sends the following communication to the Apr. Assembly of the XIX in answer to its letter of March 30 (p.v.):

"Honorable: By the annexed petition, presented to us by Captain David Frison [de Vries], you will be able to learn what he has communicated and requested on the part of his owners residing at Rochelle.

"And whereas we so regard the matter that the Incorporated West India Company ought not to enter, in the beginning, into a dispute with the subjects of neighboring Kings and Princes, but much rather observe good correspondence and friendship towards them.

"We have, therefore, deemed it proper and necessary to send Your Honors the aforesaid Petition, and reflecting on the consequences which may arise to the injury of the Company by disputes with the French, beg you to endeavor that this matter be arranged by agreement; either that your Honors receive the ship and cargo by purchase from the petitioner, or, should this not be effected, cause him to enter into bonds, that the ship will not go within the limits of your Charter; or that some other amicable arrangement may be discovered whereby both sides may be satisfied."

A. T. Col. Dir., I: 32; De Vries, who claimed that his intentions were to trade for furs in Canada, was, after several postponements, finally compelled to abandon his voyage.—De Vries, Korte Historial (etc.), translated by Henry C. Murphy, p. 11 et seq.

Catelina Trico, "aged four score years or thereabout," made a deposition on Feb. 14, 1624/5 (g. v.), before Gov. Dongan, stating that "she came to this Province either in the years one thousand six hundred and twenty three or twenty four to the best of her re­membrance, and that fourer Women came along with her in the same Ship, in which ship the Governor & Arien Jorjien [Tiepont] Came also over, which fourer Women were married at Sea and that they and their husbands stayed about three Weeks at this place [Manhattan Island] and then they with eight seamen more went in a vessell by ordf of the Dutch Governour to Delavare River and there settled..."—Dee, Hist. N. T., III: 31.

In a later deposition, made Oct. 17, 1688, before William Morris, justice of the peace at the Waal-boug, "Catelina Trico, aged about 83 years born in Paris," declared that "in ye year 1623 she came into this Country with a Ship called ye Unity, whereof was Commander Arien Jorjien [Tiepont] belonging to ye West India Company being ye first Ship ye came here for ye West India Company; as soon as they came to Manhattan now called N: York they sent Two families & six men to harford River & Two families & 8 men to Delaware River and 8 men they left at N: York to take Possession and ye Rest of ye Passengers went with ye Ship up as far as Albany which they then called forth Orange. When as ye Ship came as far as Sopwork which is a Way to Albany; they lighten ye Ship with some boats ye left there by ye Dutch that had been there ye year before a trading with ye Indians upon there own aquence & gone back again to Holland & so brought ye vessel up; there were about 18 families aboard who settled themselves at Albany & made a small fort; and as soon as they had built themselves some butts of Bark: 6 Mahikanders or River Indians, ye Maquasr: Oneyced: Omsondages Cayoguas & Sinnekes, with ye Mahawawa or Ottawawes Indians came & made Covenants of friendship with ye 6 Arien Jorjien there Commandr Bringing him great provisins which which they might come & have a Constant free Trade with them which was concluded upon & ye 6 nations came dayly with great multitudes of Bever or Traded with them by ye Christians, there 4 Commandr Arien Jorjien staid with them all winter and sent his some home with ye ship; ye 6 Deponent lived in Albany three all the ye Indian were all as quiet as Lambs & came & Traded with all ye freedom Imaginable, in ye year 1626 ye Deponent came from Albany & settled at N: York where she lived afterwards for many years and then came to Long Island where she now lives..."—Ibid., III: 32.

Although this deposition has often been question, there seems no adequate reason for asserting the falsity of the date of arrival—1621 or 1624—or that of the other statements there­in contained. For further facts tending to corroborate Catelina Trico's statement, see Nov., 3, 1623; 1624 (Nov.), and 1626.

If Mr. Anderson's quotation from Van Rappard Document as corrected, and Cornelis Jacobse May was the skipper who sailed on the "New Verdiriet," under "provisional orders" dated the 30th of March, 1624 (g. v.), a different explanation of the facts connected with the first settlement than that outlined above must be sought, for we know from Wasseenaer and other sources that May was the skipper of the ship "New Netherlands," which, Van Rappard says, sailed from Holland for the Hudson River early in March, 1624, and it is clear that he cannot have taken part in both expeditions. The seemingly contradictory facts could easily be reconciled by assuming that the use of the name "Nieu Verdiriet" (which name is not as we know appears only in an editorial note in the Muller catalogue) was used erroneously for that of "Nieu Nederland." If this explanation be accepted, the two expeditions of March 1624 are reduced to one,—the well known expedition of that year under May in the "Nieu Nederland." This theory would also explain the statement made by "Hester Townsent the Chamberlain of the Hollandaer of the Hollandse Deutsch Companie" that "they would not permit the Frenchman lying in the mouth of the Hudson River to erect there the arms of the King of France," forbidding it by commission from the Lords States General and the Directors of the West India Company.

This explanation would, it is true, require us to assume that the settlers referred to in this same pas­sage as being already at the South River had been dispatched thither by May between the date of his arrival and that of the French ship; or else that this settlement was already in existence,—which seems possible, as we are told in the "Repre­sentation of New Netherland," 1620 (see Jameson, Nat. N. Neth, n. 319) that "the discovery of the South River was made at the same time with that of the North River, and by the same ship and persons, who entered the South Bay before they came to the North Bay.

The principal statements contained in Catelina Trico's deposition are in harmony with this theory, except that she refers to Arien Jorjien (Tiepont) as governor; but as, if we eliminate the "Nieu Verdiriet," the "New Nederland" expedition must have been the direct result of Tiepont's petition to the W. I. Co. of Nov. 3, 1623, it is practically certain that he accompanied this expedition in some official capacity (see N. Y. Col. Docs., 1: 149, and Nov. 3, 1623). It is even possible that there was more than one ship on this expedition, and that Tiepont, in command of one party, went up the river, while May went to the Delaware, and afterwards returned to New Amsterdam, and assumed general direction of affairs in New Netherland. For a more complete discussion of this theory, see 1626.

In a report to the Amsterdam Chamber concerning the Swedish settlements on the Delaware, Stuyvesant enclosed an account of an examination of three sачemms, held at Fort Nassau on the South River on July 9, 1621. During this examination, one of the Indians, Mattahsoon by name, declared that: there have been the earlier Amsterdam and discoverers of the river, who also, first of all, settled thereon among them, and that they have always maintained good friendship and commerce with the Dutch; adding thereunto an account of presents which were exchanged between them and the Dutch Nation. As a further evidence and declaration, he also added, that one Cornelis with one eye, or a film on his eye, was the first who coming here, made his dwelling on the river..."—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1: 597. This reference to Cornelisz Jacobsz. May, who is known to have had but one good eye.

The first appearance, in print, of the full name "New Nether­land" is given under February in Wasseenaer's Historisch Verhaal, part VI, folio 144 (verso), translated in Jamesson's Nat. N. Neth., 68. The preface to this section is dated June 1, 1624.

In this entry, Wasseenaer describes the transatlantic voyage to New Netherland as follows: "This country now called New Netherland is usually reached in seven or eight weeks from here [Holland]. The course lies towards the Canary Islands; thence to the savage islands, thence to the mainland of Virginia, steering across, in fourteen days, leaving the Bahamas on the left, and the Bermudas on the right hand, between which the winds are variable with which the land is made."—Ibid., 68.

At a meeting of the "Assembly of XIX," a programme outlining the proposed action for the next meeting of the West India Com­pany is sent out to all of the component chambers.—*MS. Minutes of the "Assembly of the Lords Nineteen" of the West India Com­pany, recently (1912) noted by Dr. Wieder in the Rijksarchief, at The Hague.

Section 12 of this programme provides that, "when the deputies of the chamber of Zealand shall have been duly informed of the situation of New Netherland, they shall report the same to the said Chamber and wait for further instructions. They shall be furnished also with instructions how to vote in regard to the equipment of the ships [goen] to New Netherland, and in regard to the exten­sion of the colonies already established there, as well as concerning the religious and political constitution of the said colony."

In the resolutions of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co. appears the following interesting record: "Upon the twelfth point [see Sept. 10], reading as follows: "They shall also continue instructed to regard in respect to the equipment of New Netherland [and the strengthening of the settlements already commenced for Colonen daer reede bestaat te leggen— the significance of the plural form is apparent], as well as the proper organization of the said colony, both in ecclesiastical and political matters, it is decided that the Chamber of Amsterdam, without asking advice from the other chambers, may at its discretion still send a ship to New Netherland and transport therein besides the necessary merchandise some cows, sheep, hogs and other necessary animals also some Dutch families, among whom, if they can be found, shall be a capable political director and a godly and learned minister, and furthermore whatever may be necessary. The instructions, merchandise and orders whereof shall be communicated to the respective members present, or to the next meeting of the "XIX."—Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 67, transcribed from the original document by Dr. Wieden, in 1912, and lately translated from the original by A. J. F. van Laer.

Oct. 23. The elevation of the "Assembly of the XIX" of the Dutch West India Co. of this date, reads as follows: "Whereas Isaac Plancius offers for sale to the Company all the maps and journals of his deceased father, Domine Petro Plancio, including those relating to the West Indies as well as the remaining limits of the charter, the same is thought advisable and the Chamber of Amsterdam is hereby authorized to purchase them for the benefit of the Company."—Records of old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 129, trans. by A. J. F. van Laer.

Nov. 18. "Doctor Claes van Wassenaer and Gregorius vanden Broeck having requested the Assembly that the Provincial and hisSochus and servant, on account of his sickness and discomfiture might be transferred from the place where he is at present to some other more suitable place, under such reasonable guaranty as the directors shall see fit. "Answer is given that they are to notify the provincial to make sufficient provision for his ransom and give security therefor and that the directors will then release him from prison. Meanwhile, Messrs Kiesel and vander Markt are appointed to inspect other places, both here in the house [meaning apparently the West India Company building] and the Charisse convent, and make report thereof."

The above Provincial, was Dominicus Cochello, Pater Provincialis of Brazil, who with other Portuguese officials was taken prisoner at the taking of Bahia and sent to Amsterdam, where he was confined in the convent of St. Clara. Wassenaer had a number of interviews with him and given an interesting account of him in Historisch Verhael, pt. VIII, fol. 3-5, under date of October 1624. Mr. Van Laer infers from this entry that Wassenaer stood in some official relation, as physician, to the West India Company, and that he had, therefore, excellent opportunities of collecting all the news relating to that company. If this is true, we may perhaps infer that he would be apt to mention all the ships that were sent out in the early stages of the settlement of New Netherlands and that, as he makes an elaborate statement about the ship "New Netherlands" and about the expedition sent out by Hull, but says nothing of a ship named of "New Verlizien," our ship existed. Mr. Van Laer also agrees with the statement in the Chronology that this is a most unlikely name for a ship, and feels confident that the entry in the Muller catalogue is wrong.

25 For a discussion of facts and theories regarding the earliest settlement of Manhattan Island, derived from De Kasire's letter to Blommaert written in the autumn of 1627 or 1628, see 1625 (November).

Nov. 16. "Inasmuch as the multitude of people, not only natives but foreigners, are seeking a livelihood in the United Provinces is very great, so that where one stiver is to be earned there are ten hands ready to seize it, especially in Holland which is the reservoir of divers Kingdoms and countries. Many are obliged, on this account, to go in search of other lands and residences where they can obtain equally and at less expense. Accordingly, in the year 1624, as in previous years, divers families went from Holland to Virginia in the West Indies, a great portion of them being English, called Brownists, whom King James will not permit nor suffer to live in his land, because they hold and maintain divers points of religion unapproved by the present church of England."

A ship arrived in August from that part of Virginia called New Netherlands, which had conveyed some families from Holland. (Either this date is wrong or the "Mackeral" and the "Nieu Nederland" are here confused, the former, which we know from Wassenaer (Jamesco, N. Neth., 76) sailed from New Netherlands when the [summer] grain was nearly as high as a man, and that was just to return to Amsterdam.) Records of the old Dutch W. I. Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 67, transcribed from the original document by Dr. Wieden, in 1912, and lately translated from the original by A. J. F. van Laer.

This vessel brings many and various letters from private individuals, each written to friends and acquaintances, whereof the following is the general tenor—

"We were much gratified on arriving in this country; Here we found beautiful rivers, bubbling fountains flowing down into the valleys; basins of running waters in the flatlands, agreeable fruits in the woods, such as strawberries, pigeon berries, walnuts, and also... wild grapes. The woods abound with acorns for feeding hogs, and with venison. There is considerable fish in the rivers; the tillage land is barren and unfruitful, and without fear of the naked natives of the country. Had we cows, hogs, and other cattle fit for food (which we daily expect in the first ships) we would not wish to return to Holland, for whatever we desire in the paradise of Holland, is here to be found. If you will come here with your family, you will surely have reason to be satisfied."

"This and similar letters have roused and stimulated many to resolve to emigrate thither with their families, in the hope of being able to earn a handsome livelihood, strongly fancying that they will live there in luxury and ease, whilst here on the contrary, they must earn their bread by the sweat of their brow."—Extract in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (4to ed.), IV, 83, translated from Willem Bau- dant's Memoren... der gedenkwaarde geschiedenissen van Nederland... (Arnhem, 1624-5). These letters were probably written from Fort Orange (Albany). Cf. De Laet, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 56, for description of the country.

As soon as our people arrived there [New Netherlands], they proceeded to clear and plant. Before this vessel [the "Nieu Nederland"] had left, the winter harvest was far advanced..."

As regards the prosperity of New Netherlands, we learn by the arrival of the ship ["Nieu Nederland"] whereon Jan May of Hoom [evidently, Cornelis Jacobsz. May is meant] was skipper, that everything there was in good condition. The colony began to advance bravely and to live in friendship with the natives. The fur or other trade remains in the West India Company, others being forbidden to trade there. Rich beavers, otters, marins, and foxes are rich ship existed. Mr. Van Laer also agrees with the statement in the Chronology that this is a most unlikely name for a ship, and feels confident that the entry in the Muller catalogue is wrong.

20 Dec. 1624 (preface dated May 20, 1625), records the sale on this day of the "New Netherlands" cargo. As this sale was ordered at a meeting of the Assembly of the XIX, held before Oct. 25, the "New Netherlands" must have arrived before that date.

25 De Laet, in his Liber Verhael, Appendix, 26, 29, records that two ships brought peltries from New Netherlands to Holland in this year. These ships must have been the "Mackeral," which sailed for home in the early summer of this year, and the "Nieu Nederland," which returned in November (see above)."
be well foddered and attended to. Each animal has its own Apr. stall, with a floor of three feet of sand, arranged as comfortably as any stall here. Each animal has its respective servant who attends to it and knows what he is to get if he delivers it there alive. All suitable forage is there, such as oats, hay and straw, and what else may have also been brought along with them. They will take with them all furniture proper for the dairy; all sorts of seed, ploughs and agricultural implements are also present, so that nothing is wanting. What is most remarkable is, that nobody in the two ships can discover where the water is stored for these cattle. In order to use the same plan another time if needful, I shall here add it: - the above-mentioned manager caused a deck to be constructed in the ship. Beneath this we stowed in each ship three hundred tons of fresh water, which was pumped up and thus distributed among the cattle. On this deck lay the ballast and thereupon stood the horses and bulls, and thus there was nothing wanting.

He added the third ship as an extra, so that, should the voyage, which is ordinarily made in six weeks, continue longer, nothing should be wanting and he should be able to fulfill his contract. So, in the eyes of the far-seeing, this colony, which lies right beside the Spanish passage from the West Indies, has great prospects.

It goes a fast sailing ship, and I think it is of some benefit at the risk of the Directors. In these aforesaid vessels also go six completely equipped families, with some single persons, so that forty-five new comers or inhabitants are taken out, to remain there. The natives of New Netherland are found to be very well disposed so long as no injury is done them.

“Poisonous plants have been found there [New Netherland], which those who cultivate the land should look out for. Hendrick Christiaens carried thither, by order of his employers, bucks and goats, also rabbits, but they were found to be poisoned by the herbs. The Directors intended to send thither this spring voyage [1653] a quantity of hogs which will be of great service to the colony; and cows, with young calves, as shall follow.” - Wasseenaer, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 59-71.

It is clear that this expedition is the same as that referred to below, in Van Rappard Documents C and D (p. 1, under March 16), and which sailed bearing instructions for Provincial Governor Verhulst, dated April 22, 1655, and that it must therefore have left Holland shortly after that date. Wasseenaer records that, in this year, Willem Verhulst (or van der Huijst) became the second director of New Netherland (probably receiving his commission in April, just before the fleet sailed for New Netherland) - Historisch Verhael, in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 84. A contemporary manuscript copy of his "sailing instructions," undated, and "further instructions," dated April 22, 1655, in conformity with which latter he was to conduct the government under the West India Company, is still in existence, belonging to Mr. Henry Everts, who loaned it to the writer in 1840. It is now made public. For such information as is available concerning these documents, which are known, respectively, as Van Rappard Documents C and D, see March 30, 1654.

It is not clear whether these two sets of instructions were given to Verhulst before he sailed. Mr. Anderson, reading from de Vlinders’ translation, states that the second set was sent over to him by messenger, "after he was on the spot," and the “further instructions” themselves contain the statement that they were “forwarded by Gerrit Fonerz. Under-Commis and Gerrit Is- brantsz, skipper of the yacht Mackerel, after, said Vanderlust & ship Cow, sheep & one common farmers’ & all others, as soon as the ships Mackerel, Horse, Cow & Sheep have & now go there, etc.” Although all known contemporary sources of information have been searched, no record has been found of any other ship sailing to New Netherland in April, or during a period of several months immediately preceding or following that month, except the ships of Huit’s expedition, which Wasseenaer records as sailing in April, the same author’s earlier reference to the “good care” taken “in the spring” to provide everything for the colony in Virginia, the ships referred to under Jan. and Feb., 1652 (p. 3), and Wasseenaer’s further statement that the “Mackerel” left the Texel on April 25th for New Netherland, and was captured in the West Indies, in advance of the instructions. If the “Mackerel” left Holland in company with the other ships of Huit’s expedition, the fact was not recorded by Wasseenaer, or anywhere else, so far as we have been able to ascertain, except in the document now under consideration. However, as the “Mackerel” was a fast-sailing yacht, she may well have left slightly in advance of

of the rest of the fleet, to act as a sort of scout, and perhaps with the intention that she should rejoin the other ships belonging to the expedition after the dangers of the channel were safely passed. Furthermore, as she was a small vessel, of only 60 tons burden, it seems very unlikely that Verhult (and the council) would have sailed on her rather than in one of the larger ships. If he had, it is probable that Wassenaar would have recorded the fact, whereas, in describing her capture, he specifically mentions only one person on board, a member of the crew "who had assisted in the capture of Bahia."

The only reasonably satisfactory explanation seems to be that the "further instructions" were forwarded on this boat because she was faster than the larger ships, and that Verhult sailed earlier, but probably in the same month, on another boat, of which no record has yet been found. It is, however, conceivable that there were two ships named the "Mackercul," and that the one captured on the 27th was not the one belonging to Hult's expedition. It is of course also possible that Wassenar is mistaken in some of his statements or dates, but, even if this were so, the fact would remain that we are told in Document D that "further instructions" were forwarded by messenger to Verhult, who must therefore have already started.

Although Wassenar says that this expedition was fitted out by Pieter Rappard, we know from Van Rappard Document D that it had an official character, and was dispatched by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., also that it comprised the ships "Paet" (Horse), "Koe" (Cow), and "Schaep" (Sheep), accompanied, as we have already noted, by a fast-sailing yacht, named the "Amsterdam," which, accompanied by Wassenar, apparently was captured on April 27, and taken to Dunkirk.

Under Nov., 1626 (preface dated June 14, 1627), Part XII, Wassenar, evidently referring to Verhult's expedition (although he cites part XI, whereas this expedition is recorded in part IX), says: "In our preceding discourse [part XI] mention was made of New Netherland and its colony planted by the West India Company, situated in Virginia on the river called by the French Montaigne, and by us Mauritius, and that some families were sent thither out of Holland, now increased to two hundred souls; and afterwards some ships, one with horses, the other with cows, and the third with hay; two months afterwards a Fly-boat was equipped carrying sheep, hogs, wolves, ploughs and all other implements of husbandry."

Willem Verhult, who, as we have seen, came over as "commis" or commissary, with, or just before, this first expedition, and as "provincial director" of the colony of New Netherland, was, accompanied or followed by Gerrit Forners, as deputy or "Onder-Commis," and Cryn Fredericks, as engineer and surveyor. The cattle were, "on their arrival, first landed on Nut Island, three miles up the river, where they remained a day or two. There being no grass there, they were shipped in sledges on board the boats to the Manhattes, right opposite the said island. Being put out to pasture here, they throw well, but afterwards full twenty in all died. The opinion is, that they had eaten something bad from an uncultivated soil. But they went in the middle of September [1625] to meadow grass, as good and as long as could be desired." (Under Nov., recording the same event, Wassenar says: "The cattle carried thither were removed upwards to a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture."—Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, II, part IX, p. 38, and translation in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 79-83; Van Rappard Documents C, D, and E, Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 178.)

This date is found also on Van Rappard Document E, which consists of "particular instructions" given by the West India Co. to the engineer and surveyor Cryn Fredericks, who sailed with Verhult, for the construction of a town and fortress in New Netherland. The village of Thulow was settled among the text of the same document, but, as it belongs to Mr. Henry E. Huntington, has not been made public, the character of its contents is known, and will be found described under March 30, 1624.

23 Maurice, Prince of Orange, after many years of active participation and leadership in the affairs of Holland, dies. He was succeeded as regent of the Netherlands by his son, Frederick Henry, Prince of Orange.—Broodhead, op. cit., I: 160.

27 Concerning the capture of the "Mackercul," which Wassenar records on this date, he observes (translated): "Prudence is the foster mother of all wisdom; imprudence causes misfortunes; such has experienced a small ship, sailing for New Netherland loaded with some necessities, measuring about 30 lasts (60 tons), when on the 27th of the month she met the Texel, and on the 27th was already in the enemy's possession, who flying the Orange colours, discovering it in a fog, called to the skipper just to come on board; he being a single man unhesitatingly attacked and was immediately captured. Thus the little vessel was also seized and conveyed to Dunkirk, to the great joy of its owners. She had a crew of 15 among them one who had assisted in the capture of Bahia, doubtless being a source of danger, because similar people are not by them considered as traders but as man of war's men."

—Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, Vol. II, part IX, p. 39. This record from Wassenar, and Broeders' remark, is perhaps the same (Hist. State of N. Y., I: 150), it is certainly perplexing, as it seems clear from Van Rappard Document D that the "Mackercul" started out in company with the ships "Horse," "Cow," and "Sheep."

Under this month (the preface is dated Dec. 1, 1626), Wassenar records: "At the same time arrived a small ship from New Netherland, mostly with fur. As far as good order is concerned, all goes well there. The vessels with the cattle had not yet got there; the crops which our colonists had planted, looked well, but there was no certain information thereof. The next will bring their owners good news." (should be translated full information).—Jameson, A. N. Neth., 88.

It is alleged by Innes (New Amsterdam and Its People, 4, 172, 271) that a common pasture was laid out in this summer on Manhattan Island, which "was commenced at once" after the arrival of the colonists, and that this was the beginning of the later well-known pasture which lay at the upper end of the present Broad St., reaching to the Strand (present Pearl St.). No evidence has been found to substantiate this claim; the colonists who arrived in the summer of 1625 put their cattle on Nut (Governors) Island for a "day or two," but "there being no means of pasturing them there, they were shipped in sleighs and boats to the Manhattes." Here they throw well for a time, but afterwards about twenty died, probably from eating poisonous vegetation. The cattle, were then "removed upwards" in the middle of September to "a convenient place abounding with grass and pasture." Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 82, 83. The statement above quoted is ambiguous, and "upwards" may refer to pasturage further north on Manhattan Island, or to some point higher up the river, perhaps in the neighbourhood of Fort Orange (Albany). These colonists and animals probably arrived either late in June or early in July, 1625, and the surviving animals were removed together with the rest of the settlers from September to meadow grass, as good and as long as could be desired."—Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 79, 82, 83. The first known reference to the Sheep Pasture is in a deed dated July 1, 1626 (q.v.).

The Treaty of Southampton is signed, by which the Dutch and English are brought into closer alliance against Spain, the common enemy. One clause of the treaty provides that the ports of each signatory shall be open to the war and merchant vessels of the other.—Broodhead, op. cit., I: 161, 182.

A ship came, at the same time, for the aforesaid Company from Nova Germania, laden mostly with peltries; and had had a favorable voyage. (The margin has the reading "Nieu Nederland," and the reference is clearly to New Netherland; although it is interesting to note that Wassenar, pt. VII, fol. 89, under date of June, 1624, speaks of: "the coast of wild Brazil (by Domine Petrus Planclius called Nova Germania, because the Nether Dutch and especially the wealthy Dickh Chass. Burch, have had agents there on nearly all the rivers.)" On fol. 90, Wassenar says: "The entire Wild Coast (by the worthy Petrus Planclusi called Nova Germania, a little too soon) is completely plundered by the Spaniards." The cattle carried thither with the text of the same document, and on abounding with grass and pasture. Only two animals died on the passage. This gave great satisfaction to the freighter, who had managed the transportation so neatly. —Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 82. The expedition here referred to is evidently that which sailed in April, 1625 (see April 25). Van Rappard Document E, Thumerel, 29.

Pieter Mieur is proposed to leave Holland on this day.—Wassenar, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 87. Apparently, however, he did not sail until Jan. 9, 1626—Ibid., 88. See March 30, 1624 (next to last paragraph).
CHAPTER I

B.—THE DUTCH PERIOD

1626—1664

1626

On this year, goods and merchandise valued at 20,315 guilders were brought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in two ships to New Netherland.—De Lact, Kant Verhael, 16, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 7,581 beavers, and 87 otters and other peltries, valued at 45,090 guilders.—Ibid., 29.

Although it has not proved possible to determine with absolute certainty the date of the first settlement on Manhattan Island, nor to display clearly the mystery which has so long surrounded and obscured those remote days, nevertheless, the recent discovery of the Van Rappard Document, the appraiser, together with the re-examination of the known facts in the new light which these documents furnish, enable us to present a picture of Manhattan Island during the two years immediately preceding Minuit's arrival, which, although sketchy and lacking in detail, is, nevertheless, in all probability, true in its essential features.

The extreme limits of what may be termed the period of first settlements are marked, respectively, by the start, shortly after March 30, 1626 (q. v.), of the expedition on the "Nieu Nederland," which now appears, without reasonable doubt, to have been the first definite step in the settlement of New Netherland following the completion of the organization of the West India Company, on June 21, 1624 (unless we accept the theory that the "Mackellar" expedition was an official one, and that some of her passengers remained on Manhattan Island—see below), and the arrival at Manhattan Island, on May 4th, 1626, of Peter Minuit.

Although, as various items in the Chronology indicate, it is not impossible, and in the author's opinion it is even likely, that explorers and traders, possibly in some cases including women, camped upon the island, and erected temporary shelters, or even groups of huts, as early as 1614, perhaps even before that time; and although, further, it seems to him not impossible that this occasional occupation may, in the aggregate, have covered a considerable portion of the period between 1614 and 1626, nevertheless, that nothing approaching a permanent settlement can have existed prior to 1624 is pretty conclusively shown by the succession of events here recorded; and the episode of the expulsion, in the Spring of 1624, by May, aided by the crew of the "Mackellar," of the "Frenchman," who sought to set up the arms of the French king at the mouth of the Hudson constitutes also pretty definite proof that no settlement existed in this neighbourhood in the early summer of 1624, and that the settlers who accompanied May were, therefore, the first permanent colonists to reach the Hudson River.

This expedition was perhaps buttressed by the appearance of Adriaen Joris (Tienpont) before the "Assembly of XIX," on Nov. 3, 1625 (q. v.), and it is altogether likely that he accompanied it, possibly on a second ship, the "Eendracht," or "Unity," as indicated by Calhoun Trico (see May, 1624), although no record of such a ship, sailing to New Netherland in this year, has been found.

There may, indeed, well have been two ships, as a vessel of 130 last seems hardly large enough to have accommodated 30 families, in addition to the officers, crew, and other passengers, on a transatlantic voyage. The fact that the "Nieu Nederland" alone is mentioned by Wassenbergh cannot be accepted as conclusive proof that she was not accompanied by another vessel, or vessels; Wassenbergh is sometimes careless in such respects. It is even conceivable that the expedition included the "Eendracht" and the "Nieu Verdriet," as well as the "Nieu Nederland," which theory would go far toward reconciling all of the seemingly conflicting statements.

The description of the Van Rappard papers in Muller's catalog brought to light for the first time the name "Nieu Verdriet," or "New Sorrow," and the dates March 18th and March 30th on the two contemporary copies of Van Rappard Document A, coupled with Wassenbergh's statement that the "Nieu Nederland" sailed "early in March," led, at first, to the supposition that there were two distinct expeditions in March, 1624. An examination of all available facts, however, has led to the conclusion that there was, in reality, but one expedition, the well-known expedition under Cornelis Jacobsz. May, in the "Nieu Nederland," and that this expedition sailed on, or immediately after, March 30, under "provisional orders," now known to us through Van Rappard Document A, which are given in full, in translated form, under March 28th, 1624 (q.v.).

Furthermore, it seems clear, as we have already noted, that Adriaen Joris (Tienpont) accompanied this expedition in some official capacity, and was possibly in command of a second ship, a supposition which is strengthened by a Report on the Condition of New Netherland, dated Dec. 15, 1624 (q. v.), in which occurs the statement that the colonists arriving in New Netherland were "under the direction of Cornelis Jacobsz. Mey & Adriaen Joris. Tienpont, which Directors, in the year 1624 built Fort Orange on the North River, and Fort Nassau on the South River, and after that, in 1626, Fort Amsterdam on the Manhattes."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 149.

This explanation, which would be in harmony with most of the statements made by Catalina Trico, is based upon a belief that the name "Nieu Verdriet," which name, so far as we know, occurs only in the catalogue description of the Van Rappard Documents, is, in reality, a mis-reading for "Nieu Nederland." If the two names were written side by side, in the old Dutch script, the great similarity in form becomes at once apparent. Furthermore, "New Sorrow" seems an altogether unlikely name to choose for a ship (cf. p. 60). Unfortunately, it has not been possible to verify this theory by reference to the original document, but, in view of all the known facts, it seems to furnish the most reasonable solution of what otherwise appear to be hopelessly irreconcilable statements.

This theory is further strengthened by the fact that May and his Walloons, when they expelled the "Frenchman" lying in the mouth of the Hudson, forbade the erection of the arms of the French king "by commission" from the Lords State General & the Directors of the West India Company; in all likelihood a reference to May's "provisional orders" (Van Rappard Document A). Moreover, if we accept this theory in general, there seems no reason for doubting Catalina Trico's definite statement that "as soon as they came to Manatans [the earlier deposition says about three weeks after they arrived] ... they sent Two families & 6 men to harford River & Two families & 8 men to Delaware River & 8 men they left at Nieu: Torke to take Possession, & 7th Rest of y'^ Passenger or about 18 families went 9th y'^ Ship up as fair as Albany, which they then Called Fort Orange."

It is true that, in order to reconcile Catalina Trico's statement that 8 men and 2 families were sent to the Delaware River about three weeks after the arrival of the expedition at Manhattan Island with Wassenbergh's statement that the "Frenchman" did not attempt to enter the Delaware River, "because of the settlers already there," it is necessary to assume that these latter had been dispatched thither by May between the date of his arrival and that of the arrival of the "Frenchman," or else that this settlement was already in existence, which is unlikely; unless we assume that, coming from the direction of the Gold Coast, and therefore

1623-1626—approaching the Hudson from the south, May put ashore a first installation of settlers in passing the Delaware, in which case those mentioned by Catalina Trico would have been a second installment. In this connection, see May?, 1624.

If, as Catalina Trico states, Tiempont was in command at Fort Orange, is it not likely that he acted as May's deputy, and that May himself, while retaining the supreme command in New Netherland, went shortly after his arrival there, and indeed he is referred to, in a Report Concerning the Swedish settlement on the Delaware, made by Stuyvesant, on Jan. 18, 1656 (p. 1), to the Amsterdam chamber, as "the first who coming here [the Delaware] made his dwelling on the river," and that he afterward joined the 8 men with whom Catalina Trico tells us, had been left on Manhattan Island "to take Possession," probably making it, or possibly Noten Island, his head-quarters, as governor, until the arrival of Ver Hulst in 1624.

Wassenaer's statement, under Nov., 1626, the "Cornelie May of Hoorn was the first Director there in the year 1624," and that "Willem Van Hulst was the 2nd, in the year 1625," occurs in the midst of a consecutive narrative dealing solely with progress on Manhattan Island, and the word "there" seems from the context clearly to refer to Manhattan, rather than to Fort Orange, or to New Netherland as a whole.

A careful reconsideration of the old and new facts and side-lighted has led the author to the conclusion that Catalina Trico's much maligned depositions furnish, after all, the most plausible and likely solution of this difficult problem, and that she arrived at Manhattan Island on the "Nieu Nederland," or in another vessel, possibly that ship, early in the summer of 1624. It can hardly have been early in May, as Wassenaer states, as the voyage probably consumed at least six weeks.

Her statement that a group of colonists destined for the Delaware River "went in a vessel . . . & there settled," the probability that the group going to the Hartford River also went by water, and the fact that the ship on which Catalina Trico herself sailed went up to Albany, suggest the possibility that three ships, and not one, were engaged in this expedition. Were we to assume that this was the fact, Catalina Trico's seemingly contradictory statements regarding the number of women and families taking part in the expedition would be easily reconciled, for they would then indicate that she and the four women came on one ship, and the families on the others. In general, her statement describes just such a series of facts as we should expect to find in connection with the first official expedition of settlers sent by the West India Company to New Netherland, viz.

The expedition carried carefully prepared instructions regarding the selection of places suitable for settlements on the Hudson River and elsewhere in New Netherland.

Immediately upon its arrival, steps were taken to take control of the three greatest rivers (the Hudson, Fresh, and South Rivers), which together controlled the entire inland trade of New Netherland; and for this purpose permanent settlers, including families, were sent to the last two named points, and settlers, doubtless including also families, took up their abode on Manhattan Island, or in its immediate vicinity. As we know that the expedition included 30 families, whereas Catalina Trico states that only "about 18" went to Albany, and 2 each to the Fresh and South Rivers, the remaining 8 families presumably stayed on Manhattan Island, with the 8 men left there "to take Possession," or perhaps on Noten Island, or some of them may have settled at the Wallabout, or elsewhere in the neighbourhood.

The settlements here referred to on the Fresh and South Rivers were, without doubt, the earliest real settlements made at these points, although, as in the case of Manhattan Island, the records regarding them, most of which date from a considerably later period, are confusing and somewhat contradictory, in the majority of cases giving 1623 as the date of settlement.—See O'Callaghan, Hist. of N. Neth., 100; Oct. 30, 1655. This date we may, however, safely assume is erroneous, as no official Dutch settlement could have been undertaken before the approval by the States-General of the final steps in the organization of the West India Co. in June of this year, and there is, as we have seen, no record of any expedition to New Netherland having been sent out thereafter (except that on the "Mackerel," which, sailing on July 16, 1625, immediately after the final organization of the chartered West India Co., must have had an official standing, and was perhaps a reconnoitring expedition, or possibly an attempt on the part of the Amsterdam chamber to obtain "the first in the field") until that which sailed in the following spring (1624) in the "Nieu Nederland," of which expedition Catalina Trico clearly must have been a member. It will be remembered that she herself states that the ship on which she came belonged "to ye West India Company, being ye first Ship ye came here for ye 5th Company the Delaware Bay," and that she became very familiar on the Hudson River, serving for many years as the principal transport for colonists to Rensselaerswyck. It is even possible that the name of the "Nieu Nederland" may have been changed to "Enedracht." It is significant that, in the first of two broadsides, issued respectively on Sept. 2 and 8, 1645, by Kiliaen van Rensselaer, and reproduced and translated in Van Rensselawer Boover Mss., opp. pp. 682 and 697, it is stated that Kiliaen van Rensselaer's patent was granted to him "as patron of the earliest colony on the North River" (Sept. 6, 1655), and that in 1661 he is referred to as "patron of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, the first and oldest on this [North] river" (p. 697). It is also interesting to note that as, in 1624, there was already the nucleus of a settlement at Fort Orange, and, as no mention of this was made in the "Articles," the West India Co., as promoters of the "Nieu Verdriet" (or "New Netherland") expedition, probably the sum total in mind some other locality for their first and principal settlement when they instructed their colonists "to take up their abode on the River of the Prince Maurice, or at such other places as shall be assigned to them by the Commander and his Council." See March 28, 1624.

Until the Van Rappard manuscripts are made public, or other transcripts of the original documents come to light, or new documents of a similar character are discovered, we can not hope to arrive at a complete solution of this much vexed question; perhaps not even then.

Mr. van Laer, after reading this brief summary of facts and theories in connection with the date of the first settlement of Manhattan Island, suggests the addition of the following facts:

Wassenaer (pt. V, fol. 47), under date of May 1625, says that toward the end of the month there arrived in Zeeland one Pieter Schouten, first a chirurgeon, then a physician, and finally a free trader (Hebeboeter), with a valuable price, worth 80,000 guilders, which he captured in the Gulf of Mexico. He is said to be well acquainted with that coast, so that he would be very serviceable to the West India Company.

Under date of July 1625, Wassenaer (pt. V, fol. 108) mentions Willem Schouten, skipper of Isaac le Maire, whose ship took fire in the river Diuse. Under date of Sept., 1625, (pt. VII, fol. 154), he mentions a brave Zeelander, named Schout, who entered the service of the West India Co., and who sailed with Admiral Wilcken to the Gulf of Mexico. This is apparently the Commander Schouten mentioned under date of Sept. 24, 1625 (p. 92).

In pt. IX, fol. 60, under date of May, 1625, Wassenaer mentions the funeral of Amsterdam at Willem Schouts [De Last, Kort Verhael, p. 10, gives his name as Pieter Schouten], who in his lifetime had done much for the W. I. Co., as he was well acquainted with the Gulf of Mexico and had the knowledge of such a person. Evidently Pieter and Willem were one and the same person.

The "Minutes of the XIX", under date of Sept. 21, 1624, contain the following entry (translated): "Letter from the chamber of Zeeland expressing surprise that they have not been informed of the arrival of the prize taken by the 'Endracht,' nor of the arrival of the ship 'de Hoope," although private persons, who are not directors of the Company, knew about it."—Records of the old West India Co. at The Hague, No. 1 (lettered No. 447), part 4, item 60. The Minutes of Sept. 24 contain the following: "There was read a copy of a letter written by Commander Schouten on the 26th of July last from the ship 'de Hoope,' on the coast of Florida, to the chamber of Zeeland, wherein he gives an account of his voyage and of various attacks which failed, as may be seen more in detail in the said copy."—Ibid., item 70.

THE TRADING CHARTER OF OCT. 11, 1614. SEE P. 41.
The above mentioned "Eendracht" is referred to by Wassenier, Historisch Verhaal, 1665, p. 180, and in the "Vraag-wijze" of De Hoop, as "having belonged to the account of the Zeelanders, it may not be amiss to relate what was done by Admiral Schout. As he had brought in a good heerty, he was sent thither by the West India Company with three ships to infest the Sinum Mexicanum, called the Bay of Honduras, and there to seek his fortune. He himself [meaning his own ship] was admiral, named "de Hoop," provided with one hundred and fifty men; the Vice-Admiral, Garbrant from Middelburg, with fifty men and eight small pieces, was the "Eendracht," and the yacht, with thirty men and some pieces, was called "de Trouwe." See above (in this summary) on May 16, 1625.

In June 1628, the late winter state of the N. Vice-Admiral took a fine price, valued by the Spanish at 16 tons of gold (1,600,000 guilders), and returned to Zeeland. The admiral abandoned his large ship, "de Hoop," which he sent home, and took command of the yacht. Cf. De Laet, Kort Verhael, in his Jaarelyksch Verhael, p. 380, Wassenier, p. 37, vol. 42, vol., under date of May 1623, mentions a price taken by "de Eendracht," of Endhuyzen, belonging to the fleet under Admiral l'Hermitte. This fleet left England, May 23, 1623, and about two weeks later sighted some Turkish ships near Port A. The price taken by the "Eendracht" was taken shortly after that time and sent to Amsterdam, whence it arrived apparently in June 1623. This may have been the same ship as the vice-admiral, mentioned above. It was evidently a man-of-war, and presumably not the ship of which Catelina Trico speaks in her deposition. It is possible that the ship "New Netherland" was conveyed by "de Eendracht," and that Catelina Trico got the names mixed.

The above items present an interesting example of Wassenier's method of dating. The return of "de Hoop" and "de Eendracht," which occurred in Sept., is entered under Dec., whereas he enters under Sept., 1624, the sailing of Schouten on the ship "de Hoop." Peter Minuit arrives at Manhattan Island, to succeed Willem Verheulst as director-general of New of Netherland. He had sailed from Holland on Jan. 9 (g. u.) in the ship "Zeemeeuw," or "Meeuwen" (Sea-Mew), of which Adrian Joris (Tienen) was skipper. — Wassenier, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 83, 87, 88.

Soon after Minuit had established his colony on Manhattan Island, he ordered the outlying families and most of the men at Fort Orange (Albany), as well as all who were at Fort Nassau (Gloaster, N. J.) to concentrate at Manhattan. We know from Wassenier that by November the "fort at the South River" had already been vacated (Wassenier, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 86), and that the 8 families at Fort Orange "were to leave there this year,"... ten or twelve seamen in the Company's service alone remaining.—Ibid., 85. The "Arms of Amsterdam," which had sailed from New Netherland on Sept. 23, and arrived at Amsterdam on Nov. 4, carried news of this place. As Minuit was not the population of all New Netherland had "now increased to two hundred souls." The purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians had been effected (see Nov. 5). Director-General Minuit, and Isaack de Raskiere, chief commercial agent of the West India Co. in New Netherland, lived together, whilst the others lived in "thirty ordinary houses on the east [i.e.] side of the river"—i.e., near the strand on the east side of the island, and temporary hovels built "of the bark of trees." Jan Lempou was schout, an officer who exercised a composite authority, like that of an English sheriff and a public prosecutor. Concerning the administration of law and order and the occupations of the people, Wassenier made the following records: "The council there administers justice in criminal matters as far as imposing fines, but not as far as corporal punishment. Should it happen that any one deserves that, he must be sent to Holland with his sentence. Everyone there who fills no public office is busy about his own affairs. Men work there as in Holland; one trades, upwards, southwards and northwards; another builds houses, the third farms. Each farmer has his farmstead on the land purchased by the Company, which also owns the cows; but the milk remains to the profit of the farmer; he sells it to those of the people who receive their wages for their labor there. It is called the Slijp-Steegh, or 'moudly lane,' and upon a site now [1905-6] occupied by the buildings Nos. 32 and 34 South William street. His arguments are not, however, supported by the evidence. There is an hiatus of decades between the erection of the horse-mill in 1626 and the land records that he cites as cumula-
The larger ship undoubtedly was the Wagen van Amsterdam, Sept. which was already in the service.—Wassenaar, in Jameson, ‘N. N.,’ 93, 97, 102.

The Brownsea, chief commercial agent of the West India Co. and secretary of New Netherland, came over to the province in the ship, the ‘Arms of Amsterdam,’ arriving at Manhattan Island on July 27, 1626. On her return voyage to Holland, the ‘Arms of Amsterdam’ reached Amsterdam on Nov. 4. She carried a detailed report of conditions, the description of the ‘settlement of the Island of Manhattan,’ on Sept. 23 (the day that the ship left the colony), and addressed to the directors of the West India Co., in which he gave a full description of the life and difficulties of the Dutch colonists. The original manuscript is lost; but its contents are preserved through one of the Van Rappard papers, known as Document F, a contemporary MS. copy of the original document (40pp., folio). Cf. Jameson’s ‘N. N.,’ 89, 97-115.

This report is the earliest known extant text of a letter written from Manhattan Island. Although the contemporary copy is now in America, having been bought, with the other Van Rappard Documents by Mr. Henry E. Huntington, in 1911, it has not yet been made public. For such information as is available concerning this very important document which deals with the state of the settlement on Manhattan Island as it existed at the time of De Rastiere’s arrival, see March 30, 1626, which gives facts and events under this month, his preface being dated June 14, 1627.

The colony is now established on the Manhatdes, where a fort has been staked out by Master Kryn Fredericks, an engineer. It is planned to be of large dimensions. The ship which has returned home this month [‘The Arms of Amsterdam’], on Nov. 4 (see above) brings samples of all sorts of produce growing there, the cargo being 7,546 beaver skins, 675 otter skins, 48 mink, 56 wild cat, and various other sorts; many pieces of oak timber and hickory.

“The counting-house there is kept in a stone building, thatched with reed; the other houses are of the bark of trees. Each has his own house. The Director and Knapman [chief commercial agent of the company, acting also as secretary of the province] live together; there are thirty ordinary houses on the east side of the river, which runs nearly north and south. The Honorable Pieter Minuit is Director there at present; Jan Lempou schaut Bastiaen Jansz. Crol and Jan Huych, comforters of the sick, who whilst awaiting a clergyman, remained there. The community there, on Sundays, texts of Scripture and the commentaries, . . .”

Cornelis May of Hoorn was the first Director there, in the year 1645 Willem Van Hulst [Verhulst] was the second, in the year 1625. He returns now. The houses of the Hollander are of a stand outside the fort. Fort Orange.—Letter of Michielfus, Aug. 11, 1628, in Jameson’s ‘N. N.,’ 124, 135.

Krol, apparently, did not long remain a ‘kraanknezeeker’ after the arrival of Huygen in 1626. When the ‘Arms of Amsterdam’ sailed from Manhattan, on Sept. 23, there went home in her Pieter Baetens, who had been ‘kommies’ and commander at Fort Orange, and Krol was appointed to the vacant post. He seems to have gone to Fort Orange at once, as it is known he “remained there since the year 1626, when the others came down” to augment Minuit’s Manhattan colony.—Wassenaar, in Jameson’s ‘N. N.,’ 83, 88. It is not likely, therefore, that Krol was either a “kraanknezeeker” or a resident at Manhattan when the horse-nell was ready for religious services. If not, then Huygen was the only active occupant of that office in New Netherland, and the first to conduct a religious service in the first regularly-established place of worship on Manhattan Island.—Cf. Eckhof, op. cit., 43-55.

Krol was succeeded by his lieu, Jersch, in 1629, Krol commuting. The next year he went back to Holland. Upon his return to New Netherland, in 1630, he was again “kommies” at Fort Orange, and representative of the patroon, Killian van Rensselaer, until 1632. Early in that year, Minuit was recalled to answer for his acts as director-general, and Krol succeeded him in office, from about February or March, for a period of thirteen months, or until the arrival of his successor, Wouter van Twiller, in March, 1633.—Eckhof, 36, 37, 40, 41 Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 202. For earlier history of the Reformed Dutch Church and Krol in New Netherland, see 1624.

Willeijn Snelle refuses to purge himself of the offense, maintaining his right by order of his masters, to whom the chamber should address themselves.—Resolution Book of the chamber of Zeeland, 1626-1674 (Records of the old W. I. Co. at the Hague, No. 20). See also March 29, 1624.

An inventory of this date giving the effects of the West India Co. of the “Two ships outfitted for the trade and settlement of the Colony in New Netherland,” and of a “ship of about 150 lastes” and a “yacht,” which are “well equipped, destined for the trade and colonization of New Netherland, estimated” to be valued “at least, at 120,000 florins.”—J. N. Y. Col. Docs., II, 35.

For reproduction of the original letter, the National Archives at the Hague, see Pl. 3, Vol. IV. 6. P. van Court (see Nov. 3:1623) writes from Middelburg to the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam in regard to a “claim of Jan Price [Price, a surgeon who was injured from surgery] with such men that are now questioned in 1625, during the diplomatic negotiations between the states-general and England.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., 1: 48, 56. For reproduction of the original letter, in the National Archives at the Hague, see Pl. 3, Vol. IV. 26. On this day, at a meeting at Middleburg in Zeeland, a petition, sent by F. Courten to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., for payment of Jan Price, a surgeon (barber), is considered, which states that “the skipper Arjaen Joris [Thiencpont] has new arrived from New Netherland.” This refers to the return of the ship “Arms of Amsterdam” (Wapen van Amsterdam), of which Adriaen Joris Thiencpont was skipper, who went to New Netherland on Dec. 19, 1625, with the ship “Sea-New” and conveyed Peter Minuit to the province of which he had been named as director. The directors of the West India Company in Zeeland sold the 14th of this month the following goods. . . . The aforesaid gentlemen having the management at Amsterdam also caused to be sold publicly various kinds of peltries, such as Beaver skins, minks, Otter skins and lynx, sent to them from New Netherland in large quantities of logs, of oak and oak trees, which grow there in great abundance and which with the permission of the natives there are cut down and shipped, being very useful here for many necessary purposes.”—Wassenaer, pt. XII, fol. 58-59 vo.

1626. Peter Jansen Schagen, deputy in the states-general from the States of Holland and West Friesland, writes from Amsterdam to the states-general, in session at The Hague:

“High Mighty Sirs:

Here arrived yesterday the ship The Arms of Amsterdam which sailed from New Netherland out of the Mauritius River on September 23; they report that our people there are of good courage, and live peaceably. Their women, also, have borne children there; they have bought the island Manhattes from the wild men for the value of sixty guilders, [It is 11,000 morgens in extent. They sowed all their grain the middle of May, and harvested it the middle of August. Therewith being samples of summer grain, such as wheat, rye, barley, oats, buckwheat, canary seed, small beans, and flax. The cargo of the aforesaid ship is: 7246 beaver skins, 1788 otter skins [1788 half otter skins], 675 otter skins, 48 mink skins, 36 wild-cat [lynx] skins, 53 mink, 34 rat skins. Many logs of oak and nut-wood. Herewith be ye High Mighty Sir, commended to the Almighty’s grace, In Amsterdam, November 5, Ao, 1626.

Your High Might’s Obedient, P. Schagen.”

The earliest known reference to Kryn Fredericksz, the engineer and surveyor. By his “particular instructions,” of April 22, 1625 (Van Rappard Doc. E—see March 30, 1624), he was chargéd by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. with the construction of a fortification, as well as houses, in such suitable places as might be discovered by the council in New Netherland. Nothing is known definitely of this engineer’s work in New Netherland during the year 1625; but after the arrival of Minuit, in 1626, we find him associated with the new director at the newly-established colony on Manhattan Island, and the new vessel, “Wasser,” in the words of Wassenaer, “a fort has been staked out by Master Kryn Fredericksz, an engineer. It is planned to be of large dimensions.”—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhaal, in Jameson’s N. N. Neth., 85, 86. This reference to the fort is followed in the original by the words: “en compelt het schip dese maent geometricamente, van met maat en van met vooghe ghezeg navara.” This coming directly after the statement about Kryn Fredericksz, can hardly be interpreted otherwise than: “and [he] returns by the ship arrived this month with samples of all sorts of produce there.” In other words, we have here a statement of the return to Holland of Kryn Freedyksz in November, 1626. This is earlier than has been held in Fact Navigator Beverw. Neth., 217, 218, and elsewhere, but not necessarily contradictory thereof.

The above was the plan entertained prior to Sept. 23, 1626, when the “Arms of Amsterdam” sailed from Manhattan for Holland. At this time it was also deemed expedient to have a fort of “large dimensions” for the accommodation of all of the people within its enclosure, instead of in houses outside, “so as to garrison it and be secure from sudden attack.”—Wassenaer, op. cit., 84. De Laet explains this early fear. He says: “On the east side, upon the main land, dwell the Manhattanites, a bad race of savages, who have always been very obstinate and unfriendly towards our country.”—De Laet, New Welt, in Jameson’s N. N. Neth., 85, 86. The plan of concentration within a large fort was never carried out. Instead, a poor earthwork of a fort was constructed, so poor, indeed, that in less than two years’ time “the ramparts crumbled away like sand,” and Minuit, in 1628, had resolved on the building of a new fort on Manhattan. “On the 4th of June 1628, they set on work and finished it outside entirely with stone.”—Wassenaer, in Jameson, 88.

The small fort, New Amsterdam, was now deemed necessary only as a protection against foreign invasion.—Letter of De Rasisire, in Jameson, 104; letter of Michaelius, Aug. 8, 1628, in Versteeg’s Manhattan in 1628, 60. Its construction proceeded at a small’s pace. Minuit was succeeded by Kro1, and by Wouter van Twiller, in 1633, but the fort was still incomplete. Jacob Stoffelsen, who was overseer of the company’s negroes, deposed, on March 22, 1639, that, during the administration of Van Twiller, he had been steadily employed with the negroes “in building Fort Amsterdam,” which was completed in the year 1635.—N. Y. Col. Docs., 14: 18. See also Aug. 14, 1636.

In connection with the reverses suffered by the company about this time, we learn that the fort had cost 4,172 guilders, to stivers ($5,665).—Hazard, Historical Collections (1792), 1: 397. The subsequent history of the fort is given by Wassenaer (Ja. van N. N. Neth., 87).—Brasil Papers, box 1, Hist. Soc. of Pa.

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1626—fort, New Amsterdam, [in commenced to be built;" (etc.—Jameson, 1655 Nar. N. Neth., 102. In Oct., 1628, according to Wassenarer, there was a population of 270 souls, including men, women and children, who "remained as yet without the fort, in no fear, as the natives lived and played with them." Also, letter-press from the letter of Michielius, Aug. 11, 1628, that they were "busy now in building a fort of good quarry stone," being stone near at hand. In his letter of Aug. 8, 1628, he wrote, "A new fortress is in course of construction, not so much for protection against the savages. . . . as against enemies from abroad."—Ibid., 16.

When Jogues visited Manhattan, in 1643, he found a fort with "four regular bastions," which, with the "curtains," were "but mounds, most of which had crumbled away, so that one entered the fort on all sides. There were no ditches. . . . They were beginning to face the gates and bastions with stone."—Novum Belgum (1649), in ibid., 259.

The desirability of reconstructing Fort Amsterdam of stone, and otherwise repairing it, was again discussed in the report of Dec. 15, 1644, of the "Board of Accounts," which included a suggestion to that effect from the director and commonalty; but the "Board of Accounts," although agreeing with the necessity of immediately repairing the fort, was yet of the opinion that it could be effected in an economical manner by the use of "good clay and firm sods" (N. T. Col. Doc., I: 152—53).

The former idea was actually included in the instructions to the Director and Council of New Netherland, July 7, 1645 (ibid., I: 161).

By 1648, there were "whole streets full of houses close under Fort New Amsterdam" (N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 94—96), as Van Slichtenloors, director of the colony of Reusselaerswyck, states in a protest against Stuyvesant.

Stuyvesant, in his report on the surrender of 1646, said that when he arrived, in 1648, the fort resembled a molehill rather than a fortress, being without gates, and the walls and bastions trodden under foot by men and cattle (Jameson, 259). In this he agrees with Jogues's observations of 1643, and with the "Memorial of the Eight Men to the States General," Nov. 3, 1643 (N. T. Col. Doc., I: 159), as well as with that of the "Eight Men" to the "Assembly of XIX," on Oct. 24, 1643 (ibid., 190).

In the "Remonstrance of New Netherland," July 28, 1649 (printed as the Vertoong, 1650), we are told that the fort "lies like a molehill or a tottering wall." From the first it has been declared that it should be repaired, laid in five angles, and put in royal condition.—Representation of New Netherland, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 331.

In the "Defence of Hendrick van Dyck, Fiscal in New Netherland," dated Sept. 18, 1653, Van Dyck said, with regard to the aforementioned instructions of July 7, 1645, that "In the year 1648, the Director, independent of the Deputy and me requested the Select men to lend a hand to finish the fort, who gave for answer, that they understood nothing about it [etc.]. . . . After which, in the year 1651, the Director . . . had the outside of the fort faced with flat sods by the Company's Negros. But as the soil is sandy and the foundation weak, the sods mostly sagged and fell to pieces, so that the inhabitants' swine damaged the fort. . . . After that, the Director through Willem Beeckman, also one of his Select men, borrowed firewood here and there, with which the fort is now [1652] set off."

From the foregoing memoranda, it would appear that Kryn Fredericx staked out a fort in 1628, after the settlement of the colony under Minuit; that it was planned to be of large dimensions, so as to incorporate the entire colony within its walls; that meanwhile thirty ordinary houses built of the bark of trees, perhaps some of them dugouts, were used as temporary shelters by the inhabitants; that these houses were all outside of the fort, because the fort was not completed; that in October, 1628, a fort having been built, was faced outside entirely with stone, because the former ramparts had crumbled away like sand, and were anew (1628) to be made more substantial; that this 1628 fort was called a small fort, that the population of 270 souls remained as yet without the fort, having no fear of the natives; that, as we know from the letter of Michielius dated Aug. 11, 1628, they were then building a fort of good quarry stone, and faced outside entirely with stone, because the former ramparts had crumbled away like sand, and were now (1628) to be made more substantial; that this 1628 fort was called a small fort, that the population of 270 souls remained as yet without the fort, having no fear of the natives; that, as we know from the letter of Michielius dated Aug. 8, 1628, "a new fortress is in course of construction;" that this fort had not been completed by Aug. 14, 1656 (q.v.), but that by 1653, when Jogues described it as having "four regular bastions," the curtains were mounds, most of which had crumbled away, leaving embraumures to be entered on all sides, and that then (1647) they were beginning to face the gates (gates of the fort) and bastions with stone."—Novum Belgum (1649), in ibid., 259.

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 56,179 guilders—were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in four ships to New Netherland.—De Lact., Kort Verhael, 36, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 7,520 beavers and 170 otters valued at 56,420 guilders.—Ibid., 19.

Isaac de Rasiere, secretary of the Dutch colony at New Mar. Amsterdam, begins an interesting correspondence with the English colony at New Plymouth. Bradford, in his history entitled Of Pimoth Plantation, writes:

"This year also they [the government at New Plymouth] had letters, and messengers from the Dutch-plantation, sent unto them from the Governor ther, written both in Dutch and French. The Dutch had traded in these southern parts, diverse years before they came but they began no plantation hear till . . . or . . . years after their [the New Plymouth colonists'] coming, and here beginning. Their letters were as followeth. It being their manner to be full of complemental titles. [Here follows the letter from Isaac de Rasiere, secretary of the Dutch colony at New Amsterdam, to the governor of the Plymouth plantation, reading as follows:]

"From the Manhatas, in the fort Amsterdam, March 9, Anno, 1626," on De Rasière's letter, Ford says: "There can be no question that Manhattan received from the West India Company a better assortment of Indian goods than New Plymouth enjoyed, and, being a trading settlement, developed a keener commercial sense and a wider experience than did the settlers at New Plymouth.

This experience was marked by some great errors and blunders which impaired their relations and friendship with the Indians; but on the whole the Dutch, lying as they did between two hostile tribes, the Mohawks and the Mohegans, evidenced quite as high a skill in maintaining trade relations as the English and the French. Had Rasière realized the interest of New Plymouth in the development of a trade for furs, made all the more necessary by the agreement with the London Adventurers, he would not have made a proposition that could be interpreted only as one injurious to the interests of New Plymouth. Bradford meets it by asking prices and if other produce would be taken, and suggested the measure for controlling the trade for furs.

"Rasiere was a French [speaking] Protestant, a Walloon, and had become 'upper Koopman' or chief commissary under Director Minuit at New Netherland, acting at the same time as Secretary of the Cort of England, to grant and dispose of the products of the land, which arrived at New Netherland on July 27, 1626 (N. S.)."—Ibid., II, 24. See Sept. 23, 1626; Van Rappard Doc. F. De Rasière is believed to have returned to Holland in the late autumn of 1626 or 1627 (qv.), when his letter to Blommaert was written.

Referring in his "Letter Book" to this same correspondence, Bradford says:

"This year we had letters sent us from the Dutch plantation, whom we had heard much by the natives, but never could hear from them nor meet with them before themselves thus writ to us, and after sought us; their letters were writ in a very fair hand, the one in French, and the other in Dutch, but were one vocablum, so far as the tongue would bear,"—From Bradford's "Letter Book", quoted in Hist. of Plymuth Plantation (Ford ed.), II, 19;

No trace has been found of any similar correspondence, during these early years, between New Netherland and Virginia. Indeed, De Vries, writing from the South River, tells us in his Journal, under date of March 5, 1625, that "There had never been any one there from this quarter, I said, as I had escaped [affraight] the danger in the South River, I would be [alas] the first one of our nation to venture to the English in Virginia, from these parts, in a comtance not more than this nine miles from the fort Amsterdam," which was called "Cape Hindehoop."—'T voyageys of De Vries (trans. by Murphy), 46.
On the 11th, recording his interview with the English governor at Jamestown, he quotes the latter as saying that the Virginia colonists had not visited the South River since Lord Delaware "had encountered foul weather there some years ago, and, finding the place full of shoals, thought it was not navigable. They had, therefore, never looked after it since, but it was their King's land, and not New Mar. Netherland.... He had, indeed, heard that we had a fort in the fortyth degree of latitude, at Hudson's river as they call it, and that a sloop was sent there last September, with seven or eight men, to see whether before it was a river there, who had not returned.

Gov. Bradford of New Plymouth replies to the letter written by Isaac de Rasière at Fort Amsterdam on March 9 (qv.):

To the Honoured, etc. [The Letter Book gives the superscription:
"To the Honourable and Worshipful and Council of New Netherland our very loving and worthy friends and christian neighbours"]

"The Gov[jenour] and Counsell of New-Plim[outh] wiseth your Honors and worship[s] all happiness, and prosperit[y] in this life, and eternal rest and glory with Christ Jesus our Lord in the world to come. We have received your letters, etc. wherein appeareth your good will and friendship towards us; but is expressed with over high titles, more then belongs to us, or is meete for us to receive.
But for your good will, and congratulations of our prosperit[y] in these smale beginnings of our poore colonie, we are much bound unto you, and with many thanks doe acknowledge the same; taking it both for a great honour done unto us, and for a certaine testimony of your love and good neighbourhhood.

"Now these are further to give your Worships to understand and, that it is to us no saine joye to hear, that his majestie hath not only been pleased to advance in his Plantation Planta[n]tion thereby with a great gaine of friends, and other contracts, formerly made and ratified by his predecessors of famous memorie, but hath him selfe (strongeth the same with a new-unijion the better to resist the pride of that commone enemy the Spaniard, from whose cruelty the Lord keep us both, and our native countries. Now forasmuch as this is sufficience to unite us to geather in love and good neighborhhood, in all our dealings, yet are many of us further obliged, by the good and curteous entreatye which we have found in your countrie; having lived ther many years, with freedome, and good contente, as also many of our freinds doe to this day; for which we,
and our children after us, shall be thankful to your Nation, and shall never forget the same, but shall hartily desire your good and prosperit[y], as our owne, for ever.

"Likewise for your freindly tender, and offer to accommodate and help us with any commoditie or merchandize you have, or shall come to you, either for beaver, otters, or other wares, it is to us very acceptable, and we doubt not but in short time we may have profitable commerce and trade togetheer. But may you please to understand that we are but one particular colo[ny] or plantation in this land, there being divers others besides, unto whom it hath pleased those Honourable Lords of his Majestie's Council for New England, to grant the like commision, and therefore we shall not use you to come to us (as to us) for their better profit and subsistencie, namely to expulse, or make price of any, either strangers or other English, which shall attempt, either to trade or plant within their limits (without their special licence and commission) which extends to forty degrees: Yet for our parts, we shall not goe about to molest or trouble you in any thing, but continue all good neighbourhhood and correspondence as far as we may; only we desire that you would forbeare to trade with the natives in this bay, and river of Narragannett and Sophames, which is (as it were) at our doors:
The which if you doe, we think also no other English will go about any way to trouble or hinder your, which otherwise are resolued to sollicite his Majestie for redres, if otherwise they cannot help themselves. But for this year we are fully supplied with all necessaries, both for cloathing and other things; but hereafter it is like we shall deal with you, if your rates be reasonable.
And therefore when you please to send to us againe by any of yours, we desire to know how you will take beaver, by the poonde, and otters, by the skine; and how you will deal per cent: for other comodities, and what you can furnishe with us. As like wise what other commodities from us may be acceptable unto you, as tobacco, fish, corne, or other things, and what prises you will give, etc.

"By the Gov[jenour] and Counsell of New-Plim[outh]
"Your Wor[ship]s[p]hipp very good friends and neighbours, etc.

Following this letter, Bradford records: "After this ther [sic] was many passages between them both by letters and other enter-course, and they had some profitable commerce together for divers yeares, till other occasions interrupted the same, as may happen appear afterwards, more at large."—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II: 25-26, 27; Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1st ser., III, 51-67.

"William Bradford.

Plymouth, June 15, Anno 1667.

"P. S. Besides the spoiling of the trade this year, our boat and men had like to have been cut off by the Indians, and the fisher-men were gone, for the wrongs which they did them, in stealing their skins and other abuses offered them, both the last year and this; and besides they still continue to truck pieces, powder, and shot with them, which will be the overthrow of all, if it be not looked unto."—From "Governor Bradford's Letter Book" in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1810), 57.

The Dutch at Manhatten send Jan Jacobsen of Wieringen with a letter to the governor and council of the English colony at New Plymouth, to which Bradford, in his "Letter Book," after quoting the letter of March 19, thus refers, under date of Aug. 7, 1627: "Next follows their reply to this our answer, very friendly, but maintaining their right and liberty to trade in those parts, which we had desired they would forbear; alleging that as we had authority and commission from our king, so they had the like from the States of Holland, which they would defend." The text of this letter is fully printed and commented upon in the above comment by Bradford.—Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1794), 52. It brought forth a threat from the English governor under date of Aug. 14, 1627 (p. v), which was communicated, probably by Minuit, to the "Assembly of the XIX" in Holland, with a request for forty soldiers to maintain the Dutch settlement against English invasion. See Nov. 16, 1627.

Gov. Bradford sends the following letter to the Dutch at Manhatten, in reply to their letter of Aug. 7, sent by Jan Jacobsen, maintaining their right to trade by authority and commission of the states-general.

We have received your letters, dated the 7th of August, and with them a rundlet of sugar, and two Holland cheeses, by John Jacobson of Wiring: for which we give you many thanks, and must remain your debtors till another time, not having any thing to send you for the present that may be acceptable. Further, you shall understand we are not like to be able to send you any thing to hold and continue all friendship and good neighbourhood with you, as far as we may and lies in our power: we desire also that we might have opportunity (according as you write) by word of mouth, to confer together touching our mutual commerce and trading in such things as our countries afford: and would now have sent one, but that one of our boats is abroad, and we have much business at home: But if by the next you would please to depute one (according as you have propounded) to come hither and confer hereabouts, we should be glad, and he should be welcome. If not, we shall send as soon as conveniently we can (after harvest) if we can know when your bark comes this way. We cannot likewise omit (out of our love and good affection toward you and the trust you repose in us) to give you warning of the danger which may befall you, that you may prevent it; for if you light either in the hands of those of Virginia, or the fishing ships which come to New England and adventure they will make price of you, if they can, if they find you trading within those limits; as they surprised a colony of the French, not many years since, which was seated within these bounds: For howsoever you allege in your former letter, that you have navigated and traded in these parts above this twenty and five years, and made straits of great attempts, which heretofore was spoiled by their sea men and interlopers, as ours is this year most notoriously, of whom we have made complaint in our letters to the Council, not doubting but we shall find worshipful furtherance therein. We are now upon concluding with our adventurers, and shall be put upon hard straits of great payments, which we are enforced to make, for sundry years, or else to leave all, which will be to us very difficult; and, to say the truth, if these disorders of fishermen and interlopers be not remedied, so plantations are able to stand, but will decay, whereas otherwise they may subsist and flourish. This in all humbleness I take leave, and rest,

"At your service,

"William Bradford.

"Plymouth, June 15, Anno 1667.

"Your Lordships and Honourable Councils in New England, and to Gorges concerning the Dutch plantation at Manhatten, and, with his letter to the council, forwards De Rasière's letter of March 9 (p. v). In a note in his "Letter Book," he gives his reasons for this: "We well knew likewise, that this dealing and friendship with the Dutch (though it was wholly sought of themselves) yet it would procure us easy from others in the land, and that at one time or other, our enemies would take occasion to raise slanders and frame accusations against us for it; therefore, to prevent their making, as also to shew the sincerity of our dealing and our loyal and dutiful respect to his Majesty and the Honourable Council for New England; we sent their first letter (with their jur[?] answer thereto and their reply to the same) unto the Council as may appear more particularly by our letters following [To the Council of New England].

"The Honourable,

"We held it our bounden duty to inform and acquaint your Lordships and Honour[s] with all such occurrences and matters of note as do here befal, and may any way concern the estate of this country, in either the good or hurt thereof, which, next his Majesty, stands under your honourable governments and protection; or which may, in any sort, be worthy your wise and prudent considera-tions. May it please your Honour[s] and Lordships to understand, that of late we received letters from the Dutch plantation, who using to trade near unto us, had order to stay for an answer from us; they by passages between them both being friendly and congratula-tory, we answered them in like sort; since which time, we received another from them, but had had as yet no opportunity to give answer thereto. Their first letters were two [one in French, the other in Dutch], but both one in effect and verbatis, so far as the proprieties of the tongues will bear; the French, with the copies both of our answer and their reply, we have here enclosed sent unto your Honour[s] view, that according to your honourable directions therein, we may govern ourselves, in our dealings with them. We further understand that for strength of men and fortification, they far exceed us, and all in this land. We cannot likewise for-bearing to complain to your Lordships of the irregular living of many in this land, who, without either patent or licence, order or gov-ernment, live, trade, and travel, not with any intent to plant, but rather to forsake the country, and get what they can, whether by right or wrong, and then be gone; So as much, as have been and are now in those parts living on these plantations, will not be able to bring them to any good purpose, if any remedy be not provided, both with these and the inordinate course of fishermen, who begin to leave fishing, and fall wholly to trading, to the great detriment of both the small beginning here, and the state of England, by the unprofitable consuming of the victuals of the land upon these savages; Whereas plantations might here better raise the same in the land, and so be enabled both to subsist and to return the profit thereof into England for other necessary, which would be beneficial to the commonwealth. Our humble suits therefore to your good Lordships is, that you would take some such order for redress herein, as shall seem best to your honourable wisdome, for the relief of all the plantations in the land. So in all humbleness we commit ourselves to your honourable direc-tions, and you to the protection of the Almighty, resting

"Yours ever at commandment, and royal grants, conferred upon divers of her subjects, and since confirmed and enlarged by his late Majesty, and still continued by possession. Therefore it were best (in our opinion) that your masters should solicit the States, that they might come to some order and agreement with the King's Majesty and State of England hereunto, to accommodate the same; and so shall be resolved you may be assured for ourselves, yet we should be sorry to hear you should sustain harm from any of our nation; but more of these things when we shall speak one with another: In the mean time we commit you and your affairs to the protection of the Highest. —

The yacht "Bruyn-visch" (Dolphin), which had sailed from the Tortugas along the Atlantic coast to New Netherland, anchored at the mouth of the "Noordr-RIever" (Hudson), remaining until the last of September, when she sailed away for Holland, arriving at the Texel Oct. 25.—De Laet, Juriaert Verh. 119.

De Rasière, secretary of the New Netherland Colony, at the request of Gov. Bradford, of New Plymouth, that the Dutch send a deputy to the English colony to confer on trading matters, arrived in English Point, in Manomet or Buzzard's Bay, in the ship "Nassau," whence he sends the following letter to the English governor:

"Monseigneur Monseigneur, William Bradford, Gouverneur in Nieu-Pleemsen. [The letter is "put in English" by Bradford.]
"After the wishing of all good unto you, this serves to let you undertake our (acceptable) letters, dated the 14th of the last month, by John Jacobson of Wirg who besides by word of mouth, hath reported unto us your kind and friendly entertainment of him; For which cause (by the good liking and approbation of the Directors and Council) I am resolved to come myself, in friendship to visit you, that we may by word of mouth friendly communicte of things together; as also to report unto you the good will and favour that the Honourable Lords of the authorized West-Indian company bear towards you. And to show our willingness of your good accommodation, have brought with me some cloth of three sorts and colours, and a chest of white sugar, and also some sweene, &c. not doubting but, if any of them be ser-vaceous unto you, we shall agree well enough about the prices thereof.
Also John Jacobson aforesaid hath told me, that he came to you over land in six hours, but I have not gone so far this three or four years, wherefore I fear my feet will fail me; so I am constrained to extreat you to afford me the easiest means, that I may, with least weariness, come to gratulate with you: So leaving other things to the report of the bearer, shall herewith end; remembering my hearty salutations to yourself and friends, &c. from aboard the bark Nassau, the 4th of October [Sept. 24, 1627] before

So," Bradford notes, "according to his request, we sent our boat for him, who came honourably attended with a noise of trumpeters; he was his upper commis, or chief merchant, and second to the Gouverneur; a man of a fair and genteel behaviour, but soon after fell into disgrace amongst them; by reason of their factions; and thus at length we came to meet and deal together. We at this time bought sundry of their commodities, especially their swan or wampampeach, which was the beginning of a profitable trade with us and the Indians: We further understood, that their masters were willing to have friendship with us and to supply us with sundry commodities, and offered us assistance against the French if need were. The which, though we know it was with an eye to their own profit, yet we had reason both kindly to accept it and make use of: So after this sundry of them came often to us, and many letters passed between us, the which I will pass by, as being about particular dealings, and would not be here very perti-nant; only upon this passage we wrote one to their Lords and masters [on Oct. 11] as followeth:

"Right Honourable and Worthy Lords, &c.

"We understand by your agent, Mr. Isaac Rasieer, who is at this present with us (and hath demeaned himself to your Honours' and the credit) of all honourable and steadfast good intentions towards us, which we humbly acknowledge with all thankfulness, and shall ever be ready in the performance of all offices of good and christian neighbourhood, towards your colony and plantation here, and in all satisfactory correspondence to your Honours, so far as in us lieth, and may stand with our allegiance to the King's most excellent Majesty, our sovereign lord, the King of Great-Britain; acknowledging ourselves tied in a strict obligation unto your country and state, for the good entertainment and free liberty which we had, and our brethren and countrymen yet there have and do enjoy, under our most honourable lords the States here. And so shall be resolved, you may be assured for ourselves, yet we should be sorry to hear you should sustain harm from any of our nation; but more of these things when we shall speak one with another: In the mean time we commit you and your affairs to the protection of the Highest."—From "Governor Bradford's Letter Book," Vol. II, Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1794, reprinted in 1810, 1st ser. III. 53-54.

Possibly in the autumn of 1627, but more likely in the autumn of 1628 (q.v.), Issac de Rasieer, who arrived in New Amsterdam on July 27, 1626 (q.v.), as commercial agent of the West Indies Company, and was secretary of the company to the governor, Samuel Blommaert, one of the directors of the W. I. Co. (Amsterdam chamber), from Holland, probably shortly after his return there from New Netherland, giving a detailed account of the Dutch settlement at New Amsterdam, and also some very interesting facts concerning the Plymouth Plantation. For extracts from this letter, and a discussion of its probable date, see Autumn, 1628.

A committee of four members of the "Assembly of the XIX," submits a report to the states-general, the fourth item of which reads: "The last letters from New Netherland bring word, that three English of New Providence had entered their boats to drive away those there, or to disturb them in their settlement and little colony, notwithstanding our heretofore had tended to them every good correspondence and friendship. They therefore request the aid of forty Soldiers for their defence. We would rather see it secured by
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

At some time prior to 1628, the West India Co. laid out six farms on Manhattan Island.—Jameson, Nat. N. Neth. 104. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 5, 6, 19, 20. For description of Bouwer No. 1, often referred to as "the Noble Company's Great Bouwer," see Manatus Maps, II: 187-88; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946. See also April 22, 1628.

Bouwer No. 2 was south of Bouwer No. 1; that is, on the modern map, bounded west by the Bouwer and Third Ave., north by Stuyvesant St., east by the river, and south by a line which ran irregularly a little north-eastward from 4th St. at the Bouwer to 9th St. at the East River.—See Liber GG: 257 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 389-90; C. Pl. 41, 42 and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

Bouwer No. 3, Bylevelt's Bouwer (Van Remsvelt Bouwer Manuscripts, 225-29, 317-18), was east of the line which, beginning a little south of the present intersection of Eldridge St. with Rivington St., ran northward and north-eastward to about the intersection of 9th St. and Avenue A, thence eastward to the river, which was its eastern boundary; the southern boundary was a line which ran north-eastwardly from the point above referred to, near Eldridge and Rivington Sts., to the river, somewhat south of 5th St.—See Liber GG: 120 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 108-89; C. Pl. 44, 45 and 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The north line of Bouwer No. 4 extended from the Bouwer, just south of Delancey St., north-eastward to the line of Corlear's plantation, which bounded it on the east, from Suffolk St., just north of Stanton St., south-east to Clinton St., a little south of Broome St. The south-easterly line of this bouwer ran thence westwardly to the Bouwer at Canal St.—See Liber GG: 134 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pl. 44, 45 and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

Bouwer No. 5 was on the south, bounding No. 4 from Canal St. and the Bouwer to a point in Stanton St. just north of Broome St.; its east line running thence southerly to the intersection of Division and Attorney Sts., the southern boundary running through the centre of Division St. to Chatham Square.—See Liber GG: 139 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pl. 44, 45 and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The south line of Bouwer No. 6, the southermest of the West India Company's farms, ran from Chatham Square north-eastwardly up Division St. to Ridge St., thence south-eastwardly to Henry St. near Grand, to Cherry. The west boundary ran along Catharine St. to Cherry St., which formed the south line of the farm.—See Liber GG: 195 (Albany); Manatus Maps, II: 188-89; C. Pl. 44, 45 and 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946.

The earliest known picture of New Amsterdam—the Hatgers View, perhaps drawn by Cryn Fredericks and, to a certain extent, from which the above information is taken, must be considered as indeterminate as to either the time or period. For reproduction and description, see Vol. I, Pl. 1-4.

The population of Manhattan Island in this year was 270 'souls, men, women and children.'—Wassenaer in Jameson's "Nat. N. Neth., 89.

There were no shipments of goods and merchandise in this year by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. from Holland to New Netherland.—De Lief, Kort Verhael, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 6921 beavers and 734 otters and other peltries valued at 64,097 guilders—Hid., 20.

In this year, William Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood.

"Thunder and wind storms from October until the 23d of Jan. January were so frequent that there are few who have witnessed the like before. Ships were seen at the Texel that had three times run aground and set there and been shipwrecked. For really, after the wind had blown mostly from the west and north, it veered on the 23d to the north-east, whereas the fleet, 210 strong, took due notice and so put to sea. Among them were 18 West India [vessels], both ships and yachts, of which mention has been made before, as also the Bouwer, the so-called Bouwer on the river, the sloop 'Scherdam' for East India and many for the Strait of Gibraltar, equipped pursuant to the order of the Lords States [General]."—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, pt. XIV, fol. 75 vo. In the margin appears the printed note: "Fleet put to sea on the 24th of this month." This is the ship the "Three Kings" (the Dutch name for Epiphany), which returned in October 1628 from New Netherland. See Jameson, Nat. N. Neth. 104. This ship was originally intended to be dispatched on the 6th of Jan. 1628, but was delayed by storms. Michaelis (Jameson, 132) says that he sailed on the 24th of January, so apparently he came out in this ship. See Addenda.

In this month, the Rev. Jonas Michalius arrived in New Apr. Amsterdam, and from the beginning, established "the form of a church."—Letter of Jonas Michaelis, Aug. 11, 1628, in Jameson's "Nat. N. Neth., 123, 124. This church organization continues to-day, as the Collegiate Church of New York, the oldest communion of the Dutch Reformed Church in America. The "Petition of Right" is reluctantly assented to by King Charles I. In this document, famous for its emphasis on the rights of Englishmen, the house of commons declares against (1) arbitrary punishment, (2) billeting of soldiers and sailors, (3) martial law, (4) forced loans.—Gardner, Const. Docs. of the Puritan Revolution (1647 ed.), 66-79.

The Rev. Jonas Michalius writes from New Amsterdam on this day a letter, the original holograph of which still exists and is the earliest known to be extant written from Manhattan Island. It is addressed to "Sir, D. Joannes Forrest, Secretary to the Hon. Lords of the Exective Council of the Province of 't Newt Friesland." For facsimile reproduction, see Pl. 4, Vol. IV. For the earliest known letter a text written from Manhattan Island (extant only in a contemporary copy), see Sept. 25, 1626. Michalius says, in part: . . . After having waited long and impatiently for a favorable wind in the Texel, on January 24th of the present year we at last set sail with a large fleet of vessels. The voyage lasted rather long and was difficult and perilous, especially about the Bermudas and the rough coasts of this country. Our treatment on board was rather severe and mean through the fault of a very wicked and ungodly cook, and of our skipper Evert Creuger, with whom, prior to this, I had made long voyages, but never before did I know him well. At that time he was under orders of Mr. Lam, and resembled more a child than a man; but now, being in supreme command of the ship, he appeared like a petty king in authority, but as unmanly as a big buffal. . . . We reached here only the 7th of April, much tired out . . . I cannot say whether or not I shall remain here any longer after the three years shall have expired. I expect to be governed in this matter by the fruits of my ministration, and the convenience I shall find in living here with my family. Food here is scanty and poor. Fresh meat is difficult to obtain and the little number of people and the small number of cattle and farmers . . . We need nothing so much as horses and cows, and industrious workers for the building of houses and fortresses, who later could be employed in farming, in order that we may produce sufficient dairy products and crops. . . . In this year, the inhabitants of the Mohicans have abandoned it, having fled from there for fear of the Mohawks, their enemies, who are too strong for them; and also for fear of us, because they had faithlessly schemed to murder our people, and treacherously plotted to surprise the aforesaid fort . . . We lack only sufficient people to occupy that country, as well as the one nearer to us. For a small sum of money we can buy of them a large quantity of land; and besides there are enough old and fresh creatures to take possession of their land . . . by way of confiscation, on account of much treachery and many offenses committed against us. These have never been forgiven them, nor adjusted by any treaty, but have been reserved by us, and it is to be hoped that the present time will make use of them to the advantage of the Company and of this place. The air here is very healthful, yet the changes of heat and cold are usually sudden. The days in summer are somewhat shorter, and in winter are a little longer, than in the Fatherland, as your Honor will be quite well able to deduce from the difference of the climate. The country produces many species of good things which greatly serve to ease life: fish, birds, game, and groves, oysters, trees, fruit, on which the islanders bread for a ceilings of all kinds. But all is as yet uncultivated, and remains in a wild state as long as no better regulations are made to have things arranged by people who understand the work and make it their business, which, apparently, will be gradually done. A new fortress is in course of construction, not so much for protection against the savages... as against enemies from abroad. They are meanwhile beginning to build new houses in place of the hovels and holes in which heretofore they huddled rather than dwelt. They are also cutting wood and erecting another mill for the purpose of exporting to the Fatherland whole cargoes of timber fit for building houses and ships. And for building purposes there is a greater lack of laborers than of materials. For besides many kinds of good timber, there is here clay for the making of bricks and tiles though rather poor, but the quarry stones, not far away, are better for our use, and there are large quantities of oyster shells to burn for lime. The promise of the Lords Masters to grant me 6 or 7 morgens of land to support myself in place of free board, which otherwise would be my perquisite, is worth nothing. For their Honors themselves knew perfectly well that neither horses nor cows nor laborers are to be had here for money. And this is the first item of the billy time will show what else will follow. Thus we are in a hard and sober existence like poor people. Verily it should not be so, though suffering is said to be, as the saying is among the nuns; for they [the Lords] themselves also well know that empty cupboards make mad Beguines. Everything begins to succeed now better than before, for much labor and expense have been in vain. The Masters have been misled in many respects through false reports and advice. Some Directors and Heads, by bad management, have rather kept back than helped the people and the country, and many among the common people would have liked to make a living and even to get rich, in idleness rather than by hard work, saying they had not come to work; that as far as working is concerned they might as well have stayed at home, and that it was all one whether they did much or little, if only in the service of the Company. Such expressions were the burden of the song one heard all day long. And this sort of people were all, in course of time, reshipped home as useless ballast. Here and there many forts, also, founded on uncertain resolutions, had been projected, and were left half finished because it was yet undetermined where, in the end, a permanent settlement would be made. Through the Lord's mercy we have begun to establish here a Christian congregation. ... Further, should your Honor wish to learn any more concerning myself or regarding this country, the bearer of this letter, Jan Janszoon Bruijn, will be able to satisfy you, because he has long ranged these coasts as skipper and trader. ... It is too soon for me to know much about rare or beautiful objects here, because having only recently arrived I have been very busy, and besides I could not very well attend to this, owing to scant accommodations in the household. ... However, I cannot neglect to mention that there are here some small bones which the savage women wear upon their bodies as finery and ornament, and of which they are quite proud. These small bones are taken from beavers. It is said here that in the Fatherland, as a novelty, they are used for spoonhandles, with a little knob joined to one end and a spoon bowl to the other. ... "From the Island of the Manhates in New Netherland, this 8th of August, anno 1628. ... "In all things your Honor's willing servant in Christ, "Jonas Michaelius." ... From Versteeg's 'Manhattan in 1628 as described in the recently discovered autograph letter of Jonas Michaelius written from the settlement on the 8th of August, 64-65.' The original letter is owned by William Harris Arnold, Esq., of Nutley, N. J. It was bought from Frederick Muller, of Amsterdam, and is described in his catalogue for 1902. See, further, Aug. 11. ... The fact is, however, that the colonists on Manhattan Island were "beginning to build new houses in place of the hovels and holes in which heretofore they huddled rather than dwelt." Cornelis van Tienhoven, in 1639, described the early method of building as follows: "Those in New Netherland and especially in this country who live among savages they call Houses, and build them according to their wishes, dig a square pit in the ground, cellar fashion, six or seven feet deep, as long and as broad as they think proper, case the earth inside all round the wall with timber, which they line with the bark of trees or something else to prevent the caving in of the earth, floor this cellar with plank and wainscot it all over, and cover the floor with bark or green sods, so that they can live dry and warm in these houses." — N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 368.

The Rev. Jonas Michælius writes from New Amsterdam, on this day, the second letter written from Manhattan Island now known to be extant in the original (see Pl. 5, Vol. IV). It is addressed to 'The Reverend, Learned and Pious Mr. Adama Smoutius, Faithful Minister of the Holy Gospel of Christ in his Church, dwelling upon the Heerengracht, not far from the West India House at Amsterdam.' In this letter he says, in part: "Our coming here was agreeable to all, and I hope, by the grace of the Lord, that my service will not be unfruitful. The people, for the most part, are rather rough and unrestrained, but I find in almost all of them both love and respect towards me; two things with which hitherto the Lord has everywhere graciously blessed my labors, and which in our calling, as your Reverence well knows and finds, are especially desirable, in order to make our ministry fruitful. "From the beginning we established the form of a church; and as Brother Bastiaen Croel very seldom comes down from Fort Orange, because the directorship of that fort and the trade there is committed to his hands, it has been thought, as the saying is, among the elders for my assistance and for the proper consideration of all such ecclesiastical matters as might occur, intending the coming year, if the Lord permit, to let one of them retire, and to choose another in his place from a double number first lawfully proposed to the congregation. One of those whom we have now chosen is the Honorable Director [Minnit] himself, and the other is the storekeeper of the Company, Jan Huygen, his brother-in-law, persons of very good character, as far as I have been able to learn, having both been formerly in office in the Church, the one as deacon, and the other as elder in the Dutch and French churches, respectively, at Wesel. "At the first administration of the Lord's Supper which was observed, not without great joy and comfort to many, we had fully fifty communicants—Walloons and Dutch; of whom, a portion made their first confession of faith before us, and others exhibited their church certificates. Others had forgotten to bring their certificates with them, not thinking that a church would be formed and established here; and some who brought them, had lost them unfortunately in a general confusion, but they were admitted upon the satisfactory testimony of others to whom they were known, and also upon their daily good deportment, since one cannot observe exactly all the usual formalities in making a beginning under such circumstances. "We administer the Holy Supper of the Lord once in four months, provisionally, until a larger number of people shall otherwise require. The Walloons and French have no service on Sundays, otherwise than the Dutch language; for whereas no Dutch are very few. A portion of the Walloons are going back to the Fatherland, either because their years are expired [as the contract period was almost always four years, this would seem to indicate that they arrived in 1644], or else because some are not very serviceable to the Company. Some of them live far away and could not well come in time of heavy rain and storm, so that they themselves cannot think it advisable to appoint any special service in French for so small a number, and that upon an uncertainty. Nevertheless, the Lord's Supper is administered to them in the French language, and according to the French mode, with a sermon preceding it. "In my opinion it would be well that the Honorable Directors should furnish this place with plainer and more precise instructions to the rulers, that they may distinctly know how to conduct themselves in all possible public difficulties and events; and also that I should some time have here all such Acts Synodaliarum, as have been adopted in the synods of Holland. "As to the natives of this country, I find them entirely savage and wild, strangers to all decency, yaw, uncivil and stupid as garden pales, proficient in all wickedness and godlessness; devilish men, who serve nobody but the Devil, that is, the spirit which in their language they call Mohammed, under which title they comprehend everything that is subtle and crafty and beyond human skill and power. They have so much witchcraft, devastation, sorcery and wicked arts, that they can hardly be held in by any bands or locks. Aug. 11

They are as thievish and treacherous as they are tall; and in cruelty they are altogether inhuman, more than barbarous, far exceeding the Africans.

I have written concerning this matter to several persons elsewhere, not doubting that Brother Crol will have written sufficient to your Reverence, or to the Honorable Directors; as also of the base treachery and the murders which the Mohicans, at the upper-320 part of this river, had planned against Brother Orange, but which failed through the gracious interposition of the Lord, for our good.

How these people can best be led to the true knowledge of God and of the Mediator Christ, is hard to say. I cannot myself wonder enough who it is that has imposed so much upon your Reverence and many others in the Fatherland concerning the docility of these people and their good nature, the propinqua regisius and vestigia legis naturae which are said to be among them; in whom I have as yet been able to discover hardly a single good point, except that they do not speak so jarringly and so scurrilly of the godlike and glorious majesty of their Creator as the Africans dare to do. But it may be because they have no certain knowledge of Him, or scarcely any. If we speak to them [the Indians] of God, it appears to them like a dream; and we are compelled to speak of him, not under the name of Menetto, which they know and serve—for that would be blasphemy—but of one great, yes, nay, God, high, gloriously shining, by which name they have a king—call him who has the command over several hundred among them, and who by our people are called Sackemakers.

"Their language... is entirely peculiar. For these people have difficult aspers and many gutteral letters, which are formed more in the throat than by the mouth, teeth and lips..."

maid servants are not here to be had, at least none whom they can advise me to take; and the Angula slave women are thievish, lazy, and useless trash.

The promise which the Honorable Directors of the Company had made me of some morgens or acres of land for me to sustain myself, instead of a free table which otherwise belonged to me, is void and useless. For their Honors well knew that there are no horses, cows, or laborers to be obtained here for money... butter, milk, etc., cannot be here obtained... The rations, which are given out here, and charged for high enough are all hard stale food, such as men are used to on board ship, and frequently not very good, and even so one cannot obtain as much as he desires. I began to get considerable strength, by the grace of the Lord, but in consequence of this hard fare of beans and gray peas, which are hard enough, barley, stockfish, etc., without much change, I cannot be recuperated. One day I did write without a king—call him who has the knowledge and implements for seeking out all kinds of things in their season and for securing and gathering them. No doubt this will gradually be done.... We want ten or twelve more farmers with horses, cows and laborers in proportion, to furnish us with bread, milk products, and suitable fruits.

The business of furs is dull on account of the new war of the Ma-chi-baeys [Mohawks] against the Mohicans at the upper end of this river. Much timber is cut here to carry to the Fatherland, but the vessels are too few to make much of it. They are making a windmill to saw lumber [pits infra] and we also have a gristmill. They bake brick here, but it is very poor. There is good material for burning lime, namely, oyster shells, in large quantities. The burning of potash has not succeeded....

We are busy now in building a fort of good quarry stone, which is to be found not far from here in abundance. May the Lord help us to build this war over our walls. There is good opportunity for making salt, for there are convenient places, the water is salt enough, and there is no want of heat in summer. Besides, what the waters yield, both of the sea and rivers, in all kinds of fish; and what the land possesses in all kinds of birds, game, and woods, with roots, herbs and plants, both for eating and medicinal purposes, and with which wonderful cures can be effected, it would take too long to tell, nor could I yet tell accurately. Your Reverence [Adrianus Smoutius] has already obtained some knowledge thereof and will be able to obtain from others further information. The country is good and pleasant, the climate is healthy, notwithstanding the sudden changes of cold and heat. The sun is very warm in the winter and continues fully as long as in the autumn. The best remedy is not to spare the wood, of which there is enough, and to cover one’s self with rough skins...

The harvest, God be praised, is in the barns, and is larger than ever before. There has been more work put on it than before. The ground is fertile enough to reward labor, but they cannot see it; we have had a great flood, which has swept away many of the dikes. Unluckily there has been distress because many people were not very industrious, and also did not obtain proper sustenance for want of bread and other necessaries. But affairs are beginning to go better and to put on a different appearance, it only the Directors will send out good laborers and exercise all care that they be maintained as well as possible with what this country produces.

The "windmill to saw lumber," above referred to, stood, on the modern map, in State St., south of Bridge St. It may have been one of those described by Van der Keur, in his "Topographie van het Nijlant," fol. 206, note. It is not mentioned in grants covering the land itself, or that adjoining.—See Librer Gt. 170 and 221 (Albany); see also Manatus Maps, C. Plis. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Nicolas van Wanton’s "Anno 1628" (preface dated June 1, 1629), contains the following entry: "The government over the people of New Netherland continued on the 19th of August of this year in the aforesaid Miniatuc, successor to Verhulst. He went thither from Holland on January 9, Anno 1646, and took up his residence in the midst of a nation called Manatus, building a fort there, to be called Amsterdam, having four bastions and faced outside entirely with stone, as the ramparts crumbled away like sand, and are now to be more substantial. The population consists of two hundred and seventy souls, including men, women and children. They remained as yet without the fort, in no fear, as the natives live peacefully with them. They are situate three leagues from the sea, on the river by us called Mauritius, by others, Rio de Montagne.

‘These strangers for the most part occupy their farms. Whatever they require is supplied by the Directors. The winter grain has matured out well there; but the summer grain which ripened before it was ball grain in consequence of the excessive heat, was very poor. The cattle sent thither have thriven well, and every promise increases, as soon as the land is improved, which is full of wood and trees.’—Jameson, N. N. S., 88.

know not how otherwise to recompense you than by this slight memoir, (wherein I have in part comprised as much as was in my power concerning the situation of New Netherland and its neighborhood) and shall in many things have been service to write the same more in detail, and better than I have now done, but that my things and notes, which would have been of service to me herein, have been taken away from me (possibly as a result of his falling into disgrace at Manhattan—see below—but more likely by theft). The words "anthoniz gemaetet" seem to indicate), I will beg you to be pleased to receive this, on account of my bondon service, etc.

On the 27th of July, Anno 1626, by the help of God, I arrived with the ship The Arm of Amsterdam, before the bay of the great Mauritse River, sailing into it about a musket shot from Godly's Point, into Coenraet's Bay; (because there the greatest depth is, since from the last point there stretches out a sand bank on which there is only from 9 to 14 feet water), then sailed on, northeast, and north-northeast, to about half way from the low sand bank called Godly's Point, to the Hamels-Boedden (the narrow), the mouth of the river, where we found at half ebb 16, 17, 18 feet water, and which is a sandy reef a musket shot broad, stretching for the most part northeast and southwest, quite across, and, according to my opinion, having been formed there by the stream, insomuch as the flood runs into the bay from the sea, east-southeast the depth at some points is caused by the tide flowing out along there with such rapidity.

"The Hamels-Boedden being passed, there is about a league width in the river, and also on the west side there is an inlet, where another river runs up about 20 leagues, to the north-northeast, emptying into the Mauritse River, in the bigalas, thus forming the northwest land opposite to the Manhatas, an island eighteen leagues long. It is inhabited by the old Manhatis [Manhatten]; they are about 300 to 500 strong, women and men, under different chiefs, whom they call Sachemus. This island is more mountainous than the other land on the southeast side of the river, which opposite to the Manhatas, is about a league high. At the side of the before-mentioned little river, which we call 'Achter Col,' there is a great deal of waste reedy land...."

"The Island of the Manhatis extends two leagues [sic] in length along the Mauritse River, from the point where the Fort 'New Amsterdam' is building. It is about seven leagues [sic] in circumference, full of trees, and in the middle rocky to the extent of about two miles in circuit. The north side has good land in two places, where two farmers, each with four horses, would have enough to do without much clearing at first. The grass is good in the forest and valleys, but when made into bay is not so nutritious for the cattle as bear in Holland, in consequence of its wild state, but it greatly improves by cultivation. On the east side there rises a large level field, of from 70 to 80 morgens of land, through which runs a very fine fresh stream; so that that land can be ploughed without much clearing. It appears to be good. The six farms, four of which lie in this valley, the other two stretching along, still of the island, have at least 60 morgens of land ready to be sown with winter seed, which at the most will have been ploughed eight times. But as the greater part must have some manure, inasmuch as it is so exhausted by the wild herbage, I am afraid that all will not be sown; and the more so, as the managers of the farms are hired men. The two hindmost farms, Nos. 1 and 2, are the best; the other farms have also good land, but not so much, and more sandy; so that they are best suited for rye and buckwheat.

The small fort, New Amsterdam, commenced to be built, is situated on a point opposite to Noten Island; [the channel between] is a gun-shot wide, and is full six or seven fathoms deep to the middle. The point might, with little trouble, be made a small island, by cutting a canal through Blommaert's valley, so as to afford a bavco winter and summer, for sloops and ships; and the whole of this little island ought, from its nature, to be made a superb fort, to be approached by land only on one side (since it is a triangle), thus protecting them both. The river marks out, naturally, three angles; the most northerly faces and commands, within the range of a cannon shot, the great Mauritse River and the land; the southermost commands, on the water level, the channel to the Noten Island and the fort, together with the Hellegat; the third is at some distance, commands the low-land; the middle part, which ought to be left as a market-place, is a hilllock, higher than the surrounding land, and should always serve as a battery, which might command the three points, if the streets should be arranged accordingly.

Up the river the east side is high, full of trees, and in some places there is a little ground for treed slide and people have dwelt, but who for the most part have died or have been driven away by the Wappens.

[Here follows an elaborate account of the life and customs of the Indians, after which occurs a break where at least four pages are missing. The letter of 1630, which probably continues the same, begins as follows:]"Coming out of the river Nassau [Sakonnet River], you sail east-and-by-north about fourteen leagues, along the coast, a half mile from the shore, and you then come to 'Frenchman's Point,' at a small river where those of Patuquet have a house made of beam oak drunks, called Aptonet [Monomet on Buzzard's Bay], where they keep two men, winter and summer, in order to maintain the trade and possession. Here also they have built a shallop, in order to go and look after the trade in sewan, in Sleep's Bay and shoresbouts, because they are afraid to pass Cape Malabar, and in order to avoid the length of the way, which I have prevented for this year by selling them fifty fathoms of sewan, because the seeking after sewan by them is prejudicial to us, inasmuch as they would, by so doing, discover the trade in furs; which if they were to find out, it would be a great trouble for us to maintain, for they already dare to threaten that if we will not leave off dealing with that people, they will be obliged to use other means; if they are not, we will be yet ignorant how the case stands, what will they do when they get a notion of it? [New Plymouth is here described.]

"The tribes in their neighborhood [New Plymouth] have all the same customs as already above described, only they are better connected and understood than ours, because the English give them the example of better ordinances and a better life; and who also, to a certain degree, give them laws, in consequence of the respect they from the very first have established amongst them."—From original letter in the National Archives, The Hague, discovered in 1824 in a bundle of manuscripts then recently acquired by the Royal Library, translated in Jameson, N.A., II., 102—105.

The date of this letter is somewhat in doubt. De Raisière's visit to New Plymouth took place early in October, 1627, as we know from his letter dated Oct. 4, 1627 (see Sept. 24/ Oct. 4), and written on board the "Nassau" at Monomet [Buzzard's Bay]. It was during this visit that De Raisière told the 50 fathoms of sewan to the English settlers, an event which Bradford also records, in his history.—Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed., 1912), II., 45. Bradford describes this visit under the year 1628, which is evidently an error, and probably resulted from the fact that his notes were not made until about three years after the event. We have no certain knowledge that De Raisière returned to Manhattan after his mission to New Plymouth, and no record has been found of him in New Netherland after his departure on his mission to Bradford. It is probable that he did return, and that he bore with him Bradford's letter of Oct. 1 (see Oct. 11). The only definite reason for the assumption that he did return is his reference to "The small fort at New Amsterdam, commenced to be built," and Bradford's note, following De Raisière's letter of Oct. 4, 1627 (p. v), that he "soon after fell into disgrace amongst them [the Dutch], by reason of their factions."—Ibid., II., 24. De Raisière's reference to the six farms "ready to be sown with winter seed" seems to indicate that this part of the letter at least was written at the time of his departure, and in the month of September when the winter crops were usually sown.

If he did not return from New Plymouth to Manhattan, but dispatched Bradford's letter by another messenger and himself sailed direct for Holland, his letter was probably completed on the voyage homeward, and therefore dates from 1627, which date would agree, with the statement contained in the letter that the sale of sewan to the New Plymouth colonists took place in "this year"—1627— the year in which the letter, under this assumption, would have been written, and in which, as we know from Bradford (Ibid., II., 45), the sale actually took place. If, on the other hand, De Raisière returned to Manhattan with Bradford's letter, unless he sailed again immediately for Holland, his letter to Blommaert probably was written in the following autumn, an assumption which is strengthened by his reference to "The small fort, New Amsterdam, commenced to be built," it is even possible that it was written in the autumn of 1626 or 1627, as he does not mention his successor officiating as secretary of the province. This, however, is unlikely, as Blommaert ceased to be a director of the W. L. Co. in the summer of the farther year, 1629. See April 23, 1634. The assumption that it was written in the autumn is basked, as we have seen, on the reference to the land being "ready to be sown with winter seed." The reference to the six "ploughings, which will have been ploughed eight times," is ambiguous, and may possibly refer to four double planting seasons.

We know from many contemporary sources that it was the custom in New Netherland to plant twice yearly, in May and September. If the letter was written in the autumn of 1628, the eight ploughings may perhaps indicate eight successive cultivations of the ground before sowing the crops: two in 1628, two in 1627, two in 1626, and two in 1625; and, as a considerable number of months must have elapsed between the arrival of the colonists and the preparation of these farms for plowing, this theory, if true, would greatly strengthen the argument for accepting 1624 (1623, if the letter was written in 1627) as the year of first settlement. It is, however, of course, possible—even probable—that the words refer to eight successive cultivations of the soil, extending over a shorter period, and not corresponding with the periods of planting. Attention is drawn to this possible interpretation simply because every plausible suggestion or new sidelight in connection with the interesting and elusive problem of determining the year of first settlement is worthy of attention.

Blaauw's Vly or Valley was the name applied to a depression on the present line of Broad Street from the shore of the East River inland, through which the Dutch subsequently excavated a ditch or gracht. The earliest mention of the name is in the foregoing letter from Isack de Raaifere to Samuel Blaaauw, who was one of the directors of the New Netherland Co., at Amsterdam, and it is not unlikely that the name was derived from him. See Jameson, Nat. N. Neth., 105, also Castello Plan, II, 318.

In the same letter, De Raafere referred to Indian wampum, thus: "As an employment in winter they [Indians] make season, which is an oblong bead that they make from cockle-shells, which they find on the sea-shore, and they consider it as valuable as we do money here [Holland], since one can buy with it everything they have."—Jameson, op. cit., 106. This is the earliest reference to wampum as money in New Netherland. See also June, 1634.

— In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 55,778 guilders were brought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in three ships to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhael, 26, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 5,913 beavers and 681 otters valued at 62,185 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

— While in England, [Isaac] Allerton produced an effect upon the friends of the Winthrop migration [of 1630] which may not have been intended. His words gave the impression that the English were uninterested in the settlement as other parts of the country, and, for example, as Hudson did in Massachusetts Bay. This impression was taken up in the English press. Winthrop, December 12, 1630, suggesting a removal to a more southern part, and cited Allerton on the Hudson, "which as Mr. Allerton affirms meets with Canada; and Downing, writing four days earlier, advanced some of the same arguments for removal, and added: 'If ye be true that Mr. Allerton reports of Hudson's river, there is noe place comparable to yt for a plantation, and t'will quit cost for you to remove thither, though all be lost in the place where you are, for he saith that Hudsons river goes into Canada and those a make New England an island, if this be true yet they like to meet in the great lake [Iroquois], and see may Merry-mack.'"—Bradford, Hist. of Plymouth Plantation (Ford ed.), II, 63-64, editorial footnote. Isaac Allerton removed to New Amsterdam about 1638, and became one of the city's most influential citizens.

— In this year, England captured Quebec; this was followed by theメリット of Canada by the

The king begins to rule without parliament.

At some time prior to this date, Wouter van Twiller received a grant from the West India Co. (De Lancy Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.), confirmed by a ground-brief in 1638 (Liber GG: 25, Albany), for land which is later spoken of as a tobacco plantation near Sandy Hook. The same letter was written in the autumn of 1638, the eight ploughings, N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 3, 13, 19. This bowery lay at some distance to the westward of the Bowery Road (The Bowery) and south-west of Greenwich Ave. Here is the first mention of record of the Indian village of Sapokathanck, later Greenwich Village.
in the present town of Bethlehem, Albany Co., and here very likely — the lumber for the ship being cut. As the men were "encamped," they may have built the ship at this place, or the lumber may have been conveyed to Manhattan Island, Fort Orange, or some other place on the river. At any rate, it is known from a letter which Symon Dircks, a councillor of New Netherland, wrote to Van Rensselaer from Manhattan, on Sept. 16 of this year, that "a certain new ship" was being built, was then almost ready, and had proved a success; although it was feared "injury to it [may] arise, since a strong ice-run flows here [where it was building]; yet [it] is hoped to be able to withstand it well."—Oud Holland, VIII (1890): 70-71.

The Charter of Privileges and Exemptions (Vryheden, etc.) of June 3, 1629 (q. c.), was first printed in this year, at Amsterdam, and was the earliest separate publication relating to New Netherland. It was the foundation of the system of patroonships and is most important in other respects for the history of the Dutch province.

About this year, the house of the director-general of New Netherland was built within the enclosure of Fort Amsterdam. It is known that he lived outside of the fort or in the village from 1626 to 1628.—J. J. van Houten, N. Veert, 85, 86, 88. During Van Twiller's administration—namely, after 1635—the "commander's house, standing in the Fort," was repaired.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 16. Father Isaac Jogues mentions "the house of the Governor" in the fort as existing in 1643 when he saw the town and fort.—Janszoon, op. cit., 129.

The Buchelius Chart, a crude draft of Manhattan Island and its immediate surroundings, copied by the Dutch antiquarian Buchelius from a drawing of this period, was made, perhaps by Peter Minuit himself, or under his direction, some time between 1630 and 1634, probably to indicate the position of grants to Godwyn, Pauw, and Cornelis. Reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 2.

On April 27, 1634, Kiliaen van Rensselaer notified the directors of the West India Co. that a certain contract for cattle and farming implements between the company and six farmers had been signed in accordance with conditions agreed to in writing by both sides on Jan. 16, 1634, and that these farmers had been leased a farm of about 50 morgens (on Manhattan Island), including farms No. 2 and 3, "for the term of six years, beginning the first of May, 1630."—Van Rensselaer Bowier MSS., 296.

Kiliaen van Rensselaer (op. cit.) records under this date "After the Right Honorable Directors of the Chartered West India Company in the United Netherlands had provided everything for the defense of New Netherland and put everything there in good order, they taking into consideration the advantages of said place, the favorable navigation of the air and soil, and that considerable trade and goods and many commodities may be obtained there, and, therefore, that some free emigrants thither with all sorts of cattle and implements necessary for agriculture, so that in the year 1630 there already resided on the island of the Manhattans two hundred and seventy souls, men, women and children, under Governor Minuit [sic], Verhuydt's successor, and lived there in peace with the natives. But as the land, being extensive and in many places full of weeds and wild growth, could not be properly cultivated in consequence of the scantiness of the population, the said Directors of the West India Company, the better to people their lands, and to bring the country to produce more abundantly, resolved to grant divers Privileges, Freedoms and Exemptions to all patrons, masters or individuals who should plant any colonies and cattle in New Netherland, and they accordingly have constituted and published in print [at Amsterdam, 1630] these following exemptions [of June 7, 1629], to afford better encouragement and induce greater zeal into whomsoever should be inclined to reside and plant his colony in New Netherland."—Jameson, Nar. N. Zeth., 89.

The Puritans, under Winthrop and Dudley, arrive at Salem.—See Addenda.

On this day, Minuit and his council sign in Fort Amsterdam the letters patent for Rensselaerswyck. The original patent, bearing one of the two signatures of Minuit and his council known to exist in this country, is now in the author's collection. It is reproduced in Wilson's Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I, opp. p. 164. The contract (originally owned by the late Mrs. John A. Willard, a descendant of the family of Peter Kuijlen[?], a wealthy Dutchman, who took the title of van Rensselaer in the Colony of New York) was signed in the fort on Aug. 6. These are the earliest contract and deed for land in the state of New York.—Van Rensselaer Boerar Manuscripts, 166.

Symon Dircks, Pos writes a letter to Kiliaen van Rensselaer from Fort Amsterdam "in New Netherland at the Manhattans," in which he says: "[We] have ordered among the people to build houses on the farms or on Manhattan, there is much land ploughed everywhere daily by the peasantry. I have now great hope that the Hon. Lords Directors, after their long waiting, shall be released for once from the great charges, as well as to be able to deliver a number of lasts of rye and wheat, raised on land there, in order to meet their heavy expenses. [Now] concerning the current year, we shall need much seed, as we are clearing, harrowing and ploughing much land. Moreover, I cannot neglect advising your Honor the questions that arise here in this place, where there are not more than two hundred or three hundred souls."—Newly translated from Oud Holland, VII (1887): 5.

The first general court in America is held, at Boston.

A catalogue of a sale held by Frederik Muller & Co., of Amsterdam, in May 1869, contains the two following items:

No. 1367. [Dated] 1630. Project of a coat-of-arms for the city of New Amsterdam (N. Y.). (The same with the plan of the farms in Holland but surmounted by a beaver.) Contemporary drawing in colours, in the form of a medallion, diameter 100 mm.

No. 1368. [Dated] 1610. Another Project for the coat-of-arms of the same city, representing the arms of Amsterdam, surmounted by the imperial crown, and between two beavers instead of the two lions. One of the directors, H. Bontemantel [the famous antiquary], has written at the bottom of the drawing that it was a Project which was not executed. Contemporary drawing in colours 330 mm. wide, 220 mm. high. The catalogue adds: "These two Projects have kept up to the present time and there exist no copies in the archives."

The present whereabouts of these two important items was long sought by the author, who was only able to learn, through Dr. Wieder, of the old firm of Frederik Muller & Co., that one of the drawings had been bought at the sale by the present head of the Pauw family, Ridder Pauw van Wieldrecht, but had been destroyed in a fire which consumed his castle and family papers at Leersum in 1906, while the other was bought at the sale by Westerman & Co. of New York, for 39 florins.

In 1919, one of these documents, No. 1367 in the catalogue, was discovered and recorded by Mr. Victor Hugo Paltsits, in the Manuscript Division of the New York Public Library. It is reproduced, for the first time, as Frontispiece I, in the present volume.

This document, which measures 410 x 245 mm., is endorsed, in contemporary ornamental script, "Arms of New Nederlandsche in Amsterdam." (!) On the face of the sheet are grouped three drawings:

1. The seal (Sigillum) of New Amsterdam, in a circle 90 mm. in diameter (not 100 mm. as given in the catalogue description).

2. A very similar design, but having beavers instead of lions as bearers, and evidently intended for the city arms, not as a seal only, as there is no circle. A note explains that "This coat-of-arms was [submitted as] a Project, but was not found good [approved]."

3. A design for a coat-of-arms for New Netherland, having two lions as bearers.

Adjoining this last design is an inscription reading as follows:

"Extract from the resolutions of a meeting of the XIX of the general Chartered West India Co., held at Middelburg in Zeeland. Saturday the 28th December, 1630. Post Meridian. [Exhibited by Mr. Michael Pauw, a design for a coat-of-arms for Nieuw-Nederland, being a black bear on a gold field, with a border [on a band] of white Zealand [Wampum], on a blue ground, embellished with the Crown of a Count, and is also found good by the approval of the Lords High Mightsinesses."

Just as this page was going to press, Miss Jennie F. Mac- croy found, among some papers presented to the New York Historical Society by Mr. J. Carson Brevoort, the second projec, No. 1368 in the Muller catalogue, which was supposed to have been

The Netherland... was destroyed by fire in Holland. This document, which is exactly similar to the discarded arms of the city reproduced in the frontispiece, is drawn on a sheet measuring 14 3/4 x 11 1/4, the beavers being 2" in height. It bears the same inscription as is found adjoining this drawing in our reproduction, except that under the beaver is written "it otter." In the left upper corner of the sheet is an outline in red chalk (10" x 15") of a head rampant, very similar to the one in the New Netherland arms here reproduced. An accompanying typewritten inscription states that this drawing was presented to the Society by Mr. Brevoort in May 1885, and that it came from the papers of J. Bontemantel, the famous Dutch antiquary. It is quite clear that these documents are identical with those sold by Frederik Muller & Co. in 1889. Possibly Mr. Brevoort secured the second project in Holland from Ridder Pauw van Wiel-drecht. This Muller sale is the same at which the New Netherland Papers now in the N. Y. PUb. Library and those in the Hist. Soc. of Penn., were sold.

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 13,755 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kurt Verhoel, 26 in his Historie (1644). There seems to have been no return shipments of beavers and otter skins this year as was usual; but compare the Holland imports of 1652.— Ibid., 39.

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 31,320 guilders were bought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kurt Verhoel, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were shipped to Holland from New Netherland 13,513 beavers, and 1,661 otters and other peltries, valued at 143,125 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

In Feb. or March, 1632, Bartiaen Jansz. Krol was appointed director-general of New Netherland, as Minuit’s successor. He held the office thirteen months, until the arrival of Wouter van Twiller, in Dec. 1633.—Pan Rennselaer Bever minced Manuscript, 31, 59, 217, 302; Elschol, Bartiaen Jansz. The "Eendacht," belonging to the Dutch West India Co., with Dirck Minuit and Jan Lamoun on board, "coming from New Netherland and touching at Plymouth, in England," was "setzed there" with her cargo of peltries. The seizure was made under pretense that "the cargo of the ship was procured in the English Colonies; next, that the Company had appropriated some countries belonging to the English." On April 5, 1632, the matter was brought to the attention of the states-general and negotiations were begun through the Dutch ambassador and his deputy in England for the release of the ship, its personnel, and cargo. The Dutch ambassador sent a remonstrance to Charles I. In May assurances were given by the lord high treasurer of England that he would "give orders for the release of the aforesaid vessel, saving and without prejudice to his Majesty’s right."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 45-60. See also Broeders’ Hist. State of N. Y., I: 211-17. This ship arrived at Amsterdam in June, bringing some thousands of beaver skins, as well as otter skins. On the ship came Jan van Vorst, son of Willem van Vorst, director of Michiel Pauw’s colony of Pavia, who brought a letter from his father, and a sawpitster (Clavis cunxarii maritimi vocavit, qualem ipse in suis excorticis expressit, a me sibi a Vollwinkel exorantum, missum”). He said on the strand there [about Manhattan] many great and small were from El. Anno, 121, fol. 111, verso, in the archives of the Island.

In an ante-nuptial agreement made this day Adriantjge Cevelyn (Adrienne Cuville), widow of Guillaume Visge, and Jan Jansen Damen, it is provided, among other things, that her two minor children shall be kept at school and be taught a trade. The agreement appears in a report of arbitrators, dated “in New Apr. Netherland on the Island Manhatans and Fort Amsterdam.”—The instrument is recorded by Secretary Cornelis van Tien-bouwen at Fort Amsterdam, on May 7, 1638. We have here the earliest recorded instance of the education, in M. L., of minor orphan children in accordance with the established orphanage law of Holland.—Recordi N. July

In this month, Kiliaen van Rensselaer, patron, having determined “to erect a brewery” in his colony of Rensselaerswyck, “to provide all New Netherland with beer, for which purpose there is already a brew kettle there,” instructs his representatives in his colony to ask the director “for the large brewing kettle and brandy kettle which is at the Manhattes and sell the brandy and beer either at Fort Orange or at the Manhattes or elsewhere.”—Pan Rennselaer Bever minced Manuscript, 200, 211.

Wouter van Twiller is appointed director-general of New Netherland. He sailed from Holland in the “Southbergh” (Salt Mountain) after July 20, 1632, and arrived in New Amsterdam in March, 1633, when he assumed his office.—Pan Rennselaer Bever minced Manuscript, 201, 204, 215, 217, 266, 304, 308; De Vries, Notes, in Jason’s Narr. New Albion (including New Jersey) is granted to Sir Edward Plowden, the viceroy of Ireland.—Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 154; Winsor, III: 458.

Some time prior to this year, the bakery of the West India Co. was erected.—Col. MSS., I: 81 (Albany). It stood at what is now the southeast corner of Pearl and State Sts., where the Chesh-rough building stands.

At some time prior to this year, the brewers’ bridge, crossing the Hors Graacht (the canal in Broad St.), was erected. It’s situation was at the present Stone St., crossing Broad St; it, as well as the two other bridges spanning the Graacht, is shown on C. Pl. 82, Vol. II.

There were no shipments of goods and merchandise in this year by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. from Holland to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kurt Verhoel, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were shipped into Holland from New Netherland 8,800 beavers, and 1,583 otters and other peltries, valued at 91,575 guilders.—Ibid., 30.

Before Wouter van Twiller came over as director-general, in 1635, five large stone houses, used as shops by the West India Co., were built on Winecraft St. (now no longer in existence, the bed of the defunct street being now covered by the Kemble building.) They occupied the east side of the street, between Brouwer (Stone) and Brugh (Bridge) Streets. Among the buildings listed in a deposition as built during Van Twiller’s administration was a “gasthouse standing behind the five Houses,” which shows that these five buildings were in existence before his time—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. They were all under one roof, as shown on The Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82, Vol. II). During the Dutch period they remained the property of the company, and as such were consecrated upon the occupation by the English in 1644, as property of the Duke of York.

They were demolished prior to Oct. 15, 1680, as is shown by four grants of this land by Gov. Andros, as “being part of the ground of the five houses belonging to his Royal Highness” (the Duke of York). The earliest of these grants is to Philip Welles, Oct. 15, 1680; and the three others were to Capt. Anthony Bricholes (Dec. 6), John Darvall (Dec. 15), and Stephanus van Cortlandt (Dec. 15).—Patents, V: 5, 8, 9, 28, sec. of state’s office, Albany. The sites of the five houses are now occupied by the buildings Nos. 2 and 4 Stone St., and 19 and 21 Bridge St.—See The Castello Plan, H: 279-80; Key to the Dutch Grants, II: 381; C. Pl. 82, sec. 87, Vol. II. Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 957; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Numerous buildings were erected during the administration of Wouter van Twiller (1633-1638), as is revealed in a deposition of March 21, 1639, which Gilles Pietersen van der Gouw, the then “master house carpenter on the Island Manhattan,” made before the provincial secretary. Those erected on Manhattan Island were: “In Fort Amsterdam, the guardhouse with lattice work and a roof; a ‘small house for the soldiers to live in;’ and a large cellar [which] was dug and built up with stones to the level of the ground and [had] beams across to lay planks on for the floor of the house.”
1633 — "On the Island outside of the Fort," there were erected in this year: a new bakery; a "small house for the midwife;" a "goat- house" where the goats were kept; the "little House behind the church and stable behind it" (on the north side of Pearl St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts.). The "smiths, corporal's and cooper's house, which had been raised, was completed and covered with pan tiles;" and the "large shed, where the sloop and yachts are built, and the "carpenters' loft" left above, were erected. At the "Bowery No. 1," a very good barn, dwelling house, boat- house, and brewery covered with tiles (sold in 1651 to Director Stuyvesant); and the "house upon Mr. Twiller's plantation" were built, and repairs were made in "the commander's house, standing in the Fort," where much had been broken. The "saw and grist mill were now finished"; and "the House behind the church and was spoken of as a "mean barn." (De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nat. N. Neh., 212); but after the erection of the church in the fort, begun in that year, it was used for some time as a warehouse of the West India Co. (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 375; Innes, 59). A summary of its later history is given above.

On April 4, 1659, the director-general and council of New Netherland resolved: "that on Saturday, the 5th of April, the lot, house and building thereon called the Old Church and formerly tenanted by Capt. [Bryant] Newton," should be "sold at auction to the highest bidder" (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV, 346), and at the sale it was purchased by Jacob Wolphertten van Couwenhoven (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 383), who received a deed from the director-general, on June 30 (Liber HH, part ii, 58, in sec. of state's office, Albany). He became involved in debt to Pieter Jansen Marius, who judgment against him, and, in compliance with the order of the court, the property was sold and conveyed to Isaac de Forest (Rec. N. Am., II: 153-54; Liber A: 71, N. Y. County register's office), who, having covered this lot with a house, applied for and obtained, on April 16, 1664, a grant of the adjoining lane, to build thereon a woodsched, etc. (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 285). Gouverneur, Richard Nicolls gave De Forest a confirmation of title, on Feb. 14, 1668. His widow and executrix, Sarah, conveyed the property, then called "the old church on Strand," on June 30, 1682, to Allard Anthony, for 10,000 guilders. By his will, executed on Dec. 12, 1683, the property was left to his wife, Henrietta, "residing in Amsterdam," and, in case the widow died before him, and proved in May, 1707, it passed to her three grandsons, Nicholas, Allard, and Henry Anthony, and, on Sept. 25, 1718, was conveyed to the former of the latter. On July 23, 1719, Henry Anthony gave a mortgage for $400 to Bridgett Matthews on the same property. — Liber XII: 97, 99, N. Y. County register's office; ibid., Liber XXIII: 527, 530; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1892), 441; ibid. (1894), 409. On Oct. 24, 1754, Henry Cregier mortgaged to Peter de Lancey the premises "formerly called Old Kirk or Old Church" in the sum of $14,818.

— Liber Mortgages, I: 11. During the American Revolution, the property was in the tenure of William Bayard, attainted, and "was numbered among the forfeited estates, as shown by a deed from the commissioners of forfeiture to Richard Varick, Jan. 13, 1785, in consideration of the purchase price of $545. — Liber Deeds, CXII: 55; Flick, Loyalism in New York (1901), 227.

Between this year and the end of Wouter van Twiller's administration as director-general of New Netherland, the following ships were built or repaired in New Netherland, as is shown in a declaration made by Tymen Jansen, ship-carpenter, dated "at Fort Amsterdam this 22d of March A.D. 1659." He testified "that it is perfectly true, that he . . . during the administration has worked more and has done new work, which Mr. Twiller, ordered to be made," the summary whereof is as follows: In 1653 the ship "soutkirk" was provided with new knees; "other carpenters" worked long on the ship "Hope of Groeningen and Oomelanden;" a yacht called "Hope," which had been captured in 1652 by Van Twiller, was "entirely rebuilt and planked up higher;" the "Pree Willem" was built; the yacht "Amsterdam" was "almost finished," a "large open boat" was built; "an orlop and caboose were made" for the yacht "Wessel," and likewise for the yacht "Vrede." Other boats built or repaired included the "Dommwl," at Fort Orange (Albany), a "yacht with a mizzen sold to Bareut Dirckseu" of New Amsterdam, "the wood cutters' boat," and "Rivers farmboats and shifts" which were "sold to various parties," and "many boats and yaws made for the sloops." Besides all this work, "the carpenters constantly repaired and caulked the old craft." — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 17.

In this month, the Rev. Everardus Bogaardus, having sailed with the newly-appointed director-general, Wouter van Twiller, in accordance with the "Southburgh" (Salt Mountain), arrived at New Amsterdam. He had been a "stockenteaster" (comforter of the sick) in Guineas; had been ordained to the ministry by the classis of Amsterdam, on June 14, 1621; and, on July 15 of that year, had been formally recorded before the church council as accepting service for New Netherland, and presented to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. with a "Classical Testimonium." So far as known, the first mention of him in New Netherland is in a letter from Kilias van Rensselaer to Wouter van Twiller, April 21, 1654. — Echhoff, Basleans Jens. Kri. (1910), 22, Appendix XXIV, XXV; Echhoff, Bericht Der K. K. Auseinandersetzungen, 287; Edgerton, Wouter van Rensselaer, 16; Inge, Manual of Ref. Church in Am. (ed. of 1905), 330.

Wouter van Twiller, governor of New Netherland, writes a letter to the governor of the "English Colonye att the Massachusets Baye," which, translated, reads as follows: "That which you apprize concerning the use of the River with you instance the Kings of England hath granted to his subjects and therefore it seems strange unto you that we have taken possession thereof; it seems very strange unto me, who for my own part didth wish that his Mat'7 of England and the Lords of the States General concerning the limits and partition of their quarters, would agree. And as good neighbors wee might live in these heathenish countries. And therefore I desire you see soe from such to defer yeo'tence or claim of the said River att the Kings of England and our superior Magistrats or governours bee (as concerning the same) agreed. I have in the name of the Lords the States General and the authorisit West India Company taken possession of the formentioned River, and for testimonio thereof have set upp an house on the North side of the said River, with intent to plant 8ac. Itt's not the intent of the States to take the land from the poore Natives, as the Kinges of Spaine hath done by the Popes Donation, but rather to take it from the said Natives att some reasonable and convenient price, with God be praysd we have done hitherto. In this parte of the world are divers heathenish lands that are empyt of inhabitants, see that of a little parte or portion thereof there needs not any question. I should be very sorry that wee should bee occasion that the Kinges Mat'7 of England and the Lords General will suffer the Countrye to be divided by Contestation. Wherewith ending, I commit you with yeo'twholl family unto the protection of Almightye God, being and restinge 'Yee' true freinde Lubbert van Dincklagen leaves Holland this month to assume his duties of fiscal and schout of New Netherland, succeeding Coenraet Nobelman. He antagonized Director-Gen. Wouter van Twiller, and was summarily removed from office. This led to long-standing proceedings on charges before the states-general, involving the West India Co.—Van Rensselaer Bouwer Manuscripts, 72, 77, 297, 320, 353, 465; N. Y. Col. 30 The "Examination of Bastiaen Jansz Crol, former director of New Netherland, being 59 years of age, conducted at the request of the patrons by Notary Justus van de Ven," is held at Amsterdam. The questions asked and the answers given are as follows: "1. In what capacity, and for how long he was in the service of the West India Company in New Netherland. He states that he set out as comforter of the sick and made a voyage and stay of 7/12 months in that country. He went out for the second time in the same capacity, and after he had been away about 12 months, he was appointed to the directorship at Fort Orange on the North River and held the same for three years. The third time he went out again as director of Fort Orange and to the best of his recollection served again for about two years. After which he was elected director general of New Netherland at Fort Amsterdam on the island Manhates, lying at the mouth of the aforesaid North River also named Mauritius, and served in this office 13 months. "2. Whether, when residing at Fort Orange, he did not hear from the chiefs of the Maquass that they had formerly traded with them a certain Hans Joris Hontom, who had first for skipper Jacob Elkhens, whom he later employed as his supercargo. "Yes.

3. Whether a misunderstanding did not arise between himself and Hontom, who had taken prisoner one of the chiefs. "Yes.

5. Whether in 1653, while he, Crol, was still director of New Netherland, the above named Hans Hontom did not come in the capacity of director of Fort Orange and councilor in New Netherland. "Yes.

6. Whether he did not see that a month after the arrival of Hontom, there had also arrived Jacques Elkhens, coming with his fleet from London, and whether he did not at once go up the river to Fort Orange. "Yes.

7. Whether he was not asked by his successor, the new director van Twiller, to go again to Fort Orange in the service of the W. I. Company, in order to prevent Elkhens from trading there. "Yes.

8. Whether, when he came up there Jacques Elkhens was not already there and trading in a tent he had erected behind Castle Island on the mill creek. "Yes.

9. Whether the sloop of Elkhens was not lying directly in front of the wall of Fort Orange and trading there. "Yes.

10. Whether he [Crol] did not station himself with his boat in the Maquaasiki above the fort, in order to cut off the Maquaas from reaching Elkhens. "Yes.

11. Whether on the following day, Hontom did not tell him that he might as well go away as he could manage the matter himself. "Yes.

12. Whether Elkhens did not go often to the fort and whether Hontom did not often eat in the tent. "Yes.

13. How long Elkhens traded there. "Four to five weeks.

15. Whether, when he was at Fort Orange, was not present, when Saggiagryacha, head chief of the Maquaas, came, and seeing Hontom, at once packed up his skins and rising up, said "That man is a scoundrel, I will not trade with him."

16. Whether soon afterwards, the Company's yacht de Bever was not burned by the savages near Fort Orange. "Yes."

16. Whether the tribe of the Maquaas, shortly before he left Fort Orange did not tell him, as he understood their language, that they would kill the said Hans Joris Hontom the first time they should find him alone, and whether he had not warned Hontom about this. "Yes.

17. What answer Hontom made thereto. "That the Maquaas might do their best, or something to that effect.

18. Whether, on the 20th July, 1653, as he, Crol, lay ready to sail for the fatherland, a Mahican savage, named Dickop, did not come bringing the tidings to the island Manhates, that all the cattle in the neighborhood of Fort Orange had been killed. "Yes.

19. Whether, after leaving his post, he did not also furnish a cow to van Vurst. "Yes.

20. Whether Wyver van Tuillier, director, in March 1653, about 10 months after the delivery, took away these cattle from Cornelis van Vurst. "Yes.

21. For what reason? "He said he had bought them from Minuet. "Yes."

Yes."

22. Whether van Tuillier did not give van Vurst three other cows in their place. "Yes.

In this year, goods and merchandise valued at 28,785 guilders were brought in Holland by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., and sent in one ship to New Netherland.—De Laet, Kort Verhael, 27, in his Historie (1644). There were imported into Holland from New Netherland 14,931 beavers, and 1,413 otters and other peltries, valued at 134,925 guilders. The total valuation of such imports from 1624 to 1635 inclusive amounts to 705,117 guilders.—Ibid., 27.

Jacob Stoffelen deposited on March 22, 1679 (p. w.), among other things, that Fort Amsterdam "was completed in the year 1655."—N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 18. Cf. letter of Van Twiller and his council of Aug. 14, 1636.

During this year, a small party of Englishmen, commanded by George Holmes, was sent out by the Dutch, to the provisional governor of Virginia, and captured Fort Nassau on the Delaware River from the Dutch. A bankrupt was despatched by Director Wouter van Twiller to dissuade them. They were taken on board the Dutch ship De Vries’s ship bound for Virginia. De Vries, after witnessing them arrive at Sandy Hook and further contacts, on May 16 (p. w.), carried his leaky ship at the Smits Vly in New Amsterdam.—Jameson, N. N. Neth., 195–97. O’Callaghan’s version (Hist. N. Neth., I: 170) is not correct. Perhaps De Vries brought him with several Englishmen to settle in New Netherland. If so, Holmes and his servant Thomas Hall, the earliest Englishmen to land on the Netherland coast of the Hudson, were in the following years afterwards, Secretary Van Tienhoven charged that Hall “ran away from his master” during the expedition of 1635 against Fort Nassau, and “came to the Mannhants and hired himself as a farmer’s man to Jacob van Curlur” (Curley).—Jameson, op. cit., 375. But the friendly associations existing between Holmes and Hall on Manhattan Island would seem to discount these charges, based solely upon the word of the corrupt provincial secretary, who, in 1655, held only the subordinate post of bookkeeper of wages paid by the company to its servants. Regarding Holmes and Hall, see, further, March 22, August, and Sept. 7, 1639.

Blaeu’s Map “Nova Belgica et Anglia Nova” (copied from the Figurative Map of Adrian Block) appeared in this year, in the first edition of Blaeu’s World Atlas. This map, although a close copy of the first Figurative Map, has been brought up to date. The principal point of interest which the map possesses for us is its indication, for the first time, of the full name “Nieu Amsterdam,” and its depiction as a city. The form “Manhattan” also appears for the first time on this map. For reproduction, see Cartography, Pl. 34, and description, II: 88.

Writing in 1792, Ebenezer Hazard said: “. . . a state [ment] of their [the West India Co.’s] accounts drawn up in 1635 (part of which was in possession of Mr. Henry Kip, late of New York, deceased, and from which this extract was made), it appears that Fort Amsterdam, in New Netherland Cost the Company 4,172 Gilbers 10 Stuyvers, and that New Netherland (the Province) cost 413,800 Gilbers 11 Stuyvers.”—Hist. Coll. of State Papers, I: 79.

The following minute is made at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam: “Messrs. Blommert, Hamel and Trip, patrons of colonies in New Netherland, request and have requested to be permitted to have their bands. Whereupon they have been informed, to have their bands, and then we shall deliver the above [bond]." These were the patronships on the South (Delaware) River.—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, XLIII, fol. 7 v., 17 v., in National Archives at The Hague. Regarding discovery of these important documents, see Sept. 10, 1635, 1644. Such of these minutes as have been translated by Mr. Van Laer are so noted. The others are taken from translations made by Mr. Versteeg from Dr. Wieder’s transcripts.

At a “meeting of the Lords for the dividing of the Coast,” the “borders were thus laid out; Beginning from the Westermost part of the Island [of Manhattan] Mr. Conradus Brandenburgh began his limits, and ended the same at the river called Hudsons river, to the Eastward of the river was placed the Duke of Lenox,” etc. Sir Ferdinando Gorges’ patent was from the “middest of Merinieck to the great River of Sagadacheke being Sixty miles, and so up into the Maisie land one hundred and twenty miles.”—Sir Ferdinando Gorges, “A Briefe Narration,” 44-45, in Am. Painted to the Life (1693); Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1754-1660, 195. See also Addenda.

The following record is made in the Resolutieboek of the chamber at Amsterdam: “Henrick Arentsen Keerstoeke, having plied [by ship] to Canada, requests to serve the Company in New Netherland, or where their Honors shall be pleased to employ him. [Conclusion thereof] There is no opening.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, XLVI, fol. 20. See also N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 219.

Mr. Joris requests to serve the Company as map maker (cartographer). Will be considered when the time and occasion present themselves.”—From “Min. of the Amsterdam Chamber of the Dutch W. L. Company, 1655-1656” (translated by A. J. F. van Laar), in N. Y. Genealogical and Biog. Rec., XLIX: 218.

In the Resolutieboek of the chamber of Amsterdam, this record appears: “A letter was read from Mr. Ambassador Joschim from London, dated the last of March, concerning damage done to New Netherland by the English owing to their pretensions.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, XLIX, fol. 28.

An entry in the Resolutieboek of the West India Co., chamber of Amsterdam, states: “Willem Riewerts is appointed skipper to the ‘Sevenster’ [possibly Seynster (1656), generally called Resolutiehoeck] to New Netherland, on the old wage scale formerly received by him at Campen.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LII, fol. 31 v. See also N. Y. Gen. & Biog. Rec., XLIX: 220.

A minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam, that “Simon Janse, of Dijeram, has been accepted as mate on the ‘Sevenster’ [possibly Seynster (1656), generally called Resolutiehoeck] for the next month.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LIII, fol. 32 v.

The directors at Amsterdam resolve “that the commissioners for New Netherland shall inform themselves concerning a capable under-commis for the commerce of New Netherland.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LV, fol. 32 v.

The directors at Amsterdam resolve to send, after it has been read in meeting, “the drafted letter to the Director and Council of New Netherland.” This is one of the lost texts.—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LV, fol. 34 v.

The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: “Gysbert op den Dyck is engaged as under-commis, to sail on the ‘Sevenster’ going to New Netherland, and in case he should be needed on land, he shall also serve there, and is engaged at 18 guilders per month, and upon such further conditions as the commissioners for New Netherland have set down in the book.”—See A.

Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LVI, fol. 34 v. 11.14

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam “a petition of Bastiaen Janse Creul [Kroll] is read and referred to the commissioners for New Netherland.” The text is one of the lost documents.—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, LVIII, fol. 47 v.

“Ifac de Ruisiere requests an order for the payment of his July itemized bill signed by skipper Tonoonen and Commyns Jongeneel, amounting to 47 guilders and 18 st. Houbaut.”—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 47 v.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, the following record is made in the minutes: “Mr. Conradyus submits, that the wife of [Pieter Pietersz] Blyveldt, demanding damages and interest in New Netherland, exceeding 7000 guilders, on account of the recall of her people from New Netherland, besides Mr. de Vries, has been to see Mr. Bicker and Remselaer, and that Mr. Bicker thinks she was wronged, and that Remselaer declares, that Blyveldt has departed in the service of the Company, and not as a freeman. That now she offers, in hope of an agreement, to come to terms. Whereupon, it was resolved, that the old and new commissioners for New Netherland shall confer with her, and to report to this assembly for a final conclusion.”—Records of Old Dutch West India Co., No. 14, EX, fol. 51. See also Van Remselaer Bouvier Manuscripts, 301; and June 14, Addenda.

This minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: “Daniel Sept. Dintlagent [Lubbert van Dinklagent], fiscal of New Netherland, returned home by way of England, has handed over his journals, in which [Mr.] Conradus bio began his limits, and ended the same at the river called Hudsons river, to the Eastward of the river was placed the Duke of Lenox,” etc. Sir Ferdinando Gorges’ patent was from the “middest of Merineck to the great River of Sagadacheke being Sixty miles, and so up into the Maisie land one hundred and twenty miles.”—Sir Ferdinando Gorges, “A Briefe Narration,” 44-45, in Am. Painted to the Life (1693); Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1754-1660, 195. See also Addenda.

The following record is made by the directors at Amsterdam: “Lubbert van Linclagen [sic for Dinklagent], former fiscal in New Netherland, has been instructed by the Company, as they are Netherlands, requests a copy of the invoice of the _winckel ende Sept.

Keldergaarde of New Netherland, in order that he may examine the same, and further, to request that Cornelis van Voren return an account of living expenses. It is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland, who shall examine the letter which Mr. Conradus has written concerning the matter."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIV, fol. 67 vo.

Oct. 17
"The directors, as follows, is made by the directors at Amsterdam:
1 "Leuys Looco, merchant of this place, requests according to the obligation [bond] of Director Wouter van Twiller, to receive the sum of four hundred and four guilders for various goods furnished by Samuel Chenderer to the people in New Netherland. The matter is referred to the ship, now expected to arrive from New Netherland, as we have no advice from the said party."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXVI, fol. 72 vo.

11 The minutes of the chamber at Amsterdam state: "The father of Petrus Stuyvaerts, commissary, or supercargo, at Fernando Noronha [Fernando do Noronha], requests that his son going from there to Paramaribo [Brazil], may be advanced to whatever position he may be able to fill. Referred to the XIX [Assembly of the Nineteen] to be mentioned in the general letter."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 77 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 221).

18 The directors at Amsterdam make this minute: "Aedgen Cornelis, mother of Cornelis Jansen, who sailed as smith to New Netherland, petitions to receive, without having been granted authority thereunto, six months of his wages. It was disallowed."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIX, fol. 80 vo.

29 The directors of Amsterdam in New Netherland, requests that he may receive some money on account. Referred to the Commissioners of [or] New Netherland. Also requests some medicines from the apothecary shop to cure his drogys and bad health contracted on the voyage."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 83 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 221).

Nov. 3 This record is made in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "A letter of Wouter van Twiller, Director in New Netherland, dated Aug. 28, 1655, was read." This letter is one of the lost records.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXII, fol. 86.

8 The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "Jan Pietersen, of Enckhuysen, having sailed as second mate [opvarend] in the 'Gelderland,' and appointed at St. Martyn skipper of the yacht 'Goede Hoop,' was driven thence by the Spaniards and by necessity forced to go to New Netherland and detained there by the Director van Twiller until his present return hither on the 'Eendracht,' requests his pay and presents himself for service. Referred to the commissioners for New Netherland, to investigate the matter and make a report to this assembly."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXIV, fol. 87 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 222).

12 At a meeting of the chamber at Amsterdam, "a letter was read from Jacques Bentjeen [Jacques Bentyn, a member of Van Twiller's council, written from New Netherland]. This letter is one of the lost records of the company.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 89 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 222).

The widow of Hans Jansz Hontoun (or Hunthorn, who had been commis at Fort Orange and was killed in April, 1634, by Cornelis van Vorst, director of the colony of Pauvonia [Jersey City], consents to be attached in the warehouse of the Company [in Amsterdam, Holland] a case of beavers, marked No. 2, belonging to Cornelis van Vorst, which was sent to Mr. Hamel," one of the directors of the company. On Dec. 3, a "petition of the relatives and kinsmen of Joirs Honton, killed by Cornelis van Vorst," was considered by the directors at Amsterdam. His family wanted it to be "sett and furthered to the murder," but more information that the directors had "received no certification other than that the Director of New Netherland writes that the murder took place."—Records of old West India Company No. 14, fol. 91 vo and 99 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 222, 223). Buchelius (K. W. C., No. 213) says that Cornelis van Vorst refused to have the ordinances of the director-general and council posted in Pauvonia, for which he was arrested; he also refused to obey the officer of the company, in whose custody he was "sulcit dat hy v. v. ter lesten den vice commandeur heer doosteen." A deposition dated Feb. 25, 1656, concerning the murder of Corn. Marten van Buren, 50 years of age, made at the request of Ybed Hendrik, widow of Hans Joris Hontuns, before Notary Jan Cornelisz Hogheboom, Nov. 212B, of the same year, is in that notary's protocol at Amsterdam, marked No. 843. (Genootschap Archief). The following record refers to Hendrik Hendrikse Kip (also called Snijder), founder of the Kip family in New York, appears in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "Hendrik Hendrikse Snijder, requests for the account of Hendrik Jans Snijder according to the bill of exchange, dated August 15, 1653, and signed by Wouter van Twiller and Marten Gerritsen, the amount of 356 guilders, 19 stivers, 5 pennies." His request is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXV, fol. 90 vo.

27 The records are fiscal of New Netherland, whose recall is a subject of inquiry by the directors at Amsterdam, "requests, that in accordance with his interrogatories, the people arrived from New Netherland shall be examined." It is evident from this text that he had drawn up a series of questions, which he wished to be put at the inquiry, in his defense.—Records of old West India Co, No. 14, LXVIII, fol. 92.

"Miechil Simonsen, skipper of the 'Eendracht' returned from New Netherland, requests [of the directors at Amsterdam] that his crew may be paid."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIX, fol. 93.

The following important reference to negroes in the employ of the company appears in the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam: "There was read a petition from five negroes arrived here from New Netherland, claiming to have earned eight guilders a month, requesting a settlement. Referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXX, fol. 93 vo. Cf. Sept. 25, 1659, Addenda.

A minute of the directors at Amsterdam reads: "Mr. Gras proposed, that Sieur Jan Bicker requests 65 rolls of tobacco brought from New Netherland, and resolved to communicate about the same with the commissioners of trade."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIII, fol. 94.

The directors at Amsterdam adopt the following resolution: "Samuel Chenderer requests payment of 94 guilders by virtue of a bond and assignment of Wouter van Twiller, under date of May 9, 1655. Resolved, to pay the same and charge it to the account of Wouter van Twiller, until he shall have been properly apprised thereof. There is in addition a mistake of two guilders."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXIII, fol. 94 vo.

From the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam it is shown that "some officers and sailors" now request the payment of the wages they have earned. They are those "who sought from here [Holland] to New Netherland in the 'Eendracht' and who have returned home in the same; others having departed in the yacht 'De Goede Hoop,' from St. Martyn to New Netherland [i.e., Hendrick de Kost, one of these.—Cf. April 16, 1653; and Sept. 25, 1659]."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXIV, fol. 87 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Biol. Rec., XLIX: 222). It is resolved "to pay the people who went out with the ship 'Eendracht' and are now returned, besides the others, if the commissioners interpose no objections."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXIV, fol. 95.

The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam: "The mate of the 'Eendracht' from New Netherland, requests his wages. The mate of the yacht 'De Goede Hoop' does the same. Three sailors from New Netherland, who remained three months in this country aboard the ship, request three months' pay in addition."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXV, fol. 97.

From the minutes of the directors at Amsterdam we learn that "Barent Jansen, woodawayer, who prior to this has served some years in New Netherland, requests to go as a freeman to Brazil, provided that the gentlemen will advance to him 18 guilders on account, under security, if it could not be arranged otherwise. The commissioners are requested to induce these persons and others without enjoying such aid."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, LXXXII, fol. 94 vo.

28 A petition is referred at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam from "the wife of Jan van Remunde," who was a secretary of New Netherland under Peter Minuit and bitterly opposed both Minuit and Wouter van Twiller, in which she requests "payment of her husband's salary, price money from the captured prizes, proceeds of the sale of clothing, and price money upon the release of the surties." She is referred to the commissioners for

The treaty with Amsterdam received from Trygten Jonas, midwife in New Netherland, requesting an increase in wages and some necessaries. The letter is one of the lost records of the company.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 96 vo. (trans. in N. T. Gen. & Bieg. Rec., XLIX: 222).

The following is made to Amsterdam:—"Arent Steffenier, who sailed as a captain on the 'Eendracht' to New Netherland and there was wounded by the Maquas [Mohawks] and also broke his leg in the service of the Company, claims damages." His case is referred to "the Commissioners of Muntions."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 98 vo. (trans. in N. T. Gen. & Bieg. Rec., XLIX: 222).

The following is made to Amsterdam:—"There was presented to this body by Mr. Jan Bicker a bill of lading, according to which 65 rolls of tobacco, at 30 sivers each, freight-age for each hundredweight, were sent from New Netherland on the 'Eendracht.' He requests to have the tobacco received according to the bill of lading. Motion prevailed, that the commissioners go into the matter thoroughly, and learn what the Assembly of the Nineteen have resolved therein, in order to refer the same to the meeting and come to a decision."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 99 vo. (trans. in N. T. Gen. & Bieg. Rec., XLIX: 223).

"Laburt van Dinclagen, former fiscal [of New Netherland], petitions as in his request to have reimbursement for all his expenses." It is left to the discretion of the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCI, fol. 99 vo.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, the following action is taken:—"Upon request of Mr. Johan Bicker, to receive the tobacco arrived from New Netherland in the ship 'Eendracht,' provided he pay the freight-age according to the bill of lading. After examining the report of Messrs. van Ceulen and van der Dussen from the Chamber of the Northquarter [Hoorzn], and the resolution of the Assembly of the Nineteen, of date April 14, 1655, against Davidt Pietersen [de Vries], it was resolved, that he [Bicker] may receive the tobacco under security, save and without jeopardizing the just cause which the Company believes it has against Davidt Pietersen and associates."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCIII, fol. 100.

On this date, and on Jan. 3 and 7, 1656, the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam had before them a request from Bastiaen Jansen Croel (or Krol) for the payment "of an account with him as a man who has been settling for four years, and over this year, originally sent over "to his wife" from New Netherland, where he was commander at Fort Orange. On Jan. 10, 1656, he again requested "the balance of his account," and on the 14th, "the presiding officer" of the Chamber at Amsterdam stated "that Bastiaen Jansen Croel claims payment according to his account for the delivery of brick burned in New Netherland and that upon inquiry it appears that the said brick was worthless." Therefore, the directors "decided to make further inquiry through the Commissioners for New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 103, 105 vo., 110 vo., 112 (trans. in N. T. Gen. & Bieg. Rec., XLIX: 223–24).

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, this minute is made:—"Mr. President reported, that 6 beaverskins had been sent from New Netherland by W. van Twiller as a gift to H. Schaeff, J. Alrichs, and J. Timonsen. This delivery of the skins was unanimously disapproved until further information shall have been received about the same."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, XCIX, fol. 107 vo.

Anneke and Roeloff Jansen receive a grant of land from Director Van Twiller. For description, see under date of the confirmation, March 24, 1667; see also July 4, 1654. Cf. 1654.

The following minute is made by the directors at Amsterdam:—"Mr. President reported, that Cornelis van Vorst has passed an obligation and assignment in behalf of Claes Cornelis Swarts amounting to 420 guilders. The holder of which requests payment from the company. The matter was mentioned, because the same was dated December 5, 1653, and originates in that document, relative to the colony of Pavia [Jersey City], which this Company took over absolutely from Mr. Paew and paid for to his Honor. It was resolved, that Mr. Paew must free the Company from these debts and accordingly that they [the above papers] be sent back to his Honor."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 109.

"Lubbertus van Dinclagen, former fiscal in New Netherland, requests that this body [the directors at Amsterdam] be pleased to examine his request and the accompanying documents, and that they take favorable action with regard to them, inasmuch as he has no satisfaction from the commissioners. There was read the remonstrance sent in by the fiscal van Dinclagen, in which he requests his complete three years' salary. After inquiry, opinion prevailed that he would have to content himself with what the Commissioners for New Netherland would allow him, as they shall deem proper, the indemnification for the wrong which he pretends was committed unjustly against him by some persons in New Netherland, tabled without the meeting taking any action therein. In regard to his earned wages, they dismiss him."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CI, fol. 114.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, "Mr. van Ceulen proposes, that in the cellar of the Company there is stored an quantity of tobacco arrived from New Netherland for the account of Jan Bicker, shipped by Davidt Pietersen [de Vries], and, whereas the Company has a claim upon it, whether it was not advisable to sell it the tobacco, and to let the money in consignment. Resolved, to submit the matter to the Assembly of the Nineteen."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CV, fol. 115.

David Pietersz. de Vries, during his second voyage to these parts, careened his leaky ship in the "Smits-Vleye," a tract of lowland on the East River shore, between Wall and Beekman Streets, and repaired it.—De Vries, Note, in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 197. The date in the original Dutch work is misspelled the "6th." This is the first known mention of the Smits Vley, Smith's Valley, or Smith's Flats. De Vries's work was first printed in 1655; but it is probable that the name was recorded in his journal in 1656, as it is also mentioned in a patent as early as May 22, 1650 (S. 5).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 365: Liber GG, 34, in office of sec. of state, Albany; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1009, showing origin of the name.

At a meeting of the Amsterdam chamber, there are appointed, pursuant to the allotment of the commissions accorded that chamber for commissioners for New Netherland and Curacao, Messrs. Albert Coenraets Burgh, Samuel Blommaert, Daniel van Liebergen, and Frederick de Vries.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CIX, fol. 154.

Roger Williams, having been banished from Massachusetts, found Providence, the first settlement in Rhode Island.—Winsor, III: 355–56.

At a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, "Mr. Kiliaen van Renselaer reports that he has engaged a great company of people numbering 30 or 40 to be sent to New Netherland, some of whom, owing to the long delay, have run away, and some are become mutinous; therefore, he requests that the same be sent over with a ship of the Company, or at least with his own ship (the "Renselserswyck") which he is permitted to send to the West Indies under proper recognizance to bring his people over to New Netherland, as more fully set forth in his submitted petition. Whereupon, it was resolved to put his petition in the hands of the Commissioners for New Netherland, to examine the same and to report to this body."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CX, fol. 156. See July 14, 1656.

"Came to the meeting [of the directors at Amsterdam] Kiliaen van den Renselaer, requesting that on his petition of the 7th inst. [9 v.], a final disposition be made, and that a copy may be furnished him of all that which has been averted against him and his nephew, Wouter van Twiller, by the fiscal Dinclage. After deliberation it was resolved, first, to allow him to freight a ship for New Netherland with wood and fuel, and also to the freedoms and exemptions of New Netherland and West Indies, respectively; besides taking along a supercargo commissioned by his Honor. Concerning the second item of his petition, it is resolved, that the Commissioners for New Netherland shall give him satisfaction therein, who are requested to inquire what 1636 goods or the Company has to send thither."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXII, fol. 158 vo.

21 "Meriting [f] the directors at Amsterdam] Mr. Kiliaen van Renselaer, declaring that he is about to buy a small ship to be sent to New Netherland, offering to hire or buy a larger one, in this meeting should find it desirable to send some cargo; requesting thereupon a definite answer, as he is obliged to make certain decisions on this day. While in my opinion this honor, he was informed, that whereas the business is so pressing and the Commissioners for New Netherland cannot be in such a hurry, in order not to detain him, [it is resolved] that he may buy such a ship as seems best to him, and should there be space in the same, and the Company is in condition to send any goods, it will send some cargo with the same."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXII, fol. 160 vo.

Aug. "The 8th of August, the gunner of the fort [Fart Amsterdam] gave a parting feast [De Vries], and had a tent erected on one of the bastions of the fort, where a table and benches were set and many people hidden."—De Vries' notes in Jansen's Nav. N. Neth., 198.

14 Wouter van Twiller writes to the directors at Amsterdam: "We very patiently await daily your honors' answer, together with general instructions for redress, which is needed. All that is with reference to the ports of New Amsterdam which they think is open to them as well as to us. Those on the Fresh River [Connecticut] pretend that they do not come to trade, but to spend the rest of their days, but they are well stocked with goods and do not let any ships go by, if they are to be had."

... The crops this year have succeeded very well. We hope that we shall have bread enough for ourselves for one year. If agriculture were promoted a little, we could manage to have enough of everything, with the exception of salt, oil and vinegar."

"Cornelis van Voorst still resides in the Manor of Pavonia [Jersey City]. He does a great deal of mischief. The disputes between the patroons and the Company have undermined the respect for the Company, to the sorrow of those who would fain uphold it."—Voorst, the Director Wouter van Twiller and his council send a letter to the directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., which shows that Jacobus van Curlier and the elder Claes van Elsant are councillors of New Netherland, that Andries Hudde is provincial secretary, and that Jacques Bertin is the schout or chief prosecuting official at this time. As this general letter introduces us to a number of hitherto unknown facts relative to conditions on Manhattan Island and in the province, the following paragraphs are included here.

"Domine E. Bogardus, minister here [New Amsterdam], has very earnestly requested us [to secure] a schoolmaster to teach and train the youth of both Dutch and blacks, in the knowledge of Jesus Christ and to serve also as sexton and preacher. [See Aug. 4, 1677.]

"It would in our opinion also be advisable if the carpenters who are already here or are still to be sent, were put on a daily wage. In order that the Company might employ them according to their capacity. It would in that case be necessary to pay them every week, in order to stimulate their interest and inclination to work.

As to our fort, it falls entirely into ruin, as it is built up of wood, which at present are completely decayed. It is very necessary that it be entirely built of stone (as it was begun), as the palisades can not stand more than 3 or 4 years at the most, which would put your honors to excessive expense; and in case your honors should resolve to have this done, it would be necessary to have regard thereto in the sending over of men and materials, in which case the men doing the work ought to have extra wages, as in Pernambuco and other places, in order thereby to keep the men in a state of proper obedience and ready to perform their bounden duty."

"It is further suggested whether it would be advisable to explore the coast from Terra Neuf to Florida to see what trade might be carried on there. If your honors should be in favor of this, be pleased to advise us."—From contemporary copies of two Dutch letters, recently translated and translated by A. F. van Laer, in the Quarterly Jour. of the N. Y. State Hist. Assn. (Oct., 1919), 44-50.

Kiliaen van Renselaer requests of the directors at Amsterdam in a petition, in case there was no cargo of the Company in New Netherland, to be permitted to trade his own cargo and under what conditions. It will be seen that the petition in the hands of the Commissioners for New Netherland, to act upon the same and to report concerning that petition, as well as on the manner of redress, which should be inaugurated in New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIII, fol. 173 vo.

A minute of the meeting of the directors at Amsterdam states that the commissioners for New Netherland, "having been in conference with Mr. Renselaer, have reported, that through more extensive presentation on his former remonstrance [see Sept. 1], as recorded, the Messrs. Commissioners were requested to prepare duplicate drafts, concerning the way the trade on New Netherland can be thrown open, when [in every manner, it is important as showing an impelling cause for the establishment of free trade in New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIV, fol. 177 vo. Trade to Brazil was thrown open in 1658.

"Jan Jansen from Ilpendam, captured in Porto Calvo, and returning home by way of Bahia [Bahia], and now going to New Netherland as supercargo on the ship of [Mr. Kiliaen] van Renselaer, the 'Rensselaerswyck'—see Van Renselaer Bowier Manuscripts, 335, requests payment for his remaining wages to the amount of 60 guilders. Referred to the masters of accounts."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXV, fol. 177 vo.

"Henrick de Forest requests [of the directors at Amsterdam] a patent for 100 morgens of land granted him by the Council in New Netherland subject to the approval of this Chamber, on condition that he pay the dues prescribed by the regulations; all more fully set forth by his petition," which was referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 177 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Bio. Rec., XLIX: 225). Mr. Van Laer, the translator, annotates thus: "Henrick de Forest sailed soon after the date of this entry for New Netherland as mate on the ship 'Rensselaerswyck,' which arrived at Manhattan on March 5, 1657 [g.v.]. The supposition has been heretofore that he immediately after his arrival secured a grant from Wouter van Twiller for 100 morgens of land on Manhattan Island. The present entry shows that this grant was secured at an earlier date, consequently that De Forest had been in New Netherland before 1656, probably in the ship 'Rensselaerswyck,' and later in Calvo, the 'Rensselaerswyck' on the Manhatton Island in 1652 with Captain David Pietersen de Vries."—De Forest left De Vries at St. Mary's, but may have come to New Netherland in the service of the West India Co.—See April 16, 1653 (Addenda), and Nov. 23, 1653.

"A letter from the states general, dated August 9th, was read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, in which it is recommended that satisfaction be given Lubbert van Disclagen, fiscal of New Netherland, whereupon it is 'resolved, that a reply be made by the Commissioners for New Netherland.'—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXIX, fol. 181.

A letter written from the Texel, on the 26th, by Pieter Claessen Croon, is read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam, in which he reports "the arrival also of the 'Witte Leeuw' [White Lion]; also the ship 'Seven Star' [Seven Stars] from New Netherland, which has passed by unnoticed; and Messrs. Blommert and de Vries were delegated immediately to find said ship, visit her, and further to put things in order. —Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXX, fol. 184.

Following out their duties, delegated to them by the directors at Amsterdam the previous day, "Messrs. Blommert and de Vries set out that they then declared that they recently sold off the ship 'Haringh' and have deposited it with Mr. Barteringh, and further, that they have brought the ship 'Seven Star' here [to Amsterdam] to the pier."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXI, fol. 184.

A minute of the directors at Amsterdam states: "A letter was read from the Director [Wouter van Twiller] of New Netherland, dated March 22, 1656. Also another from the Director, dated..."
The text of the letter was discovered by A. J. P. van Laar. The ship which brought these correspondence fetched a cargo consisting of 7094 otter and beaver skins and some other goods brought over as freight, from a captured prize by Jonathan de Necker.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXII, fol. 185.

The general letter from the director and council in New Netherland, dated Aug. 14, 1636 (g. v.), is read at a meeting of the directors at Amsterdam. This letter was recently discovered by A. J. P. van Laar. The ship which brought this correspondence fetched a cargo consisting of 7094 otter and beaver skins and some other goods brought over as freight, from a captured prize by Jonathan de Necker.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXII, fol. 194. See also Sept. 29.

A minute of the meeting of the directors at Amsterdam states: "Mr. Blom- 267 299 melt presents a document signed by W. van Twiller, dated August 12, 1636, by which he allows Jacobus van Corler, commis, to send over for his own account to Mr. Heinrich van Donselaer [Dompse- 300 laer, uncle of Jacobus van Curler] ten beaver-skins, which are further to be delivered according to his order to Gossen van Corler as a gift, which skins are in charge of the skipper."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXIV, fol. 184.

The following minute is recorded by the directors at Amsterdam: "Samuel Axe, captain, arrived with the "Sevenster" from New Netherland, requests that the tobacco and hides, which he has 305 captured on a Dutch ship under the name of De Mindert, may be put in a warehouse, and that the account having been made, of what shall come to the Company and what to him, he may receive his share. Resolved, that the goods shall be put in our warehouse by the commissioners, and further that no invoice be taken."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXVII, fol. 192.

A minute of the following transaction was made by the directors at Amsterdam: Mr. Blommer and the advocate delegated to give information relative to the ship of David Pietersen [de Vries], which has arrived from New Netherland, have reported, that the ship named the "David" lies in the Vlie [channel between the islands of Vlieland and Velscherbrug], and that he personally had gone to Hoo- 312 hom [his home]. That they then addressed themselves to the directors of the Chamber of Hooim, making known their authority; who have agreed to guard the rights of the Company, and, if necessary, to apprize the Chamber at Amsterdam. For this purpose, they have invited the person of David Pietersen to appear at their meeting and proposed to him, that he should discharge his entire cargo and store it in the warehouses of the Company and pay duties to the same, which he promised to do, as far as the Company's claim was just."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXV, fol. 196.

It is interesting to note, in connection with trade at this time at Albany, the following letter from Van Rensselaer to Planck:

"Since I have paid cash for these (goods) without including any expenses for packing, boat and lighter-freight, ocean freight, interest, freight, taxes, and also damages, with your commission (of 5%) amounts to nearly 50%; therefore (you) must sell all such goods as can be sold, somewhat higher than 50%. But I do not wish my own people to be charged more than 60%; since they must gain it by their hard labor. But from other people, for whom I need not care, you may take as much as is the market rate and you can get."—Van Rensselaer Beyoue Manuscripts, 74.

"A letter was read [at the meeting of the directors at Amsterdam] from their High Mightinesses, dated October 6, 1636, concerning the case of Lubbert van Dillen [former factor in New Netherland], and requesting an answer within 14 days to their High Mightinesses, to which the commissioners for New Netherland are directed to reply.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXVIII, fol. 191.

"Captain Samuel Axe requests [from the directors at Amsterdam] his goods arrived from New Netherland in the Company's ship, provided he pay the Company's duties, and the payment of the draft made out by Wouter van Twiller on the Company." The commissioners for New Netherland were requested to "satisfy the same."—Records of old West India Co. No. 14, CXXX, fol. 185 vo. There are no records in the Minutes or in manuscript about the goods which Axe had brought from New Netherlands, whereupon, "it was re- solved provisionally to advise with Messrs. Conrads and de Vries, whether these goods should not be declared a good prize."—Ibid., CXXXIII, fol. 202 vo.

"The wife of Jan Hillebrantsen, who more than 2½ years ago went out to New Netherland as a freeman and was accepted there as a carpenter at 20 guilders a month, petitions [the directors at Amsterdam] to receive two months' wages of her husband, just as she received them last year."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXI, fol. 198 vo.

Mr. Cou purchased submits [to the directors at Amsterdam] that it will be necessary to send a ship to New Netherland, also to take measures regarding the government there and to find a suitable person for the office of commander. The Commissioners [for New Netherland] are instructed to look around for a capable person and to find a suitable ship and to report at the next meeting.—

The directors at Amsterdam resolve, among other things, to send the ship "Haringhe" to Curacao and New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 204 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Bic. Rec., XLIX: 228).

Willem Rieweutsjen, skipper of the ship "De Sevenster" (Seven Stars), requests the directors at Amsterdam for a settlement of his pay, and further offers his services. His request is referred to the Commissioners for New Netherland to dispose of the matter.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXXXIV, fol. 205.

"Cornelis Volckertsen [Viele], having arrived home more than a year ago in the ship 'Endrecht' from New Netherland and not being found recorded in the ship's book, requires the directors at Amsterdam to receive his wages, from that time on at ten guilders per month, as he was sick when the payment was made, as he says." The directors refuse "until further proof shall be forthcoming."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXV, fol. 203 vo.

A college is projected in Massachusetts on Oct. 28—Nov. 7.—Oct. 28—Nov. 7.

See Addenda.

"Frederick Lubbertsen, freeman in New Netherland, requests [of the directors at Amsterdam] that his wife, Styngen Jan's daughter, may join him at the first opportunity, according to the declaration of Wouter van Twiller, and as there is still due her husband by the Company, from over three years ago, six months' wages at 20 guilders per month, which the Directors have always promised to give her when her husband should return, and he now remains there [in New Netherland], therefore she requests that she may receive the same. It is referred to the commissioners for New Netherland.—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CX, fol. 209 (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Bic. Rec., XLIX: 228).

Mr. Reepmaceaiker submits to the directors at Amsterdam that David Pietersen [de Vries] requests to communicate to the meeting at point some case, whenever the New Netherland Company agrees, "decide that he [De Vries] shall have to address himself to the Commissioners for New Netherland."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXLI, fol. 215 vo.

Mr. Couwadres declares that David Pietersen [de Vries] requests to be sent as Director to New Netherland; and if this can not be done, that he may be given permission to plant a colony in New Netherland. Resolved [by the directors at Amsterdam] that a more capable person is needed for Director."—Records of old West India Co., No. 14, CXLI, fol. 216 vo. (trans. in N. Y. Gen. & Bic. Rec., XLIX: 228). Captain De Vries established a colony on Staten Island, in 1638. For an account of his published journal of voyages, see Bibliography, Vol. V.

On this day (or March 9—see 1636, Sept. 11), the ship "Rensselaerswyck" anchors "at the Manhattan," and remains there because the river is closed. "The cargo was discharged and Hendrik de Forest, the trader and mate, remained in the hired warehouse to carry on trade, while the ship went up the river to the colony on the 26th and dropped anchor on the 7th of April opposite Fort Orange."—Van Rensselaer Beyoue Manuscripts, 75. This reference to De Forest, "the supposed founder of the town of Harlem," shows that he arrived in the spring of 1637, and not, as stated by Riker, in the fall of 1636.—Ibid., 31. See also Sept. 11, 1636; and July 23, 1638.
The first general court of Connecticut is held at Hartford, and May 1637 The Connecticut towns assume powers of government.—Winson, III: 336, 369.

June 16 The Indians deed Staten Island to Van Twiller.—See Addenda under this date.

July 16 Two Indian chiefs of Marechtkwick (Brooklyn), appearing before Van Twiller and his council, presented a deed of a deed to Van Twiller of "the two islands, situated in the Helles- gate," the larger "called Tenkenas [now Wards Island] and the smaller Minnahanookass" (now Randall's Island).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 5. For fuller particulars, see Manats Maps, II: 195, and Man. Corn. Coun. (1835) 495.

August 4 Adam Rolands, a man requesting to be sent to New Netherland as schoolmaster, reader, and preacher, "was accepted, as recommended, upon his good testimonials and the trial of his gifts," on Aug. 4, 1637; and "was sent thither, implying that he was examined and accepted on Aug. 4, 1637, and sent later. This evidence is in a minute of July 15, 1639, in the acts of the "Deputies of the Classis on Foreign Affairs" at Amsterdam.—Eccles. Rec., I: 19, 112. The reference to is Adam Roedants or Roelants (also called Adam Roelantsen Groen), of Dockum in Friesland, situate in the extreme north of The Netherlands. This is the earliest known date connected with the history of education in New Netherland, with the exception of Bogardus's request for a schoolmaster in Van Twiller's letter of Aug. 14, 1636.

When Roelantsen received this appointment, he was about 31 years of age, and, as he is found in New Amsterdam as early as June 30, 1638, he must have sailed with Kieft in "den Harinck" (Herring), which left the Texel late in September, 1637, and arrived at New Amsterdam on March 28, 1638. He then figured as defendant in a suit for the recovery of an estate.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 62 (June 10, 1638). In the year 1638, he was also involved, as plaintiff or defendant, in several suits. On Oct. 19, 1638, he made a deposition, "at the request of Domine Bogarde" (Bogardus), in which he was referred to as "schoolmaster aged about 32 years," and wherein he declared "that in the year 1631, Grietje Reyne, being with the deponent at the Strand of the East River, near the late warehouse for cargoes [which had since burned down], he heard the sailors of the ship The Souther, then lying in the roadstead, cry out to Grietje," certain uncomplimentary remarks.—Ibid., 41: Kilpatrick, The Dutch Schools of New Neth. and Colonial N. T., 41: and his article, in Educ. Review (1903), XXVIII: 381. This is the only evidence which reveals Roelantsen's presence in New Amsterdam in 1631, and not a scintilla of evidence is known as to when he came, how long he remained, what his employment was, or when he returned to Holland; yet, upon the mere fact of his presence in New Amsterdam, in 1631, Dunster and a host of succeeding writers have assumed the founding of the first school in New Netherland. —See Dunster, Hist. of School of Collegiate Ref. Dutch Ch., 17; examination of the subject by Kilpatrick, op. cit. But we know now that it was Domine Bogardus who, in 1636 (see Aug. 14), urged that a schoolmaster be secured "to teach and train the youth of both Dutch and blacks."—Quarterly Jour. of N. Y. State Hist. Assn., I: 48.

O'Callaghan (Hist. N. Neth., I: 483) has placed Roelantsen among the settlers of Rensselaerswyck, in 1639; but his list, which was compiled from the books of monthly wages kept in the patroon's colony, cannot be depended upon for accuracy of statement, and a later examination of the same records, made by the editor of the Van Rensselaer Bowier Manuscripts, has convinced him that O'Callaghan's mention of the name of "Adam Roelantsen van Hamelewaerd," in connection with the colony of Rensselaerswyck, is clearly an error. Moreover, the schoolmaster has an almost perfect record in New Amsterdam at this period. He was a party to several suits, in January, 1639, and August, 1640; and on Sept. 20, 1640, he had a suit before the council against Gillis de Vocht for wages alleged to be due for washing, which was not allowed then, because the "year" of contract had "not yet expired".—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 66, 72, 73. As a schoolmaster in New Amsterdam in 1641; and on Feb. 7, 1642 (q.v.), he contracted with Jan Temnisen, carpenter, for building a house, "to be ready by first of May next."—Ibid., 16, 18, 76. This house was on the north side of the present Stone St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts., and it adjoined the tavern property of Philip Gerardus van Culemborg, 1606; Innes, New Am., and Its People, 61; Dunster, op. cit., 17. He obtained a grant of the garden lot next to Gerard's, on Aug. 7, 1643.—Liber GGe: 86 Aug. (now in N. Y. State Libr., Albany). Movements to this house were a contracted for in November, 1646.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 35; Innes, op. cit., 64. On Dec. 26, he made out a conveyance of his house and lot to Goyert Aerten, probably because of his fear of punishment for having grossly insulted the wife of a neighbour, for which in 1637, he was tried before the council and sentenced to be whipped in public and then banished; but on the 17th, the council, in consideration of his four motherless children and on account of the approach of a cold winter, gave him a temporary reprieve, and ordered that sentence should be carried out at a future time.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 36, 169; N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 153.

In 1643, Roelantsen was engaged as a weighmaster in the service of the West India Co. at Manhattan.—Dunster, op. cit., 17. In 1646, while he was in Holland, his wife, Lynic Martens, died, and therefore curators were appointed to administer her estate, and to care for the young children "till the arrival of the father or some news from him." One of these curators was Jan Stevenzen, the new schoolmaster.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 99.

Roelantsen, returning in 1646 via Amsterdam, in the ship "St. Jacobs," of which Haye Jansen was skipper, arrived in New Amsterdam in July. Not having been allowed by the authorities to undergo inspection, he got into trouble with the fiscal, who sued him for slander. He was also sued by Augustine Heerman for the passage money of himself and a son, but proved satisfactory to the council that he had worked his way over as a seaman, and that his son had been allowed free passage by his master because of his youth. Roelantsen, in contemplation of a voyage to the West Indies, he gave power of attorney to Jacob Tyzen, to take charge of his children and the administration of his affairs during his absence.—Ibid., 51. He is still found in New Amsterdam in 1657, as a private in the burgher corps (O'Callagh., Hist. N. Neth., II: 595); and in an action before the court of burgomasters and schepens, on Feb. 17, 1653, he was called "the woodcutter." It appears that one Stoffel Ehers was charged with calling Roelantsen "from his work in the Church, outside the Fort." Ehers denied "having called Adam Roelantsen out of the Fort or beaten him," which shows that Roelantsen was employed on the church in the fort and not in the "packing house, the old church on Pearl Street," as stated by Innes, op. cit., 65.—Rem. N. Am., I: 64. The last school in New Netherland was another action before the council, in March, 1653.—Ibid., 62, 70.

Willem Kieft is commissioned and sworn as director-general of Sept. New Netherland in the place of Wouter van Twiller.—N. Y. Col. Docs., 2: 104. See March 28, 1648.

The West India Company's bakery was built during Van Twiller's administration, namely between 1631 and this year.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 16. This bakery was also mentioned in an grant of an adjoining lot, made on March 29, 1647, to Rem Jansen. By June 6, 1649, the company's bakery lot had been granted to Juriaen Andriessen.—Dutch Grants, Block 1, Lot 1, Vol. II: 388.

The earliest printed description of New Netherland, in English, appeared in Capt. John Underhill's News from America, printed and published in London in this year. It is given on p. 19, to follow: "The trade I want time to set forth the excellence of the whole Country; but if you would know the garden of New England, then must you glace your eye upon Hudsons river, a place exceeding all yet named, the River affords fish in abundance, as Sturgeon, Salmon, and many delicate varieties of fish that naturally abounds in the River; He was the first man that has in those parts." This estimate of Underhill is particularly interesting, because it was he who proposed to lead the first party of English settlers to New Netherland in the year following this publication.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 25-26.

Jean Celes (Seals, Se-Ce) an Englishman, received a lease, grant, or permission, at about this time, to occupy a plantation lying north of the later Rutgers Swamp. The location on modern maps was about west of Mac dougal St., Its south line being 235 feet north of Canal St., and it extended as far north as the Chane of the River. This land later became very well known as "Old Jan's Land." After Old Jan's death, Tonis Nyssen received a grant of the tract, April 3, 1647.—Liber GG: 208 (Albany). The parcel later became a part of the Trinity Church property.—See The Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 150. See also D. F. E. 65.

Joukhee Jacob van Culer, who, as factor of the West India Co., had built Fort Good Hope on the Connecticut River in 1631 (Jameson, N. N. Neth., 203, 308), took possession of a tract of 200 acres in Harlem, sometime before 1638, which land was named Otterspoor (Otter's pasture).—See the land tract by Van Tienhoven from Director-General Kieft, in July, 1645, on behalf of Van Tienhoven. It appears to have been the first patent obtained for this farm.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1, 5, 7, 365, 369; Riker, Revised Hist. of Harlem, 119, 127, 131, 798. See also Addenda.

The town of New Amsterdam, received in this year a grant from Director Kieft, near Werpoese (an island village: see Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 987). The plantation was in the neighborhood of the intersection of Grand and Mulberry Sts.—See N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 14; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 45, 51. The property was later granted by Gov. Fletcher to Col. Nicholas Bayard.—Liber Patents, VII: 170 (Albany). See also Manatus Maps, II: 189; C. Pls. 41, 43, 42a, Vol. II: Aug. 3, 1639, and Aug. 7, 1640.

A deposition, made on Jan. 12, 1645, before the provincial secretary, reveals that there appeared in New Amsterdam, on board the ship "Dolphin," in 1638, Jan Jansen Schepmoe, his wife, and two children, the youngest a nursing babe, also Leendert Arentsen and Barent Jacobsen Cob.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 139 (N. Y. State Library).

In this year, Wouter van Twiller received a ground-brief for 100 morgens, lying near Sorapcikiana, bounded north by the road from the Scheldt along Jan van Rotterdam's land, west by Jan van Rotterdam's plantation and that of Edward Fiscook, and extending so far into the woods as to include the said 100 morgens, provided that "all such roads and foot-paths as already run through this land shall continue there for the use of the inhabitants."—See Manatus Maps, II: 190-91, and C. Pls. 41, 43, 42a. The reservation of existing "roads and footpaths" for the people, forever, is the earliest reference of this sort we have met with in any land record pertaining to Manhattan Island.

Sometime between 1638 and 1642, the first ferry to Long Island was established. It ran from the present Dover St., corner of Pearl St., to Fulton St., Brooklyn. The earliest ferry-man of record was Cornelis Dill.—See Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 942. Chronology, 1845, and Jan. 24, 1643.

Massachusetts colonists settle in Rhode Island.—See Addenda.

Willem Kieft arrives this day at New Amsterdam, in a ship of the West India Co., named "De Haricink" (Herring), and assumes his duties as director-general, in place of Van Twiller. He had been commissioned to the post Sept. 3, 1637, and the ship had left the Texel at the end of that month.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 96 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2d ser., II: 279; Jameson, N. N. Neth., 203, 205, 3751 N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 101; Van Rensselaer, Rec. Amer. Hist. N. Y. at this time are revealed in this deposition, made before the provincial secretary at the request of Director-General Kieft. On April 16, 1645, by Jacob Steffelen, master workman, Gillis Pietersen van der Gouw, master carpenter, and Tymen Jansen, ship carpenter. They declared: "it is true and truthful that on the 28th of March in the year 1638, being the day on which Mr. Willem Kieft safely arrived here by ship, the said Kieft ("de Haricink"), at which time Mr. Kieft found Fort Amsterdam totally and wholly in a ruinous condition, so that people could go in and out of said fort on all sides except alone at the stone bastion (punt), all the cannon off the gun carriages, five Bouwerie-decants to decay; the goods got a living and all on hand belonging to the Company on said Bouwerie in any other places, but all from the smallest even to the largest were in the possession of other people. Moreover, every vessel was unseerviceable, the yacht Prins Willem alone being fit for use, and one new one on the stocks. The whole of the house in the Fort is yet in need of considerable repair, as well as the 3 stone houses, the wooden church, lodge and smith's. One girt and saw mill in operation; another which is out of repair, the third, burned. The place where the Public store stood can with difficulty be discovered. The late Director Twiller hath also allowed other work to be performed for divers persons. All which we the deponents declare to be true and faithful," etc. The deposition was witnessed by Wybrand Pietersen and Mauritis Jansen. This translation was made by O'Callaghan, who has accurately interpreted the original—Records N. Neth., I: 96 (N. Y. State Library), which cannot be said of the very important text to be found in N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 379. A comparison of these two translations gives a good idea of the difficulties encountered with respect to correct interpretations of local history, when not derived from original texts. The colony of New Sweden is founded.—See Addenda.

Cornelis van Tienhoven is appointed secretary of New Netherland, and bookkeeper of the proprietors, at this time. See this date, at a compensation of 16 florins per month and 200 florins per annum for board money.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 10 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: S. Dr. Johannes la Montaigne is appointed a member of Director-General Kieft's provincial council, at 35 florins per month.—Records N. Neth., IV: 1 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 5. Puritans, led by Davenport and Eaton, leave Boston to settle New Haven.—See Addenda.

An ordinance is passed prohibiting private trade in furs, regulating intercourse with ships in port, establishing court days, and prohibiting immorality, etc. This is the earliest recorded ordinance in reference to the city.—Laws & Ords. N. Neth. (1638—73), 10-12. One of the provisions of this ordinance was to prevent sailors from vessels in the port of New Amsterdam from remaining on shore over night without consent from the director-general. On June 13, 1647, two sailors were sentenced for tearing down such an ordinance that had been affixed to the mainmast of the ship to which they were attached, and were required to be chained to a wheel-barrow or hand-barrow and employed at hard labour for three months, subsisting on bread and water.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 168-9. Jan Jansen Damen, received from Director-General Kieft a lease for six years on land situated to the north of the "Company's Garden" and to the south of Jan Damen's land, and extending from the river to the ocean.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1 (corrected translation by A. J. F. van Lier, in Bibliography Bulletin, No. 46, N. Y. State Educ. Dept., p. 19). This is probably the earliest mention of the company's garden.—See Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 946. For this same tract of land, Cornelis Groesens received a ground-brief dated Jan. 10, 1645 (not of record, but recited in Records N. Neth., III: 33, Albany). This land lay west of Broadway, extending to the Hudson River, beginning at a point about 65 feet north of the present Rector St. and running along the old line of Thames St.—See Castello Plan, II: 341; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 365.

On the same day, Jan Jansen Damen received another six-year lease (Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1), for a tract on "the east of the town" (the present Broadway), opposite the land "already leased," being on the further side of Broadway from what was later Trinity churchyard.—See Castello Plan, II: 358-361; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, 82, 821, and 87, Vol. II. Damen seems to have already had land on both sides of the highway under lease, as these two leaseholds were bounded on the north by other land of Damen's. These latter tracts were later, so said to be patented to him by ground-brief dated April 25, 1644 (p. 50). Kieft leases to Wouter van Twiller "the Bouwerie No. 1," belonging to the Hon's Directors of the Incorporated West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam . . . for the term of three consecutive years, commencing the first of May, A9, 1641, and that for... the sum of Two Hundred and fifty Carous builders, payable yearly, together with the just sixth part of all the produce with which God shall bless the field” (cit.)—Records N. Neth. (trans. by O'Callaghans), I: 2 (N. Y. State Library). This farm is often referred to as "the Noble Company's Great Bouwery." For its boundaries, see Manatus Maps, II: 197-58; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 190; and the 1872 land parcel of 60 acres, with the harbor on one side. It was deeded to Stuyvesant on March 12, 1634, and confirmed to him by Nicolls on Nov. 6, 1667. See March 22, 1659; March 12, 1651; the N. Records Neth. (O'Callaghans's trans.), I: 39-37 (N. Y. State Library).

17. An ordinance is passed by the director-general and council against improper drinking, interdicting and forbidding any sale of wine, except at the store-house of the West India Co., and penalizing the harbouring of sailors on shore over night.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth. (1648-74), 12-13.

18. Ulrich Lopolt is "Fiscal" of New Netherland, as is shown by an instrument prepared to open the trade for tobacco in 1637. An ordinance was passed in this present year, in 18.

June an ordinance against clandestine trade in New Netherland is passed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 15-16.

19. An ordinance is passed by Director-Gen. Kiefert and his council authorizing the issuing of patents to freemen for lands that they are already cultivating. This is done in response to a petition from divers of the freemen to the council, for conveyances. By article XXI of the grant or Charter of Liberties and Exemptions (see June 7, 1629), private persons who settled as freemen in smaller numbers than required for patronships were accorded possession of such land as they might be able to cultivate properly.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 16; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 9-10; Van Reniss-laer Bouwer Manuscript, 149. The number of patents granted now increased materially. At the expiration of ten years after entrance on a plantation, a yearly payment of one-tenth of the crops was to be made to the West India Co. A resolution of Director-Gen. Stuyvesant and his council postponed for a year after July 5, 1649, the collection of the tenth that were due on farms occupied at this time more than ten years.—Cal. Hist., MSS., Dutch, 110. July

19. Willem Bredenbeek, as record on this date, is "under schout of New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghans's trans.), I: 23 (N. Y. State Library). The translator has adopted the English term "sherrif" for "schout," which is inadmissible here.

20. Jan Jansen, an extensive land holder on Manhattan Island, intending to absent himself from the country, gives a power of attorney to Cornelis van Tienhoven over all his property in New Netherland.—Records N. Neth., op. cit., I: 31.

Andries Hudde or Hudden receives a ground-brief for 100 morgens (200 acres) of land, which had formerly been settled as a tobacco plantation by Hendrick de Forest. Hudde married Georg-tuyt Brenta, De Forest's widow. This land was at Harlem, later known as Montagne's Flat, between 90th and 124th St.,—Liber GG: 21 (Albany). This was the first recorded ground-brief given by the director-general and council for land on Manhattan Island. (See Key to Manatus Maps, II: 194); also Risser, Hist. of Harlem, Map Manuscripts, 75 & 76; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 9. See also May 9, 1647, for re-grant of this land to Johannes de la Montagne; also Aug. 28, 1650. See also Addenda, April 26, 1638.

21. Hendrick de Forest, the earliest grantee, and the first person who had business in what is now Harlem, New York City, died on July 26, 1657. His brother-in-law, Dr. Johannes de la Montagne having liquidated his estate, now records specifications for July 25. Everardus Bogardus recorded the conditions and terms upon which he had sold, in Fort Amsterdam, to the highest bidder, for the account of De Forest's widow and heirs, among other things, "the house 42 feet long, 18 feet wide with 2 extensions, encircled with round palisades behind it; a 72 acres field. It was deeded to Stuyvesant on March 12, 1634, and confirmed to him by Nicolls on Nov. 6, 1667. See March 22, 1659; March 12, 1651; the N. Records Neth. (O'Callaghans's trans.), I: 57, 59 (N. Y. State Library), corrected in De Forest's A Waleson Family in Am., I: 84. See also Dec. 6, 1642; May 9, 1647; and Manatus Maps, II: 197-54. See Addenda.

Claes van Elanden and Wybrand Pietersen are appointed tobacco-coinspectors.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 63.

In order to force the tobacco planters in New Netherland to properly cure their tobacco, an ordinance is passed which requires that "All the tobacco which shall be clipped or sent from New Netherland, shall be first brought to the appointed Warehouse to be there examined, marked and weighed." A duty of five pounds of tobacco is to be paid for every 100 pounds exported. All legal instruments, to be valid, must be written by the secretary at New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 16-17 cf., also 24.

The West India Co., to encourage immigration to New Netherland, on land is proposed to open the trade for tobacco is now to be provided for by merchandise to be transported only in the company's ships, and that on all goods going to New Netherland a duty of ten per cent. be paid, and on all coming from that country duty of fifteen per cent.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 113-15. This plan fell through.—Fan Reniss-laer Bouwer Manuscript, 110—117.

Philippe du Treux (or Philip de Truy) is mentioned as "court messenger" to the provincial court of New Netherland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghans's trans.), I: 48 (N. Y. State Library).

All persons in the service of the West India Co. are "commanded not to quit the Island of Manhattan, without the express permission of the Honourable Commander." A forfeiture of three months' wages is the penalty for disobedience.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 18.

Prior to this year, two mills were erected on Manhattan Island, respectively west and south-west of the fort, as shown on the Manatus Map of this year.—See C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II, and II: 205-7. From negative evidence, it seems likely that these mills existed even prior to 1653, the date of Van Twiller's arrival, as they are not referred to among the public works erected during his administration. See 1637-8.

In this year was drawn the original of the Manatus Maps, showing the Island of Manhattan and its surroundings as far as Sandy Hook, which original is known to us from two contemporary copies, one in the Villa Castello, near Florence, Italy, and the other in the Library of Congregatio in Propria (or Henry Harris). On these maps are indicated the fort and mills belonging to the West India Company, the bouweries, or farms, of the early settlers, and many of the important topographical features. They are reproduced and described in Vol. II, C. Pls. 41 and 42.

The established roadstead or anchorage for ships in port is shown by anchors on the Manatus Maps.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965. The negro quarter of the slaves of the West India Co. is also laid down on the Manatus surveys. Its location, apparently, was on the East River shore, just north of the Sav Kill, at about the present 77th St. No mention has been found of this negro quarter in any records or printed works of the period.

By this year, 30 "Bouweries" were planted in New Netherland in place of seven, and "one hundred more" were expected to be made "in a short time from the plantations which were taken up."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150, 151.

In this year, the fur trade with the Indians was "thrown free and open to every body" in New Netherland, instead of, as formerly, being reserved to the West India Co.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150; Fan Reniss-laer Bouwer Manuscripts, 50; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 15. This stimulated immigration.

Newport, R. I., is settled. See also March, 1638.

At the beginning of this year (date not given), an agreement is made by Jacobus van Curfer, commissary of the carps, for the sale to Cornelis van Tienhoven, secretary of New Netherland, "of the Bouwery & appurtenances thereof, heretofore occupied by

- . . . Curfer, situated on the Island Manhattan, opposite the Bouwery of Johannes la Menteynge." The sale is for land of 100 morgens, a house, various farming implements, four mares, three cows, Jan.
boating and tackle. The purchase price was 3,500 guilders.—

A contract is made between Cornelis van Tienhoven, party of the first part, and Claes Cornelissen Swits and Jan Claes Alters, parties of the second part, "for the hire of the Bouwy heretofore occupied by Jacob van Curler situate over against Johannes la Montaenga's Bouwy called Vredensiel." The contract included the delivery to Swits and Alters of the house, outhouses, and implements, and 100 engoons of land, as well as four mares and twelve cows. The price was "six thousand eight hundred—

Varckens (now Blackwells) Island was being farmed before Jan. 24, 1619, by Jan Claessen Alters, and we learn from a report of referrees, of Aug. 30, 1642, that improvements were made on the island by him. The island is laid down and named on the Castello-Manatus Map, of 1619 (see Vol. II, Pl. 41, and data on
p. 207). We do not know what name was given to this island by the Indians. It was not Minnmahanonck, as has been generally supposed, for that was the name of Randles Island,—for which, see July 6, 1617.

The 10th February, I have begun to make a plantation, a ten mile and a half or two miles above tho fort, as there was there a fine location, and full thirty-one engoons of maize-land, where there were no trees to remove; and hay-land lying all together, sufficient for two hundred engoons, while I went there to live, half on account of the pleasure of it, as it was all situated along the river. I leased out the plantation of Staten Island, as no people had been sent me from Holland, as was stipulated in the contract which I made with Frederick de Vries, a manager of the West India Company.—"Voyages De Vries (trans. by Henry C. Murphy)," 129.

In a court proceeding of this date, it is stated that goods that were brought over to New Amsterdam by the ship "Love" (Liefde) were sold on board ship by members of the crew, contrary to order.
For this, the captain, Martin Cael, is held responsible and condemned to pay a month's freight, 1,290 guilders (256L), one-half to the Go to the West India Co., one-fourth towards the building of a new church, and the remainder to the fiscal.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 66. From this we see that a "new church" was contemplated as early as this date.

A contract is made, in a deposition of this date, of Isaac Aller-ton's ship, "whereof Mr. Peter Geryn is skipper, lying in the roadstead in front of the Island of Manhathe, belonging to the ... West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam." The farm contained 574 acres.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 94 (N. Y. State Library).

On April 4, 1622, Claes Cornelissen Swits conveys to Maryn Adriaensen a house and plantation heretofore in occupation of Master Finch & Hans Hansen, situated on the North River of New Netherland near the plantation heretofore occupied by Tonis Nyssen, for the sum of fl. 400, calculated at 20 st. to the guilder.—Records N.
Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 73 (N. Y. State Library). A note by the translator adds, "This farm was granted 20 November, 1642, to Thomas Hall, and is described as being bounded North by the plantation of the late Director van Twiller and East by the Cripple bush. It lay on that part of the Island called Greenwich, in the present North Ward of the City of New York.”

On May 7, 1632, the map of Massachusetts Bay records in his Journals
Mr. Daye, at the charge of Mr. Glover, who died on sea hitherward.
The first thing which was printed was the freemen's Oath; the next was an almanac made for New England by Mr. William Fierce, Mariner; the next was the Psalms newly turned into meter.—Evans, "Bibliogr., II, 1, citing "Hitchens's Jour.," I: 89, owns a copy of this rare Psalm Book (1629)." The Daye printing-press was the first in the English-speaking colonies of America.

Jacob Stoffelen, of Zierikzee (prov. of Zeeland, Netherlands), deposits a petition with the West India Co. during the administration of Wouter van Twiller, as overseer of the negroes belonging to the company, who were in engaged in building Fort Amsterdam," which was completed in the year 1615, also in cutting building timber and firewood for the Large House as well as the groundhouse, splitting palisades, clearing land," etc.—N. Y. Col.
Docs., XIV: 18.

On June 7, an inspection made by Secretary Cornelis van Tienhooven with Jansen showed that they "found twelve Apple trees, 40 Peach and 73 cherry trees, 26 Sage plants and 15 Vines."—Idem, 128. On July 25, Jansen gave a satisfaction to Dircksen for the receipt of 680 Carolus guilders as part payment.—Idem., 145.

Regarding Jansen's banishment, see Aug. 3, 1619.

Director-Gen. Kieft leases for a term of six years to Leestford Amesteyn or Arentsen "the Bouwy No. 5," belonging to the West India Co. and "heretofore occupied by Pieter Blyveldt."—Records N.
Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 114 (N. Y. State Library).
O'Callaghan, in a note, says: "The Bouwy mentioned in the above Lease contained Seventy eight Acres (39 morgens). It was situated behind Corlears plantation at Corlear’s Hook on the May

East River and was patented to Leonard Arentsen on October, 1645.—Beek GG, 120. It seems to have been subsequently a part of the De Lancey farm.—Hoffman. Estate & Rights of New York, III: 242.” Judge Hoffman, however, is in error in this statement about Blyvelt’s Bouwery (No. 5), subsequently Leonard Arentsen and London known as “his farm,” the land was all subsequently divided up between the Stuyvans; and it did not become part of De Lancey’s estate. Spielman & Brush show the “Leendert Farm” perfectly. See, further, Oct. 19, 1645; and The Manatus Maps, II: 188–89.

Director Gen. Killen leases to Hendrick Harmsen the bouwery
No. 5 of the West India Co., “heretofore occupied by Mr. Jacob van Curler,” including the cattle, for a term of six years, beginning on May 1, 1639.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 115 (N. Y. State Library). In a note, O’Callaghan says: “The above Bouwery contained somewhat over 50 acres. It was situaated east of the Bowery and north of Division Street.—Hoffman’s Estate & of New York, II: 236.” See also N. Y. Col. Docs.,

Barent Dirckszen conveys to Gerrit Jansen from Oldenburgh and Volckert Eversten a tobacco plantation, bounded southerly by the plantation of Mr. Piscock and northerly by that of Mr.
Lesley. The purchase price was 1,186 guilders, payable in instalments.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 119 (N. Y. State Library). This bouwery was at the present Christopher St. and Hudson River. See Manatus Maps, II: 191, and C. Ph.
41, 42, 42a, No. 11, Vol. II. On the same day, Dirckszen made a contract for a lease to the same parties “of the Bouwery called Walesteasis,” for a term of six years.—Records N. Neth. (O’Calla-ghan’s trans.), I: 118 (N. Y. State Library).

1732
In a deposition, undated, but made during the summer of 1699, mention is made of “the path near the Fresh Water.”—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 126 (N. Y. State Library).

Gerrit Dirckszen and Gerrit Jansen from Oldenburgh contract to lease Willem Willemsen (William Williamson) andJan Hansen (John Hobson) “the plantation situate between the plantation of Jan Pietersen and Mr. Lesley on the North river of New Netherland, heretofore cultivated by Jan van Roterdam and at present occupied by Barent Dirckszen Swart.” The lease to these two Englishmen is for a term of four years, within which time they covenant to erect on said plantation two houses, to wit: one 18 ft. wide and 30 ft. long, and one 16 ft. wide and 20
ft. long, which are to revert to the lessors (sic) on the expiration of the lease.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 124, 49, 97.

Evidence of business relations in Holland between Jonas Bronck, first settler of the present Borough of the Bronx, and Andrres Hudde, early settler of upper Manhattan, is shown in an acknowledgment of this date, in which Hudde acknowledges the “full satisfaction in the City of Amsterdam long before the executing hereof” of a repayment made by Bronck “arising from loaned or disbursed moneys.”—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 139 (N. Y. State Library).

Before Secretary Van Tienhoven appear “Mr. Jonas Bronck on the one part and Pieter Andrieszen and Lourens Duysts on the other part,” who make the following agreement: “Mr. Bronck shall show the above-mentioned persons a certain parcel of land belonging to him situate on the mainland opposite the flat of the Manhatas, on which aforesaid land shall they be at liberty to plant Tobacco and Maize, on the express condition that they shall be bound to clear every two years new pieces of land for the planting of Tobacco or Maize, and, on changing the place, the land which they had previously planted shall remain at the disposal of the above-mentioned Mr. Bronck.” Whenever they abandon an acreage, it is to be in condition “fit to be plowed and to be sowed with grain,” for a three-year period. If the lessees shall, by other claim than the cleared land. Bronck also agrees within one year to furnish the lessees with two horses and two cows “on the same conditions as the Company hath at present supplied other people.” On their part, the lessees covenanted to repay Bronck the “disbursed fees,” the “Rent of the Fire of Troy (Brand van Troyen),” namely, Andrieszen, fl. 814 and Duysts, fl. 4012.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), Cornelis van Huyckens (Huyghens) having been sent over by the directors at Amsterdam to supercede Ulrich Lupoldt as fiscal of New Netherland, the provincial council votes to continue Lupoldt as a member of the council and to appoint him commissary (commis) of it’s State. See, N. Y. State Library.

Nine soldiers having committed mutiny by refusing to work at Fort Amsterdam, two of their ringleaders are by the court declared unworthy and unfit to bear arms, dishonourably discharged, with loss of pay, and sentenced to be transported beyond the seas.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 68. In another mutiny case the court, on Aug. 4, sentenced the defendant to be convoyed the next day to the place of execution, to be there shot to death.—Ibid.

George Holmes and seven other Englishmen, settlers in New Netherland, take the oath of allegiance (the original being undated).

Holmes thus: “You swear to be true and faithfull to the High and Mighty Lords the States, his Highness of Orange and the Hon’ ble Director and Council of New Netherland; to follow wherever he, the Director, or any member of the Council leads: loyally to take instant notice of any treason and injury to the country that may come to your knowledge; to assist, support and protect by all means in your power and by your life and property the inhabitants thereof against all public enemies so truly help you God.”—

Anthony Jansen, from Salee (also called Vies, or Fees) in Morocco, appears before Secretary Van Tienhoven with letters, acknowledging “that he being banished from the island of Manhatas and the limits of New Netherland, requested the Hon’ ble Commander Willem Kieft to be pleased to grant him a parcel of land in the bay of the North river of New Netherland in order to support himself there with wife and children,” and that Kieft had granted him a “situate on Long Island about the bay” (Gravesend).—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 148 (N. Y. State Library).

Thomas Sandersen, smith, acknowledges having leased to Isaac Abrahamsson and Caspar Dirckzen, for the term of seven years, beginning “at Easter N.Y. 1649, the house and the plantation containing ten morgen, heretofore in the occupation of Evert Foppes.”—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 146 (N.
Y. State Library).

This was near the Indian village of Werpoos. See grant to Sandersen under 1648.

Ulrich Lupoldt is serving as commissary of stores at New Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 159
(N. Y. State Library).

Mechanics and labourers in the employ of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam are required to begin and end their labours at the ringing of a bell. Gilliss de Voocht is appointed their com-misary, or superintendent, “to go around, and to note those who are in default and report their names” to the director-general and council.—Laws & Ord. N. Y., 30.

Cornelis van Tienhoven conveys to Cornelis van Ceulen (Keulen), of Amsterdam, the bouwery on the island of Manhattan heretofore in the possession of Jacob van Corck (Curker), and situate opposite Johannes la Montagne’s bouwery, with all the stock, implements, &c. thereunto belonging.—Liber GG: 31

1768 George Holmes and Thomas Hall make a declaration at the office of the governor and secretary that they intend “to make a plantation and build a house near Deutel bay on the island of Manhatas;” that they have agreed to “jointly bear all the expenses of the building, wages of laborers, and all other implements needed on the plantation, and to share equally all profits.”—Records

Capt. John Underhill and English families are given permission by the N.G. to reside in New Netherland, subject to the payment of the quitrents due by them to the crown.

John Pietersen and Abraham New and Peter Breley, on the other hand, have paid the 1,000 pounds of the crown for their right of allegiance. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 26. Underhill did not settle at this time; he came later; but it is probable that a few English families availed themselves of this offer.

An acknowledgement of an agreement is made between Director Gen. Kieft, for the West India Co., on the one part, and Everet Bishop, Sibout Clausen, and Harman Bastiaansaen, of the other part, "for the hire of the Saw mill standing on Cut [now Governor] Island, belonging to the Directors of the Incorporated West India Company, Chamber of Amsterdam." The lease is for a term of three years from date at an annual rental of 20 m. whereas, one hundred, fifty pounds, and half pine and half oak. The lessees are to "properly maintain and keep in repair" the mill at their own expense, and to "deliver it back in as good order" as they now receive it; moreover, the company is to be allowed to "saw not less than 65 to the bark" (log). The implements that are inventoried with this lease, include 20 saws, 40 clamps, 23 jackscrews, log irons, sledges, log ropes, log hooks, files, cranes, and a boat hook. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 163 (N. Y. State Library).

Director Gen. Kieft resolves to exact a tribute from the Indians residing in New Netherland, subject to the payment of the quitrents due by them to the crown, for the upkeep of the saw mill, the hire of the Saw mill, and the payment of the rent for the saw mill. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 164 (N. Y. State Library).

7
On behalf of the West India Co., Director Gen. Kieft grants to Burgert Joissen, furrier, the use of an arvil and bellows, "with half of the smith's house" for a term of four years. The record is important because it gives correct the names of Joissen, which usually appears as Burger or Borger. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 164 (N. Y. State Library).

11
Between Nov. 11 and 16, Director Gen. Kieft and Abraham Pietersen and Pieter Hoven, addressed a letter to William, second son of the Crown. The letter is on behalf of the West India Co. with the latter "about the hire of the Bouwery No. 6 heretofore cultivated by Wolphert Gerritsen [van Couwenhoven], situate on the Island Manhate, belonging to the Hoalt [General Incorporated West India Company]. The lease was for "twenty consecutive years," and included "for certain animals," — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 175 (N. Y. State Library).

15
Director Gen. Kieft and his council grant to George Holmes and Thomas Hall land on Manhattan Island extending from Deutel [Turtle] bay along the East river to the kil of Schempoes; and from the river directly into the woods; one hundred rods of thirteen feet each." — Liber GG: 32 (Albany); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 26. The boundaries as laid down according to modern streets and avenues were generally as follows: On the north a stream of water which emptied into the East River at 47th St., at a point a little east of First Ave., ending westward of Second Ave., between 48th and 49th Sts.; on the east the river; on the west an irregular line, mostly somewhat east of Third Ave., but at its southern end running nearly to Lexington Ave.; on the south a line running from the middle of the block between 43rd and 45th Sts., west of Third Ave., to the river. — Maps, Vol. III, Pl. 176; also Tuttle, Abstracts of Farm Titles, Vol. I. On Aug. 30, Juriaen Hendricks, of Osmohrugh, and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, contracted to build a house for Hall, and on Sept. 7, Holmes and Hall formed a partnership and contracted to "make a plantation and build a house near Deutel bay." They raised tobacco.

9
In Sept. 1640, Holmes bought Hall's half interest in the plantation for 1,000 pounds of the crown, from the皇冠 of allegiance. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 25, 26, and footnote; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch., 10. See Sept. 7, 1639; and Sept. 6, 1640.

15
Tomas Bescher (autograph signature—Thomas Beeche, for Bescher), on his part, appears before Secretary Van Tienhoven, with Abraham New and Peter Breley, on the other party, to acknowledge a contract for the hire from the former to the latter "of the house and plantation hitherto in the occupancy of said Tomas Bescher" for a term of two years. Delivery is made of "a dwelling house, tobacco house and said plantation fenced," and there is the expiration of the twelfth month. — "said Beets [sic for Beecher], or his agents." In a postscript, "Johannes Wolf [John Wood] obligates himself in place of Peter Beeley in the aforesaid contract of Beete's plantation," dated March 15, 1640. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 177 (N. Y. State Library).

12
"Old Jan Cede" was really an Englishman named John Seals, as is shown by his autograph attached to a power of attorney of this date, given to Isaac Allerton and witnessed by Thomas Willett, both from the colony of New Plymouth. In this instrument, Seals is called "an inhabitant here on the Island of Manhate." — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 179 (N. Y. State Library).

About this time, Tymen Jansen received a ground-brief (see recital in Liber GG: 91, Albany) for land at Pearl St., between Wall and Pine Sts. (no modern maps). See Castello Plan, II: 339; Pl. 174, Vol. II.

In this year, Jacob van Corlaer (van Corder, Cural, or Collar) executed a lease of his plantation at the East River, "with the contiguous hook called, in the Indian language, Nechtam," to Willem Hendriksen and Gysbert Cornelissen. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 14. On Feb. 22, 1642, he deeded this property to Willem Beeckman, and it was confirmed to the latter on Aug. 10, 1667. — Liber Patents, II: 90 (Albany). The land, which had been granted to Van Corlaer by Van Twiller and his council before 1618, was about 76 acres in extent, and lay along the East River, mostly between Grand and Stanton Sts., east of Attorney St., including the point called the Hook or Hook. — See Manuscript Maps, II: 193; C. Pls. 41, 42, 42a, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 917; and Pl. 175, Vol. III.

Nieuw van Viana by the provincial council of New Netherland, in 1640, with Provost is appointed provost of New Netherland, in place of Claes van Elandts, resigned, at a salary of 25 fl. per month and 150 fl. for expenses per annum. On the same day, Skipper David Pietersen de Vries becomes security for Provost, in the sum of 1,500 guilders, "for his fidelity and correct accounts," and another bondman, Domine Bogardus, who signs his name on "Beurkens Bogardus," becomes the new bondman of the town. — Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 56. Ibid. (O'callaghan's trans.), I: 181 (N. Y. State Library). See also Aug. 23, 1640.

The skipper David Pietersen de Vries leases his plantation and house on Staten Island, for a term of six years, to Thomas Smyth, who binds himself "to clear land sufficient for 2000 palisades." — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 185 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation was begun only a year before, as De Vries himself states, and he lived for a while, but he was forced to lease it, "as no people had been sent . . . from Hol- land, as was promised to the contrary," which he had promised to Frederick de Vries, a director of the West India Company. — Jameson, N. Neth., 202, 205.

Acknowledgment is made at the office of the provincial secretary by "Hendric Pietersen from Wesel" of a conveyance to "Adriaen Pietersen from Alckmaer" of "his present plantation situated against the Reed valley beyond Sampsonian on the island of Manhate," including a house. Hendrick Pietersen was a mason. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 184 (N. Y. State Library).

Feb
David Provost leases to Thomas Broen, cum sociis, his "plantation situated on the island of Manhate, with the dwelling house," for three years. The agreement stipulates that the entire plantation "be fenced at the expense of the Lessor and Lessee," half and half. — Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 188 (N. Y. State Library).
A certificate is given by Tobias Tamassen and Willem Frederiksen, two men who have worked three years "on the bouwery called Vredendael," releasing from all claims the owner of the farm, Provincial Councillor Johannes la Montagne.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 192 (N.Y. State Library).

Dirck Gen. Kieft issues an order to Hendrick Hude, from which it is evident that the ship "den Harinck" arrived at New Amsterdam on July 7, 1639, and the ship "de Engel Gabriel" on Sept. 25, 1639, but that both ships are still in port as late as March 14, 1640, laden with goods shipped over to Hude by "Mr. Henric Hamel, director of the West India Co.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 39 (N.Y. State Library). See also, regarding these ships, Van Rensselaer Bever Manuscripts, 152–53, 456–57.

As daily complaints are made of damage and loss by goats and hogs to the cornfields on Manhattan Island, to the great injury of cultivation and serious damage of the West India Co., the council passes an ordinance for penalizing trespassers.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 21.

Surgeon Harmen Myndertsen van de Bogaert, through power of attorney given to an Amsterdam merchant, seeks to collect from the directors at Amsterdam the wages and "money" he was paid in the West India Company's service "since the 21 March 1636 when he sailed in the ship Eendracht, Jan Brouwer, Skipper, from the Texel, and arrived on the 24th May following here in New Netherland, to the first of February A0 1637, as appeared by the Book of Monthly Wages there."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 195 (N.Y. State Library).

Ulrich Lupoldt, commissary of merchandise for the West India Co. in New Netherland, acknowledges having received from his predecessor in office, Wybrant Pietersen, for the behalf of the company, 12,959 guilders, 5 stuivers, 6 pennies, "being the balance of merchandise," that was delivered to him by Pietersen.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 196 (N.Y. State Library).

Jan Pietersen van Essendelft, a ship's surgeon in the employ of the West India Co., being sick abed "at his house in Fort Amsterdam," makes a will, and devises that "all the surgical instruments that are in his use" shall go to his death, to Master Hans Kiersteede, the New Amsterdam surgeon.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 199 (N.Y. State Library).

The "Short Parliament" begins; it ended May 5.

An ordinance is passed by Kieft and his council establishing the militia and requiring that every male inhabitant "residing at and around Fort Amsterdam" shall "provide himself with a good gun," and keep it ready for use. Since they live apart from one another, each man is assigned to a corporal, to whom to report in time of danger. If mischief from enemies or traitors occurs at night, the warning is to be given by the rapid firing of three cannon; if by day, it is to be provided for by a signal horn. Every man is required to "repair instantly to his corporal at the place appointed."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 23, dated May 9, but in Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 71, dated May 10. There are the earliest militia regulations for New Netherland on record.

Philip de Tracy receives a ground-brief (Lib. GG: 34, Albany) for land near the Smith's Valley. Its location on the modern map would be, approximately, between Pearl, Gold, Fulton, and Ferry Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III. This is perhaps the earliest recorded mention of the locality by name in the land records. For first mention, see May 16, 1636.

Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt is appointed commissary of cargoes in New Netherland in place of Jacobus van Curleur.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 100 (N.Y. State Library). See Sey Sept. 27, 1641.

Kieft sends Van Tienhoven with a force of soldiers and sailors to punish the Raritan Indians for their depredations upon the property of David Pieters de Vries and the West India Co. on Staten Island.—De Vries, Notes, in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 208, 277; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 150, 198; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 72. This was one of the acts of Kieft's administration that precipitated the Indian war.

The West India Co. exhibits to the states-general a new "Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions" for New Netherland, by which anyone may be acknowledged a patroon of New Netherland who plants there a colony of fifty souls, above fifteen years of age, within the space of three years after declaring and giving notice of his intention to do so; and anyone is to be acknowledged a master or colonist who shall remove to New Netherland with fire souls over fifteen years of age. To all of the last named the director-general is to grant in property one hundred morgens, Rhode Island measure, of land (200 acres). No such grants, however, are to be made on the "Island Manhatta" for the company reserves this to itself.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 118, 119.

Kieft's proclamation, to settle a piece of land next to that of Tenis Cray, beginning at the little brook called the Old Wreck ("s'oude wreck"), extending to the land of Claes Sybrantsen de Verings, stretching along the East River in its breadth north-east and south-west and from the river into the woods to the foot-path, north-west and south-east, containing, in breadth along the beach 15 English miles, in length 16 English miles.—Lib. GG: 36 (Albany). This grant was conveyed by Vande Linde to Cornelis Commegns, June 12, 1678; the latter mortgaged the property, Sept. 1, 1685, to Willem Beeckman; and on March 7, 1689, Beeckman petitioned for the grant of this land, describing it as "about Stuyvesant's bowy."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 244.

Jan Tamassen, "cader," makes acknowledgment before the provincial secretary that he has leased from Thomas Sandersen, smith, the bouwery and house "situate on the Island Manhata, near Wepoes, formerly occupied by Evert Poppe," for a term of five years, beginning on Aug. 7, 1641, for an annual rental of 150 guilders.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 212 (N.Y. State Library). Wepoes was the name of an Indian village on the shore of and to the north and west of the Fresh Water (Collect Pond)—i.e., on the present map of the city, lying between the East River and the Harlem River, over the Harlem River, between Church and Lafayette Sts.—Liber Patents, III: 17 (Albany). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987; and Pls. 174 and 175, Vol. III. Wepoes became part of the Bayard farm, for which see map of the farm lands, Vol. V.

Farm and house servants are commanded by ordinance to serve out their time according to their contracts. Harbouring those that run away is penalized by a fine of 50 guilders, to be divided equally between the informer, the fund for the new church, and the fiscal.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 24.

David Provoost, commissary of provisions, on account of irregularities, is dismissed from his office, and Maurit Jansen, formerly assistant, is named in his stead.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 75 (N.Y. State Library). See also, regarding Provoost's appointment, Jan. 5, 1640.

Before Secretaries Van Tienhoven appear "Monseigneur Jacques la Montagne and Sieur Andries Hude as husband and guardian of Gertrude Bernstra, widow of the late Hendrik de Forest deceased, who conjointly acknowledge to have amicably agreed and arranged on the 14th July A0 1640 respecting the purchased bouwery and goods and chattels lying on the Island of Manhata, named Vredendael, left by the late Hendrik de Forest, to whom Hude, in quality of aforesaid, may in any wise claim." They request a legal instrument releasing one another from any future claims.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 216 (N.Y. State Library). Vredendael was at Harlem. See also July 20, 1648.

George Baxter and Walter Haroots receive a ground-brief (Lib. GG: 41, Albany) for a piece of land "on the Island of Manhattan, extending in breadth between the two creeks where the water ripples over the stones and the tree lies over the creek, and this with the same breadth betwixt both the creeks into the woods."—Lib. GG: 41 (Albany).

Thomas Hall makes acknowledgment of having sold to George Holmes "the half of the house and plantation situate by the Deutel [Turtle] bay," including "the furniture therein, except a boat, gun and dog which Thomas Hall reserves." The price is 1,600 pounds of tobacco "payable from the crop which George shall make A0 1641, and in the tobacco at present at present by the field removed with all the joint debts." Until the payment is made, Hall is at liberty to eat, drink, sleep, go and come to" the house of Holmes. A postscript adds: "George Homs has paid to D' Kieft this 1,600 pounds of Tobacco."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's tran.), I: 224 (N.Y. State Library). See also Sept. 7, and Nov. 15, 1649.

The cartridge. —Jacques van Curleur, commissary, LESs to "Willem Hendriksen and Gysbert Cornelissen, taylor, and Thomas" his plantation, "situate on the Island Manhatna on the East river with the hook called, in the Indian language, Nechtana, lying contiguous to said plantation" for a term of three years from Jan. 1, 1641. The lessees are to pay annually "tiring out the said plantation at the book aforesaid," and also to "keep in proper repair at their own expense, the house and all dependencies" of the plantation. If they make improvements or build a tobacco house, these will, uppon expiration of the lease, become the "soild and residue of the plantation" for himself, in case he returns from Holland while the lease is in operation.—

Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 219 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation, containing about 75 acres, lay along the East River from Houston St. around Corlars's Hook.—See The Municipal Records of New Amsterdam.

The inventory of the estate of Hendrick de Forest, made for his widow, Gertrude Bornstra, amounts, net, to 984 guilders "over and above all reciprocal debts." Johannes la Montagne now acknowledges a satisfaction of his share, received from "Sieur Andre Huyssen, husband and guardian" of the widow, to whom she has married.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan), I: 217.

The "Long Parliament" begins it ended March, 1660.

Baan [Brown], David Davidsen [Davidson], Ralph Cardiel, and Pieter Breley, of "a certain parcel of land situated on the Island Melyn's, in the Cripplesh, which belongs to the Hon'ble Elias de Raet and Mr. Coenraet van Ceulen, both residing at Amsterdam." The conditions are: to plant tobacco, and to Kieft for the owners' account 200 pounds of cured tobacco annually as a rental. Kieft agrees for the owners that a tobacco house be built and kept in the island, and that it shall be made of "as much Dutch grain as can be given in the ground."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 229 (N. Y. State Library). For location of Bestevaar's Cripplesh, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.

-- About this time, Hendrick Jansen received a ground-brief (see recitals in Government Grants, 1642-1649, p. 1, in the Municipal Library) for land along Pearl St., between Pine and Liberty Sts. (on modern maps). See Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also Sept. 20, 1642.

25-- Cornelis Melyn arrived in this year in New Netherland, in the ship "Den Eyckenboom" (The Oaktree), and settled on Staten Island with 41 colonists. They began to build houses immediately, to plough, and to do everything toward the establishment of a good colony, sparing neither money nor work.—Melyn's "Remonstrance in Melyn Papers, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1911), XLVI: 109-16. Speaking of the Indian troubles of 1643, Melyn said his houses, farms, and everything else, were consumed by fire, and his cattle, as well as some of his people, slain, and he, his wife and children forced to flee for their lives and reside at Manhattan until 1647. He added that, as a result of the troubles of the English with Stuyvesant, he (Melyn) and Jochem Pieteren Kuyter were banished by Stuyvesant, and both "departed for Fatherland from New Netherland with the ship The Princess Amelia (de princes Amatia) in company with Director Willem Kieft."—Ibid. This ship was named for the Princess Amelia (Amalia van Solms), wife of Frederick Hendrick, stadtholder of The Netherlands. See also Sept. 27, 1647.

A negro slave of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam is murdered. Several of the negro slaves of the company were implicated in the murder at a court session of the provincial council on Jan. 17. They admitted killing him in common, and the court, being unable to determine which one actually gave the death blow, therefore, required that they draw lots, to determine which one of their number should be hanged in expiation of the crime. The lot fell, "by God's direction," on Manuel de Gerrit (de Reus);—cf. Van Rensselaer Bewier MSS., 502), called the Giant. He was led to the gibbet, on the 24th of this month. The Negro, a large, negro, and turned off the ladder, and the rope parted. The commonalty who witnessed these operations called out for mercy with great earnestness; whereupon Manuel was granted his life and pardon, together with all of the other implicated negroes, subject to future good behaviour and a willing service.

Manuel, and those who were implicated with him, were the same negroes who were tried by the orders of Feb. 25, 1644.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 83-85. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 745. Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 36. Parliament passes the Triennial Act on Feb. 15. Rhode Island adopts a democratic constitution. See Addenda. Selling liquors during divers service of the Church is prohibited; at night is forbidden under pain of forfeiture of stock and fine, as well as exclusion for three months from taping. The liquid measure in common use at Amsterdam, in Holland, is prescribed, and the price of beer is fixed at eight stivers for the 3/16, or four pint measure.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 38.

The property of the late Wouter van Twiller in New Netherland is mentioned as follows in the "Register of the Resolutions of the Directors of the West India Company at the Chamber in Amsterdam": "Wouter van Twiller having understood by a letter of Director Kieft, that the Company had ordered him, the Director, not to allow the property which the aforesaid Wouter van Twiller had left in New Netherland to be alienated without authority being granted to that effect by this Company, requests that such authority be granted, so that he may dispose thereof at his pleasure; also, approval of the purchased lands which he bought from the Indians with the knowledge and consent of the Council, for the maintenance of his aforesaid cattle and the advancement of population, and hath since his departure from New Netherland caused houses to be erected thereon, after he had previously offered them to some free persons, as appears by the affidavit, who dare not venture their cattle on the premises, through fear that they might be killed by the Indians. This method of removing them is preferred to the commissioners of New Netherland.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 61 (N. Y. State Library).

An ordinance is passed forbidding the circulation of "any unpolished Wampum during the next month of May except at Five for one stiver and that, and after that, Six beads for one stiver." The cause is the importation of this very bad Wampum ... from other places, where it is 50 per centcheaper than it is paid out here, and the good, polished Wampum, commonly called Manhattan Wampum is wholly put out of sight or exported, which tends to the express ruin and destruction of this Country."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 16. The price of the polished wampum was four for a stuiver, strung. This is the first recorded law in New Netherland for regulating wampum. See also 1628 (sewan); June, 1641; and Nov. 30, 1647.

Anthony van Angla, widower of Catalina van Angla, is married to Lucie D'Angola, widow of Laurens D'Angola.—Marriages in Ref. Dutc Ch., 10. This is the first marriage between negroes recorded in the Dutch Church. Many such marriages followed.

Before the provincial secretary appear "John Smith and James Shaksburg, Harry Ly," (Harry Lea or Lee), making acknowledg- ment that they have hired of Old Stevensen [van Courtlandt] his plantation, situated on the island of Manhattan, that was formerly occupied by Thomas Bescher" (also called Beets or Beecher, and deceased). The lease is for three years, beginning May 1, 1641, at a rental of 500 pounds of well cured tobacco.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 246 (N. Y. State Library).

At a "considerable number of respectable Englishmen with their Clergyman" have applied for permission to settle and reside in New Netherland, the director-general and council draw up articles for granting to them certain freedoms and privileges.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 27-28. For the form of oath of allegiance required of them, see N. C. Col. Dut., XII, 424.

In court proceedings of this date, it is shown that Phillip Gerar- dy has engaged Juriaen Hendricksen, of Osnaburgh, to build a house, which contract he now demands shall be carried out.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 15, 76. Evidently, this was the house near the corner of Marktvladts and Brouwen Street (Whitehall and Stone Sts.)—the present site of the Produce Exchange, in which he was conducting a tavern as early as Jan. 16, 1642, when he was charged by the fiscal with selling beer at a higher rate than was allowed by ordinance.—Ibid., 78. It is a curious fact that, on May 27, 1642, Gerardy, being then a soldier, presumably in the militia of New Amsterdam, was sentenced to be hanged for being absent from his post without leave, "to ride the Wooden Horse during parade with a pitcher in one hand and a drawn sword in the other."—Ibid., 79. Whether the origin of the name of his tavern, known thereafter as "the sign of the Wooden Horse" (not "White Horse") as stated by Innes), is related to this ludicrous experience of Gerardy with the military punishment, or owe its origin to the proximity of his house to the Indian lands, and the instrument upon which military officers were made to do penance, cannot be positively determined. The irregular plot on which his tavern stood was granted to him by Director-General, Kieft, on July 13, 1643 (q. c.).—Liber Patents, II: 69 (in office of sec. of state, Albany). This grant is recited in a confirmation to de Roerdam, and cited by Coenraet van Poot, on Feb. 14, 1668, by Gov. Nicolls. —Ibid. No mention of the tavern is made in this recital of the original patent to Gerardus, or in the ground-bridge of Aug. 7, 1645, from Kieft to Adam Roelantsen, who was Gerardus's next-door neighbour.—Liber GG: 86 (in N. Y. State Library, Albany). The earthly neighborhood of the tavern is preserved in a deputation, of Oct. 20, 1644, relative to wine purchased by Gerardus. —Cal. Hist. MSS. Dutch, 76, 177; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 287; Aug. De Vries, Notes, in Jansen's Col. Nat. Neth., 213, 214. The second board was dissolved peremptorily on Feb. 8, 1642.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 203. "The Twelve Men, and afterwards [1643] the Eight had in court matters neither vote nor advice; but were chosen in view of the war [the Indian wars of 1642 and 1643] and some as clowns, and others who, it seems, they received no consideration and were little respected if they opposed at all the views of the Director." —Representation N. Neth., in Jansen's Col. Nat. Neth., 333. This is often called the beginning of representative government in New York.

On this day, for the first time, shipping is recorded as anchored "under the roadside House."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 269, 272 (N. Y. State Library). See Manatus Maps, Vol. II, for its location.

Louvrens Cornelisens receives a ground-bridge (Liber GG: 43; Albany) for land at Pearl and Liberty Sts. (on modern maps). See April 14, 1647, PL 174, Vol. I.

Because lately some people were murdered on Staten Island by Indians, the provincial council now votes to protect the remaining residents against further trouble, by the erection on that island of a little redoubt, at the least possible cost.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch: I: 170; Jansen's Col. Nat. Neth., 402) "it is agreed by the council to pay the same and mortgaging his "house and plantation situation on the Island of Manhatte," no doubt meaning his Colsar's Hook property.—Records N. Neth., (O'Callaghan's translation), I: 276 (N. Y. State Library).

Kieft and his council's 'grant' that "there shall be held annually at Fort Amsterdam a Country Fair on the 19th of October, and a fair for Hogs on the 1st of November," so that whoever "hath any thing to sell or to buy can regulate himself accordingly."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 29. It is unlikely that the cattle and hogs were exhibited and sold within the fort during the fairs that were held under this ordinance. It is probable that the transactions took place in the open space outside of the fort and between it and the company's stores. Regular markets were not yet established, and "in Markveldt," or the Markfield, was yet unknown in the topographical nomenclature of New Amsterdam. Cf. De Vos, Market Book, 17, 28, 29, 35, 36. See also Castello Plan (Redraft), II: 34-45.

Director-General, Kieft makes a contract for a lease to Hendrick Pietersen from Hasselt of "a certain piece of (made) land situate on the Island of Manhattan, on the Highway where Jan Damen is next adjoining on the South, and Everardus Bogardus on the North." Kieft agrees against water frontage on the West India Co., "a barn fifty feet long and 20 feet wide with an entrance, and a barric of four rods." The lease is for eight years, commencing on May 1, 1642, at a rent of one third the yield of the soil.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 280 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation was identical with the "old Company's Bounery," or the later "King's Farm," and lay between the Bogardus and Anacade Jans farm and the farm of Jao Jansen Damen. On modern lines, the leased farm was bounded north by a line from the Hudson River (then at Green wich St.) to Broadway, running from a point a little north of Warren St. at the river to a point at the south corner of Broadway and Chambers St.; the eastern boundary was Broadway; the southern boundary was Fulton St., and the western boundary was the river. —See Landmark Map, PL 174, Vol. III.

Director-General, Kieft certifies to a contract for a lease to Thomas Pieterssen of the plantation occidental to date by said Hall situate about Sapokamikan on the Island of Manhattan belonging to the late Director Wouter van Twiller. Kieft leases in the name of Twiller, for a term of five years, beginning Jan. 1, 1642, at an annual rental of 750 pounds of "well Inspected Tobacco." Two negroes are included in this bargain, and Hall's note, "a barn as good as the Dutch of the Bogardus] fifty feet long," which, at the expiration of the lease, shall revert to the owner of the plantation, and toward the cost of which 100 guilders and the nails are to be contributed by the owner.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), I: 483 (N. Y. State Library). This plantation lay between the Bowery Road, south-west of Greenwich Lane.—See Manatus Maps, C. 10, pp. 190-91, Vol. II.

— Probably from this year dates the wash draining in sepias of “Norum Amsterdamum,” perhaps by Laurens Block, reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 4-b.

— About the beginning of this year, the West India Co. completed the city tavern (Stads Herbergh), and opened it to the public.—De Vries Notes, in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 212; Inses, New Am. and I1s. People, 176. It stood on what is now the north-west corner of Pearl St. (Nos. 71–73) and Coenties Alley, originally facing eight-four River St., and became, 1675 (p. 406), the city hall (Stadt Huys). The first lessee was Philip Gerritsen, who rented it from Director-General Kieft, on Feb. 17, 1643, for a term of six years, beginning with Jan. 1, 1642, at 300 guilders per annum, with the right to retail the company’s wine and brandy, on which he was allowed a profit of six stuivers per can. A well and a brewhouse were also to be built behind the tavern.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 21; Rec. Nar. Am., 1: 495; Inses, op. cit., 178. This building was for a long time used by the city, and remained its property until Aug. 17, 1699 (q.v.), when the authorities sold it, and the land belonging to it, to John Rodman.—Liber A: 354 (in comptroller’s office, N. Y. City). It was the course of demolition early in the spring of 1700, as is shown by a complaint lodged by a neighbour against Rodman “for intending to pull down a party wall between her house and the city hall.”—Cal. Coun. Misc., 145. By Oct. 19, 1700, the building was down and had been replaced by another.—Liber A: 357. See also Feb. 6, 1653; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 973. Ill feeling between the Indians and the Dutch was increased by the murder of Gerrit Jansz., a servant of the lord of Nederhoert at Hackensack, by a drunken native. The Indians refused to give up the murderer, as he was the son of a sachem, offering, however, 100 or 200 fathom of wampum to the widow of the dead man. Several Indians were said to have been killed in revenge of this murder.—De Vries Notes, in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 215–16: Bread Advice (Murphy, 1854), 147.

— About this year, Cornelis Dickensen was established as ferryman on Long Island, landing on the Long Island side being at the foot of the present Fulton Street, Brooklyn. For his ferry on the Manhattan Island side, see 1658. See also Jan. 24, 1643.

— The four church-wardens of New Amsterdam were Director-General Kieft, Capt. David Pietersen de Vries, Jochem Pietersen Kuyster, and Jan Jansen Dumer.—Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 212.

— About this year, Jan Stevenson became schoolmaster.—See Addenda.

Feb.

7 Jan Teunissen, house carpenter, acknowledges having entered into a contract with Adam Roelantse, from Dockum, first schoolmaster of New Amsterdam, for making and building, “a house thirty feet long, eighteen feet wide, eight feet story under the beams, the end crossbeams strengthened with brackets all square, the house enclosed all around with clapboards, and covered with a good red roof, such as shall be proper, a close ceiling of clapboards, 3 transom windows, two outer doors, one portal, one pantry, one bedstead, an enclosed stair-case to ascend to the garret, to make the chimney [jou]laid above of wood with a mantle-piece, a passage way three feet wide with the partition.” This Teunissen agrees to complete by Aug. 1, 1642, at a cost of 350 Carolus guilders, Holland value.—Rec. N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 7 (N. Y. State Library).

8 The twelve men whom the commonalty have chosen to give their advice concerning the murder of Claes Cornelissen Swit, the wheelewright (see Aug. 29, 1641), are commanded by Director-General Kieft to “hold no further meeting, as the same tends to a dangerous consequence, and to the great injury both of the country and of our [Kieft’s] authority.” They are not to assemble except by “express order” from Kieft, “on pain of being punished as disobedient subjects.”—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 203. This first prorogation of the first popular representative body in New Netherland proved to be its virtual dissolution.

17 Jameson acknowledges a contract made with Nicholas Willem Bout (or Boedt) for building a house 32 feet long, and 18 feet wide, “provided that the land which the Governor of New Netherland hath granted” to Bout, “whereof the aforesaid house is to be built,” is “to be divided by parties on the first of October A.D. 1642.” The land was a tobacco plantation.—Rec. N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 8, op. cit.

18 Pieter and Jan Leendertse, bailiffs before Secretary Van Tienhoven, “in the public tavern,” the sale to Jacob Acoobad “of all the grain that he hath at present sown in the ground on the bouweries No. 5 and 6 belonging to the Honorable Directors of the West India Company.”—Records N. Neth., (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 10 (N. Y. State Library).

26 David Leheckermans and Cornelis Leendertse receive from the director and council a bill of sale or grant of a house and land near the outlet of the fresh water lake at the East River, and adjoining the land of Cornelis van Tienhoven, whose palisades extend from the Heereweg (Broadway) to the East River.—Liber Gt. 47 (Albany) Liber Patents, I: 11 (Albany). According to modern streets, the land was bounded north-westerly on Park Row from about the corner of Pearl St. to the corner of Franklin St.; and from that point southerly along Nassau St. to a point a little south of Ann St.; thence along the south side of Ann St. to a point east of Gold St.; then on a circular course, so as to exclude the “Swamp” and De Tracy’s grant, to the corner of Ferry and Clif Sts.; thence along Ferry St. to the East River, and along the river shore, now almost on the line of Pearl and Cherry Sts., to the mouth of the outlet of the Fresh Water at Catharine St.; and thence along the course of the streams, between East River and Roosevelts and St. to the place of beginning. See Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III. An import duty of ten per cent is imposed on all goods entered in New Netherland, if no tariff has been paid before in Holland, Brazil, Guincua, or the West Indies, and an export duty as authorized by “the Litt set forth in the Freedom of the Company, and paid to the Receiver of the Company’s revenues, or whomesoever shall be appointed thereto.”—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 31.

Mar.

1 Jan Francen, a soldier of the garrison of Fort Amsterdam, 12 days before that was held on guard as a sentinel at the fort on April 7, he “saw Abraham Planck tear down the Placard which was posted on the gate of the fort, as he Planck was going out of the fort.”—Records N. Neth., (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 16 (N. Y. State Library). On May 22, Planck was fined 300 guilders.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 80. Perhaps the ordinance was the one that had been promulgated and posted on April 3, imposing certain duties on exports and imports.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 31.

On account of the number of fugitive servants that come to New Netherland daily from New England and Virginia, carrying “their passports under foot,” an ordinance is passed forbidding the harbouring of strangers for more than one night, “without first notifying the Director and having their names recorded,” so that it may be known “what sort of people are here, and whence they come.”—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 32. This ordinance was renewed, June 13, 1643.—Ibid., 35.

During the administration of Director-General Kieft a new stone church was erected in the Heart of the City and dedicated to the south.—De Vries Notes, in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 212–15: Representation of N. Neth., in ibid., 352–6. The church occupied almost one fourth of the space in the fort.—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 333. See A.

The contract for building it reads as follows: “Appeared before me, Cornelius Van Tienhoven, Secretary in behalf of the general privileged West India Company in New Netherland, the Honorable William Kieft, church-warden, at the request of his brethren, the church-wardens of the church in New Netherland, to transact in and to name in their conclusion the following business. So did he, as church-warden, agree with John Ogden about a church in the following manner, viz.—

“John Ogden of Stamford, and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden, engage to build in behalf of said church-wardens a church of rock-stone, seventy-two feet long, fifty-two feet broad, and sixteen feet high above the soil, all in good order, and in a workman-like manner. They shall be obliged to procure the stone, and bring it on shore near the fort at their own expense, from whence the church wardens shall further convey the stone to the place where it is intended to build the church, at their own expense. The church wardens aforesaid will procure as much lime as shall be required for the building of the aforesaid church. John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden shall at their own charge pay for the masonry &c., provided that when the work shall be finished the church wardens shall pay to them the sum of 2500 gl., which payment shall be made in beaver, cash, or merchandise, to wit:—if the church-wardens are satisfied with the work, so that in their judgment the 2500 gl. shall have been earned, then the said church-wardens shall reward them with 100 guilder and further promise to John Ogden and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden to assist them whenever it is in their power. They further agree to facilitate the carrying the stone thither, and that John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden must be present in the city this or six weeks prior to beginning themselves and the aforesaid John and Ritsert [Richard] Ogden to finish the undertakings in the manner as they contracted. Done in Fort Amsterdam, in New Netherland. [Signed] Willem Kieft, John Ogden, Richard Ogden, Gysbert op Dyck, Thomas Chambers, Jacob Jansen, and George Ibbett, under seal. In May, 1642, printed in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2nd ser., I: 328, and Eccl. Rec., I: 165. O'Callaghan's translation, in Records N. Y., III: 18 (N. Y. State Library), is quite different. There the width of the church is stated as 54 feet. See Addenda.

The church was rooted in 1641 (Breeden Raadt, Murphy's trans., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 2nd ser., III: 261) with shingles of hewn oak, which, from exposure to wind and rain, turned blue and looked like slate (De Vries, Notes in Jameson's Narr. N. Y., 213). The Montamans (PL No. 6, Vol. I) and earlier views of New Amsterdam show this road with two peaks and a steeple between them, but this arrangement seems to have been altered in 1672 (g.v.); the "Restitutio View" (Ph. Nos. 8 and 16, Vol. I) shows only one peak, with the steeple. See also PI. 5, Vol. I. The church, in Nov., 1647, was still unfinished (Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1174, London Hist. MSS., N. Y., 69); but Stuyvesant took up its completion and general repair in 1647-8 (Representation of N. Y., in Jameson, op. cit., 330).

The money for this church was given by Kieft, on behalf of the West India Co., and by the people in voluntary contributions. See A. — Ibid., 345. De Vries, Notes, in ibid., 212. In 1650 it was said that it "cost much more than eight thousand guilders whereof it cannot be proved that the people paid eight hundred; the collection taken up by subscription, hath realized the least;" because "a subscription list was signed which amounted to fl. 1800. The accounts of most of the subscribers were debited accordingly, but they have not yet [1659] paid the money."— N. Y. Col. Docis., I: 329, 473.

A Dutch inscription was placed upon the church, of which the English translation is as follows: "1642, Willem Kieft, being Director-General, the congregation caused this church to be built." — Representation of N. Y., in Jameson, op. cit., 326. The stone which bore this inscription was found, in 1790, by workmen who were leveling Fort George (Daily Adv., June 21, 1790), and was preserved in the Garden Street Dutch Church until 1835 (g.v.), when it was discovered in the fire which destroyed that edifice (Corwin, Manual Bap. Ch. in Amer., 4th ed., 42).

The church originally covered with shingles. Some time prior to 1672, the shingles had been replaced with tiles. In 1672, the city allowed 500 guilders for removing the tile roof and replacing the shingles, because the tiles had become broken by the concussion of the firing of the cannon at the fort. In 1679-80, when the Lahasta vessel ran aground, the church chapel had a roof built on top. Ibid., II: 367-68; Jour. of Jasper Danckaerts (ed. by James and Jameson), 46; N. Y. Col. Docis., III: 311.

In 1663, Gov. Fletcher had the King's Chapel in the fort pulled down, because it was so dilapidated as to be a menace to life and limb.— Jour. Leg. Coun., N. Y., I: 42; see also 1669. Plans for building a new chapel were being considered in Oct., 1664 (ibid., 65-66); and the masonry seems to have been completed by the beginning of 1665. On March 5, of that year, Derick Vanandenburgh, mason and bricklayer, petitioned for $2411.1010, to erect a structure of masonry with other building. The contract for erecting a chapel and other buildings in which the King's Chapel in New Amsterdam: "The Director of the Incorporated West India Company at the Chamber at Amsterdam have granted and allowed, and do hereby grant and allow, to Wouter van Twiller, late Director in New Netherland, that the said van Twiller shall not have to pay to the Company the sixth sheaf as the stipulated rent of the Company's bouwery situation on the Island of the Manhattan in New Netherland." under which he "the planted lands, the first of September 1645, and the meadow lands, the middle of November 1645, when the said bouwery shall return and be delivered up to the Company, and the Lenee shall during the lease keep the house, barrick and barn in good and proper repair. . . . Furthermore, he may in their behavior of his cattle, movables, negroes and all whatsoever belongs to the abovenamed Van Twiller."— Records N. Y. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 61 (N. Y. State Library). This was the company's great bouwery No. 1, which in 1651 became the property of Stuyvesant—the well-known Stuyvesant's bouwery. See the Manatus Maps, C. 1, Vol. II, and II: 187-88; and March 12, 1651.

Before Secretary Van Tienhoven, appears on this day "Annaire Jans, widow of the late Roulloff Jansen from Masterland, and present wife of Everardus Bogardus Minister here, with the [Hooijs] Willem Kieft, director general of New Netherland and Mr. Johannes La Montaunage [sic her chosen guardians] herein, who declared that she, in the month of March A.D. 1658, previous to, and before that the Annaire Jans had entered into the marriage state with her present abovementioned husband, had agreed with the guardian of the aforesaid illegitimate children, in which the aforesaid Roullof Jansen had in his lifetime presided by her, respecting their share of their deceased father's estate, which aforesaid contract was drawn up and written by the late secretary Huddle, and is at present not to be found in the old Books, Papers or Registers. Wherefore the security of the aforesaid children and Annaire Jans abovementioned, she hath caused this instrument to be drawn up as a supplement to the foregoing contract, and in case the latter happen to be discovered elsewhere, she . . . holds it as valid and of no less force than the present." The five children are named, with their ages, between five and sixteen years. The agreement to the aforesaid contract is included clothing, feeding, etc. of the minor children, and for their education it states, "to keep them at school, to let them learn reading, writing and a good trade."— Records N. Y. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 20 (N. Y. State Library).

Andries Hudden (or Huddle) is appointed surveyor of New Netherland by Kieft and his council, at an annual salary of 200 florins. On Oct. 16, Hudden asked the council for an "acte," so that he might have his salary from persons who employed him as surveyor; whereupon the council noted that he could charge three guilders per day and also two stuivers per morges for expences, and free conveyance.— Records N. Y. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 129, 142 (N. Y. State Library).

Delegates from the governor and council of Connecticut July attend a conference with Director-General Kieft and his council at Fort Amsterdam, to negotiate terms for the surrender of Fort Hope (Hartford, Conn.)—Rec. N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 40-41.

Through "suzerels, drawing of knives and fighting, and the multitude of Taverns and low Groggeries, badly conducted," many accidents happen daily, to prevent which an ordinance is passed forbidding anyone to "presume to draw a knife much less to wound any person, under the penalty of fl. 50, to be paid immediately, or, in default, to work three months with the Negroes in chains; this, without any respect of persons."— Laws & Ord. N. Y., 33.

Uldrick Klein makes a declaration before the provincial secretary "that he deliberately purchased from Adam Roelstam the small house in which the Company's Negroes are now lodging, with the garden adjoining thereto."— Records N. Y. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 26.

Barent Dircksen, baker, leases to Bout Fransen "the bouwery called Walsenwyck," together with the cattle, for a term of six years.— Records N. Y. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 28 (N. Y. State Library). This farm was probably in the vicinity of the present Christopher St. and the Hudson River.—See Manatus Maps, I: 101.

This is the date in common acceptance for the beginning of Aug., the Civil War in England between the royal and parliamentary forces. "It was later discovered that King Charles I had raised at Nottingham, "summoning all the lieges to assist his Majesty."— Masson, Life of John Milton, II, 423-4.
The Father Jan. - Low Amsterdam

One of the points which the West India Co. considers, as shown Sept. in the Resolutieboek, is "in what manner a solid and sufficient foundation shall be determined on regarding the places in New Netherland, concerning the freedom and population of the same, and generally in what manner the aforesaid conquest shall be visited in and with a view to a regular partition, a number of actual pieces of art.

Great cies wherein the number of Netherland people was occupied by the Smith staircase in the Common House, in a fine building on the 25th of March, 1643, - Ibid., 46. This land was situated at the present Pearl St., between Cedar and Liberty Sts. - See Pl. 174, Vol. III. For the disposition of the remainder of Adriaensens' land, see Castello Plan, II: 240.

As the court has suffered from much loss of time, occasioned by the default of defendants, an ordinance is passed, prescribing a fine of six sixpence for every first, a fine of 12 sixpence for the second, and condemnation for the third default. - Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 34.

A resolution is passed by the director-general and council providing for assisting newly arrived settlers; otherwise, it is believed "the country will come to nought, and the people remain in a miserable condition." - Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 53, N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 10.

Nov. 30. Hendrick Janz. Hall receives a grant of land lying on the North River, formerly occupied by Edward Fiscoc, Hans Hansen, and Maryn Adriaensensen (having been owners), bounded on the north by the plantation of former Director Wouter van Twiller and Laurens Drinkicker, baker, and eastward by the swamp. - Liber GG: 55 (Albany).

Dec. 6. Jerusael Hendrickse, from Osnabruegge, makes acknowledgment before the provincial secretary that he has undertaken "to build for the Honble William Kieft, director general of New Netherland . . . a house at the Ottenpoort [Otter's track] . . . the house to be one hundred feet long . . . fifty feet wide, tapering off to a breadth of twenty feet within the posts, with passages running throughout, one nine and the other ten feet wide, one front room fifty feet long, twenty feet wide, with one parlor and a double chimney, all which shall be of brick, wherein he, Jerusael Hendrickse, shall make and lay the cellar and garret beams of plank necessary thereto, together with the window and door frames, and whatever else shall be necessary for the aforesaid building." The contract price is 600 Carolus guilders and foord. - Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 59 (N. Y. State Library).

The location mentioned was in Harlem. - See Manatus Maps, 194-95, Vol II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967. Addenda. 11. George Baxter is appointed, provisionally, by Kieft, as English secretary for New Netherland, on account of "the great number of English who come daily to reside here under us," and the "numerous law suits and their consequences" which require such service. His salary is to be 200 fl. per annum. - N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 41. He was reappointed by Stuyvesant, on June 28, 1647; - Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 110.

643 Father Isaac Jogues, the Jesuit missionary who visited New Amsterdam in this year, wrote, in 1646, a description of this visit: "New Holland, which the Dutch call in Latin Novum Belgium -in their own language, New Low Countries—is situated between Virginia and New England. The mouth of the river, which some people call Nassau, or the Great North River, to distinguish it from another which they call the South River, and which I think is called, Maurice River on some maps that are recently seen, is at 40 deg. 50 min. The channel is deep, fit for the largest ships, which ascend to Manhatter Island, which is seven leagues in circuit, and on which there is a fort to serve as the commencement of a town to be built here, and to be called New Amsterdam.

"This fort, which is at the point of the island, about five or six leagues from the river's mouth, is called Fort Amsterdam; it has four regular redoubts, and is protected by several pieces of artillery. All these bastions and the curtains were, in 1645, unfinished, most of which had crumbled away, so that one entered the fort on all sides. There were no ditches. For the garrison of the said fort, and another which they had built still further up against the incursions of the savages, their enemies, there were sixty soldiers. They were about to have an exchange on March 29, 1643, - Ibid., 46. Within the fort there was a pretty large stone church, the house of the Governor, whom they call Director General, quite nearly built of brick, the storehouses and barracks.

"On the island of Manhattan, and in its environs, there may well be four or five hundred men of different sects and nations: the Director General told me that there were men of eighteen different languages; they are scattered here and there on the river, above and below, as the beauty and convenience of the spot has invited each to settle: some mechanics however, who ply their trade, are ranged under the fort; all the others are exposed to the incursions of the natives, who in the year 1643, while I was there, actually killed some two score Hollanders, and burnt many houses and barns full of wheat.

"The river, which is very straight, and runs due north and south, is at least a league broad before the fort. Ships lie at anchor in a bay which forms the other side of the island, and can be defended by the fort."

"Shortly before I arrived there, three large ships of 300 tons each had come to load wheat; two found cargoes, the third could not be loaded, because the savages had burnt a part of the grain. These ships had come from the West Indies, where the West India Company usually keeps up seventeen ships of war.

"No religion is publicly exercised but the Calvinist, and orders are to admit none but Calvinists, but this is not observed; for besides the Calvinists there are in the colony Catholics, English Puritans, Lutherans, here called Mennonites, etc. [In two previous letters (Jameson, 342 et seq.) Jogues refers to Roman Catholics and to the confessional on Manhattan Island.]

"When any one comes to settle in the country, they lend him horses, cows, etc.; they give him provisions, all which he returns as soon as he is at ease; and as to the land, after ten years he pays to the West India Company the tenth of the produce which he reaps."

"Probably from this year dates the view of "Nieu Amsterdam" reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 5. This view is the only one known showing the church in the fort before the addition of the people or before the exception of the Hugter's View (Pl. 1, Vol. I.) it is the earliest known engraving of New York.

The church in the fort, begun in 1642 (see May, 1642), was roofed in this year (Breeden-Raedy, etc., in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, 1857, p. 261), at which time a bellery was evidently added. By different times between the years 1643 and 1647 patents for land were given to emancipated negroes who had been slaves of the West India Co. in New Netherland. These grants centered about the Fresh Water (Kock's) and the public wagon-road, i.e., west of the Bowery and between Canal St. and Astor Pl. This seems to have been the first quarter for free negroes established on Manhattan Island. For their earlier quarter as slaves, see 1639. - Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 369, 369, 370, 372, 374; Hoffman, Estates and Rights of the Corporation of the City of N. Y., II: 194, diagram no. 6.

In this year, the Republic of New Haven was formed by the union of the towns of New Haven, Milford, Guilford, and Stamford. "Thomas Hall, tobacco planter," makes acknowledgment of a debt to Maryn Adriasensen, 1,000 Carolus guilders, "being for the purchase of the plantation situate on the Island of Manhattan on the North River, heretofore cultivated by Hans Hansen, is paid by the said Trustees and is payable, and the security is given by "Francis Lastley and John Seales," Englishmen. - Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 43 (Albany).

Maryn Adrienszoon enters the room of Director-Gen. Kieft with predetermined purpose to murder him, but is prevented from doing so by the intervention of the sturdy Jameson’s Nat. Neth., 278; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 85. About an hour after the arrest of Adrienszoon, his servant, Jacob Slangh, and another, “came to the Port, where the Director was walking up and down,” and Slangh fired two shots at Kieft, who was retreating into the door of his house there; whereupon a sentry shot Slangh dead. Hence, “within an hour and a half,” Kieft’s life was twice in danger.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 12-13.

Proclamation is made at Fort Amsterdam that peace has been concluded with the Long Island Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 49-45. The circumstances that led to this peace are given by De Vries.—Jameson’s Nat. Neth., 249-32.

The tavern-keeper Philip Gerardy, from Paris, “who is lying Apr. 26 [wounded] deposed” that Jan Jansen Dammubust he perceived his shoulder blade with a knife.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 49 (N. Y. State Library).

Lourens Cornelisoon converts to Frederick Lubbertszent land in the Smith’s Valley.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 21 (N. Y. State Library).

The treaty of peace is concluded by Kieft and his council with Oratsamini, sachem of the Hackensacks, representing the Indians of the lower Hudson. Presents are exchanged.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 14.

Henrick Hendrikse Kip receives a ground-brief (Liber GQ: 57; Albany) for this lot. This is the same Kip who included the present Slangh, a ferryman, for 122.25 guilders per annum and ten schepels of good barley.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 56 (Albany).

Louis XIV ascends the throne of France. Martin Cregier receives a ground-brief for a lot at No. 26 Broadway, now covered by the Bank of New York. This is the same ground-brief for the lot now known as No. 18 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 130-131; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 359; Albert Cuyx conveys to Isaac Allerton and Govert Loockermans, for 520 Carous guilders per annum and ten schepels of good barley.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 57 (N. Y. State Library).

The present location is the northerly part of the site of the Standard Oil Co’s building, at 26 Broadway. The ground-brief for this grant to Allerton and Lockermans bears date of June 2.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 356.

The colonies of New England unite for defence.—See Addenda, No. 52, 19-29. The Dutch Governor-General classifies the valley of the Peace (Yelle or Vale) of Peace), is leased to Bout France.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 59-60 (N. Y. State Library); printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 45-47.

Because large quantities of intoxicants are sold daily to the Indians, “whence serious difficulties have arisen, and further calamities are apprehended,” the General and the council of all Taspeurs and other inhabitants, from now henceforth, not “to sell, directly or indirectly, by themselves or others, any liquors to None the less, an illicit traffic was carried on with the Indians. The fine of 25 florins for a first offense was raised to 500 guilders by a renewal of the ordinance, on Nov. 21, 1645, double for a second offense, and banished or expelled from the country, etc.—Ibid., 52. Still the traffic continued, and in another order against it, of July 1, 1647, it was sought to overcome the evasion that had been practised by persons conveying liquor surreptitiously from hand to hand to the Indians.—Ibid., 64. In the regulations for taverns issued by Stuyvesant and his council, March 10, 1645-6, the selling, bartering, or giving away of intoxicants to Indians was made punishable by forfeiture of the taverns and arbitrary correction.—Ibid., 95.

Notwithstanding this, it was plainly evident from the number of Indians who were seen every day "running drunk along the Manhattan" that the previous ordinances were unheeded. On May 13, 1648 (q.v.), there was added to the fines "an arbitrary corporal punishment" upon those who offended, because it was deemed better "that such evil disposed persons be punished than that a whole country and people should suffer in consequence of their acts and no proper punishment be given to the violators, though the evidences of their violations were, as Stuyvesant and the council declared, observable "by the deplorable experience" of seeing "many Indians" daily who were "drunk and fuddled," and committed in this state "many grave acts of violence and violence," the same by prevailing over the Indians or causing them to go from place to place to obligated and to the council. The gravity of the situation inspired a new ordinance, of Aug. 28, 1654 (q.v.), which added to former provisions a prohibition against supplying strong drink to natives "on the Rivers, Streams and Kills, out of Sloops or in any manner or by any means." By this edict, drunken Indians were to be arrested and imprisoned until they were made known from whom they had obtained intoxicants. —Ibid., 182-83.

The "very dangerous, injurious and damnable sale" went on apace, so that on Oct. 26, 1656 (q.v.), a more detailed ordiinance was promulgated by the council, which provided "that no person for the sale of or in or about the houses, taverns or bagniovaters, shall sell, give, furnish or carry or allow to be carried, to or for any Indians, in or out of the house, by land or water, from Yachts, Barke, Boats, or Canoes, Carts or Wagons, by what name soever such vehicles may be called, either directly or indirectly, any Beer, Wine, distilled Spirits or Liquors, under a penalty of five hundred guilders, and in addition to be arbitrarily punished on the body, and banished from the country." Also, "all superior and inferior officers, free or hired servants of the company, and Inhabitants" of the province were to be, "by their office and leality," informers of violations or, failing this, to be adjudged "pariahs criminals, subject to all the fines and penalties of the said ordinance, or any half of the said fines.—Ibid., 259-60.

The order was renewed, on June 13, 1657 (q.v.), with provisions for having proper entry made of all liquors taken on board of the vessels.—Ibid., 311. It was again renewed among the general consolidated ordinances of April 9, 1658 (q.v.).—Ibid., 343.

It appears, from an ordinance of July 19, 1663 (q.v.), that the sale of intoxicants to Indians was "for some time now more prevailent than ever before." The edicts were disregarded and Stuyvesant and his council found themselves unable to cope with the situation. Therefore, they empowered the inferior courts to issue, in each village and jurisdiction, such orders as were deemed to be "best and most proper for the suppression of that scandalous traffic."—Ibid., 446-47. A few months later, on Dec. 31, the last ordinance of Stuyvesant and the council on this subject was issued. It provided for the arrest and fine of Indians who were found drunk on Sundays.—Ibid., 452.

Prior to this date, which is that of a ground-brief to Evert Duycking for a piece of land in Van der Negev (Liber GG: 67, Albany), a house for the company's negroes was erected upon a plot of ground covered by the present Nos. 32 and 34 South William St.; it was demolished about 1660.— Liber Deeds, B: 31 Deeds & Conveyances, 1659-1664, trans. by O'Callaghan, 294-95. On this land, a horse-nail was erected sometime before 1667.—Book of Records of Deeds & Transf.
1643 covered by the building of the New York Produce Exchange.—

13. An ineffectual peace having been concluded with the Indians, in May of this year, which was broken by Indian depredations along the Hudson River begun by the Wappingers during the summer (Jour. N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 278-91; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 190-91), and Director-General Kieft having summoned the commodity to choose representatives to advise with him in the matter, thecommanding officers of the eight men: Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, Jan Janzen Dammen, Barent Dircksen, Abraham Pietersen, Isaac Allerton, Thomas Hall, Gerrit Wolpertsen (van Couwenhoven), and Cornelis Melyn. As Jan Janzen Dammen is considered objectionable by the seven others, they protest unanimously against his selection, and choose Jan Evertsen Bout in his stead—but not without a counter protest from Dammen. This body composed the board of "Eight Men.

—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 185, 191-93, 212; XIII: 16; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 86; Jour. N. Neth., in Jameson, 279. On Nov. 3, they signed a memorial to the states-general, in which they depicted the Indian hordes, the people, who, "as wives, with little and old ones that still survive, in poverty together, in and around the fort at the Manahatas, where we are not safe even for an hour."—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 139. "Fort Amsterdam, utterly defenceless," stands "open to the enemy night and day."—Ibid., 139. The "Eight Men" drew up "some good and suitable regulations; forbidding taverns and all other improperities; appointed a week's preaching instead ... but it was not executed by the officer. These eight men, aforesaid, were never called together again on public business, from the 4th November, 1643, to the 17th June, 1644; though in that period many things occurred. It was, indeed, sufficiently manifest how little were these Eight men respected, for no sooner did they open their mouths to propose anything tending in their judgment to the public good, than the Director met them with surdy biting and scoffing taunts; and sometimes had they summoned, without asking them a question, thus obliging them to return amidst jeers and sneers, as wise as they went."—Ibid., 212; Repres. N. Neth., in Jameson, op. cit., 313.

15. The "Eight Men" resolve to renew hostilities against the Indians, except those of Long Island (who are to be encouraged as allies), and to enlist as many men as possible.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 86; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 10. Fifty Englishmen were enrolled under the command of Capt. John Underhill, who took the oath of fidelity on Sept. 29.—Ibid., 86; Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 366.

17. Underhill was declared, on Oct. 39, before the provincial secretary, "that they, the aforesaid, being commanded by the Hon:b Director, Willem Kieft, to defend the Colonic of Achter't Col [spelled infral], their strength being five soldiers, a very heavy attack was made on the house by the Indians in the night between the seventeenth and eighteenth of September." They continued: "We, the aforesaid, being strong five soldiers, five boys and one man who resided in the Colony, defended ourselves until the Indians set the house, in which we were obliged to defend ourselves, on fire over our heads, therefore, we were forced to abandon the house in consequence of the heat, and succeeded with great difficulty in saving what we could, bringing it with all the property that was there only our firearms."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 89. "Achter 't Col" referred to Newark Bay and the country beyond. The later District of Achter Col consisted of the towns of Elizabeth-town, Woodbridge, Shrewsbury, Newark, Picquatawway, and Milltown. N. J.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 124; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 507. See C. Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. II.

Oct. 24 of the West India Co., praying for help, in which they write: "On the Island of the Manachatas [sic], from the north even unto the south there, there are no more than three or six spots inhabited at this date. There are threatened by the Indians every night with fire, and by day with the slaughter of both people and cattle. . . . The Fort is defenceless and entirely out of order, and resembles (with submission) rather a meBold than a fort against an enemy. . . . they [the Indians] have removed all their Oct. women, children and old men into the interior, the rest of the most expert warriors hang daily on our necks, with fire and sword, and threaten us on all sides, and the fort consists of about 1500 men; this we hourly expect, for all the outside places are mostly in their power. It is owing entirely to their pleasure if any cattle are found alive throughout the entire country. . . . The population is composed mainly of women and children: the few men, of whom about 200 strong, who must protect their families now skulking in straw huts outside the Fort; the cattle are partly burnt and killed, what remains has been conveyed to the Fort on the Manahataes, where for want of food they must starve this Old Jan's plantation had driven with a good the cattle into the said marsh, so that the cattle sink into it over their backs, and inasmuch as the cattle were strong and well in flesh, they finally got through the swamp."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 90 (N. Y. State Library).

Cornelis Jansen Coelen impowers Kieft and his council "to remove all the property which may yet remain in the Colonic Achter 't Col [see Sept. 17-18], and to take the same under their care until further order.—Col. Hist. MSS., 1500 hourly from the Proprietors of said Colonic. On the 26th, "Philippie du Tryeux" (or de Truy), the court messenger, attached, "in the name of Janos Winkelman," the power of attorney granted by Coelen to Kieft and the council, in behalf of Meyndert Meyndertsen of Keren and himself, and his executors, leaving however that "it is out of the power of the Company & the power of attorney aforesaid."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 86, 91 (N. Y. State Library).

Pieter Cock and Roulhoff Jansen depose before the provincial secretary: "at the request of Cornelis Jansen Coelen . . . that after the Colonic Achter 't Col had been burnt by the Indians" (see Sept. 17), there was "no opportunity to go or sail thither to examine the condition of the place, in consequence of the multitude of Indians who burn and kill all what they can find in the woods, on water or elsewhere."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 85 (N. Y. State Library).

After the Indian depredation in the Colonic Achter 't Col in September (9-v.), Meyndert Meyndertsen of Keren's agent, Janos Winkelman, lodged the refugees at the city tavern of New Amsterdam, conducted by Philip Gerritsen. Winkelman now acknowledges an indebtedness to Gerritsen of 152 guilders, four stuivers, to "be paid by Meys" to the proprietors of the Colonic of Achter 't Col, or from the effects thereof." On Nov. 27, Gerritsen gave power of attorney to Willem Turck to collect this sum "from Meyndert Meyndertsen of Keren or the Patrons of the Colonic."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 89, 92 (N. Y. State Library).

Abraham Jacobsen van Steenwyck receives a ground-brief for a lot, now the site of Nos. 31 and 33 Bridge St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 89, Vol. II, and II: 382.
1643. Regulations for the burghe guard are made by ordinance, providing fines for offences of profanity, drunkenness, and discharging guns without orders from the corporals, etc.— Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 35.

Dec. 1643. Trompeter, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 127, Albany) for a piece of land on the east of that of Antony Portugal.

1844. William Castell, in his book printed in this year, gives the following account of New Netherland: "Between these Nations [the Seguini and Novans] and the Matawacs, who live by fishing there lieth an Archipelagus, wherein are many Islands: On the north-side of the Dutch Plantation springeth the river Machicham, called the great North river, which running throw one of the widest parts of that part of the continent, as yet discovered, affordeth convenient habitation for the Aquaschotes, and the Massaots on the east-side. For the Sachans and Tappans on the west-side. Near to this great River, the Dutch have built a fort only for the convenience of their natives adjoining, but likewise for their more free trading with many of Florida, who usually come down the River Canada, and so by land to them. A plaine prouf, Canada is not far remote."—A Short Discovery of the Coasts and Continent of America (London, 1644), 25 (sic for 22).

Jan. 1844. A fight takes place on the bank of the East River in front of Melyn's house (present Pearl and Broad Sts.), between "Hans Hendrickz from Tracez in Holstein" and Jacob Hendricks, from Dort. Hans (a servant of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter) is stabbed by Jacob during the brawl, in which both use knives, driving one another into the river "up to the knees." Hans was so badly wounded that he was put to bed "at the house of Adam Rodentsen, from Doockum," where his will was drawn in the presence of the provincial secretary.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 93 (N. Y. State Library).

2044. Hendrick Jansen, a tailor, receives a ground-brief for a large tract of land running from the present Stone St. to Beaver St., and covering part of William St. and Hanover Sq., the site of which is now covered by the New York Cotton Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 399.

Kieft and the council complain to Andries Roodlofzen, chief boatmaker, that the West India Company's property is being greatly neglected by him; they command him to do his duty, "that all equipments be properly made," and "that all vessels be in good order." Apparently on the same day, Kieft and the council address Tynee Jassen, the ship carpenter, as follows: "Whereas complaints are daily made to us that you do not properly repair the vessels, and that the Skippers must navigate for a year and a day among the rest, the yachts Amsterdam and Prince Willem, [so] that they cannot keep anything dry in the cabin, in consequence of which the yachts suffer great damage which can be prevented by a little labor, therefore we charge you herewith to perform your bounden duty, to see that the Company may have a suffer loss and you be free from blame." Jassen replies that he is doing the best he can, but cannot "now that a vessel is leaky, unless those in charge of her inform him of the fact," also "that nothing can be effected without means."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 97 (N. Y. State Library).

Trynne Jansen, the ship carpenter of the company at New Amsterdam (see Jan. 28), furnishes testimony from the skippers of the vessels "Prince Willem," "Amsterdam," "St. Martin," and the "Vrede," in defense of his services. They declare "that during our skippership he hath worked on our boats and Yachts and afforded all necessary assistance, but he was sometimes in want of materials."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 98 (N. Y. State Library).

Certain negroes, named, who have been slaves in the service of the West India Co. for 18 or 19 years, are granted conditional freedom, with their wives, "on their promise, as other Free people here in New Netherland, where they shall be able to earn their livelihood by Agriculture, on the land shewn and granted to them." But their children, born or yet to be born, are to be slaves of the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 35-37; see also the manumission of another negro, on Sept. 27, 1646, ibid., 60.

Depositions were made on Nov. 19, 1644, before Secretary Van Mar. Tienhoven, by Sergeant Martin Ael and Abraham Nieuman, a soldier, at the request of Director-Gen. Kieft, regarding the complete destruction by fire of incendiary origin, on March 5, of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter's Harlem farm called Zegenadel (Vol. of Blessing). They testify "that they lived in the farm, or lay in garnison," there "when his house was burned, at which time his servants stood Antony." They had in number four soldiers and five farm servants, two of whom were thieves, and the owner had gone to the Manhattan, having taken with him two soldiers.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 135 (N. Y. State Library); N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 53-55.

Jan. 1645. Everson Bout, Claes Jansen, and others, who understand the Indian language, depose that on this day they "heard an Indian named Ponke say in the Indian language . . . that the Indians, our enemies, did not burn Jochem Pietersen's house, and that he never heard any Indian say so. When they had done any mischief, he said, hoasted of it, but that nothing was better known among the Indians than that the Dutch themselves had burnt the aforesaid house, and removed through dread of being killed there." Ponke was an "Indian of Marechakick," who was with the hostile Indians during the Indian war.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 142 (N. Y. State Library).

Nicholas Coorn, Hans Kiersteede, and others depose that while they, the minister, and their wives, were, on the evening of the 15th, at the "Stadt Herberg," conducted by Philip Gerritsen, who had invited them to sup with him, Capt. John Underhill, Lieut. George Baxter, and other Englishmen made an outrageous attack on the party.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 27. For the details of this fracas, see Innes, New Am. and Its People, 180-81.

Roger Williams obtains a patent for Rhode Island.

Thomas Badgheat or is referred to as a "planter on the Island of Mashacket, Knight, a resident of London, in Old England;" he pledges in payment of a debt his tavern called The Kings Head standing to Bishopsgate street, London.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 105. A contract is recorded at the office of the provincial secretary by the appearance of Thomas Hall and Thomas Goodman, who acknowledged to have contracted to set up for Jan Damen 250 rods of posts and rails, to be set "so close and tight that hogs, goats or other cattle shall not pass through; all good and strong work which must be completed before May. Jan Damen must transport the posts and rails from the Strand out of Juffrouw's valley [Maiden Lane] or thereabouts, to the place where they are to be set up. In addition to the transportation Jan Damen shall pay for every rod aforesaid 35 stivers in the pay at present current in New Netherland."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 106 (N. Y. State Library). See also April 25, for Damen's farm.

Because the Indians daily commit much damage, both to men and cattle, and there is danger of their burning the Christians, who go to look for straying cattle, may be lost, Director-Gen. Kieft and the council decree that there shall be constructed a "Fence, Palisade [failing], or Clearing [encomb], beginning from the Great Bouwery to Emanuel's plantation;" and every one who owes cattle and desires to pasture them on the same must either warn his servant to repair the fence or, if it be found to be too short, to repair therewith tools on Monday morning, April 4, at seven o'clock, to aid in constructing this fence.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 37; Records N. Neth., IV: 186 (N. Y. State Library).—"Emanuel's 1644 plantation" was that owned by Emanuel Pietersens, a negro, the precise location of which has not yet been traced—see, however, map of farms, Vol. II.

31 Apr. of 1643, was no sooner received by the States General than it was referred to the College of the XIX, with directions to adopt prompt measures for the relief of New Netherlands. But the West India Company now almost had been utterly unable to defend the American colonies, were chiefly anxious to save themselves from utter ruin by forming a union with the flourishing and powerful East India Company. In reply to the mandate of the States General, they avowed [April 23] their sympathy with the "destitute and many-coloured" colonies of New Netherlands; but "the long-looked-for profits there" had not come, and they had no means at hand of sending relief to "the poor inhabitants who have left their Fatherland." And the bankrupt company urged the States General for a subsidy of a million of guilders, to place it in good, prosperous, and profitable order.—Brohead, Hist. State of N. Y., I, 403, and authorities cited.

25 Jan., Jan Jansen Damens receives a ground-brief for land lying on both sides of Broadway.—Liber GG: 91 (Albany). This farm extended from the present Thames St. to Fulton St., running to the North River, at that time about on the line of the present Greenwich Ave. in a straight course on the east side of Broadway, the line running from the middle of Maiden Lane east, down Broadway, about on the line of Wall St. at the south, and along the beach (now Pearl St.) in places, but not all the way, several other grants coming between Damens's land and the Strand.—See Castello Plan, II: 335; III: 1; and Map, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 949.

16 The continued depositing of ashes and commission of other nuisances within Fort Amsterdam by the soldiers is penalized by ordinance.—Laws & Ord. N. Y. State Library.

23 Hendrick Jansen Smith receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden. This land was in the interior of the block now bounded by Exchange Pl. on the north, Beaver St. on the south, Broadway on the west, and New St. on the east; it lay in the roughly portion of this block, just north of Beaver St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and p. 368, Vol. II.

Cornelis van Tienenhooven receives a ground-brief (recited in Liber Patents, II: 113, Albany), which, by modern streets, would be bounded between Broadway and the East River (now Pearl St.); on the north, by the nearly straight line running from the south side of Beaver St. and farther eastward, along the south line of Ann St. and by Maiden Lane on the south. Part of this tract later became the "Shemakers' land," for which see Pl. 24-9, Vol. I, and II: 216-38. See also July 1, 1761, and March 20, 1765, Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

An excise on liquors and beer is prescribed by ordinance, to raise means for continuing the soldiers in service, made necessary by the Indian war, and to provide protection in harvesting, "for neither grain, nor hay can be cut without Soldiers."—Laws & Ord. N. Y. Neth., 38-394. N. Y. Col. Doc. II: 60-61. After this date, this method of excise is continued, and see pp. 49-51 for the continuance of this form of excise to the end of the colonial period.

3 A house on the banks of the river is spoken of as "a place of good order, and farther eastward, along the south line of Ann St. and by Maiden Lane on the south. Part of this tract later became the "Shemakers' land," for which see Pl. 24-9, Vol. I, and II: 216-38. See also July 1, 1761, and March 20, 1765, Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

An excise on liquors and beer is prescribed by ordinance, to raise means for continuing the soldiers in service, carefully necessary by the Indian war, and to provide protection in harvesting, "for neither grain, nor hay can be cut without Soldiers."—Laws & Ord. N. Y. Neth., 38-394. N. Y. Col. Doc. II: 60-61. After this date, this method of excise is continued, and see pp. 49-51 for the continuance of this form of excise to the end of the colonial period.

1644, Jan Janzen Damens erected his house in what is now the roadbed of Cedar St., just east of Broadway.—Liber GG: 91 (Albany). This was the farm-house on the Damens farm shown on the Castello Plan, and described later as the "great house" occupied by Cornelis Kertsen.—Liber Deeds, II: 107 (New York); cf. Mortgages, 1664-1765, trans. by O'Callaghan, 55. Dr. Henry Taylor bought this house in 1672.—Liber Deeds, B: 190 (New York). In Oct., 1673 (g.v.), Colver ordered that it be demolished, because it stood too near the fortifications.—N. Y. Col. Doc. II: 611. See Castello Plan, II: 335-35; and C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 949.

28 Cornelis Melyn receives a ground-brief of a lot through which, it is stated, "runs the common ditch"—now Broadway—the said lot forming the present north-east corner of Pearl and Broadway, passed through the blocks now occupied by the south-east corner of Stone and Broad Sts.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and II: 125; Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 312; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 405. See also "Heere Graft," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.

May Michael Marischan receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden. Marischan's name as a grantee here is plainly an error, for, on June 1, 1644, Adrian Vinchardt (Vincent) received a ground-brief for the same plot, which included the present Nos. 71 to 81 Broad St., from the corner of the Consolidated Exchange to South William St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 295-300; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II.

Claes Jansen, from Naarden, receives a ground-brief for a double lot, now Nos. 12-14 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and II: 126; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 39. At some time prior to this date, Jan Pietersen, from Housen, occupied a ground-brief, broad and north and south, in the blocks now east and west of Greenwich Ave. and north and east of Clarkson and Carmine Sts.—See Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 88; Manatus Maps, II: 190, C. Pl. 41, 42, and 42a, Vol. II. For location of Greenwich Ave., see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1001.

24 This house was the one occupied by Washington, and during the British occupation by Sir Henry Clinton, Sir Guy Carleton, and Sir William Howe.—Kemble, Journal in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1883), 82, 143. Later, the house was occupied as a young ladies' boarding-school, as a select-boarding-house, and as a private residence.
It remained in the Kennedy family until 1810, when it was sold by Robert Kennedy to Nathaniel Prime, the merchant and banker. Prime's property, a hotel-keeper, and it became known as "The Washington" and the Washington Hotel. In 1811, it became the property of Cyrus W. Field, who demolished it in 1812 and erected upon its site the Washington building. —See Castle Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 359. Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 359. Peter Cornelissen (Timmerman, i.e., Carpenter) receives a 8 ground-brief for a lot on parts of the present Nos. 25 and 27 Pearl St., near Wall St. —See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 354.

Peter Jansen, from Gorkum, receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, on the east side of Broadway, about 125 feet north from the corner of Beaver St. The building of the Standard Oil Co. now occupies this lot. —See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.

Jacob Jacobsen Roy, gunner, receives a ground-brief for a lot between what would now be Pearl and Bridge Sts., east of State St., now covered in part by the Battery Park building and in part by the Maritime building. —See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 354.

Hendrick Jansen, tailor, conveys to Burgert Jorissen "the house situated on the Island of Manhattan, and the garden (the garden fronting the river and the bowhouse with the apprentices which are at present in use at the brewery," for 1,900 Carolus guilders in three installments. —Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 146 (N. Y. State Library).

The Jesuit missionary, Father Francis Joseph Bressani, is given safe conduct by Director-General Kieft, by ship sailing from New Amsterdam for Europe. —O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Neth., I: 337. For fuller particulars relating to Bressani's sufferings at the hands of the Iroquois, his reason, and aid given to him by the Dutch, see Jesuit Relations (Cleveland, 1901), LXII: 169;

Antony de Hooges acknowledges "to be well and truly indentured unto the West India Company" for 986 guilders, 11 stuivers, "on account of Marijn Adriaensen, for which also his account on the Colonie Book No. E is closed as paid." —Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 170 (N. Y. State Library).

The "Eight Men" went to the directors at Amsterdam: "Our fields lie fallow and waste; our dwellings and other buildings are burned; not a handcan be planted or sown this fall on all the abandoned places. The crop, which God the Lord permitted to come forth during the past summer, remains on the field, as well as the hay in divers places; whilst we poor people have not been able to obtain a single man for our defence. We are burdened with heavy families; have no means to provide necessities any longer for our wives or children. We are seated here in the midst of thousands of Indians and barbarians, from whom is to be experienced neither peace nor pity." Concerning the Indians they write: "They continually rove around in parties, night and day, on the Island of Manhattan, killing our people not a thousand paces from the Fort; and things have now arrived at such a pass, that no one dare move a foot to fetch a stick of fire wood without an escort." They continue: "The two boroughs in the Bay, and the three on this Island (Manhattan), one of which belongs to the Homble Company, are in great danger of being burnt this winter, for never have these Savages shown themselves so bold and insolent." —N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 210, 211.

They also state that "the Director [Kieft] sent to the Lords, by the Blue Cock, a Booke ornamented with various pictures in water colors, in which he dilates at length on the origin of the [Indian] war. On that subject it contains as many lines as lies; as we are informed by the Minister [Boqardus] and others who have read it; and from our time to his, as few facts as leaves. It is to be embellished with an oil painting. We shall not question whether some such tools, for the appearance of which he requests the rivers here; nor the length and breadth of the land. All this is mere copy, and has been long ago described by others. It may, indeed, be asked, how it comes that the Director can so aptly describe all localities and the nature of the animals, since his Honor in the six or seven years he has been residing at the Man-hatten, has never been, in this country, further from his kitchen and bedchamber than half way up the aforesaid Island." —Ibid. II: 212-13; cf. ibid., I: 204, 206, for the "Little Book" of Kieft. In response to the complaints of the "Eight Men" (see Oct. 24, 1633; Oct. 28, 1644), the "Assembly of the XIX" orders that all the envs relating to N. Neth. be placed in the hands of the West India Company's "Rekenkamer," or bureau of accounts, with instructions to examine the same, make a detailed report of the condition of the province, and suggest measures for its improvement. On Dec. 15, the "Rekenkamer" submitted its report, which was communicated to the states-general. —Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 403-4. See Addenda.

Burgert Jorissen acknowledges a contract of sale to Cornelis Melyn of "his house and lot situate on the East River between said Melyn and the Great Tavern" (present north side of Pearl, east of the corner of Broad St.), for 950 guilders, payable in installments, the final part "six months after delivery," and the delivery to be made after the expiration of a lease held by Augustin Heerman. —Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 175 (N. Y. State Library).

See April 25, 1643, for the grant to Jorissen.

A budget "estimate of the expenses which the Company would have to bear in New 14, 1666, and the amount of the money required yearly, for 69 persons. The salary of the director-general is 5,000 florins, and he is "to board himself"; that of the factor and receiver 1,440 florins; of the fiscal, the secretary, and the commissary of merchandise and store goods, each 720 florins; of his clerks and clerks, each 420 florins; of the military establishment, over 10,000 florins; besides other persons. —N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 125-56; O'Callaghan, Hist. N. Neth., I: 356-82.

Symon Congoe, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 129, Albany) for a piece of land to the west of land belonging to Jan Geese ("Old Jan"), later part of Trinity Church land near Richmond Hill. —See Liber Deeds, XXXIV: 525 (New York).

Pieter Santosone, a free negro, receives a ground-brief for a piece of land (Liber Patents, II: 159, Albany), later part of the Bayard west farm. —See recitals in Liber Deeds, XXXIV: 525 (New York).

Gratia Dangola (d'Angola), a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 134, Albany) for a piece of land later included in Trinity Church's upper farm, near Richmond Hill.

Groot Manuel, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 126, Albany) for a plot of ground between the land of Manuel Trompetter and that of Swager. See also Oct. 19, 1645.

Paulo Dangola, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 128, Albany) for a certain piece of land which probably later was included in the Bayard farm.

Cleyn Antonio, a free negro, receives a ground-brief (Liber Patents, II: 139, Albany) for a piece of land, probably part of that which later became Trinity Church's upper farm.

In or about this year, Cornelis Aertsen received a ground-brief, not found of record, but recited in Liber Deeds, IX: 164 (New York).

In relation to the modern streets, the land was bounded on the west by Montgomery St., between the East River and Division St.; on the north, by a line running from the intersection of Division and Montgomery Sts. obliquely to the middle of Henry St., midway between Scammel and Jackson Sts.; on the east, by a line running from the above-mentioned point, between Scammel and Jackson Sts., to the river; and on the south, by the river. The river shore, in 1645, 1653, generally speaking, along the line of the present Water St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 946; Pl. 175, Vol. III.

Thomas Willett "sells to Cornelis Termesen from Gorkum Jan. 28 a lot and house situate on the Island of Manhattan, adjoining the Public Tavern" (present Pearl Street and Coenties Alley), for 775 guilders. —Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 175 (N. Y. State Library).

Cornelis Groesens receives a ground-brief (recited in Records N. Neth., III: 33, Albany) for land situated (on the modern city plan) between Rector and Thames Sts., west of Broadway, including Trinity churchyard, and extending from Broadway as far as the street in area to the Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 565; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Pieter Cornelissen is appointed house carpenter of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 94.

Gerritsen for singing a defamatory song against Willem Gerritsen, pleading guilty, and the court sentences him to stand, until the conclusion of the English [Evening?] sermon, bound to the May-pole in the fort, with two rods around his neck and two rods around his body.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 94.

1652

A member of the guard standing sentry outside the fence on the Great Highway (Broadway), in front of the house of Jan Jansen Damen, challenges several of the commonality, which provokes bantering remarks and ends with the wounding of Pierre Maffenant, a Frenchman from Rheims.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 95.

1653

Jan Cornelissen (from Horon) receives a ground-brief for a lot and house on the south side of Marketfield St. This plot is, at the present day, in large part covered by the building of the New York Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 377.

1654

1655

Jan Snelder receives a ground-brief for a double lot, for two houses and two gardens, lying between Bridge and Pearl Sts., east of State St. This land, at the present time, is covered by the Maritime building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 386-87.

1656

Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief for 100 morgens of land for a farm called the "Oter-spoor" (otter-track), lying on the Island, in the East Village, south of the Montgomerie's and St. Jobch Pietersen's land lie near it, "which aforesaid 100 morgens were granted by the late Director Wouter van Twiller and council to Jacob van Curver, and subsequently sold by Van Curver to Cornelis van Tienhoven, "who has ceded the ownership thereof to the behalf of Conraet van Ceulen, merchant of Amsterdam, according to the transport of the same."—Liber GG: 100 (Albany). For grant to Conraet van Ceulen (Liber GG: 31, Albany), see Aug. 22, 1659. This plantation was situated according to modern maps, north of the Miller Creek, at 108th St. and extended from Harlem River to near Fifth Ave.—See Landmark Map (Pl. 178), Vol. III.

1657

The "Oter-spoor" farm was leased by Van Curver to Claes Cornelissen Swits, May 15, 1658, for a term of three years; after Van Tienhoven took title to it, as agent for Van Ceulen (or Keulen), he renewed the lease to Swits, Jan. 25, 1659. Swits taking with him his partner Jan Clasens Alteras. The entire section soon became known as Van Ceulen's Hook.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 146-48. See C. Pl. 42, Vol. II, and II: 194.

1658

Gillis Pietersen (from ter Gouw) receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden on the north side of Pearl St., now parts of Nos. 21 and 24. The house was purchased in 1674 by Egbert van Swaen, son of the late George van Swaen.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 282, 387, 390.

1659

Richard Smith receives a ground-brief for a lot lying on the East River, situated, on the modern plan, at Nos. 91 to 101 Pearl St. (including only the westerly part of the latter), just west of Hanover Sq.—See Castello Plan, C. II: 314; Map of Dutch Grants, July C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.

1660

Guus van der Hees ("sallmaker") receives a ground-brief. Later, through error, the same lot was granted to Jerrysen Blank (April 15, 1647), but the mistake was rectified. The lot was at the present No. 20 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and II: 1275; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 389-90.

1661

Thomas Willett from the Crown grants, for a lot lying between the East River, on the north side of Pearl St., running eastward from Connetes Alley, Nos. 75 to 89 Pearl St. now covering the land granted. The widow of Willett was married to Charles Bridges, who was confirmed in this property June 11, 1667.—See Pl. 17, Vol. I, and II: 229; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 404.

1662

Tennis Tomasssen from Naerden receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, lying on the east side of the present Whitehall St., about 100 ft. south from the line of Marketfield St. The land is now entirely built over by the Produce Exchange.—See Castello Plan, C. II: 248; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 374.

1663

Seven soldiers of Claude de St. Etienne de la Tour, of Acadia, "remainder of all his forces," being sent by him to New Amsterdam, are taken into the Dutch service, with the expectation that they will be used in exploring mines in the lands of the Caritans (New Jersey) and "Travelers' Currency" in Brazil. —Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 97.

1664

Articles of peace are concluded by Director-General Kieft and Aug. council with the warring Indians. There come this day "to the Fort Amsterdam before the director and council, in presence of the whole community, sacheins or chiefs of the savages, in their own behalf and as attorneys for the neighboring chiefs,—to wit, Oramy, chief of Aklarckenheis" (Hakkenack), and chiefs of the Tappans, Rehawgawack (Haverstraw), Pacham, and other Hudson River tribes. The treaty is concluded "in the Fort under the blue canopy of heaven in presence of the Council of New Netherland and the whole community called together, also in presence of the Maquau (Mohawks) ambassadors," who have been asked to attend the negotiations as mediators, and with these as co-mediator has come also their interpreter, Cornelis Antonissen.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 18. The court messenger previously notified all of the inhabitants to assemble in the fort, at the hoisting of colours and ringing of bell, to hear the proposals for peace read, and if any one had good advice to offer to the director-general and council, it was to be given freely at the meeting.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 97.

1665

Oloff Stevenson van Cortlandt receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden, now Nos. 11-15 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 8, Vol. II, and II: 251-54; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 478. On this grant he later erected an extensive brewery and other buildings.

1666

Isaac de Forrest receives a ground-brief for a certain lot of land for a house and garden in the block between Beaver and Stone Sts., Whitehall and Broad Sts., the ground being now principally covered by the building and court of the Produce Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 379.

1667

Jan Snelder receives a ground-brief for one lot for a house and garden on the north side of Beaver St., west of Broadway. Part of the Welles building now covers this lot, and part of the lot lies in the bed of New St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 369.

By a proclamation of Aug. 31, this day was set apart as a day of general thanksgiving throughout New Netherland, in consequence of the consummation of "the long desired peace" with the Indians on Aug. 2, 1664.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 19.

Thomas Sandersen receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the north-east corner of Beaver St. and Broadway; part of the Welles building now stands on this site.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.

The "groat" or ditch, present Broadway Street, is mentioned in a grant of this 31, and I, and II: 1275; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 367.

Leendert Aarden receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 120, Albany) for a piece of land consisting of the bowery called Byleveldt's bouwery, lying behind Corlal's plantation. It extends from the valley (marsh) next the said plantation and a valley (marsh) 170 rods further on west, 60 rods, to the wagon road; further along the wagon road northeasterly a little, an eastly, 15 rods; thence south, 56 rods, next the land of the bowery of the scotch to the valley about the west; next to a "Crippe Bush" (swamp), 180 rods, along the marsh, with several turns, 100 rods; amounting in all to about 399 rods. Leendert Aarden conveyed this bowery to Pieter Stuyvesant, July 18, 1665, and Stuyvesant was confirmed in its possession by Nicolfs, Nov. 6, 1667.—Liber Patents, II: 140 (Albany). This tract is bounded, on the modern plan, approximately as follows: Beginning at a point north of Delancy and west of Eldrij Stt., running thence northeasterly to a point west of the intersection of Ave. B and East 6th St.; thence southerly to a point in the block bounded by Aves. C and D and East 3d and East 4th Sts.; thence west-southerly to the place of beginning. —See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III; and May 16, 1699.

Big Manuell, a negro, receives a piece of land, lying on the Island of Manhattan, on the east end of Touschyn Brield's land; it extends along next to the land of Anna Negra (the negroess), east a little south, 67 rods; south-east-by-east, a little south, 14 rods; south a little west, 24 rods; west, 21 rods; west-north west 40 rods along the end of the aforesaid Brield's land and from the said point of beginning to a point west of 44 rods. Amounting in all to about 355 rods. Liber GG: 124 (Albany).

Hans Lodewyck receives a ground-brief for land at Turtle Bay.—Liber GG: 127 (Albany).

Edward Marrel receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden now covered by the building at No. 59 Broad St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. P. 87, Vol. II, and III: 373.

The ordinance prohibiting sale of intoxicants to the Indians (see June 18, 1645) is renewed with an increase in the fines and penalties for violations.—Laws & Ord. N. Eth., 82.

Dec. 12

Cornelis Claesen Swits receives a ground-brief (Liber GG: 129, Albany) for a piece of land known as Bowery No. 5, lying on the north end of Cornelis Jacoben's land or Bouwery No. 6. It extends along the said land east a little south 242 rods, and further north-by-east 68 rods to the bowery named Pannebacker's (tile maker's) bowery; next along said bowery west and west-north by west 260 rods; further on south-south-west to the wagon-road 60 rods; amounting in all to about 359 rods. This tract later was included in the De Lancey farm, north of Division St. —See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III. It was bounded, according to the modern plan, by a line running north-eastwardly from the south-east corner of The Bowery and Canal St., to a point on the east side of Clinton St., just north of Broome St.; the eastern boundary was the intersection of Division and Attorney Sts.; thence along Division St. to the Bowery; and northerly along The Bowery to the place of beginning.

1647
Some time prior to this date, the brewhouse of the West India Co. was erected, it being mentioned in Liber GG: 159 (Albany). It stood on the south side of Stone St. (the brewer's street of that day), between Whitehall and Broad Sts. It was demolished prior to 1651.—Colonial MSS., III: 75 (Albany); Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

Nov. 22
Pieter van der Donck, with Kieft's consent, receives from the sachem Tackamack and other Indians a deed for land north of Papparinvan Creek, containing some 30 or 40 morgens.—Riker, Hist. of Harlems, 161, Cf. Scharf, Hist. of Westchester Co., 1: 23.

During 1646 and 1647, a portion of the open space of the esplanade before the fort, situated in front of the five stone workshops of the West India Co., was divided into five grant lots. These lots faced the later Marktwieldt (Whitehall St.), and covered the block from Brouwer (Stone) St. to Brugh (Bridge) St., creating a narrow lane on the east, called Windkeld St., between them and the workshops of the company. The northernmost lot, on the corner of Brouwer and Brugh Sts., was granted to Silbaut Claessien, on May 12, 1646, and by him was conveyed to Joost Treunissen, from Naerden, on Aug. 14, 1649, who in turn conveyed it to Hendrick Willemse, on May 12, 1657. Gov. Nicolfs gave Willemse a confirmation of the lot, on Aug. 3, 1667.—Patents, II: 86, sec. of estate of Willemse's, No. 2. This second lot to the south was granted to Isaac de Forest, on Aug. 22, 1646.—Liber GG: 155, in Albany. He conveyed it, on Sept. 9, 1651, in two parcels, to Maximilian van Geleel and Hendrick Gerritsen, respectively.—Liber HH: 44-45, in Albany. The third lot was granted to Rev. Everardus Bogardus, but the exact date is not on record. The ground-brief was recited, however, in a deed by Guvert Loockermans on behalf of Anneke Jans Bogardus, to Warnarc Wessels, on Nov. 4, 1657.—Conveyances, Liber A: 107-8, in register's office, N. Y. City. It is known that the grant to Bogardus was earlier than that to De Forest, because the latter mentions the former. The fourth lot was granted to Robert Botsen, on March 12, 1647 (Liber GG: 176); yet he seems not to have built upon it. Later this plot was in the possession of Caspar Steymets or Steenmonts, who conveyed it, on Aug. 22, 1657, to Pieter Jacobsen Buyn.—Conveyances, Liber A: 100. The fifth and most southerly lot, on the corner of Brugh St was granted to George Holmes, on April 23, 1646.—Liber GG: 147.

In this year, Robert Dudley began the publication of his Arcana del Mare, at Florence.—Winsor, III: 3053 IV: 376. See also Chs. Ps. 35, 36, and 37, Vol. II.

Abraham Ruyken receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the south-east corner of Broad and Beaver Sts., now occupied by the building of the Consolidated Stock Exchange.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. P. 87, Vol. II, and III: 397.

Gerrit Jansen receives from Oldenburch a ground-brief (Liber GG: 174, Albany) for a certain piece of land formerly known as "Pannebackers" (tile-bakers), or, as the original has it, "Bouwery No. 7." Bouwery No. 7 was that granted to Cornelis Claessen Swits, and the Pannebackers Bouwery is really No. 4. It is described in the ground-brief as extending next to the land of Cornelis Claessen Swits; along the wagon-road to Hans Kiersteedens (Kiersteed's) plantation; and farther on straight through the woods to the division line of Leendert Aarden, "to the three roads," or, as the translator explains, the place where three roads meet. It contained in all, 458 morgens, 125 rods, or more than 90 acres. On the modern atlas, this farm was bounded approximately as follows: Beginning at a point on the east side of The Bowery a little south of Delancy St., running north-east to a point in the centre of South St., north of 5th St., then south-westerly and northerly along the south-east side of Clinton St. near its intersection with Broome St.; thence south-westerly to The Bowery at the south-east corner of Canal St.; thence north along The Bowery to the place of beginning. See Landmark Map, Pl. 175, Vol. III; also Oct. 17, 1649.
Jan Jansen Damen receives a ground-brief (Libel GG: 137; June Albany) for 20 morgens, 386 rods, of land called Calec Hook on Manhattan Island, for which he had held past ten years he has occupied. See also 174, Vol. III. The original ground-brief is owned by the N.Y. Hist. Soc. For reproduction, see Pl. 7, Vol. IV.

Peter Wolbertsen van Couwenhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the present Nos. 31 and 33 Stone St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and 375— for that tract of land comprised between a corner of the “Island of Manhattan” close to the “Fiscals Kitchen,” westward to the “privy of the Predicant” (Dominic Bogardus); its breadth on the east end is two rods, three ft.; its length on the north end against the kitchen aforesaid, one rod, six ft., five in.; on the west side its length is two rods, three ft.; on the south side its breadth is one rod, eight ft.; amounting in all to four rods, one ft., five in. This lot is known on the modern plan as No. 23 Bridge St.—See Castello Plan, II: 263; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. III: 381.

Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief (Libel GG: 147; Albany) for a certain piece of land which, by modern streets, is bounded on the west by Broadway, on the south by the south side of Ann St. (and partly a little south of Ann St.), on the east by the east side of Nassau St., and on the north by a line which would run from the northeast corner of the 87th St. Post Office to the southern end of the street, straight eastward to the intersection of Nassau and Beekman Sts. Part of this tract, between Beekman St., a line south of Ann St., Nassau St., and Park Row, subsequently became known as the “Vineyard.”—See Pl. 39, Vol. I, where it is designated “Vineyard.” The tract was granted by the Governor and Director General Johan van Dongen in 1655 (Libel Patents, V: 297, Albany), and was conveyed by Knight to Dongen in the same year.—Libel Deeds, IX: 387 (Albany). It was called the “Governour’s Vineyard” after that (Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 137), and sometimes known as the “Governour’s Garden.” Thomas Dongan, a kinsman of the governor, conveyed the plot to Thomas White in 1712.—Libel Deeds, XXI: 290 (New York). On June 30, 1784, the commissioners of forfeiture for the southern district of New York, under the act of May 12, 1784, sold to Anna White, widow of Thomas White, “all those several lots in the garden or vineyard forfeited by Thomas White, in the north ward of the city of New York.”—Libel Deeds, XLIII: 724 (New York). See Landmark Map Ref. Key: III, 946; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

George Homes (Holmes) receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden at the north-east corner of Whitehall and Bridge Sts., the site now occupied by the Kemble building. See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82a, Vol. II and III: 259; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and 381.

A ship with a cargo of negroes from Tamamanderé, the port on the coast of Brazil, south of Pernambuco, arrives at New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 101, 102, 82. The negroes, who came to the shipyard were sold for 1500 and 2000 g. The negroes were “situated by Porta van Neth., in Janseman’s N. Neth., 359-90; cf. also 364. So far as known, this was the first cargo of negro slaves sold in New Netherlands. About midsummer of 1647 (the original is undated), the directors at Amsterdam wrote to Stuyvesant: “We have seen that more negroes could be advantageously employed and sold there than the ship ‘Tamamanderé’ has brought. We shall take care, that in future a greater number of negroes be taken there” (New Netherlands).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 77. See also, on the early slavers, O’Callaghan, Voyages of the Slavers St. Johns and Arms of America (Albany, 1867); and Adelenda.

Rolf Jansen de Haas receives a ground-brief for a certain lot lying on the north side of Pearl St., now No. 25, a little east of the corner of Whitehall St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 384.

Sybby Claessen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot for a house and garden on the east side of Broadway, covering about the present Nos. 84 and 86, near the corner of Wall St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, and description on p. 366, Vol. II.

Sibbout Claessen receives a ground-brief (Libel GG: 149; June Albany) for 15 morgens, beginning at Bellgate Point where Hog (Blue) Well is located, which is declared invalid; and all affidavits not written by the provincial secretary, or other duly authorized person, “likewise Contrasts, Testaments, Agreements and other important documents,” are annulled.—Laws & Ord. N.Y. Neth., 59.

Sander Leendertsen receives a ground-brief (Libel GG: 151; Albany) for land, the location of which on the modern plan was at the corner of Stuyvesant St. and 165th St.—See Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Petrus Stuyvesant is commissioned director-general of New Netherland, and takes the oath. He arrived in New Amsterdam on May 11, 1647 (c.v.)—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 177-78; XIV: 83; Cf. Oct. 5, 1645.

The Thomas Hall “accepts from Michiel Jansen the bawdry belonging to the Honble West India Company, situated on the Island of Manhattan, for the term, and on the conditions agreed to by Michiel Jansen with the Honble Director Willem Kieft, as per contract dated 16th August No. 1645, which contract the above-named Thomas Hall promises to fulfill in such a manner as to satisfy the Honble Director.”—Records N. Neth., (O’Callaghan’s trans.), I: 154 (N. Y. State Library). Jansen, if in possession, could not have been there long, as he had a leased farm in the colony of Reusselaerswyck, called “de Hoogebach,” from 1640 to 1646, and on July 27, 1646, he was granted permission to remove to New Amsterdam.—Van Benschoten Bouwer Manuscript, 499, 796, 818; Jamecon, N. Neth., 375-76. This contract of Aug. 16, 1646, therefore, must have been made almost immediately after Jansen’s arrival at Manhattan.

The identification of this farm owned by the company is speculative; it was not one of the well-known six numbered bawdries belonging to the Dutch West India Co., for none of which either Jansen or Hall ever had a leasehold. In 1649, George Holmes and Thomas Hall lived in “a dwelling house” on bouwry No. 5 (N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 48), and on Nov. 29, 1650, Secretary Van Tiemen, then in Holland, said that “one Thomas Hall promises to fulfill, in such a manner as to satisfy a small bawdry belonging to the Honorable Company.” At the beginning of 1649, Jansen was living in a house (now covered by the Produce Exchange) in which the famous remembrance, called the Verloogd, was written (see Castello Plan, II: 255). The “small bawdry,” which Hall occupied in 1649, was perhaps a triangular plot at the present intersection of The Bowery and Pell St., where he was living on May 3, 1660, when he petitioned with others that a village might be permitted to be formed there.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210. His patent here was not obtained until Nov. 29, 1662.—Recitals in Libel Patents, IV: 17 (Albany). See Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.

Matthys Jansen receives a ground-brief (recited in Libel Patents, II: 35; Albany) for Pappariniam. It was in extent 50 morgens or 100 acres. Pappariniam was the northwest-most extremity of Manhattan Island, bounded by Spuyten Duyvil Creek and the Hudson River.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 80, Vol. III.

Isaac de Forest receives a ground-brief for a certain lot on the east side of the present Whitehall St., south of Stone St., now covered by the Kemble building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II and III: 380.

Rouloff Jansen Haes is mentioned in the records as “receiver of the Hon. West India Company’s duties here” in New Netherland.—Ibid.
Govert Lockerman becomes a ground-brief for a certain lot, now the north-east corner of Broad and Stone Sts., extending through the block and becoming the south-east corner of Broad and South William Sts.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 83, Vol. II, and II: 394-6; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 400.

Govert Lockerman and Dirck Cornelissen from Wensveen appear before the provincial secretary, as "guarantees for their copartners residing in Holland," and make a declaration that they have "sold to William Golder a parcel of land situated on the Island of Manhattan, on the East river, on the west whereof Mr. Allerton and Philip de Truy are adjoining," which they convey "by virtue of the groundbrief surrendered to the copartners by Golder and his council. This land is described thus: "It runs from the hill (hoogthe) next the strand along said Allerton's and De Truy's land in the length twenty eight rods to the crippleshub, in the breadth along the crippleshub eighteen rods, one foot, thence towards the hill (hoogthe) by the strand in the length thirty rods, next the land of Lockermans and [blank], and broad along the strand to the hill (hoogthe) eighteen rods, one foot, which parcel of land amounts altogether to five hundred and twenty four rods, five feet," for which Golder is to pay 200 gilders in installments.—Records N. Neth, (O'Callaghan's trans.), II: 148 (N. Y. State Library).

— About this year, Isaac Allerton erected his warehouse on what is now Nos. 10-12 Peck Slip. It is shown on Pls. 10, 10-a, Vol.
I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 96a.

— Jan Pietersen received, some time this year, a ground-brief for a lot on the present Whitehall St. He sold it through his attorneys, on March 18, 1653, to Thomas Baxter, an Englishman, who having turned pirate forfeited his property.

— See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and: 123: Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 391. This was part of the site of Stuyvesant's great house, and the later Whitehall mansion.

— From the period 1647-51 dating the very interesting series of maps of New Netherland, with inset views of New Amsterdam, known as the Vischer series, the original of which maps was probably based upon surveys made just before 1647, and lost in the shipwreck of the "Princess," on Sept. 27, of this year. The more important maps belonging to this series are reproduced and described in Vol. I, Figs. 7-9, 7-b, and 7-d, and in Vol. III, A. Pls.
1-3, 1-b.

30. Paulus Heymanssen, who hitherto has been a petty officer (Adelbarte), is appointed by the director-general and council as "Guardian over the Company's negroes," at a salary of 23 florins per month and 100 florins per annum as board money.—Reedend. N.
Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 280 (N. Y. State Library).

31. Hans Kierstede receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present
Nos. 23-25 Pearl St., corner of Whitehall St. In 1656, a market was established adjoining Kierstede's house.—See Frontispiece, 265-64; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 338;

— Cers (Christian) Pietersen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot at the present No. 23 Pearl St.—See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and

32. The provincial government issues a proclamation offering a reward of 100 florins for the discovery of the person or persons who tore down notices for renting the ferry from New Amsterdam to Long Island, and for the sale of the house and effects of Cornelis Melyn (at Broad and Pearl Sts.), which notices were posted at the usual places, namely, Fort Amsterdam, the lodge (lids), a light frame building, possibly the ferry-house, or more likely the custom-house—see July 4, and the public tavern (Pearl St. and Coenties Alley).—Cal. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 107. The tavern referred to was undoubtedly the city tavern (Stads Herberg). See also, regarding this ferry, 1658; 1642: Jan. 24, 1643.

33. Paulus Heymanseen receives a ground-brief for a certain lot now included in Battery Park. The house on the plot was demolished by order of Colvye in 1673, because it stood too near the fort.

— See Frontispiece, Vol. I, and I: 123: Castello Plan, Pls. 82, 88, Vol. II, and II: 270-77; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 582.

— Henrick Jansen Smith (Smith) secures a small house on the present site of No. 32 Bridge St. Here he conducted a tavern.
— See Castello Plans, II: 267; Dutch Grants, II: 359, and

Willem Tomassen is appointed naval commander. His commission, which gives him the name of "Jelmer," is issued at Fort Amsterdam and signed "P. Stuyvesant, Willem Kieft, L. van Dincklaghen, La Montagne."—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 287 (N. Y. State Library).

The sale or giving away of liquors is prohibited during divine service on Sunday and during the time of the clock, when there is no sermon, or otherwise, before four of the clock in the afternoon, . . . under any pretext, he it what it may, Travelers and daily Boarders alone excepted, who may be provided therewith for their necessity in their lodgings." All taverns are to be closed every Saturday night or of the month. The sale of liquors is "permitted by the landlord or other person to the inhabitants."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 60-61. The translation in Rec. N. Am., I: 1-2, is ambiguous and misleading. This is the earliest recorded ordinance of Stuyvesant’s council.

A will of this date, made at New Amsterdam, mentions "Jan Jansen Corner weyhouse-parter of the [Amsterdam] White Hat guild," (wachdachvanger van [het] wit hoede vene [en],) and refers also to "Commander Jelmer Tommassen, and Paulus Leendersen [vanden Griff] naval storekeeper (ejsequage mester)."—Quoted (and corrected from Records N. All inhabitants of New Netherland are charged and commanded to fence their lands properly, in order to prevent the cattle from doing damage. Horses, cows, and especially goats and hogs, are required to be herded or otherwise placed where they can do no harm, for which purpose Fiscal Van Dyck is to erect a poudre, in which he may detain the animals until the damage they have done is made good and the fine is paid.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 64-65; Rec. N. Am., I: 3.

Among the public works that Stuyvesant and his council recommend on this day, less than two months after Stuyvesant’s arrival at New Amsterdam, is the erection of "a Pier for the convenience of the Merchants and Citizens." It is the first proposal for a pier in New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69. See 1645.

An ordinance for regulating shipping at New Amsterdam is promulgated, in which anchorages are provided for as follows: "That all private Yachts, Barks, Ketches, Sloops and Boats under Fifty fathoms, whether Dutch, English, French, Swedish or other, desiring to anchor under the Manhattan Bridge or in the battery, or seek for, nor have any other refuge but the town of New Amsterdam, the town of New York, or the town of New Castle, or any other place than in front of the City in the river, nor between Cape Point and the Guide-board near the City Tavern, under a fine of Fifty Carolds guilders for the first time after they have been notified, and the large Ships may anchor between the said Point and the Second Guide Board, which stands on the way down towards the Smith’s valley." Vessels are to be visited, and their goods inspected and entered before discharged. Loading or unloading after sunset or before sunrise is prohibited. Boats may convey officers on board or ashore, but it must be done "in the evening before the ringing of the rogues’ bell [de bonne clock] and in the morning after Revelle, and from no other place than in front of, and about the office [jigelig]." See Jan. 29. Notice of departure must be given twelve hours in advance, and ships must first be visited and receive proper clearance. No passengers may be taken without a pass signed by the director-general or his deputy.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 65-66; Rec. N. Am., I: 5.

An excise on imported wines and spirituous liquors is imposed for the purpose of raising money for public works at New Amsterdam, as follows: "Whereas the fortress New Amsterdam is now for some time past, during the War, greatly decayed, and the walls daily leaped over and more and more trodden under foot by Men and their cattle, which renders it inexpedient to have there built and High authority, the contempt, yea disgrace of this State by others our Neighbors, whether English, French, Swedes, yea even by the Indians and Heathens, but also to the reproach of Us and our good Inhabitants, and is most perilous and dangerous in time of war, or of defence against all foreign enemies; Therefore, We, . . . intending, pursuant to the Order of the Honble Lords
On Director-Gen. The 22nd of July, 1664, it was ordered that a Pet for the convenience of the Merchants and Citizens, to construct a Sheet-piling to prevent the abrasion by the river in front of this city of [New Amsterdam], all which being useful and highly necessary, public and general works, requiring a considerable sum of money, both to procure the materials, and to pay the workmen, therefore for facilitating the work, said Pet of Amsterdam, we have resolved to ordain and establish a reasonable Excise and impost on the Wine, Brandy and Liquors which are imported from abroad.

Likewise, the purchaser is ordered and commanded not to receive, ship, export nor store any Wines without having first obtained a proper Bond signed by the Renter, and handed to the Officer, on pain of forfeiting such Wines and Five Hundred guilders additional, to be applied first for the Company, one third for the Church, one third for the Fiscal or the Complainant and Informer.

Directeur-Gen. Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance against smuggling, making it mandatory for merchants to exhibit their books and accounts when required, as well as to have all furs marked and stamped by a public officer at New Amsterdam before exportation. This ordinance was afterwards disapproved in Holland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neh., 69-69. A few days before (June 21), a report from Daniel Linsco was ordered not to allow any goods to be landed without permission from Stuyvesant or Secretary Van Tienhoven.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 109.

On behalf of himself and his partners, Thomas Broughton makes an acknowledgment of having “received and got full and prompt possession from the Honorable General Petrus Stuyvesant, of the ship Amanda arrived here [New Amsterdam] from Brasil, according to the bill of Sale and inventory dated the last of May A. 1642.”—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's tran.), II: 158 (N. Y. State Library). The ship was chartered to go to Boston, and her surnames were Isaac Allerton of New Amsterdam and Thomas Willet of New Plymouth.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 17.

In other records her name is given as “Tamandare” (T'Amandare). She brought negro slaves to New Netherland, and her sale was mentioned in correspondence from the directors at Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 77, 54, 301.

—Jan Stevensen from Haelerm, schoolmaster here—New Amsterdam, appears at the provincial secretary's office to execute a power of attorney to Luycas (Lucas) Smith, to “collect in the his principal's name, from the Honble Directors” of the Amsterdam chamber, 747 guilders, 2 stuivers, 12 pence, due to him “by balance and settlement of his account according to the Book of Ordinary Wages No. F. folio 74, earned from their Honors in New Netherland.”—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's tran.), II: 159 (N. Y. State Library).

Rev. Johannes Cornelisz. Backer (or Backerus) is appointed in New Amsterdam as a supply minister there, because Dominee Bogaert had not less rejoiced but left the city, and the latter place is to be 100 guilders per month and 200 guilders per annum for support, as well as free firewood. Backer had been a clergyman in the service of the West India Co. at Curacao, and had accompanied Stuyvesant from there to New Netherland, intending to return that way to Holland. His stay at Manhattan was “against his intention and inclination,” and was prolonged by the loss of Bogardus on the ill-fated “Princess,” and the subsequent delays in designating another regular minister for the post. His impatience to return to Holland was quickened by the godlessness of the place and the political rows that were rife at Manhattan at this period. On May 8, 1649, Stuyvesant called upon Backer and forbade him to read, or allow anybody else to read, any political writings in the church of Fort Amsterdam. Backer, having obtained authority from Holland to return there, also sought his dismissal from Stuyvesant and his council, from whom he was granted a release, on July 6, 1649. He sailed away in August (see Aug. 2, 1649), after “only 27 months” of residence in New Netherland, and, on Nov. 18, presented his credentials to the classis of Amsterdam.—Records N. Neh. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 317 (N. Y. State Library); Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 113, 122, 125, 226, 235, 235-237, 265. N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 116, 431; XIV: 115.

The Hon. Luubertsen van Dicklaren is appointed president of the ordinary court, to be assisted by some of the principal officers of the West India Co., but with reservation by Director-Gen. Stuyvesant to preside himself in important cases.—Cal. Hist. MSS., July 1664, 111.

In order to prevent a continuance of irregularities in the building and erecting of houses, such as extending lots far beyond their boundaries, setting up nuisances on highways and streets, and neglecting to build on granted lots, Stuyvesant and his council resolve to appoint three surveyors, literally road-masters (raijmeesters) and, namely, Luubertsen van Dicklaren, a member of the state council; Paulus Leendertz, vanander Grift, naval officer and member of the council, and Cornelis van Tienhoven, provincial secretary. They are authorized and empowered “to condemn and in future to stop all unsightly and irregular Buildings, Fences, Pallades, Post, Rails, etc.” All which heretofore intended to build or inclose their gardens or lots in or near the city of New Amsterdam are forbidden to undertake it without the previous knowledge and consent of, and survey by, these surveyors, under a penalty of 25 Carols guilders and the destruction of what may have been built or set up. Likewise, all who have formerly received lots are warned and notified to erect on their lots good and decent houses within nine months, according to law, or, in default thereof, such unimproved lots will be forfeited to the patron or landlord, or conveyed by him to whomsoever he pleases.—Laws & Ord. N. Neh., 74-75, Rec. N. Am., I: 4. The three surveyors were actually appointed on July 23, in advance of the ordinance.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 113; Records N. Neh. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 316 (N. Y. State Library).

It being deemed necessary that the newly built church in Fort Amsterdam shall be made tight against the inclemency of the forthcoming winter, and, in order that the work on the church may proceed and the materials be provided, Director-Gen. Petrus Stuyvesant, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, and Jan Jansen Damen are appointed church-warden (kerckmeesters) to forward all necessary work and supervise the same.—Records N. Neh. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 316 (N. Y. State Library). For an outline history of the “Church in the Fort,” see May 24, Amsterdam Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 934; and descriptions of the Frontispiece and other early plates, Vol. I.

John Dolfing deposes in regard to a visit he paid, in company with Fiscal Van Dyck and others, to the tavern of Gerrit, the miller (de Moleuner), namely Gerrit Fullower.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 38. The site was No. 26 Broadway, where the Standard Oil building now stands. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978. See also Rec. N. Am., I: 37.

An export duty on furs is established, in which a fixed duty is stipulated, “so that each large animal he has brought in from the Beaves, otter, and elchide are taxed 15 stuivers a skin, and less valuable skins in proportion.”—Laws & Ord. N. Neh., 733; Rec. N. Am., I: 3.

In an undated letter, written some time in midsummer, 1647, the director in Holland say to Director-Gen. Stuyvesant: “We were not less rejoiced but that he is there (or thereabouts), for some villages are springing up and that fine buildings are being erected around Fort New-Amsterdam.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 76, where the editor places the letter (p. iv) under date of May 2, which cannot be right, in view of its allusion, and of the fact that Stuyvesant only arrived at New Amsterdam on May 11.

“Johannes Backerus, minister here on the Island of Manhattan,” gives power of attorney to collect from the Amsterdam chamber 4,154 guilders, 1 stuiver, “earned by him at the Island of Curacao together with four hundred guilders earned by the abovenamed De Backerus on the ship Princess.”—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's tran.), II: 161 (N. Y. State Library).

Egbert van Borsum is mentioned as master of the “yacht Prince Willem.”—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's tran.), II: 161 (N. Y. State Library).

“Evert Duyck cunning, late assistant, now a freeman,” gives power of attorney to Hendrick Janman, tailor, to collect from the Amsterdam chamber 675 guilders, 10 stuivers, earned by him in New Netherland, “as per balance of the annexed account in the Book No. F.” His signature is “Evertt Duyckling.”—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's tran.), II: 161 (N. Y. State Library).

Johan J. van der Vries, at the provincial secretary's office, issues an authorization to “Michiel Jansen and Simon Jonten, both inhabitants here [New Amsterdam], to take care of, and justly treat, in his absence, his free Negroes and Brazilian women till the said Jan de Vries shall otherwise order."—Record N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 16a (N. Y. State Library).

16 The ill-fated ship “Princess” sails from New Amsterdam on her last voyage. See Sept. 27.

17 The Book of Monthly Wages Nº F, containing the accounts of persons employed in New Netherland in the pay of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., is now transmitted by the ship “Princess.”—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), II: 166 (N. Y. State Library). See Sept. 27, and Addenda.

25 Stuyvesant proposes to his council the providing of ways and means for repairing Fort Amsterdam and allaying the discontent of the Indians, who have not yet received the presents that have been promised to them at the conclusion of the general peace.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 112, Sept.

26 Stuyvesant gifts his council designate nine of them to act as selectmen or spokesmen for the people whilst in conferences with the director-general and council concerning co-operative measures to be adopted for promoting the welfare of the colony. Augustijn Herman, Arnoldus van Hardenberg, and Govert Loockermans, merchants; Jan Jansen Damen, Jacob Welpheertsen van Couwenhoven, and Hendrick Kip, burgesses; Michiel Jansen, Jan Eversten Bout, and Thomas Hall, farmers, compose the first board of “Nine Men.”—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75.

27 The commonly having chosen from their number eighteen men, Stuyvesant and his council designate nine of them to act as selectmen or spokesmen for the people whilst in conferences with the director-general and council from twelve men nominated by the full board on the last day of each December.—Ibid.; Jameson, Nar. N. Neth., 287.

28 In the Representation of New Netherland, July 25, 1649, whose signature is appended to the petition of the original “Nine Men,” we have the following characterization of that body: “Nine men were chosen to represent the whole commonality, and commissions and instructions were given that whatever these men should do, should be the act of the whole commonality. And so in fact it was, as long as it corresponded with the wishes and views of the Director. In such cases they represented the whole commonality; but when it did not so correspond, they were then clowns, usurers, rebels and the like.”—Jameson, op. cit., 341.

29 The ship “Princess,” also known to have been called “Princess Amelia,” which sailed from New Amsterdam on Aug. 16 (g.r.), having among those on board former Director-General Kieft, Domine Bogardus, the late Fiscal Vander Huugys, Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, and Cornelis Melyn, is wrecked in the [English] Channel on the 27th of Septb and 81 souls, men, women, and children, and almost all the stock of Vandertuyt and Melyn. Nothing was saved of her cargo “except a lot of peltries, part of which” was soon stolen; and “what floated on the strand was sold.” Among the regrettable losses were “very exact Maps; fully a hundred different samples of Minerals and numerous Remonstrances and accounts of New Netherland.”—N. T. Col. Docs., 72, pp. 82-83; cfr. “Meyns Maps,” II: 164. See also 1641; and description of Pl. 7-9, 1: 145.

30 The desire of the inhabitants to build a pier is reiterated in an ordinance of this date.—See Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75. For further mention, see 1648.

Director-Gen. Stuyvesant informs the council that Andrew Forrester, of Dundee, Scotland, agent and attorney of Mary, widow of Lord Stirling, has been elected governor of Long Island and places adjacent, demanding to see his (Stuyvesant’s) commission and authority, which he has answered by having Forrester arrested and confined in the prisoners’ quarters in the city tavern at the expense of the West India Co. The council forwards to them that he may be examined as to his commission and authority. The inquiry results in the council resolving that Forrester be sent a prisoner to Holland, on board the ship “ Valkenker” (Falconer), there to vindicate his commission before the states-general.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 80-81; Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson’s Nar. N. Neth., 369-8. The ship was forced by bad weather into Spithedead, England, where Forrester was relieved from his imprisonment by the captain of an English man-of-war.—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 286; VII: 453; XIV: 85.

Hans Werter is appointed captain-at-arms to the garrison of Fort Amsterdam.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 113.

Several questions are placed before the council by Stuyvesant, among them, whether the ensign and the sergeant are to form part of courts-martial, which is agreed to affirmatively; what shall be done in case of fire, as the houses in New Amsterdam are mostly built of wood and covered with thatch; and what provision is to be made for a school, “as there is none in New Amsterdam, and the youth are running wild.” The last two questions the court refers to the board of “Nine Men.”—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 114. Stuyvesant, by a written communication (Nov. 12), presented the council to choose and designate a meeting of the “Nine Men,” and at the same time wrote to the “Nine Men”—representatives of Manhattan, Breuckelen, Amersfoort, and Pauwina—asking them to advise him regarding the best way to procure means to repair Fort Amsterdam, complete the church, provide a schoolhouse and dwelling for the schoolmaster, and make provision against fire.—Ibid.; Records N. Neth. (Dutch Council Minutes), IV: 355 (N. Y. State Library).

Gov. Stuyvesant’s statement to the commonality regarding a school reads: “Whereas, for want of a school house, no school has been kept here during three months, by which the youth are spoiled, it is proposed to consider where a convenient place may be fixed upon, so as to keep the youth from the streets, and under strict subordination.”—Quoted in Wettervelt MSS., in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of N. Neth., 59-60.

The military punishment of “riding the wooden horse,” on the 15th May, on some sedition under the government of the director-general (now the site of the Produce Exchange), was carried on under the Dutch as late as Colve’s administration, in 1673. How early it came into practice in New Amsterdam is not known. Geraerdus was himself subjected to it in rather ludicrous fashion, in 1626 (g.r.). On Nov. 15, 1647, Jonas Jansen, a soldier, for robbing his comrades and killing a pig, is cut off at the wooden horse, three days, from two o’clock in the afternoon until the conclusion of the parade, having a 50-pound weight tied to each foot. The severity of this punishment did not act as a deterrent to this individual’s indulgence in larcenies. Some months later (March 3, 1648), he was sentenced to be stripped of his military equipment; then to be chained to a wheelbarrow and put at hard labour during the pleasure of the director-general and council.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 79, 114, 115; cf. on this punishment, N. T. Col. Docs., II: 624; Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 225; Döppler, Theatri poenarum (Leipzig, 1697), pt. 2: 616. See also Castello Plan, II: 249 (No. 6).

Fort New Amsterdam is “entirely out of repairs,” and it is considered “highly necessary that it be placed at the earliest opportunity in a thorough and complete state of defense,” so as to afford “a sufficient retreat for the inhabitants in time of danger; therefore, Stuyvesant and the council request the commonality to lend a helping hand to this laudable work;” and, in order that the commonality may not “be aggrieved by heavy and intolerable burthen,” every male person from 16 to 60 years of age is required to work 12 days in the year at the fort; or, finding it inconvenient to perform such labor, to pay the amount of two guilders for each day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 79.

The company's counting house [in New Amsterdam] as heretofore. Nov. 30. Provided that the Company, or anyone on its part, shall, in return, be at liberty to trade therewith among the Merchants or other Inhabitants, or their factors or pards as they may think proper. The ships were to be manned and provisioned by any individual, or on behalf of the Company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 80. For earliest regulatory measure, see April 18, 1641.

Dec. 5. Stuyvesant issues a proclamation offering protection and refuge to all persons whatever who have run away from the colony of New Haven, whether they are "sable, ignoble, freeman or slave, debtor or creditor, yea, to the lowest prisoner included." This retaliatory act is the outcome of disputes between him and Gov. Theophilus Eaton.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 114; N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 345; Rec. Hist. State of N. Y., I: 480-81. The act was later revoked. For the relationship and correspondence between Stuyvesant and Eaton at this period, see Records of New Haven Colony, 1638-1639, 507, ff.

— Some time prior to this year, Abraham Pietersen began to keep a tavern at what is now 14-16 Broadway.—See Hist. MSS., Dutch, 119, 120, 121. See Castello Plan, III: 231-32; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. See July 25, 1648.

— In the year 1648, the Hon. De\(^\circ\) Director General and Council of New Netherland offered at public sale, to the highest bidder, in Amsterdam, or in New Netherland, a lot hereby the property of Harman Meyndersen vande Begaert, situated on the Island Manhattan, bounded on the west by the lot of Adam Roedantsen and on the east by that of Ollof Stevenens [van Cortlandt]. This was "on account of a claim presented in the Colomme Kenserelywick for damages by fire which the Indians of that quarter sustained at the hands of said Harman Meyndersen." This lot, on the north side of Stone St., now covered by the Produce Exchange, having been purchased at the sale by Arien Keyser, was formally conveyed to him on July 8, 1648, but he, on the same day, conveyed it to Evert Pehl, who, it is thought, acted as agent for the widow of Begaert.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 30 (N. Y. State Library). See Castello Plan, III: 251 (Nos. 8 and 9); 378 (lot 8).

— In this year, Pieter Andriessen was a tavern-keeper at 39 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, III: 307-8.

— Clas van Elandt, was official surveyor in New Netherland at this time. See 1646-55, 222.

— Some time during this year, or before the summer of 1649, a pier was constructed on the East River. Among the public works that Stuyvesant's council recommended, on July 4, 1647 (g.v.), less than two months after his arrival in New Amsterdam, was the erection of "a Pier for the convenience of the Merchants and Citizens."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 69. This was the first proposal for a pier in New Amsterdam. At the same time, the council defined the roadstead for anchorage to be "between Cape Point and the Guide-board [or sign post, with a hand] near the pier, between the same time, it was "over the Plager's Point and the Second Guide Board," at the Smith's Viyr, for larger ships.—Ibid., 71-72. It is evident that the pier, wharf, or dock, was not in existence at this time (1647), notwithstanding that Immes (New Am. and Its People), on his compiled map (opps. p. 1), represents the "Public Dock" as extant in 1644, and 1578 (p. 109) that when Stuyvesant arrived, on May 11, 1647 (g.v.), "most of the inhabitants of the town assembled on Schreyers Hook and at the little dock when the new Director-General landed." The desire for building a pier was reiterated in an ordinance of Sept. 27, 1647.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 75. Provisions were made for construction of the pier, which was ordered to be built in 1647 (g.v.).—Ibid., 79. No pier, however, was built in that year.

The anchorage for vessels was renewed and confirmed by ordinance on March 10, 1648 (g.v.)—Ibid., 91. One of the acts of Stuyvesant, in 1648, was to "put in order the church [in the fort] which came into his hands very much out of repair, and shortly afterwards [he] made a wooden what." These public works completed before July 28, 1649 (g.v.), as is mentioned in the Verbraugh, or Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson's Nar. N. Neth., 330. In the ordinance of Aug. 11, 1646 (g.v.), the roadstead for anchorage was fixed on the front or city of New Amsterdam, on the East River between the Pier and the City gate, and on the North river in front of and near the Beaver's path, and at no other place.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 237. Again, on June 12, 1657 (g.v.), the roadstead was described as "beyond the gates and walls of this City, and the Hand [erected for that purpose]," but "on the East River between the Hand signpost or guide-board, and the Capel, on the North river, in front of and about the Beavers' path, and at no other place," subject to "remains and regulations by any individual, or on behalf of the Company."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 80. For earliest regulatory measure, see April 18, 1641.

The Cambridge Platform," embodying the ecclesiastical policy of the Massachusetts church, no longer in use. It was printed in 1659, and established by the general court in 1652.—Winsor, Ill: 314.

The council resolves to call in all the effects of the West India Co. that have been loaned to individuals during Kieft's administration, and also orders that the company's sawmill on Nut (Governor's) Island, being "wholly decayed and in ruin," be dismantled, if possible, otherwise burned down, in order to salvage the iron.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 81-83. This was, perhaps, the first sawmill erected in the environs of Manhattan Island, possibly even before Minuit's colony had founded New Amsterdam in 1624.

All brewers in and around the city of New Amsterdam" are prohibited, and selling of beer, and the right to enjoin brewing or allowing others to brew for them. The object of this ordinance is to insure proper entry and collection of the excise.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 80-81; Rec. N. Am., 1: 4.

The houses in New Amsterdam were for the most part built of wood and thatched with Reed, besides which the Chimneys of some of the houses were of wood, which was considered "most dangerous." Careless people neglected to keep their chimneys cleanly swept and paid no attention to their fires, "whereby recently two Houses were burned" and greater damage was feared for the future. Therefore, Stuyvesant and his council now ordain that henceforth no chimneys shall be built "of wood or plaster in any houses between the Fort and the Fresh Water," but that those already in use may remain "until further order and pleasure of the Firewardens." For the proper execution of this ordinance, the following men are appointed firewardens: Commissary Adriaen Keyser, representing the council; and Thomas Hall, Martin Cregier, and George Welsley, representing the commonalty. They are empowered, "at their pleasure," to inspect the chimneys of all of the houses situated between the fort and the Fresh Water (Kolck), and they have the right to levy a "fine of three Guilders for every fire found on examination to be dirty, to be expended for Fire ladders, Hooks and Buckets." If a house is burned, either through negligence or the fire on the hearth, the occupant is subject to a fine of 23 florins, to be applied as above. Notwithstanding this ordinance, and its reaffirmation from time to time, it "was contrary to the custom of the place, and to their fire safety that not a small number of houses were not fit for use," requiring a "firelicker at the door" for a fresh fire.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 82-83; 102, 208, 322; Rec. N. Am., 1: 5.

Because great damage daily is done by hogs and goats to orchards, gardens, and other improvements, a nuisance which prevents "the planting of beautiful Orchards and Gardens," an ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and his council enjoining in future the pasturing of keeping of any goats or hogs "between the fortification of New Amsterdam (or its vicinity) and the Fresh Water" (Kolck), unless they are kept within enclosures that are fenced high enough to prevent the goats from leaping over them. Goats beyond the Fresh Water are not to be pastured without a hired man or keeper, on pain of forfeiture.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 93; Rec. N. Am., 1: 8.

Stuyvesant and his council pass an elaborate ordinance for the regulation of trade and navigation, providing for the establishment of a weekly market and an annual fair, and declaring the East River, from the Sound to the Bay, open and free "to the shipping of what quality or nation soever they may be." This ordinance regulates the retail and wholesale trade of New Amsterdam, prescribes Dutch weights and measures, limits trade on the Delaware and Hudson only to "the Burgers and Inhabitants" of New Amsterdam who possess letters of credit, or reside at the head of three thousand guilders, and allows only those who own real estate below the Fresh Water (Kolck) "to have built or to buy Yachts, Sloops, or Vessels." Other ordinances relative to anchorage and discharge of cargoes are renewed. Concessions are...
In order to avert the persistent desecration of the Sabbath in New Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council, "with the pre-advise of the Minister of the Gospel" (Bachier), order that divine - service with sermon shall be held "in the afternoon as well as in the forenoon;" and "during fasting, Divine Service, all Thumplung, and other customary avocations, trading and business either in Houses, Cellars, Shops, Ships, Yachts, or in the streets and markets," are forbidden under a heavy penalty. Drunkards are to be arrested and punished. — Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 48-99;

The prohibitions that have been enacted against the sale of intoxicants to Indians, directly or indirectly, having been violated by a clandestine trade, which is evidenced daily by the sight of the Indians "running drunk along the Manhattan," from which inhabitants distant from the town suffer "serious annoyance from drunken Indians," likely to engender "new troubles and wars,"
"a new ordinance is now passed, which prescribes "an arbitrary corporal punishment" upon offenders, as well as payment of fines. —

The council orders the tavern kept by Abraham Pietersen in New Amsterdam to be closed, on account of a murder committed therein. — Cal. H. MSS. in another ms., See Castello Plan, II: 251-

The council of New Netherland finds that the company's mill Aug. at New Amsterdam is nothing but a burden to the company, continually requiring repairs and providing an insufficient return from the leasing (pacht) to carry it on. It is considered, therefore, for the best interest and profit of the company that the mill be no longer farmed out, but that instead a miller be engaged at honest monthly wages, and that the miller's fees for grinding be paid to the receiver, out of which receipts the mill shall be kept in

On Aug. 23, the council formally resolved to engage a miller at 40 florins per month, and chose Abraham Pietersen, of Haerlem, as the most available person.—Ibid., 413. Pietersen had kept a tavern, which just a month before had been ordered closed for violations.

this date from Manhattan to the council of Amsterdam, remarks:
"The congregation here numbers about one hundred and seventy members. Most of them are very ignorant in regard to true religion, and very much given to drink. To this they are led by the seventeen tap-houses here. What has fruits result therefrom, your Reverence will easily understand. You will also learn more in Therefore, Van Slichenhorst returned a "petition and protest" that it was wonderful that the General should take such needless trouble about the Patroon's Colony and worry himself about its buildings, whilst his Honor tolerates a number of streets full of buildings within thirty paces of Fort Manhattan where his government is, and does not apply a remedy there; more especially as the General him- self writes under date of 43d of May, 1648, that he is already expect- ing a war with the English, which God avert."—Ibid., XIV, 95-96.

These Dutch are mischievous neighbours, for with their Indian trade they supply the natiues with Guns and Ammunition, which in time of necessity makes them own confusion and doth already prejudice their neighbours.—Gardyner, New World (1651), 92-94. For

The “packhuyys” of the West India Co. (the pack-house or warehouse) was erected this year—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 105; covered by No. 53 Pearl St. It was consecrated in 1665, and became the first English custom-house.—Ibid., I: 99. Being in a ruinous condition, it was granted, July 14, 1752 (q.v.), to Archibald Kennedy. See Castello Plan, II: 246-66; Key to the Dutch

The “Old Church Yard” is a phrase used in the records of this was on the site of what is now Nos. 27 to 37 Broadway, extending westward from the Lines of Church Street. See—Landmark Map

In a letter to Stuyvesant, the directors in Holland estimate that he must have received, since his arrival in New Netherland in 1647, “in values, money and goods about 170 to 180 thousand florins” ($68,000 to $73,000). They demand of him “a complete statement of the revenues and expenditures,” and add: “Undoubtedly the erection of the church [in the fort] and what was needed to complete it and the repairs of the fortifications have cost something, but that cannot be so great a part of the aforesaid

The letter continues: “We cannot understand, why your Honors, accept a storehouse or any part of the buildings used for trade, as width, for we do not know, what it could be used for. It is true, you proposed, that the Company should open a salesroom there provided with all kinds of goods and you pointed out several measures for that purpose, for instance, to compel all private people to deliver the merchandises, which they import there, into the salesroom against a fair profit of 60 to 70 per cent.”—Ibid., XIV: 105. For account of the pack-house, see 1649, supra.

The directors further say: “You think, that if 10,000 fl. in small coins could be sent there [New Netherland], it might be advisable to drive the wampum gradually out of the country, but your own judgment is uncertain, that in our own financial situation it cannot be done, the more so as we are much troubled by our inability to supply the provisions, which you so urgently called for. If we do not receive the proceeds from the sale of hides, we shall be obliged, to leave your requisition unfilled.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 108.

coming from the New Bank Islands, to wit 45 s. for the hundred,” the reduction was conceded, because they wished to offset a tobacco monopoly that was carried on by the Swedes on the an ordinance, issued by Stuyvesant and the council, to be “affixed only here and shall be the same, but in all other Colonies his parents, any writing, petition, or proposal having relation to the municipal or general government, whether generally or in particular,” unless such writing has been registered by the direc-

The Petition of the Delegates embodies a request that the states-general, who "cannot well have leisure as a body, being occupied by other public business," will examine their documents, appoint a committee "to examine the said Petition and Remonstrance," and "hear the Petitioners verbally."

The Petition of the Delegates begins with a recitation of the causes that have led to "a very poor and most low condition" of the province. These causes are stated to be:

1. "Unsuitable government;"
2. "Scanty privileges and exemptions;"
3. "Onerous imports of duties, exactious and such like;"
4. "Long Contested War;"
5. "The Loss of the Prin- cess;'s estate;" and
6. "A superabundance of Patty Traedl and peddlers (Schotten en Chinezen) and a want of Farmers and Farm servants;"
7. "Great dearth in general;" and
8. "The insufferable arrogance of the Natives or Indians, arising from our smaller numbers, etc."

After writing, they say, "long in vain, for aid, redress and assistance from the Directors," they have "determined to fly for refuge" to the states-general. Among the things they desire is a "suitable municipal government, such as your High Mightinesses shall consider adapted to this Province, and somewhat resembling the laudable Government of our Fatherland." They also beseech the states-general to "supply New Netherland with sufficient population to enable it to support, sustain and defend itself, the Indians and others who may disturb and invade it ... send some vessels hither in order that people, principally Farmers and Farm Servants may ... be removed and conveyed gratuitously hither ... order that all vessels proceeding and trading to those Northern parts of America should first furnish good and sufficient guarantees to the states and others who may disturb New Netherland, and bring with them as many persons as seasonably present themselves, and they can conveniently carry at suitable fixed rates." Again, they seek "Exemption from imports, tithes and burthen, which, at the first beginning, are disadvantageous and oppressive, until the country becomes populous and somewhat permanently established;" also, "permission to export, sell, and barter grain, timber and all other wares and merchandise the produce of the country, every way and where your High Mightinesses have allies and have granted to the Netherlanders the privilege of trade and resort."

Another request they make is that the home government "establish the Boundaries of this Country, both north and south, that all causes of difference, discord and trouble may be cut off and prevented: that your ... subjects may live and dwell in peace and quietness and enjoy their liberty in trade and commerce within the established boundaries;" also, "preserve us in peace with the neighboring Republics, Colonies, and other your High Mightinesses' allies, so that we may pursue our country's trade, without let or hindrance, under proper regulations from your High Mightinesses, as well along the coast from Terra Nova to Cape Florida, as to the West Indies and to Europe, wherever the Lord our God shall be pleased to permit."

They say, finally, that if it is contrary to public order, they recommend that a company or two of Soldiers here for the defence of those dwelling outside and in newly added plantations and colonies, it would "make manifest your High Mightinesses' earnest support of this Province to those who may be incredulous on that point."—N. T. Col. Docs., I: 259-61.

As a further evidence that the petitioners intended to leave nothing undone to win over the home government to their cause, there is at The Hague another document entitled Observations on the preceding Petition (Pl. 8, Vol. IV). This takes the form of a running commentary on almost every phrase in the petition. The first comment—an interesting one—is on the use of the word "Province" in the first line of the petition, viz. "It is called a Province because it was invested by their High Mightinesses with the Arms of an Earl." Then, for proof that the province has "attained to a very poor and low condition," the government is referred to the Remonstrance. Again, regarding "Scanty Privileges and Exemptions," this comment is made: "The Company hath never adhered strictly to any privileges in New Netherland, but always altered those granted to suit its own convenience (ad proprium commodum). This hath decreased the population." In explanation of "Oberwacht," etc., the committee says, "for, besides the trouble and expense, the Company's servants, who inspect quasi correctly the goods, pay not the least regard, but rather throw them down than lift them up."
following comment is made on the "Long continued war: " Most July of the people have lost thereby all they had and expected to get. 26 This war [see Feb. 25-26, 1643] was, also, unjust and begun contra jurisdiction of the Crown. The Americans [necessarily] gave us no reason for it. Secondly, It was for no reason nor was any real respect necessary. Thirdly, Those against whom we waged war were ten times, yea, more than that, stronger than we who commenced hostilities." What is meant by "The loss of the Princess" is thus explained: "For in her were lost very exact Maps, fully a hundred different Views of the Mines and Minerals and many other Representative accounts of New Netherland" (see Sept. 27, 1647). "The petty traders," they say, "reap immense profit and exhaust the country without adding anything to its population or security. But if they skim a little fat from the pot, they can take again to their heels." Remarks upon the "arrogance of the Natives or Indians," they say, in part: "It has been so long proclaimed, in New Netherland, that more people were coming, that the Indians laugh at it, and say: 'The Dutch do nothing but lie.' The following comment goes with their appeal for some measures on the part of the home government that will increase the population: "Were there a thousand or fifteen hundred inhabitants in New Netherland, or even more, the Indians or the Swedes would never think or dream of daring to offer us any insult." Arguing for the gratuitous transportation of "Farmers and Farm servants," they say: "For trade can go and have means, can go and come at the expense, without any one’s help." They strengthen their appeal to be allowed to trade "every way and everywhere" by calling attention to the fact that "Our neighbors in New England . . . trade where they list without knowing either duty or inspection." Regarding the settlement of boundaries, they say: "The English in that quarter readily admit that the country is justly ours; but their pretence [is] the richness of the land and that it lies waste; also, the Company will do nothing but protest, which they disregard, when admonished. Therefore, this matter is very urgent, if we are not to be scooped at by that nation and lose the country. To stop them by force is too dangerous and inexpedient for New Netherland. But their own offer is not unworthy consideration; for they frankly say—We have taken the land which was entirely, or for the most part, waste, and now occupy it; ye say 'tis your's. Let us remain friends like our sovereigns, and refer this question to both you, and our superiors; what they do or order in the premises, we must admit, and neither of us will gain anything by talk. They define your 'High Mightinesses' allies' as "the English who are beyond our limits. . . . New France, Virginia and the Carribean West India Islands, &c., known to your High Mightinesses better than us." And why, they ask, do they want a "suitable municipal government, in which those interested in the country may also attend to its government and keep a watchful eye over it, without its being intrusted to a set of hairbrained people, such as the Company fings thither, but to such as obtain in New England." They also think it advisable to accommodate the officers general with the kind of government found in New England, thus: "Each town, no matter how small, hath its own court and jurisdiction, also a voice in the Capital, and elects its own officers. Few taxes are imposed, and these only by general consent. In their capital they have a Governor, a Deputy (that is, Vic) Governor, a Councillor, that is Judge, a Secretary and two Provincial Councillors. In the individual towns they have a Constable, a Clerk and Selectmen. They call all these Magistrates, and,—though they depend on the people, treat them with very great respect. Each town chooses, or may choose, its Magistrates annually, yet they very rarely change them. The Governor and Deputy are chosen annually by the entire province, although some have been continued from the beginning to their departure, or during their lives. . . . Nevertheless the People have a new election every year, and have power to make a change; and they would make a change in case of improper behavior, and that they therefore say is the bridle of their great men. This is the mode of their election or choosing: Each town consults first by itself and sends then its deputies, and all these delegates choose the Governor, and he is for that year without any longer assurance. In the year following there is a new election, in form as stated, and every town votes for every one; these are accepted by the Governor himself, and then he reappoints them. . . ."

The representation [or Remonstrance] of New Netherland (Ver- tough van Nieuw Nederland) is a bold arrangement of the incompetent administrations of Kiedt and Stuyvesant. From internal evidence, as well as collateral documentary statements, it is evident that the whole work of Adriaen van der Donck is included in the list of signers.—N. Y. Col. Doc., I: 316, 421; XIV: 110-14. Broedhead states that he transcribed this document "from the authenticated copy of the Remonstrance, containing 83 pages, remaining in the Royal Archives at the Hague, in the Lekibfits of the States General in the West India Company, No. 50, 5th division of the Bundle." For the bibliographical status of this work, first printed in 1690, see Bibliography, Vol. V.

A translation of the 83-page manuscript appears in N. Y. Col. Doc., I: 268-118 another translation, very different in its wording, is in Jameson, Narr. N. Neth., 292, 375-375. The latter translation, to which the more accurate title Representation is given, is cited in the following items.

Among the allegations contained in the Representation, we find it stated that the grist-mill of the West India Co. stands so near Fort Amsterdam that the church in the fort shuts off the southeast wind and prevents the mill from grinding, which has precipitated a bread famine. The mill is said to be so rotten from a leaky roof that it cannot go with more than two arms.—Representation of N. Neth., in Jameson’s Narr. N. Neth., 326. Secretary Van Tienhoven, answering this complaint, said that the walls of the Windmill had shut off the wind even before a cloud even before the cloud even Jameson, op. cit., 362. This mill still appears on the Castello Plan, of 1660 (Pt. &a; 2, Vol. II) and on the so-called "Duke’s Plan," of 1661 (Pt. 10, Vol. 1); but not on the Nicolli Plan and survey, of circa 1665 (Pt. roth, Vol. 1). The evidence of scarcity of bread at this time is given by an ordinance passed on Nov 8 (Leaves & Ord. N. Neth., 111-15).

In the Representation, the remonstrants say, concerning educational affairs in New Amsterdam: "The bowl has been going round a long time for the purpose of erecting a common school and it has been built long before the first stone is not laid. Some materials only are provided. The money, nevertheless, given for the purpose, has already found its way out and is mostly spent; or may even fall short, and for this purpose also no fund invested in real estate has ever been built up."—Jameson, Narr. N. Neth., 327. They recommend the following reform: "There should be a public school, provided with at least two good masters, so that first of all in so wild a country, where there are many loose people, the youth be well taught and brought up, not only in reading and writing, but also in the knowledge and fear of the Lord. As it is now, the school is kept very irregularly, one and another keeping certain pupils belonging to his pleasure and as long as he thinks proper."—Ibid, 353.

Another thing protested to the states-general in the Representation is that Fort Amsterdam "lies like a model or a tottering wall, on which there is not one gun-carriage or one piece of cannon in a fit place or platform to command it; thus it has been declared that it "ought to be repaired, laid in five angles, and put in a royal condition;" that the "commonality's men be addressed for money for that purpose, but they have excused themselves on the ground that the people are poor;" that everyone, too, is "discontented" and fears that if the director once has his feet to rely on, he will be "more cruel and severe," and between the two, nothing has been done.—Ibid, 351.

In the Representation, the "Eleven Men" refer thus to wampum: "The payment in seaway, which is the currency here, has never been placed upon a good footing, although the commonality requested it, and showed how it should be regulated, assigning numerous reasons therefor. But there is always misunderstanding and discontent, and if anything is said before the Director of these matters more than pleases him, very wicked and spiteful words are returned."—Ibid, 351. See April 18, 1641; and Nov. 50, 1647.

Another thing complained of in the Remonstrance is that, although "Paulus Lenaertszen" has "small wages," he has, nevertheless, "built a better dwelling-house here than anybody else," and favoritism and governmental corruption are intimated.—Ibid, 359. This reference has been associated by Innes (New Amsterdam and in writing, but is it is the warehouse of Paulus Len- dertens vander Graft "upon 't Water" (Pearl St.); but this theory is untenable, because that structure had not yet been built. The complaint clearly relates to his private dwelling-house, on the
THE Dutch Period: 1626-1664

Adriaen Jansen van Uylenbamp, "at present schoolmaster here on the Island of Manhattan," gives power of attorney to "the worthy Syxio Claes, at present superintendent of the Indian language, to collect 'such sum of money, means, effects and goods as may be coming to him, the principal, by inheritance from his friends [relatives], at Leyden, or elsewhere."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 60 (N. Y. State Library).

This is believed to be the earliest reference to a private schoolmaster in New Netherland. It is also the only known record relating to Uylenbamp as a schoolmaster in New Amsterdam. See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools in N. Neth.; for biography, see Early Records of Albany, III: 15-18.

Aug. 1664, as elder of the church of New Amsterdam, and on behalf of its consistory, writes to the classis of Amsterdam, among other things, as follows: "We need a pious and diligent schoolmaster and precentor. A year has now passed since we were deprived of such help. By this our young people have gone backward, even to grow wild—pauw nihil agunt male agere disci. In view of the fact that a good schoolmaster is not less needed here than a good preacher, as we have above explained in detail to your Reverences and to the Hon. Directors, we rely upon your usual excellent facilities and piouz zeal for securing the one, and a favorable decision in the other. We hope, that in a short time we shall have occasion to refer you to both subjects."—ibid., 264.

In compliance with this appeal, Willem Vestius, Vesten, or Vestiens, was appointed, and he sailed in the "Valckenier" (Falconer), in April, 1660. He officiated as schoolmaster, precentor, sexton, and comforter of the sick, but his services were considered unbeneficial by the authorities in New Amsterdam. When he applied, in 1654, for an increase of salary, he was told: "If the service did not suit him, he might ask for his discharge." In Nov, 1654, he asked the classis of Amsterdam for his release, and his petition was presented to the council at Manhattan on Jan. 26, 1655. His resignation was recorded on March 23d, when Harnen van Holboeckens was appointed his successor. He was back in Holland in July, when he applied for a place in the East Indies.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 119, 123-24; Eccl. Rec., I: 315, 316, 338; letter of Megapolensis, in Jameson’s N. Neth., 391-92; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145, 147.

Gerret Jansen van Oldenburgh conveys to Thomas Hall, by deed recorded June 18, 1665 (Libro III: 35-4a, Albany), a piece of land containing 253 morgens and 125 rods, together with a valley lietherto occupied by the farm called the Pannemakers', or Bouwery No. 5. This should be No. 4.) Hall subsequently—that is, on Oct. 22, 1666—conveyed the same, together with the abutting property, to Cornelis Steenwick and Obfli Stevenson von Cortlandt, who were confirmed by Nicolls in its possession in March, 1666.—Libor Patentes, IV: 17 (Albany). See Feb. 17, 1646; and The Manatus Maps, II: 188-89.

A deed is executed whereby Gerrit Jansen exchanges the land called the "Mallemutsbergh" for a house and farm belonging to Thomas Hall. Thomas Hall takes the land, dwelling-house, &c., near the bouwery of Cornelis Claessen Swits and Stille. The "Mallemutsbergh" was the "Crazy Smith’s Hill," formerly occupied by Thomas Sanders, and then the property of Thomas Hall.—Dutch M.S., III: 68 (Albany). For Smith’s Hill, see Pl. 175, Vol. III (Block 196).

Scarcity of crops and a consequent scarcity of bread among the inhabitants during the past year induce Stuyvesant and the council to ordain that, "until further Order and a larger supply of grain," no brewer will be permitted "to malt or brew any Wheat," on pain of forfeiture and "an arbitrary penalty." Exportation from New Netherland of wheat, rye, or baked bread is for this time interdicted. By another ordinance, of this date, the baking of white bread and cakes for sale to inhabitants or Indians is stopped for a time, but allowed for private consumption. An assize on bread, the first recorded for New Netherland, is established.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 111-13; Rec. N. Am., I: 13-15.

Frauds and smuggling having been carried on to defraud the excise, an ordinance is passed by Stuyvesant and the council forbidding all brewers to "tap, sell or give away by the small measure any beer, Wine or Liqueur in any barrel or bottle, or in any quantity" to the latter during meal times. Moreover, brewers are not to deliver their product unless they have first obtained a permit from the chief clerk of the provincial secretay.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 110-11; Rec. N. Am., I: 13.

The appearance of New Amsterdam at this time is shown by a wash drawing dated 1650 and signed by Laurens Blocq. This drawing, which is owned by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., is reproduced and is shown also on Pl. 6, Vol. I. See also Pls. 7-b, 7, 8, Vol. I. Perhaps the earliest engraved view of this type is probably engraved before 1664, having a wide foreground full of canoes and boats, one of three known copies of which is owned by Mr. Wm. G. Kelus, Jr.

An official list of the employees of the West India Company in New Netherland, in the handwriting of Haas Bentemael, one of the directors at Amsterdam (see reproduction on Pl. 8, Vol. IV), may be summarized as follows: Director Petrus Styveysant, salary 250 guilders monthly, and subsistence 900 guilders per annum; Lubbert van Dineklaagen, vice director, salary 120 guilders per month, and no allowance for subsistence; Fiscal Hendrick van Dyck, salary 60 guilders per month, and no allowance for subsistence; Joanjes La Montagne, councilor, salary 90 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; Secretary Cornelis van Tienhoven, salary 36 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; Commissary Adriaen de Kyser, salary 36 guilders per month, and subsistence 200 guilders per annum; the supercargo, 18 guilders, and 120 guilders board money; Captain-Lieutenant Brian Nutton, 50 guilders, and 200 guilders subsistence per annum; the commiss at Fort Hope, Gysbert van Dyck [sic for op Dyck], 30 guilders, and 150 guilders board money; Barber [surgical] Jacob Hendricksje, 20 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; an ensign, 42 guilders, and 200 guilders subsistence per annum; Sergeant Daniel Litschoe, 18 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; a corporal, 18 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; a cadet [Adelborst], 10 guilders, and 100 guilders subsistence per annum; foreman of the laborers at the canoes and laborers of the fort, 100 guilders board money; the clerk, 20 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; soldiers, 8 to 9 guilders, and 75 guilders subsistence per annum; court messenger, 230 guilders per annum; keeper of the negroes, 25 guilders, and 100 guilders board money per annum; a preacher, no amounts given; a schoolmaster, 35 guilders, and 100 guilders board money for annum; two preachers, each 100 guilders per month, and 40 guilders per month board money.—N. Y. Hist. Soc., No. 1225, in N. Y. Pub. Library. In the same Collection, No. 1221, there is a similar, though shorter, list, undated, but about 1645 or 1655, which includes, among particular items the city court, three clergymen, and 250 soldiers. See also, Dec. 15, 1644, and Feb. 2, 1653.

Paulus Lodersdoren Vander Grift builds a house upon the Strand (Other Patents, III: 102, Albany), on the site of the present No. 31 Pearl St. It is shown on the Frontispiece, and on Pls. 8-a and 9, Vol. I. See also Cassell Plan, II: 265; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.

In a "Short Digest," exhibited at a meeting of deputies of the states-general, reference is made to wampum as money, thus: "Neither has any order been made relative to the currency in wampum or coin, notwithstanding the people have petitioned and shown how it ought and could be effected."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 336. See also April 18, 1641; Nov. 30, 1647; Jan. 27 and July 28, 1649.

The following reference to wampum as money is made in the answer of the West India Co. to the Remonstrance from New Netherland: "Hereofore there has been no currency but Wampum among the common people, in New Netherland; the Wampum which formerly passed at the rate of four for a silver, was reduced to six."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 344. See Jan. 27, 1650.

Ferd. Febr. 7 Freda and Nancie Pimentel, who are charged with homicide and beastly abuse to a woman, and are said to be "for an Old Deed of Real Estate" until it has been "examined and approved by the Director and Council." On a regular court day, and declares null and void "all Contracts and Conveyances" passed "without their approbation, ratification and signature."—Land & Ord. N. Neth., 114; Rec. N. Am., I: 15.

The directors at Amsterdam complain in a letter to Styveysant against the land claims of Van Twiller and others in New Netherland. Among other things, they say that Van Twiller "took the whole of Nut [Governor] Island and Hellgate without either planting or building on the former during the whole time, that he was bound to do so," and they intend, therefore, to assert, that their rights have lapsed and that the said colonies "have reverted to the company."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 121; March 21, 1653, in ibid., XIII: 27. See also July 1, 1652.

Replying to a letter of Styveysant, the directors at Amsterdam write: "You say that the late Director [Kieft] has granted patents for four or five bowsees across the Fresh Water, and that you cannot find, that any advantage accrued theretofor for the Company; that further the settlers are heavily indebted to and great enemies of the Company; this matter must be examined into, but we do not intend to disturb any one in his rights because of our own troubles; we repeat only, that in a new country, with only a small population, minor matters must be overlooked."—N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 121.

In Secretary Van Tienhoven's document of information delivered to the states-general, he says that "the [Indians]' mine of New Netherland' wampum" is at the "point,"—that is Montauk Point, Long Island.—N.Y. Col. Docs., IV: 75.

Wolphert Webber receives a ground-brief for a lot, which is described under date of Nov. 25, 1686 (p. v.), when the same was patented to William Merritt. On modern maps, this tract would be generally between Park Row and Madison St., and Pearl and Oliver Sts.—See Pl. 174, Vol. III.

In a report made by a committee of the states-general, entitled "A Provisional Order respecting the Government, Preservation and Peopling of New Netherland," it is recommended, among other things, that he be granted "within the city of New Amsterdam a municipal government, consisting of one Sheriff, two Justices, a Commissary, a Surgeon, and a Physician," and that the "Nine Men" should in the meantime "continue three years longer, and have jurisdiction over small causes arising between Man and Man, to adjudge definitely on suits not exceeding the sum of fifty guilders and on higher amounts under privilege of appeal."—N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 391. This was the foundation on which the municipal concessions of 1653 were built. It was the direct result of the Remonstrance of 1649 (see July 28).

An ordinance is passed amending the ordinance of Nov. 8, 1649, for regulating the baking and sale of bread.—Land & Ord. N. Neth., 115; Rec. N. Am., I: 15.

An unknown grantee, probably William Frederiksen (Boutz), receives a ground-brief for land at the present south-west corner of Morris St. and Broadway.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 299.

Styveysant and the council pass an ordinance against the obstruction of streets, paths, and highways, by setting trees or placing stones in them, and requiring that the same be kept passable. The full text of the ordinance is lost, but the substance is given in Land & Ord. N. Neth., 114, 345; and in Rec. N. Am., II: 162.

An unknown grantee, probably William Frederiksen (Boutz), receives a ground-brief for land at the present south-west corner of Morris St. and Broadway.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 361.

Owing to the circulation of fraudulent wampum, and because of the daily depreciation of the paper money, which has become so poor in quality that it is often rejected by traders, Styveysant and the council pass an ordinance which provides that no wampum except that strung on a cord shall be considered good pay. The rates are fixed at six white or three black beads to the struer, or, if the wampum is of poor quality, then eight white or four black beads to a struer.—Land & Ord. N. Neth., 115-16. See also Man. Com. Coun. (1855), 547. See, further, Sept. 14, 1659; April 4, 1652.

Fort New Amsterdam, "formerly in tolerable condition," June having been considerably "trodden down by Hogs, Goats and Sheep," men at the time proposed to cut down and rest the grounds, in order to prevent a repetition of this damage, Styveysant and the council pass an ordinance, in which every inhabitant is warned that no "Hogs, Sheep, Goats, Horses or Cows" are to be at large without a herder or driver, except within their own fenced lots or farms respectively; and of the Heeren Weg (Broadway), and the house of Isaac Allerton (Peck Slip). There are two translations of this edict, with material variations.

For evidence that the ordinance was unenforced and that the nuisance continued, see the 1651 or 1652, the 1659, and the 1663 reports of the Commissioner of Agriculture. (see N. Y. Col. Docs., XV, 185.)

Stuyvesant is informed in a letter from the directors at Amsterdam that "many free people" have taken passage on two ships, the "Fortuyn" and the "Jaager," destined for New Netherland, and he is advised to "allow to each according to his capacities and family circumstances, in the same manner as in Holland, where the land reserved by the Exemptions for the Company, as for instance at Pouvina, which the Company bought in for certain reasons." The directors add that it looks as though many people would go over by every ship, and they desire Stuyvesant to "accommodate all newcomers as well as possible and above all govern the people with the utmost caution and leniency."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV, 126.

Jan Myrtens receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present north-east corner of Greenwich St. and Battery Pl., on which part of the Washington building stands.—See Castello Flan, C. Pl. 8a, 8b. (see N. Y. Col. Docs., XI, 215; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II, 359.

Augustine Heerman, citing the arbitrariness of Stuyvesant toward the commonalty, writes: "I had, indeed, brought a flag with me for the Burgurers [of New Amsterdam], but Stuyvesant would not allow it to be carried." The articles also provide:

10 Concerning the proportion of a closer union and friendship between the English and the Dutch Nation in these parts, especially against a common enemy: We judge it to be worthy of good consideration by the United Colonies, and in like manner, desire it may be communicated and recommended to them, that a resolution therein may be taken at the next annual meeting of the Commissioners." These articles of agreement, since known as the Treaty of Hartford, are signed by Symon Broadstreete and Thomas Prence for the English, and Thomas Willet and George Baxter for the Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 611-12; Laws and Ord. of N. Y., 215; Bowen, The Boundary Disputes of Conn. (1884), 17, 69 et seq.; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 178-21.

On Nov. 26, Stuyvesant sent to Amsterdam a report of this meeting. The treaty was ratified by the states-general on Feb. 22, 1666 (p. iv.).

William II, stadtholder of The Netherlands, dies, "a victim to his own intemperance."—Sept. 6.

Stuyvesant sends to the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. a report of the transactions of the commissioners of the English colonies, whom he joined at their appointed meeting "at Herford [Hartford] on the fresh river" (Connecticut River) to consider a provisional charter (see Sept. 8). There was, however, a discussion respecting the formation of a neighborly union in form of a league or guarantee against the offensive in-sulence and arrogance of the Barbarious and Natives." Stuyvesant states that the English commissioners "appeared to us dispelled" in favour of the project; "But as the English nation is so much stronger than ours in these parts, I proposed that the Commissioners in such extremity, whether defensive or offensive, ought to bring a double number at least to our single quota. To which they replied, that they then ought to have a double vote in declaring the lawfulness of the defence, or offence, this their High Mightinesses and the Company might consider disreputable." This document is endorsed: "Provisional Boundary between the English and our Nation agreed upon at the Meeting of the Colonies at Herford A° 1660 [see Sept. 19], respecting the lands situated in the North part of America, whereas our portion under the Director and Charter of the West India Company, is now named New Netherland, and that portion belonging to the English, namely, the Country at the South, is by them called Virgizia; the other Countries taken up by them are named New England:—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 58-91; see also 1646, Nov. 34.

In a written statement, prepared at The Hague and bearing this date, Cornelis van Tienhoven, the secretary of the director and council of New Netherland, makes official answer to the Representation or Remonstrance of Van der Donck and his associates (see
July 18, 1649). Among the noteworthy observations of this Nov. “Answer” are the following:

19 19 . . . These persons complain because they considered the Company's fort not worthy of a church. Before the church was built, the grit-nail could not grind with a south-east wind, because the wind was shut off by the walls of the fort.

The new school is not yet built; but “a place has been selected for a school, where the school is kept by Jan Cornelissen,” while other schoolmasters keep school in hired houses. There is no Latin school or academy. (See also Kippatrick, Dutch Schools of New Netherland.)

The deacons are responsible for the management of the poor fund. The taxes imposed in New Netherland are compared with those in New England.

“It will not appear, either now or in the future, that 30,000 guilders were collected from the commonality in Stuyvesant's time; for nothing is received besides the beer and wine excise, which amounts to about 4,000 guilders a year on the Manhattans. From the other villages situated around it there is little or nothing collected, because there are no tasters, except one at the Ferry [the hamlet opposite Manhattan on the East River], and one at Flushing.” (See also N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 245.)

Answering still another point in the Representation, Van Tienhoven writes: “Who are they who have complained about the haughtiness of Stuyvesant? I think they are as much as seek to live without law or rule.” In this connection he adds later: “No body can prove that Director Stuyvesant has used foul language to, or railed at as clowns, any persons of respectability who have treated him decently. It may be that some profligate has given the Director, if he has used any bad words to him, cause to do so.”

In regard to the use of wampum as money, he says: “Their complaint that no regulation was made in relation to wampun is untrue. During the time of Director Kieft [see April 18, 1641] good wampun was sold for a stiver, and the loose bits were fixed at six pieces for the stiver. The reason why the loose wampun was not prohibited, was because there is no coin in circulation, and the launders, farmers, and other common people having no other money, would be great losers; and had it been done, the renouncers would, without doubt, have included it among their grievances.” (See also Nov. 30, 1647.)

He refers to the repairs of the fort as the domain of the company, and not the concern of the inhabitants.

“When a house is erected, an annual ground-rent in beavers must be paid; and all the farmers must do the same, which they call obtaining the right to trade.”

He speaks of the ingratitude of settlers whom the company has helped, and who now refuse to pay “the tenth.” He quotes their provision should be made for ecclesiastical and municipal property, church services, an orphan asylum and an almshouse, and comments: “... let them lead the way in generous contributions.”

In closing, he gives a brief account of each person who signed the “Remonstrance.” Of Adrian van der Donck, for example, he says: He “has been about eight years in New Netherland. He went there in the service of the proprietors of the colony of Rense-laerwyck as an officer, but did not continue such, though he lived in that colony till 1646.” Regarding all the remonstrants, he sums up: “In brief, these people, to give their doings a gloss, say that they are bound by oath and compelled by conscience; but if that were the case, the would not assail their benefactors, the Company and others, and endeavor to deprive them of this noble country, by advising their removal, now that it begins to be like something; and now that there is a prospect of the Company getting its own again. And now that many of the inhabitants are themselves in a better condition than ever, this is evidently the cause of the ambition of many, etc.”—Jameson, Narr. N. Neth., 357-77.

At some time prior to this year, Augustnine Herrmans built a warehouse upon the Strand, and in this year, 1651, conveyed the same to the Estate of Pieter Gabry, deceased, of Amsterdam.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 89 (N. Y. State Lib.).

In the year 1652, Stuyvesant bought, for a sum of money, and now the property, the “Pearl St. Warehouse, because the property of an enemy subject in Holland, was confiscated by the British under the act of Oct.
CHRONOLOGY: THE DUTCH PERIOD: 1626–1664

They also state that they have engaged in Amsterdam "as bookkeeper in New Netherland Johannes Dyckman, former first clerk," at "30 fl. per month exclusive of subsistence money," and they commend him to Stuyvesant for promotion when occasion offers. Continuing they report:

"In order to increase the population of New Netherland and to promote the trade to it we have resolved that forthwith you shall demand upon all goods which are properly merchantable belonging to New Netherland from English Virginia or New England, a duty of 16 per cent. and that all goods sent there from New Netherland shall pass free duty, so that the practice of some people, who ship their goods to New England and then enter them in New Netherland under the lower price, may be stopped and no panic be done to the merchants who ship their goods directly from here to New Netherland." It must have been immediately upon receipt of this order in New Amsterdam (not in 1652 as averred by O’Callaghan in Laos & Ord. N. Neth., 126) that an ordinance was passed imposing a duty of 16 per cent on merchandise imported into New Netherland from New England (the text of the edict being now lost).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 138–39.

Brian Newton receives a ground-brief for a lot at the present 27

Under this date, in the minutes of the chief participants of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, is the following record: "Decided that C: van Tienhoven, as secretary and receiver [of the company in New Netherland], shall be provided with quarters with [the fort] by Director PV van Stuyvesand. To be called [the] old West India Co. at T: Hieger, Jan Stoutenbergh (not "5 Ham. participants IOCTL", fol. 33 terso, trans. by A. J. van Laer.

Complaints having been made against extortionate prices charged by retailers of wine, brandy, and other strong drink, and by bakers of bread, "to the great damage and loss of the Commonsalty and many private Inhabitants," the situation is brought to the attention of Stuyvesant and the council by the board of "Nine Men," or selection of the commonsalty. This leads to the promulgation of an ordinance for regulating the assise on various kinds of bread, and the prices on wines, brandies, and other strong drink. The former ordinances against brewers retailing their brewed beer are renewed. —Laos & Ord. N. Neth., 117–22. This ordinance inaugurates a policy of fixing a maximum price. On Aug. 18, 1653, the retailing price on wines and brandy was fixed anew.—Ibid., 148. The general policy of fixing a maximum was disapproved by the directors at Amsterdam (in their letter to Stuyvesant and the council, of March 12, 1654), who said that their own experience should have taught them "the impossibility of carrying it out," as such an order could give only great dissatisfaction and breed trouble. Therefore, "to prevent this in future," the directors resolved to command them "to act strictly in accordance with the laudable customs and ordinances," which had been at least as far as it was possible to do so.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 241.

Jan Jansen Damning having died on the 18th instant, his widow, 28
Adriaentje Cuvelje, and Thomas Hall, Egbert Wouterson, and Cornelis Aertsen, as curators of the large estate of the deceased, appoint Jan Vinge, the widow’s son by a former marriage, "to command all the servants of Jan Damning, deceased, and to direct all agricultural affairs until the crop of this year 1651, is brought into the barrick and barn." —Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), III: 86 (N. Y. State Library).

The minutes of the chief participants in the W. L. Co., at Amsterdam, show that, on the 16th day, Secretary Van Tienhoven "was handed his letters to Director Stuyvesant," and is to depart for New Netherland; also that J. Dyckman has been engaged at 30 guilders a month.—From No. 5 Hoge Particierpanstboek, fol. 33 vo.

The directors at Amsterdam send a letter to Stuyvesant by Cornelis van Tienhoven, "who returns in his former quality of Secretary." The letter states, among other things, that Van Tienhoven has requested permission of the directors "to purchase a bowery in New Netherland belonging to the Company and containing about 14 to 16 morgens, together with meadowland, a farmhouse 50 feet long and 22 feet deep, a haystack, two mares, a stallion, 21 sheep, some hogs, one ox, and a stallion now used by Thomas Hal, whose lease is said to expire the coming summer." The directors defer to Stuyvesant to determine whether such sale will be "to the prejudice or advantage of the Company," and ask his full report on this point before they consent.

The following interesting and detailed agreement of copartner- ship is made for the operation of the Zegzende farm in Harlem, originally granted to Jochem Pietersen Kuyter in 1659, and soon thereafter subject to Indian attack:

"This the third day of September, of this current year 1651, Mr. Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, free merchant, of the one part, and the Hon'ble Petrus Stuyvesant, Director General of New Netherland, Curasao and the dependencies thereof, Luycas Roodenburgh, Governor of Curasao, and Cornelis de Potter, also free merchant, of the other part, have in all amity and friendship agreed and contracted respecting a certain piece of land on the Island of Manhatten, called Zegzende, in the Indian language Schorrakyn, the property of the aforesaid Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, adjoining on the south Willem Beeckman, lieutenant of the Burgesses corps here, at the end of Mr. Johannes La Montagne's low land (Greeche), as far as the first rockstone being Northwest of the said farm, which is KIl [Harlem River], having on the west side at the North River a hay valley about three @ four morgens in extent; the aforesaid land being about two hundred morgens large, the correct measure whereof is yet to be determined; and that in the form and manner herein

"He, Jochem Pietersen Kuyter shall cede transport and convey, as well and truly sold, to the abovemented Messrs Stuyvesant, Roodenburgh and Cornelis de Potter the precise fourth parts of his said land, being one fourth part to and for each, in such manner that he, Jochem Pietersen aforesaid, retains the remaining fourth part as his own property: provided that he, Jochem Pietersen, shall receive from the abovenamed gentlemen for the surrender and conveyence of said land" the sum of 1,000 Carolus guilders at 20 stuivers, and no more, each of the grantees to pay a third part, with this reservation, "that the said thousand guilders shall be first foremost expended and employed in the cultivation of the aforesaid land, all which shall remain together without making therein, either directly or indirectly, any partition, division or severance, before and until such be resolved by a majority of votes. During said time of non-partition, the abovemented Jochem Pietersen shall remain thereon the ferry, and other properties. Provided also, that the wife of said Jochem Pietersen shall be at liberty to keep hens and ducks on her own account, and he Jochem Pietersen shall receive for his services as superintendent of the farm, One hundred and fifty Carolus guilders annually, to wit, Fifty Sept., like guilders from each of the aforesaid partners. In order to 23 make, in God's name, a beginning... of said undertaking, a suitable dwelling house for Jochem Pietersen the superintendent and whatever shall further appertain thereto, shall be built on the aforesaid land, at the common expense of the contracting parties in company, but the house and all on the land shall remain in common. He, Jochem Pietersen, shall be bound to keep a pertinent memorandum and register of that and such other extended account as it shall become necessary to the contracting parties, when required, an account, proof and balance as is proper.

"It is also hereby stipulated, that as soon as any division of profits is made, and this land shall come to be divided by the contracting parties, he, Jochem Pietersen, shall first receive the aforesaid Thousand guilders for surrendering and giving up the aforesaid land. Again, whenever, also, the partition and allotment of each person's share shall come to be made, that shall then be done by lot, without giving anyone a preference therein. It is likewise conditioned, that in the absence of one or the other of the contracting parties, some one else shall be put in his place. And in case of the superintendent's death, another shall [not be] appointed in his place, without the knowledge of the other partner. 3rdly The widow of a deceased partner shall herself be at liberty to continue, or otherwise, to carry on the business of the contracting parties; — *Records N. The English parliament passes the Navigation Act. "By this it was especially provided that all goods from foreign countries to Europe should be imported into England in English ships only; and all European goods either in English ships or in ships belonging to the countries from which these articles originally came. Of all the acts ever passed in Parliament it is perhaps the one which brought about the most important results for England and the world. — *Kalbe, Hist. of England, 191; Broadhead, op. cit., 1: 543.

The farm known as the Amstrale Hans farm, and which has heretofore been occupied by Egbert Woutersen, is leased for six years, beginning May 1, 1672, to Evert Peis. The lessee is also to receive the use of the Dominic Hook farm at Masphet for raising hay thereon.—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 97.

Stuyvesant writes to the board of 'Nine Men' to make "several tap into the expectations to the late Board" for their assistance in "the repairing of the Fort New Amsterdam." He says he has himself "begun the highly necessary and urgent work with the few negroes and servants of the Company," and, "during the last two summers of 1650 and 51, has made "toller- able progress, considering the great difficulties which would have enclosed the Fort all round and put it in good shape" if, for the Company's and the country's service, "his and the Company's servants had not been obliged to go to the South river [Delaware] and remain there the greater part of last summer [1654] in order to build there a new Fort" (Camin). He says that in the meantime the newly erected work on Fort New Amsterdam has, through the neglect of his orders and proclamation, been "destroyed and trampled down by horses, cows and hogs." He has spoken to some of the "Nine Men" several times of "the negligence and disgust with the Fort, which has hitherto been erected without the community's help, rooted up, trampled down and destroyed by the community's hogs, cows and horses, thus losing the advantage" of his "hard and diligent labor." Stuyvesant agrees that "the negligence and confluence of the Fiscal" (Hendrick van Dyck) are to blame, because he has not enforced the government's "twice or thrice repeated proclama- tions." He adds: "We are... compelled to leave the Fort, to our shame and the detriment of this place, as we found it, and to suspend all work on it or to execute and enforce our orders and proclamations, now already three or four times published and issued, namely otherwise." He, therefore, found on the fort and confiscate them to the benefit of the company. He declares that, in order to avoid being charged with extremeness, he has concluded "first to inform the Board of Nine Men" of his intentions and the

...Sometime during this year, the provincial council abolished the export duty of eight per cent on New Netherland tobacco, in conformity with the directions of the directors of the company at Amsterdam, of April 4, 1652.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 125; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 175. The original ordinance is not extant.

...In this year, the burgomasters of Amsterdam ordered that all private freighters should carry indentured passengers to New Netherland at 30 guilders passage money or eight stuivers per day for board. This resulted in many people coming over.—Directors to Stuyvesant, April 4, 1652, in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 166.

...In this year, a mint was established in Massachusetts.—Winsor, III: 334.

24 Abram de la Noy, upon his petition to the director-general and council, is granted permission to sell all sorts of wines by the small cask, at the rate of 2 d. for one mill.

The commonalty having made nominations from which three new representatives in the board of "Nine Men" are to be selected by the director-general and council, the following are accordingly confirmed. They took the oath of allegiance on Feb. 2, viz: Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, Paulus Leendertsen van der Grift, and Pieter Cornelisens, miller.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155.

Feb.

...The inhabitants having complained of great inconvenience because of the difficulty of getting their grain ground, or, if ground, in a satisfactory manner, "for which reason" the people were received "with abuse, curses and threats." Stuyvesant and the council ordain that a miller be appointed "at a yearly salary to superintend the Hon'ble Company's Windmill," and provide regulations for grinding at the mill and for fixing the duties and emoluments of the miller. Persons are forbidden to carry any grain to the mill "without first having obtained a permit at the Office of the Store" of the company. The order of service at the mill was set down as "first come, first served," except that the company reserved precedence over others, because it had to provide bread for security for persons in its jurisdiction, and the scales are ordered placed in the mill, "to prevent frauds, evil reflections and especially afterclogs."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 123-25.

The board of "Nine Men" appear before Stuyvesant and the council in the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, and request an order forbidding "the shooting of hogs on the walls of the Fort and that for this reason the Fort be enclosed with stakes or in some other convenient way." Stuyvesant consents, and promises "to have the necessary posts cut and hewed by his own servants or negroes, the community to bear the expenses of putting up the palisades and enclosing the Fort."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155.

...The company having finished the new and the council for exclusive privilege to shave, to which they are given answer "that shaving is properly not in the province of the surgeons, but only an appendix to their calling, that nobody can be prevented to please himself in this matter or to serve anybody else for friendship's sake, out of courtesy and without receiving payment for it;" but "keeping a shop to do it in" is "expressly forbidden." Moreover, in the interest of the public health, ship's barbers are forbidden to "dress any wounds, bleed or prescribe for any one on land without consent of the surgeons, or at least Doctor La Montagne."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 155-56.

A school is mentioned as being kept at this date by David Provoost at the place "where the Nine Men usually meet."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 156. It was situated at what is now 52 Broadway.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.

Adriaen van Tienenhooven, Samuel Megapolensis, and Jan de la Mangère ask permission of Stuyvesant and the council to erect a pew in the church in the fort.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 156.

Stuyvesant having urgently requested the directors at Amsterdam to send over a second minister to New Amsterdam to be associated with Domine Megapolensis, preferably one who could preach also in English, the directors, therefore, now apply to the church authorities at old Amsterdam for such a person. At this time, as they learn, the Rev. Samuel Dir生活的 (Latinized form of the Dutch name, Dries, Driessch, or van Driessen) is "at Leyden." He was born about 1605; matriculated the first time at the University of Leyden, on Sept. 25, 1625; had been for some years a preacher to an English congregation in England, and had only lately returned to Holland and matriculated a second time at the University of Leyden, this time as a student in medicine. The Amsterdam church authorities interrogated him as to his willingness "to accept said appointment" for New Amsterdam.—Eccles. Rec., I: 505-4.

On March 18, he presented himself before the "Departed and causas Indicas," informed the Assembly of his inclination for the said journey, and presented a commendatory testimonial of the entire consistory of the English [Presbyterian] church" of Amsterdam, which related "both to his life and church services in England, speaking highly of them." Recommended now by the Amsterdam clergymen and other persons of the community, he was accepted "as second pastor of New Amsterdam."—Ibid., I: 505-36.

The directors, on April 4, informed Stuyvesant of their success in securing Diriusus, "as if sent by the Lord." They said he was "a bachelor of about 40 years [an error for over 50 years]... who on account of the perturbances in England, where he had been preaching... retreaded from there;" that he had "the reputation of being a very pious man and possessed of great gifts;" was "able to preach in both languages, English and Dutch and if necessary even in French;" and had "a very peaceable disposition and agreeable conversation." The company allowed him a salary of 800 ($400) per month and 250 ($100) a year for subsistence, and, as he was unmarried, they suggested that he might board with Jan de la Montagne.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 173. Diriusus sailed from Holland soon after April 4. By Aug. 12, he was reported by the synod of North Holland as having been sent to New Netherland (Eccles. Rec., I: 511), and on Oct. 15 (q.v.) he was referred to in New Amsterdam as one "recently arrived." In the last named case, Hendrick van Dyck, the deceased fiscal, was ordered to vacate the company's house in which he dwelt, by Nov. 1st, in order to make room for Diriusus.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 139. See, further, May 20, 1658.

Jacobus van Corlisor conveys to Willem Beeckman the "land situate at the East River and called Corlasers Hook, with his plantation and Hook called in the Indian language Nechttranck, lying contiguous to said plantation situate on the Island of Manhattan, with the quit rent thereon," for 4,000 guilders. The vendor signs "Jacobus van Curler." The conveyance was approved by Stuyvesant and the council on March 4.—Records N. Neth., (O'Callahan's trans.), III: 102 (N. Y. State Library). This appears to be the earliest recorded reference to Corlisers Hook by this name.

For later mention see Rec. N. Am., VII: 26, 29 (1673); and M. C. C. I: 764 (1694).

Jochem Pietersen Kuyter sells to Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven his lot on Manhattan Island, situate at the present Pearl and Whitehall Sts., "together with the building stone (Clipstone) thereon," for 450 guilders. At the provincial secretary's office, "this conveyance is sealed and signed in the presence of Mr. La Montagne and Brian Newton a committee of Council, and the seal of the Province in red wax affixed thereto."—Records N. Neth., (O'Callahan's trans.), III: 102 (N. Y. State Library).

Hook, Richard (q.v.), attorney for Frederick Lubbertsen, his father-in-law, conveys to Jan Hendriksens Stelman, a parcel containing fifteen morgen, fifty-two rods, situate on the East River between the lands of Harry Brezer and Edward Wiscock (sic for Fiscock), according to the grant from Kieft of Deputies of the chamber of Amsterdam write to Hendrick van der Capellen, a deputy from Zutphen, requesting the latter to cooperate in transporting some people to New Netherland, but making the condition that first a list of immigrants be sent to the Amsterdam body, in order that proper arrangements can be made with the shipper who are daily taking people aboard; also fixing the transportation charges. — N. Y. Hist. MSS., Neth. Papers, No. 1218, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Stuyvesant sends a deputation from the council to the board of "Nine Men" to examine in their presence persons "touching the calamitous language, the defamation and slander uttered . . . at the house of Captain Fyn in our absence against our person and dignity." — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 162. On the 217th, Stuyvesant wrote to the council and recommended the suspension of Hendrick van Dyck from the office of fiscal for his "conceivance, negligence and general failing to do his duty," and for calling Stuyvesant at the house of Fyn a "Scoundrel, Murderer, Tyrant, Hound, Baby and other like names." On the 28th, the council acquiesced in the suspension, and Van Dyck was brought before the body and charged. He made a general denial; requested a copy of the proceedings, and protested against suspension. But he was suspended by Stuyvesant and charged "not to meddle any more in the Company's affairs." He received from the secretary a copy of Stuyvesant's letter, which he dubbed a "pashuil" (lampoon or joke). — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 164. On Oct. 11, the council ordered by Nov. 1, to vacate the company's house, in which he resided, as it was needed for Rev. Samuel Drissius, who had arrived recently in New Amsterdam. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 129. It is evident from the correspondence of the directors in Holland, dated Jan. 27, 1649, that they had a poor opinion of Van Dyck, and were prepared for his dismissal sooner or later. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 166-7; cf. 175 (April 4, 1652).

The deputies of the West India Co., in 1650, submitted to the general assembly a provision for the trade, colonization, and administration in New Netherland, of which, and among other things, that liberty be given to the inhabitants of New Netherland "to purchase Negroes wheresoever" they deemed it necessary, "except the coast of Guinea," and to "bring them into New Netherland to work on their boweries," on payment of a head tax. — N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 94. The commonality at Manhattan having made a request for the privilege to import slaves from Africa, the directors at Amsterdam, on April 4, 1652, wrote letters to Stuyvesant and the commonality, in which they grant to the inhabitants the right to fetch in their own ships from "the coast of Africa" as many negroes as they require for agricultural purposes, to conditions which accompany the letter to Stuyvesant. These conditions and regulations are no longer among the records, but their purport can be divined from a form issued for trading ships to Africa. From it we see that the directors prohibited the traders from Manhattan "to trade on the Gold Coast," or to "come any further West than Ardre or at most Popo [in Dahomey] under penalty of forfeiture" ship and cargo. — Ibid., XIV: 162, 166, 176. The terms were not considered encouraging enough, and no result followed these concessions. Slaves thenceforth imported into New Netherland were brought in Dutch ships, duly licensed by the Amsterdam chamber, and belonging to merchants in Holland. — Lewis & Ord. N. Neth., 127.

In his defence, on Sept. 18, 1652, Hendrick van Dyck, the suspended fiscal, said that no request for negroes had been presented by patroons or colonists in New Netherland, so far as he had knowledge. — N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 508. A municipal form of government, under a schout, two burgomasters, and five schepens, is granted to New Amsterdam. The separate office of schout, however, does not at once pertain to the city. — See letter of the directors of W. I. Co. to director-general and council of N. Neth., April 4, 1652, in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), XIV: 162.

The directors at Amsterdam complain to Stuyvesant because they have not been properly informed about prizes captured, ships sold, proceeds from merchandise sent to New Netherland, etc., although they have called for such reports several times. They say: "before, a bookkeeping is as want of assistance or unfamiliarity with the books should be made impossible," and, moreover, "for this reason, they established at Amsterdam a "special bureau for New-Netherland matters." Apr. 1652. They now ask Stuyvesant to send over at the earliest opportunity "accurate registers of all lands, boweries, and houses, let out on lease by the Company, with the rents and conditions" under which they were rented. They also refer to the charter of freedom of Manhattan Island, which was wholly reserved for the company, and, because they suspect that some lands and lots on the island have been given to private parties without their knowledge, they require of him a detailed report on that matter. They say good order must be preserved, so that everyone may find "a suitable place," and the land be divided "with more equality than formerly, when everybody took what pleased him best without knowledge and consent of the Directors or their officers," as they found occurred "in the cases of Wouter van Twiller, Offert Gerritsen [Wolter Gerritsen van Couwenhoven], Lubbert van Dinklage, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, and others." This being a "very intolerable" condition, they order Stuyvesant to "warn everybody by public advertisement, not to buy or take possession of any land without knowledge and approval by the Company and its officers, also [to] dissolve all such contracts of purchase made heretofore," but to see that the buyers are "reimbursed for their out-lays and the title vested in the Company." Then grants of land can be made anew to anyone who will undertake to cultivate and populate them. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 167-8. See March 21, 1651; and July 1, 1652.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant, refer to complaints by the commonality in New Netherland "of the improper trade in powder, lead and guns carried on there by private parties." To prevent this illicit trade, the directors send over a "printed placat," and demand strict execution thereof by the fiscal. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 166. This edict was not strictly enforced in some parts of New Netherland, as appears from another letter of the directors, of June 6, 1653. — Ibid., XIV: 206. Stuyvesant and the council were censured by the inhabitants as well as by neighbouring governments "on account of the non-execution of their previously enacted and frequently renewed Edicts against the importation of contraband, and the sale thereof as well to Christians as Indians," who revised and renewed, therefore, on Aug. 11, 1656, the former ordinances "against the importation and sale, either to Christians or Natives, of any kind of Munitions of War," adding amplifications thereto. This ordinance was again renewed on April 9, 1658. — Lewis & Ord. N. Neth., 219-39, 346.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "We do not see by what means we can prevent the trade in lump wampum, as long as the fiscal will not discharge his duties faithfully, and we are afraid, that you too have not discovered this practice, when so often increased glaives that accompany the letter to Stuyvesant. We believe a quantity will go over in these ships: you will thus soon learn the result of your resolution. General experience however has demonstrated, that the increase of the value of money has usually been the ruin of the country and its population; we consider therefore this is a matter of dangerous import and find it very unavoidable to have passed this resolution without our knowledge." — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 169. See May 30, 1650.

Prof. Kilpatrick argues convincingly that the first Latin school in New Amsterdam was provided for at this time by the directors in the same letter: "We also agree with your proposition to establish there a trivial school and believe a beginning might be made with one usher (bypediadicasium) who could be engaged at a yearly salary of 200 to 250 guilders [£80 to £100]. We recommend for that position Jan de la Montagne, who was previously appointed to it; and you may use the building of the city tavern [Pearl St. and Coenties Alley] if you find it suitable." — Dutch Schools of New Neth., 95. O'Callaghan (see ibid., footnote), translating the same passage (citing N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 169), interpreted triviale as "public," this meaning "primary" whereas there was already a "triviale school," in charge of Willem Vettius (or Vetsen) (see Oct. 1649), who continued as schoolmaster until succeeded by Harmannus van Holbocken (see Mar. 25, 1649), "Clearly," says Kilpatrick, "the elementary school of which Vertens had charge was not a triviale school, else some word was "other than primary" and would have been used in connection with the proposed school." He shows, furthermore, that triviale was applied at that time in Holland to a school in which Latin was taught.—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 62–66, 95–99. It is to be remembered, also, that the remonstrants of 1649 wanted a Latin school to be established in Amsterdam. When, therefore, the Dutch magistrate pointed out to Governor Stuyvesant in 1650, that the directors at Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council interdict and forbid all persons, directly or indirectly, to buy or attempt to obtain any lands in the province from Indiaks, "much less by virtue of purchase or donation undertake to occupy, or sell or convey them to others, without the previous consent or approbation of the director-general and council," it was adjudged, it would result in "pernicious consequences." July 4, after mature deliberation, Governor Stuyvesant directed the directors at Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council interdict and forbid all persons, directly or indirectly, to buy or attempt to obtain any lands in the province from Indiaks, "much less by virtue of purchase or donation undertake to occupy, or sell or convey them to others, without the previous consent or approbation of the director-general and council." It is evident that the director-general and council could heretofore obtain "land" from the Indians. Some persons even went so far as to acquaint the Indians of the prices that people were paying one another for small lots. These

The states-general order Stuyvesant to come immediately to Holland, and render an account of his administration, as well as of the other colonies in New England. This recall was revoced, however, on May 16.—Broodhead, op. cit., 541–42, and authorities there cited.

The directors at Amsterdam resolve as follows: "Marcus Hendrick Vogelsang, ship carpenter, intending to emigrate to New Netherland, requests that as much space may be granted to him in the most convenient locality on Manhatnns Island as he may require for erecting a shipyard and dock and a house. The vote having been taken, it was decided to direct the Director [Stuyvesant] to accommodate him in a convenient locality."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 181.

authorizes Stuyvesant to grant Hog Island (later named Manning's Island) to Francis Fyn, if vacant, and if no special objection intervenes. They wrote to him on May 10, however, enclosing the resolution and stating that, having learned the place was well adapted for fortifications, they recommended him the propriety of making the grant.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 277.

In a naval war between England and the United Provinces, a bloody but indecisive battle is fought in the Straits of Dover between the British fleet under Blake and the Dutch fleet under Tromp. The first year of these hostilities closed on Dec. 19, when Blake was forced to take refuge in the Thames, and Tromp placed a broom at his mast-head, in token that he had swept the channel free of English ships.—Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 545–46.

To prevent accidents in New Amsterdam, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance against fast driving of waggons, carts, or sleighs in the city, and prohibit drivers from sitting or standing on their conveyances anywhere within the city limits, except on Broadway. In all other places they are to "walk by the Wagons, Carts or Sleighs and so take and lead the horses." Penalties for infractions are prescribed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 128–29.

Some of the inhabitants of small boats, canoes, and other craft, to board "ships and yachts arriving from Fatherland [Holland] and elsewhere" before these vessels have "come to anchor, according to order," in the established roadsteads before the city of New Amsterdam. These infractions of edicts, passed as long before as Kieff's administration, were considered of such "great importance" by Stuyvesant and the council now declare by an ordinance that no one shall "repair with any Skiff, Boat, Canoe or other craft on board of any arriving Ships, or come on shore with any boat from such Ships or yachts, before and until such arriving Ships, Yachts or Barks" have made their anchorage before the city and have reported their arrival and commission, as proper entry, to the director-general and council.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 129–30.

Following upon the instructions of the directors at Amsterdam, of April 4 of this year, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance for regulating the purchase of Indian lands, and vaccating and annuling certain extravagant grants and purchases. It was found that "many Inhabitants" of New Netherland, who were "covenanting and greedy of land," had, contrary to all rights and orders, purchased, bartered, or obtained by gift from the Indians, extensive tracts of land, holding the same as their property, and selling and conveying to others, all without the knowledge, order, or consent, of the directors or their deputies in New Netherland, and without record in the office of the provincial secretary at Manhattan, as required by law. This was declared to be injurious to the company and to the improvement of the province. It could only be checked, they said at a "excessively high price, far above the value and rate at which the Director General and Council could heretofore obtain" land from the Indians. Some persons even went so far as to acquaint the Indians of the prices that people were paying one another for small lots. These time to be dispatched by the first ship sailing." They deemed it advisable that a similar plan be followed at New Amsterdam, and that the letters "put into a bag" be sent over to the directors, at their place of meeting, for distribution.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 186.
Nothing was done, and "great complaints" continued to pour in upon the directors "concerning the delivery of private letters" coming from New Netherland, which were "often kept undelivered two or three weeks or lost entirely to the great disadvantage of private traders and others." The directors, therefore, again directed Stuyvesant, on Nov. 23, 1654, "to have a box or chest made," in which letters would be collected and then given,
"well secured in one package, to the supercargo," whenever a ship sailed, together with instructions to have the same delivered to the directors immediately upon his arrival at Amsterdam.— Ibid., XIV: 304. None the less, the wishes of the Directors were unheeded and the "great complaints" continued. Again, on Sept.
25, 1655, they urged compliance upon Stuyvesant and the council.
They then suggested that a letter-box be "hung up at the Warehouse [on Pearl St.] or whatever place" was deemed fittest and advised that the bag be sent over "under seal."—Ibid., 334.
The first evidence of an attempt to give heed to the slightest manner to postal regulation in New Netherland was in an ordinance of Stuyvesant and the council, of June 13, 1657, which provided that nobody should be allowed to board arriving ships before visitation by a government officer and the delivery of the officer might be required to be to be a "proper list" of them could be made out, "to insure their delivery to the right man or owner," and the supercargo was allowed to collect a fee of three stivers, or six cents, for each letter.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 313.
The foregoing provisions related only to incoming mail.
On Oct. 30, 1659, the directors declared by resolution that it had "been discovered that private letters" were not being "placed into sealed bags in New Netherland and Curacao, as ordered by the government and long practised in Brazil . . . that masstery of private vessels" returning to Holland usually took along letters which they delivered "badly or necessarily delayed." They determined to prevent this, and ordered that "henceforth a clause should be inserted in the billbond, given by skippers, sailing to New Netherland and Curacao, forbidding them to bring privately letters to this place [Amsterdam] under penalty of one hundred Carobs guilders for each contravention."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 446; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 379. These regulations were communicated to Stuyvesant (N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 458), who, with his council, promulgated the same by an ordinance, enacted on June 2, 1660 (p. 6). A letter-box was placed "at the Office of the Secretary of the Director General and Council," for the deposit of letters and the registration of registration. Any one should "require a receipt for his Letter," for which a fee of three stivers, or six cents, in wampum, was charged, whilst record of registration was made by "one of the clerks . . . on a list."
—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 380. On June 25, 1660, Stuyvesant informed the directors that their directions in regard to receiving and forwarding the mail had been published and posted in New Amsterdam.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 475. It was in 1660, therefore, that the first post-office in New Netherland was established at Manhattan.

On account of the break in diplomatic relations between the states-general and England, and impending war (see May 29, July 8), the directors at Amsterdam warn Stuyvesant and the council to "arm all freemen, soldiers and sailors and fit them for defense," to provide "proper officers," and to appoint "places of rendezvous," also to "put the fortifications at New Amsterdam, [Fort] Orange and [Fort] Cauimair in a good state of defense," whilst keeping an eye upon their New England neighbours.—N. T. Col.
Docs., XIV: 186, 207.

by him by the provincial government.—Records N. Neth. (Dutch Con-tinentals), II: 49 (N. Y. State Library). See Kilpatrick, Dutch Schools of N. Neth., 112.

The states-general again warns the West India Co. to put their province in a proper state of defense.—Brookhead, op. cit., I: 547.

The duty allowed during Kieft's administration on each mercantile cargo, due as well as on the goods brought to New Amsterdam, was fifteen stivers. This rate was continued under Stuyvesant, without objection from the local merchants. But the directors at Amsterdam contracted with "some merchants of Amsterdam not to exact more than 8 per cent on Beavers and Otters," a favouritism fatal to the revenues of New Netherland and objectionable to the merchants there. However, the reduced rate was also in time extended to them. This made matters worse for fortune, and the Company, therefore, now provide for an additional local duty on furs. Besides the eight per cent, four more stivers are ordered to be paid "for each merchantable Otter, and Beaver skin and Bear and Elk hide, the thirds and halves reckoned in proportion."—N. T. Col. Docs.,

Michael Tades at this time kept a tavern on the site of the

The directors at Amsterdam promise to send to Stuyvesant 13 and the council by the next ship "the desired placits [edicts] certifying the same," in case any placards on the Manhattan near the fort or in the city of [New] Amsterdam already granted, as well as unoccupied lands," in order that they may govern themselves accordingly, "and see that the latter" are cultivated. They say it never was their intention, nor is it now, that their consent, given to everyone who desires to emigrate to New Netherland, in proportion to his family, shall mean that anybody can become the owner of one or two hundred morgens (two or four hundred acres) of ground and then leave it uncultivated, thereby preventing others from obtaining convenient land, save at an enhanced price. The land, they say, must be occupied within three years:
the number of people stipulated by the conditions must be placed on the land within the time limit, and haud put to the plough, or, by default, the land shall be forfeited, and shall revert to the company's domain for the accommodation of others.—N. T.
Col. Docs., XIV: 193. This resulted in the draft of two placards or certiatics by Stuyvesant and the council "in regard to the neglect in cultivating and redeeming land and in erecting houses on the lots granted within the limits of New Netherland." These instruments were sent to the directors at Amsterdam, who repeated their wishes, as expressed before in their letter of Dec. 15, 1652.
The directors, "after consideration," He was a graduate and the council said the said placats to be printed" at Amsterdam, and sent the printed copies "to be published and affixed" in New Amsterdam. The corrections made in one of the drafts stipulated "that the quit-rent or annual payment of 12 stivers for each morgen" should be paid "until the land shall first have been ploughed or otherwise put to use."—ibid., XIV: 207. Neither the original drafts nor printed revisions of these two edicts are among the 1626-1664

"Near the fort the houses were compactly placed. Elsewhere within the wall there was room for great trees and shady groves of aboriginal growth, and for open spaces brightened by the rich native flora, by crops of rye, barley, and tobacco, and by the fruit trees and garden flowers that the Hollander always carried with him from his fatherland. Indeed, there was an 'excess of large gardening' said the West India Company when it got Cortelyou's map if more closely built upon, the place might be more easily defended.

"As standards of cleanliness and comfort were much higher among the Dutch than among the English at this period, New Amsterdam would undoubtedly have given less pain than Boston to the senses of a modern sanitaryian. For a long period after it became New York all strangers noticed how spotless its old traditions kept it within doors; and the outward disherveltment of its early years was greatly bettered after the city magistrates took it in charge. Then, with the aid of the provincial government, they gradually improved the streets, appointing official 'fence viewers,' refusing to let poor structures occupy good sites, ordering away pigsties, ten-houses, and other nuisances, and, to lessen the risk of fire, prohibiting hay stacks and wooden chimneys. Hogs had been at first the only seavengers, entering the yards from the street.

"Soon after Bower Street was paved 'with cobble stones' in 1658 and given the name that it still retains as Stone Street other streets were improved in the same way. Along each side of the Heere Gracht or Great Canal ran a street, and along the East River shore, from the mouth of the Heere Gracht to the Water Foot at the end of the wall, a fine walk protected by the cheekway or sea-wall of planks and therefore called De H'ual or Long de H'ual. The path at a little distance from the inner side of the city wall, which afterwards developed into Wall Street, was called the Ginole (the Circuit).

"Near the wharf at the mouth of the Heere Gracht a small market house was built in 1656, and on the Plain in front of the fort, now the Bowling Green, a meat market in 1659—a substantial structure with a tiled roof. There were no market places in all New England towns as there were in all Dutch towns, and not until 1740 was a public market house built in Boston. An annual cattle fair held at New Amsterdam for six weeks in the autumn was called a 'free market,' which meant that strangers as well as burghers then had liberty to trade at retail and were exempt from arrest. Proclamations put into English brought farmers with their herds and flocks from points as distant as Stamford in New Haven Colony and the eastern parts of Long Island; and for thirty years or more this Dutch institution survived in New York.

"... The present City Hall Park is a fragment of the common land, called De Plachte (the Flat) and afterwards the Commons, where, we are told, the city wall, the citizens had free pas-sage for their cattle.

"As we know from the so-called 'Duke's Plan' (Pl. 10 Vol. I) and from the Castello Plan (Pl. 83, Vol. II), 'Many of the houses in the city had crow-stepped gables turned toward the street and roofs of various-colored tiles. Some had projecting beams in the gable for the hoisting of goods into the store-rooms beneath the roof, and the characteristic Dutch porch or 'stoop' raised several feet above the ground. Inside, there were no stoves but enormous stone fireplaces bordered with blue and white tiles; there were great bedsteads built into the walls, solid pieces of furniture, stores of house-hold linen and handsome clothes, and treasures of pewter and silver; also, though rarely, large looking-glasses, marble tables, clocks, 'alabaster images,' 'great china pots,' and, in Stuyvesant's house at least, cabinets of ebony which were probably receptacles for porcelain treasures. These were more likely of Japanese than of Chinese origin, for after 1641 Nagasaki was an important trading post for the Dutch. The burghers of New Amsterdam had a great deal more silverware than the New Enganders who in other ways were much richer, but they did not regard it as an extra-vagance. It played the part now played by the savings-bank. 'Money and plate' is a frequent conjunction of terms in inventories and wills.

"From the same lists it appears that chairs, always straight-backed, were sometimes covered with Russia leather or with velvet and lace. The 'carpets' often mentioned were small rugs or, more
The wonderful blooming of art in the Netherlands had so developed the popular love for pictures and the belief in them as good investments that they abounded everywhere, even in the cottages of peasants. In New Amsterdam also they were numerous, relatively small men than books.

"Modest in size and put to modest uses were these comfortable Dutch-American houses, trade and family life going on together beneath the same roof as was the contemporary custom in European towns. The kitchen was the family sitting-room. Like the smaller chambers the room for formal uses, which we should call the parlor, held a heastat; and here stood the Dutchwoman's most indispensable article of furniture, her big kar or clothes- chest. The plentiful wadded petticoats and suits of clothing that filled the kar were of sorts that many years' wear could not damage. Much household linen was needed, according to the general European practice, it was allowed to accumulate for the great bleachers that were undertaken only twice or four times in a year. Mighty smokers though they were, Dutchmen, say their own historians, rarely smoked indoors. But the extreme care that they bestowed upon the cleanliness of the house and its furnishings, and the same authorities, did not extend to clothing when in use. If Sir William Temple made no such remark when he spoke with wonder of the niceties of Dutch housekeeping it was because, low as was then the standard of personal cleanliness in Holland, it was still lower elsewhere."

"At New Amsterdam. the general stores were on a larger or smaller scale. The best one was kept by Cornelis Steenwyck who was one of the few Great Burgers and in later years was thought the richest man in the province. Taverns were of much more importance in the life of the community than they are to-day — the commonplaces for the ministers, surgeons, and domestic-discourse, dance-house, club-house, exchange, and newspaper. Some of them were kept by prominent men like Martin Crepier and Salomon La Chair, a notary public who left his wine business in his wife's charge when, on his little yacht, he was making professional tours of the province. A record book in La Chair's handwriting, preserved in the office of the city clerk of New York, shows that he had a collection of law-books for reference.

"Entertainments under the domestic roof were limited to family festivals but these were many and jovial even funerals were almost festivities, so plentiful was the prospered supply of food, drink, and tobacco. The men constantly met at their 'clubs' in the taverns; and here, indoors or on the garden turf, the young people danced. Public occasions in country places near by, like the founding of a new town or the dedication of a new church, were marked by ceremonies which included a banquet given by the people of the locality to the governor or his representative.

"At New Amsterdam the celebration of Christmas and other old church festivals was not thought, as in 1659 the general court of Massachusetts pronounced it, a 'great disoncer' to God. Most characteristically Dutch were the St. Nicholas Day and New Year's Day observances, but Christmas, Easter, and Whitneathide were also celebrated by the Dutch Calvinists as heartily as by any Catholic. Nor was New Amsterdam's Sunday by any means the Sabbath of New England. All available kinds of labor, all amusements, and all sales of drinks were strictly forbidden 'before, during, and between' the hours of service; but when Stuyvesant tried to extend such prohibitions to cover the whole twenty-four hours the city magistrates refused to publish his ordinance, saying that it was too severe and 'contrary to the freedoms' of the fatherland. The many days of prayer and humiliation and the rarer thanksgiving days were kept in New Amsterdam in a way that was as far as possible from the same manner as the Sabbath. In 1655 when a merchant applied to the council for permission 'to make a lottery of a certain quantity of Bibles, Testaments, and other books,' asking also that persons be appointed to value the stock and 'to select something for the poor,' the matter was referred to the city court which resolved 'that the said business shall be proceeding.'"

"Stuyvesant's Sunday ordinances show what sports his people enjoyed on week-days and on the Sabbath after their devotions had been performed: 'going on pleasure parties in boat, car, or wagon,' 'fishing, bowling, and roving in search of nuts and strawberries,' playing tennis, croquet, bowls, and colonists, and at trough, a game with balls and hoops often played on the grass. Golf was also a Dutch game, described as played with a small ball, a crooked club, and a series of small holes in the turf. Turkey shooting was a common pastime in New Netherlands. With small success, apparently, the governor in council issued ordinances against firing guns, beating drums, and selling liquor on New Year's Day and May Day, against the direction of Maypole dances, or allowing couples to disorderly conduct, and against the rough sport called pulling or riding the goose."

"In New Amsterdam there were no vehicles built for purposes of pleasure or recreations, except small carts. And there were no side-saddles; the women rode on pillions behind the men. In winter, however, Holland itself hardly offered better chances for the true Dutch joys of skating and sleighing than the frozen rivers and ponds, marshes and meadows of Manhattan. English visitors delighted to watch men and women flying over the ice with great market-baskets on their heads. But they were slow to adopt useful inventions novel to their eyes, for two or three generations seem to have passed before the well of New Netherlands made its way into New England. When iron lacked, their runners were shod with split saplings.

"In summer a spot called the Locust Trees, on the bluff overlooking the Nore, was the favorite gathering-place for Dutchmen. The Dutch-American man of business, the Nore, was the classic of Amsterdam, was a place of relaxation and pleasure whither people go from the Manhattans for the evening service."

"The records of the burgomasters' court are complete enough to follow the personal relations of the burgomaster's correspondents and ordinances, a fair idea of the moral condition of his city. Plainly, it was much higher than that of Kief's scattered community had been. It could well stand comparison with the condition of the English colonies, and it might shame many of the settlements which in modern days have been planted far from the mother-country of their founders. To the sins of the inflammable, indeed, New Amsterdam was prone; but the devil as the father of violence found few recruits among its people, and the world in the sense of material gain did not appeal to them more strongly than to their neighbors."

"Writing in 1664 Thomas Mun declared that the Dutch had 'well-near left' the 'swinish vice' of drunkenness while the English, who were said to have learned of it, had fallen into a 'general leprous piping, potting, feasting, fashion, and mis-spending of our time in idleness and pleasure.' In New Amsterdam drunkenness was still common but was no longer a cause for complaint against high-placed personages. The records say that a Dutchman, bearing the name of a burgomaster who had been arrested there, explained that '. . . at the Manuadoes they were not punished for drunkenness but used after they had been drunk to say, God forgive us, or be merciful to us, and that was enough.' On the other hand, drink was declared by the court to be a 'frivoulous excuse' for the transgressions to which it led; and the authorities did all they could to limit the sale of intoxicants to white men and to prevent it altogether in the case of red men.

"There was no regular prison in New Amsterdam—only a jail in the fort and detention rooms for temporary use in the Stadt Huis. In the stocks, the pillory, and the wooden horse, working 'at the wheelbarrow' with the Company's slaves, whipping, branding, and the piercing of tongue or ears with hot irons (cruel punishments common in other colonies also), fines and temporary or permanent banishment—the survivors of the Donne's were reduced in the same manner or imprisonment. A negro filled the office of executioner and whopper. Arrested debtors were permitted to live at a tavern if they would pay the bill otherwise they languished in the Stadt Huis."

"When a litigant ordered by the city court to pay a sum of money did not do so his goods were levied upon and, if not redeemed within a week, were sold in a court sale. With the common sale of a candle, bidding proceeded as long as it held out to burn, and as its light expired the highest bidder secured the goods.

"For all its democratic temper and its simple ways of life New Amsterdam, as its English invaders found it, was not an illiterate or unmanly place."

"1632—commonly, table-covers; sand was the universal floor covering."

1653-1664

"In short, it is not more justifiable to think of New Amsterdam as a slow-witted, illiterate place than as a drowsy, uneventful place. The more closely we read its chronicles in the words of its own founders, the more clearly we see how childishly, how modernly it was in its essential habits of mind. If an American of to-day could be transported back two hundred and fifty years he would find himself more comfortably at home on Manhattan than anywhere else. In some of the English settlements he would have the chance to exercise more direct political power, but in none existing had he found such personal freedom, and in none at all a general mental attitude, a prevailing temper, similar to the temper of the America of to-day."

Mrs. Van Renselaer observes in Chap. XIII:

"In selecting the new members of the city corporation each existing member put a double number of names in nomination; and according to the pluralities thus determined the double list was drawn up which was submitted to the governor in council for a final choice. At once the corporation incurred Stuyvesant's displeasure by saying that no employee of the Company should be eligible; and at once he had to increase by far the scanty list of Great Burghers so that all the magistrates might belong to that class. In spite of his efforts, however, and in spite of the low price at which the Great Burgher-Right could be bought, the distinction between the two classes soon lapsed out of mind. Even in the elder Amsterdam it was abolished after several years.

"As thus reduced almost immediately to a democratic basis and modified, of course, at various later times, theburgher-right granted to the citizens of New Amsterdam in 1657 survived in New York until the year 1815 [p. 92]. Narrowly monopolistic though the arrangement may now appear, its establishment was always looked back upon as the foundation for the prosperity of Manhattan and, indeed, of the province at large. Inspiring and enriching the traders of the capital it directly encouraged the shipping industries from which every one else drew benefit; indirectly it stimulated agriculture; and it made the capital more and more the recognized central mart for the purchase of all the produce of the whole province as well as for imported commodities. It did not lead to the organization of trade and artisan guilds like those of Europe.

"The two burgomasters of New Amsterdam transacted all the executive and financial business of the city corporation. Each was on duty at the Stadt Huys every other day, and four times a year each made a report to his associate and their predecessor—the 'old burgomasters' who, with the 'old schepens' seem to have formed a little vredeschap or municipal council after a pattern set, of course, in the fatherland. One burgomaster retired from office every year, then assuming the city treasurer. Offöf Stevenson Van Cortlandt, who held this office for a year, was the first to have held this position when the Act of 1655 was passed. Certain fees reverted to the senior burgomaster, and he was called as the president of the corporation; but the schout presided over its sessions, moved all questions, and collected the votes. The specified duties of the five schepens were simply judicial as they were in Holland.

"Although the magistrates of the immature little city on Manhattan never acquired powers that corresponded with those of their prototypes in the commercial metropolis of Europe, from year to year their responsibilities and their influence increased. They held in trust all the property the city acquired, beginning with its Stadt Huys; they kept its seal, farmed out the excise, imposed special taxes, and assisted in the enactment of laws and the control of the militia. It has already been shown that they sometimes summoned popular meetings. The governor consulted them about provincial as well as municipal affairs, seating them, for instance, with the other official councilors and the chief militia officers in the councils of war he called whenever danger threatened, and toward the end of his administration taking no important step without their concurrence.

"No code of laws was ever drawn up for New Netherland. The governor's court administered the Rotten-Dutch law of Holland, differing in a few points from that of Brabant. It had no police, but the governor's orders and the acting magistrates were the police of the city. They were the court, the council, the police, and the courts for the city at the same time. It was a very useful arrangement. The above were the ordinances which the West India Company afterwards confirmed or vetoed; and in 1659 the Company sent out for the guidance of the city court twelve copies of a little book called Ordonnances and Guide of Procedure before the Courts of the City of Amsterdam."

"The office of governor is still recognized as a great part of its business, civil and criminal. The labors of the lower tribunal were largely those of arbitration yet it elaborated a regular system of pleading by declaration, plea, and rejoinder, and a well-organized method of examining witnesses present and absent. Its members felt competent they acted as arbitrators—as when, say their minutes, they crossed the street to test Jacobus Van Couwenhoven's better or worse claim to the title of the land; and the complaints that had been lodged against it. If the case was more complicated the settlers would find two or three such able citizens to pass upon it, and once in a while these were 'good women.' An appeal from the decisions of the city court was rarely taken although permitted in cases involving more than fifty guilders. Admiralty jurisdiction was also exercised by this court."

"Wills were made orally or in writing before two members of any local court or before a notary and two witnesses, the notary's notes being sworn to and signed by the testator. Proof was not necessary for probate. Marriages were strictly regulated. They could not be performed until the banns had been three times published, and in 1653 it was ordered that this must be done in the place where the contracting parties actually lived. An ordinance of 1658 says that all marriages must be solemnized within one month of the last proclamation of the bans under penalty of ten guilders for the first week of delay and twenty guilders for each succeeding week unless good reason were shown. Nor, under much heavier penalties, should any man and woman 'keep house as married persons' until they were lawfully married.

"According to Dutch custom all court officials took as much care for the interests of the defendants as of plaintiffs. No lawyers practised in any court, but evidently the notaries of New Amsterdam were active, for more than one of them was punished for drawing up papers carelessly or for abusing the magistrates to their faces."

"The business of the West India Company and of this province at large was carried on, under the governor, council, and schout-fiscal, by a receiver-general and collector of customs (who after 1658 formed with the governor and two councilors a board of audit), and by a little regiment of commissaries, bookkeepers, clerks, inspectors, surveyors, and Indian interpreters. From time to time the city government appointed other petty officials for temporary service. Plural office-holding was lawful. One or two instances of malversation in office are recorded.

"As regarded internal affairs New Netherland's days of storm and stress were over. External dangers had drawn the governor and his burghers together. He had learned that they could not be governed like a garrison of soldiers, and they had been pacified if not satisfied by their victory in the matter of municipal government. Nevertheless, all was not peace between them. Although the West India Company said in 1660 that its province, which thus far had cost it one million guilders, was now in a position to support itself, Stuyvesant constantly complained of the emptiness of his official chest, and his people of the methods that he employed to fill it. For example, when the Company changed the export charge upon furs from a specific duty to ad valorem duty of eight per cent he added a charge of four stivers upon each skin; and in 1654 he charged the one per cent staple-right charge upon all imports, which, he said, had proved impossible to collect, to a much higher specific duty upon liquors, salt, and all articles imported for the Indian trade."

"In 1661 the provincial revenue amounted to 40,000 guilders; in 1662 when the expenses of the government exceeded 35,500, to no more than 33,600. Although the city government often declared itself penniless it must at the last have gathered an annual revenue of some 35,500 guilders. For a while nothing fell into its coffers regularly except the proceeds of the small or burghers' excise. As Holland taught England the utility of stamp taxes so, in 1654, the magistrates of New Amsterdam suggested the first of which America heard the name, asking from the Company permission to levy a new impost 'such as on stamped paper etc.' The latter did not.

"If the records of the West India Company had been preserved some comprehensive account of the commercial life of New Amsterdam might be written. As it is, only isolated items can be gathered. For example, a paper in the Moore collection at the New York Public Library, CXXI, gives some details of the trade of the West India Company received in 1654-1655, 32,601 guilders in 'recognitions' and convey charges on goods sent to the province by individual

1652—exporters on six ships, duly specified, and in 1655, six ships again being named, 24,973 gilders. From the Van Rensselaer papers it appears that the merchants had a mutual system of insuring ships and cargoes against loss and damage, using the printed forms employed for the same purpose in Holland. The local records tell that some thirty 'trading banks' piled on River Mauritius but do not say how many sea-going vessels were owned or partly owned at Manhattan. It is evident that the merchants quickly grasped new chances to extend their ocean and their coastwise trade. In 1658 the governor of Canada permitted them to traffic with the white men on the St. Lawrence although not with the Indians, and in 1659 the West India Company allowed them, on petition, to 'try the experiment' of direct trading upon their own account with the Carolinas, France, Spain, Italy, and other foreign places exclusive of the African and Oriental regions reserved to the ships of the East India Company. Peltry, it was decreed, must still be sent to Amsterdam only, and all return cargoes must be discharged either there or on Manhattan; yet the concession opened wide markets for New Netherland's inestimable stores of timber and its growing wealth in goods.

The Dutchmen's position at the great gateway to the West had begun to tell in their favor. The New Englanders no longer competed with them in the fur trade; the Canadians were their only rivals. Peltry was still their chief article of export. In 1656 Fort Orange and its vicinity sent down about thirty-five thousand beaver skins to Manhattan, and in October, 1660, Stuyvesant wrote that since the beginning of the year twenty-five or thirty thousand had been handled at Manhattan, yielding some 16,000 gilders in export duties. Tobacco stood next to furs as an article of export. Most of it came, in spite of the English Navigation Acts, from Maryland and Virginia; yet so much was grown in the province that in 1671, when food was scarce, the government ordered every farmer to plant as many hogs of corn as of tobacco.

European goods were costly in New Netherland but profits can hardly have been greater than in New England, for heavy customs duties were added to the cost of transportation, and transportation averaged high in times when it took as long for cargoes to cross the Atlantic as it does now to reach the Philippines and when maritime disasters, including pirates, were more frequent than they are to-day.

More and more from year to year New Netherland showed a desire to educate its children and a willingness to do so at its own expense despite the pledges given by the Company. 'Nothing is of greater importance than the early instruction of youth,' said Governor Stuyvesant; a lack of schoolmasters, said Dominic Magnus, would mean 'a rustic youth and a bewildered herd of men's minds'; and repeatedly the people said the same. In reply to the complaints upon this subject that they embodied in the Remonstrance of 1649 Cornelis Van Tienhoven declared that the free school was always maintained and that various teachers 'kept schools in houses' and the scholars paid what they could afford as means of instruction.' Certainly this was true in somewhat later days, for the richer families employed private tutors while twenty-eight masters of schools public and private had been licensed by the year 1664, not including those who served in the South River counties.

Jews were never persecuted but at first were ill received in New Netherland.

The year 1653 may be called the birth year of New Amsterdam during the entire Dutch regime. Until this time its government was coordinate with that of the province, under the administration of the director-general, the provincial council, and a schout-fiscal. On April 11, 1650 (q. v.), a suggestion for municipal government in New Amsterdam was made, in a report of a committee to the states-general, deferring its inception for several years. On April 4, 1652 (q. v.), the directors at Amsterdam informed Stuyvesant and his council that a municipal form of government, under a schout, two burgomasters, and five scheepen, had been granted to New Amsterdam; the separate office of schout was, however, not vested in the city at this time (see April 9, 1660 for final grant of a separate schout to the city). See also July 25, 1648.

Now (Feb. 2, 1653), Stuyvesant and his council proclaim the long desired grant of municipal government for New Amsterdam, and announce its exact terms, which are contained in a long instrument, the full text of which has been unknown, but recently. On Dec. 24 (q. v.), this document was complained of as 'an instruction altogether too contracted, too curtailing, and too limited.'—Rec. N. Am., I: 144. This instrument prescribes also the form of oath to be taken by burgomasters and scheepen, and presents the instructions for the secretary or clerk of this inferior bench of justice.

The text, in two contemporary copies, was discovered by Victor Hugo Paltits in the course of researches made in 1911 for this work. He recognized their importance as the fundamental source of the origin of municipal government in this city. A reproduction of the text is given on Pl. 9 (see above); the copies, which was made by Jacobus Kip, first secretary of New Amsterdam, in 1656 (q. v.), when, upon the dismissal of Cornelis Van Tienhoven from all offices he had held, including that of schout of the city, the city fathers again sought, at a time they deemed most opportune, to have a separate city schout, free from provincial entanglements. The form of government is accompanied by coordinate correspondences, and marginalia explain the judgments of Stuyvesant and his council with respect to the request of the city officials, dated June 7, 1656.—See Rec. N. Am. II: 109–11, for translations.

A translation of all these papers, made for this work by Arnold J. Van der Laar, is given in Appendix B. These copies, which were used for his researches, are now in the New York Public Library, and formerly belonged to a larger collection of Bontemantel's papers. It consists only of the 'Form of government in New Netherland.' A 1653,' a heading which he gave to it. This copy is broken up into groups, with numerous paragraphs, some of which have headings as, for example, "Burgomasters' Jurisdiction," "Scheepen," and "Oath of Burgomasters and Scheepen." Bontemantel reproduces none of the marginalia found in the Kip copy, but he has added a few marginal notes of his own, mainly explanatory of divergences with respect to the authority given to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam as compared with the practice pertaining to burgomasters in old Amsterdam.

Bontemantel wrote a very instructive treatise on the government of Amsterdam, entitled: "De Regeeringe van Amsterdam, soo int Civiel als Crimineel en Militaire" (1651–1672), which was published by Dr. O. W. Kernkamp in Historisch Geneeskundig te Utrecht, Werken, 1897–1898, Vol. LV–LVII (32 ser., VII–VIII). A biographical account of Bontemantel is given in the "Inleiding" (Intro.) to Vol. LV, pp. i–xxxv, and an account of his notes and memoirs is found in the same vol., pp. xxi–clxxi. Among his papers there were at one time two volumes of notes, etc., relating to the West India Company. The copy now in the State Library is with the other Bontemantel papers in the City Archives at Amsterdam. The papers in the N. Y. Pub. Library and the Penn. Hist. Soc. are part of them.
Resolution

On the 3d point:

The position of schout shall henceforth be separated from the fiscal's office, but the appointment to the said position shall be made by the Director General and Council, in accordance with the orders given them.

Copy

The Director General and Council, taking into consideration the last preceding orders, advice and communication from the Hon. Directors, dated the 26th of April last year, 1655, whereby the Hon. Patrons advise to have the duties of schout of this city provisionally performed by the fiscal, therefore, the Director General and Council, without counter order, or at least without further advice and notice from the aforesaid Hon. Directors, can not make any separation therein. Done at Fort Amsterdam, in New Netherland, the 7th of June anno 1656. Was signed: P. Stuyvesant. Below was written: By order of the Hon. Director General and Council of New Netherland. Signed: C.v: Ruyven, Secretary

The second point

Furthermore, they also request [the right] to choose a schout, or at least to nominate a double number. It is true, the fiscal, Tienhoven, occupies the said place, but with as little satisfaction to theburghers (who have presented a petition on the subject) as respect for them.

To the Right Honorable Gentlemen, the Hon. Director General and the Hon. Council of New Netherland

Shew with due reverence and respect, the burgomasters and schepens of the city of Amsterdam in New Netherland,

That they are reliably informed that the Hon. Cornelis van Tienhoven has by the Hon. Patrons of this province been discharged from the positions which he has occupied here in this country, and consequently also from the office of schout of this city, which he has also held until this time.

And whereas the Right Hon. Directors of the West India Company, Chamber at Amsterdam, the lords and patroons of this province (upon the request to that effect made both by the commonality and by the petitioners' predecessors) have in their Honors' communication, dated the 18th of May 1654, been pleased to order that the position of schout of this city should be separated from the fiscal's office, as appears from the copy thereof hereto annexed;

Therefore, they, the petitioners, hereby respectfully pray your Honors (since the Hon. Cornelis van Tienhoven has been discharged from all his offices) that your Honors, in pursuance of said communication, may be pleased to appoint a reasonable, intelligent and competent person from among the burgheers or inhabitants here as Schout of this city, whereby justice will be maintained and the flourishing condition of this just or newly commencing city may be more and more promoted.

Awaiting hereupon your Honors' favorable disposition, we remain,

Your Honors' obedient servants, the burgomasters and schepens of the city of Amsterdam in New Netherland. Below was written: By order of the same. Signed: Jacob Kip, Secretary.

[Form of Government in New Netherland A.D. 1653]

The Director General and Council of New Netherland hereby make known that the Hon. Directors of the Chartered West India Company, Chamber at Amsterdam, lords and patroons of this province, have thought fit, under the high authority of their Director General and Council of New Netherland, to favor this new and growing city of New Amsterdam and the inhabitants thereof with a court of justice, to be constituted as far as possible and as the circumstances of this country permit according to the laudable custom of the city of Amsterdam, name-giver to this newly developing city, however, in such a way that all judgments shall remain subject to reversal by and appeal to the Director General and Council, to be by them finally disposed of.

As to the appointment of the judges requisite thereto, the aforesaid honorable patrons order that qualified, honorable, reasonable, intelligent and the most well-to-do persons be chosen and selected, who are neither corrupt nor opponents of the aforesaid lords patroons or their government here established, but peace loving and well affected subjects, being native born or real estate owning inhabitants, who according to the laudable custom of Amsterdam have been for at least seven years burghers here in this city, or else were born and brought up within the provinces of the United Netherlands, promooters and professors of the Reformed religion, as in conformity to the word of God and the regulations of the synod of Dordrecht it is at present taught in the churches of the United Netherlands and here in this country. Which court of justice, for the present time, until it shall be otherwise ordained or enlarged by the aforesaid Hon. Directors or their agents, shall at first consist of two burgomasters and five schepens, who from now on shall be chosen and sworn by the Director General and Council on the 3d of February (not being a Sunday), and shall be served by a secretary or clerk and an ordinary sworn messenger, of whom yearly a certain number shall be changed and some continue in office in order to inform the newly appointed members as to the preceding business.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

As to the burgomasters, whose particular duty and function it is to see to the proper administration, order and welfare of this city, extending between the two rivers to the Fresh Water, they are also to take care that proper quiet, peace and harmony prevail among the commonalty;

However, in such a way that by the aforesaid burgomasters no offices or ordinances shall be made, much less bestowed or published, without the previous knowledge, approval and confirmation of the Director General and Council, as representatives of sovereignty and supreme government, but the burgomasters shall have the right (what concerns them particularly and is especially recommended to them), to propose and report to the Director General and Council what they consider necessary for the good order, peace, quiet, welfare and government of theburghers, wherein then, in the presence of the burgomasters, by laws and ordinances such provision shall be made as the circumstances shall demand.

And furthermore, from this time forth there is reserved to the burgomasters the care and supervision of the alignment of houses, streets and fences, in order that within this city the same may be built and laid out in orderly fashion. Likewise, they are to see to it that at a convenient time this city be properly accommodated and provided with the necessary public buildings, such as churches, schools, a court house, weigh house, charitable institutions, docks, pier, bridges and other similar works, for which buildings, as in course of time and with the increase of population they become necessary, there will necessarily be required subsidies and funds, which must of necessity be procured from theburghers and inhabitants according to circumstances. Therefore, the burgomasters, but with the advice of the scheeps and the approval of the Director General and Council, shall have power and authority to lay a reasonable tax on the burghers and inhabitants to meet the needs of this city and also to impose fines and penalties on the unwilling contrarivens and to levy them by execution.

In case any orphan masters, church masters, surveyors, fire wardens, or other similar officers should be found necessary, the burgomasters shall report this to the Director General and Council and the need thereof being understood and acknowledged, the burgomasters shall have the absolute nomination of the persons thereto needed and qualified, but the appointment and confirmation shall depend on the Director General.

As to the court of scheeps, although the burgomasters of Amsterdam, the name-giver to this city, properly speaking have no judicial authority in conjunction with the scheeps, whether over inhabitants orburghers, or in criminal or civil matters, nevertheless, since the scheeps for the present are still weak and the honorable lords patrons have thought fit to compose the court of justice of two burgomasters and five scheeps, the burgomasters will until further order in the sessions of the court of scheeps have an advisory and a casting vote and when present alternately preside, the vice presidency being annually occupied by the oldest scheep, and all this until it shall be otherwise ordained or decided by the aforesaid lords patrons or their agents here.

Whereas the aforesaid burgomasters and scheeps, according to circumstances, meet at least once or twice a week at a regular time and place to be decided upon and made known by them, to hear, examine and determine, whether by judgment or arbitration, according to the circumstances of the case, all civil questions which are moved or brought before them, also criminal offenses of a minor degree, hereinafter more fully specified.

However, if they find the case fit to be arbitrated and the parties disposed thereto, the arbitration shall be conducted completely out of court by both the burgomasters and those whom they according to the circumstances of the case may wish to adjoint to themselves from among the scheeps or other honest burghers, yes even, if the burgomasters should find the matter of sufficient importance, from among the council, from which arbitration there shall lie no bill of review or appeal.

And before the said court of burgomasters and scheeps must needs be brought in the first instance all matters amounting to one hundred guilders or less (the arrest made by the fiscal excepted); also all actions of slander, or differences of words between lord and vassal, master and servant, mistress and maid, neighbour and neighbour, buyer and seller, tenant and landlord, gentleman and workman and other such like questions.

Likewise, all criminal actions consisting of acts, threats, fights, or wounding, whether they be brought or instituted before the aforesaid court by the parties, or by the fiscal (representing until further order the schout of the city).

Likewise, before the said court, until further order and increase of population, shall be subject to be cited, be compelled to appear and be amenable not only the burghers and inhabitants of this city of New Amsterdam, for the present extending to the Fresh Water, together with the arriving passengers, merchants, traders, skippers, masters of sloops and their sailors, so long as they remain on the roadstead or in the harbour of this city, but also all other inhabitants of Manhattan island, as well as the inhabitants of Amersfoort, Breuckelen and Midtwout and all those residing in the adjacent territory across the East and North rivers, who thus far enjoy no court of justice either by patent from the aforesaid lords patrons or their agents, and all this until such time as it may be otherwise ordained or decided by the aforesaid lords patrons or their agents, who refer to them the duty of ordering, installing and appointing such officers and judges in and outside of this city as they according to the population and increase of colonies, cities, villages, hamlets and inhabitants shall deem suitable for the more convenient administration of justice.

All those who desire to have some one summoned before the aforesaid court of justice shall do so, through the ordinary court messenger, to be qualified by the Director General and Council, at least twelve hours before the case is called, when the contending parties shall be bound to appear in their own person, without either of them, be he plaintiff or defendant, being allowed to be assisted by advocates, attorneys, or any one else, except women, imbeciles and minors, who may appear with their guardians, and those who are either sick or who have traveled out of the jurisdiction shall in such case be allowed to appoint some one in their stead, who is neither an advocate nor an attorney, nor occupies himself with any legal business, nor receives compensation therefor.
The aforesaid burgomasters and schepens may in the suits between parties appearing before them decree the providing of a deposit, definite condemnation, or discharge, as they according to the circumstances of the case shall deem proper.

In cases of injury, whether by words or deeds, they shall as above stated use diligence as arbiters to cause the parties agree and pacify them if possible. If not, they shall refer the complete account of the proceedings and the documents to the Director General and Council and upon the decision thereof impose a penalty to keep the peace.

In case the defendant, being duly cited, does not appear in person as hereinbefore stated, default shall be decreed against him, and upon the second default the schepens may order a deposit to be made and authorize the plaintiff, especially if he be a stranger, to take out the sum demanded, upon security or guaranty of restitution, if such should afterwards be deemed proper.

And if thereafter the case against the defendant, upon a third citation, be called to purge himself of his second default, or hear judgment pronounced, the burgomasters and schepens shall, if the defendant even then fails to appear, change the aforesaid deposit, by a judgment by default, to a definite condemnation, if the case lends itself thereto.

In cases and questions of slander, the burgomasters and schepens may by the court messenger summon the parties to appear in person, under penalty of forfeiture of one daelder [one and a half guilder] for the first default, of forfeiture of three guilders for the second time and of forfeiture of one pound Flemish [six guilders] for the third time. The parties even then failing to appear, the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens may refer them to the Director General and Council, provided that they shall first levy the aforesaid fines by execution, one half to be for the benefit of the said gentleman and the other half to be employed at their discretion.

The fines for default which the parties shall incur before the aforesaid court shall be, for the defendant, the first time eight stuivers, the second time twelve stuivers, and the third time sixteen stuivers, and for the plaintiff as much again, to be applied as above. Of which defaults a record shall be kept as well by the court messenger on the ordinary roll, as by the secretary or clerk in the minutes.

From all definite judgments rendered by the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens in civil as well as in criminal matters and above one hundred guilders (with the exception of judgments by default), the parties who find themselves aggrieved may appeal to the Director General and Council of New Netherland, provided that the appellant first of all deposit the moneys or goods mentioned in the definite judgment and pay the costs of the suit, if he has been condemned to do so.

Furthermore, the appellant shall be bound to have the appeal entered by the clerk or secretary within the space of ten days after the pronunciation of the judgment and to prosecute the same at the first meeting of the Director General and Council, or by petition, within the space of twenty days, to give notice thereof to the Director General and Council. The appeal being granted, he shall deposit in the hands of the Supreme Council twelve guilders, which shall be returned to him in case the judgment from which he appeals is modified.

It being the proper function of the burgomasters and schepens to render law and justice between the contending parties, they shall practise the same according to the written laws of our fatherland, especially, as far as is possible and the nature of the case will permit, according to the lawful customs and ordinances of the city of Amsterdam and the ordinances issued by the Director General and Council, which shall be duly observed. But if parties litigating before them either in the court room or out of it insult them in their official capacity or in person, by word or gesture, or insult each other, the court may by peremptory execution fine or punish them according to the nature of the offense, the penalty not to exceed the sum of twelve guilders.

Finally, the burgomasters and schepens shall cause this and all other privileges, orders and instructions which from time to time may be issued by the aforesaid Hon. Directors or their agents in this city to be registered and kept in a register, to which the burgomasters and schepens who are in office may either jointly or individually have recourse as often as they please, without it, however, being necessary or permissible for them privately to make extracts therefrom.

Thus, until further amplification, provisionally done at the meeting of the Hon. Director General and Council of New Netherland, this 14th day of February anno 1651, in New Netherland. Was signed P. Stuyvesant, La Montagne, Brian Newton and Cor. van Tienhoven.

We, the burgomasters and schepens, qualified thereto by the Director General and Council promise and swear in the presence of Almighty God, saving our former oath of allegiance to the High and Mighty Lords the States General of the United Netherlands as sovereigns, the Hon. Directors of the Chartered West India Company as lords and patroons of this New Netherland province, and their Director General and Council already appointed or hereafter to be appointed, that we, in our aforesaid capacity, to the best of our knowledge shall administer true law and justice between parties in cases brought before us, without any passion of favor or disfavor; that we shall promote and help promote the welfare of this city and the inhabitants thereof; that we shall uphold the honor of God and his pure religion as in conformity to the word of God and the regulations of the synod of Dordrecht it is taught in the churches of the Netherlands and here, and no other; that we shall maintain and help maintain the high jurisdiction of the aforesaid lords patroons and their supreme government already established or hereafter to be established; and that we shall bar and help bar whatever in any way shall conflict therewith. So help us God Almighty.

And by virtue of the foregoing there have been chosen and appointed:

As burgomasters

Joncker Areant van Hattem, formerly schepen of the city of Culemborg, steward of the county domain and member of the folder board of the said county, and at present captain of the burghe guard here.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Marten Cregier, old inhabitant of this city, formerly a representative of the commonalty and at present also a captain of the burgher guard.

As schepens
Paulus Leendersen van der Grift, from Amsterdam
Willem Beeckman, from Sulphen, both former representatives of the commonalty and lieutenants of the burgher guard
Pieter Woltersen van Couwenhoven, one of our inhabitants of this province and a former deacon
Maximilian van Gheel
Allardt Antony, both from Amsterdam, sworn burghers and merchants here

Instructions for the secretary or clerk of the Inferior Court of Justice
In the first place, he shall be bound to attend the ordinary as well as the extraordinary sessions and court days of the burgomasters and schepens, in order to serve the court with his pen and make a perfect record according to the true intent and meaning of all that the presiding officer shall order him to write.

He shall take care to enter in the minutes the complaint of the plaintiff as well as the answer of the defendant, according to their true intent and meaning, without any favor or ill will, or regard of persons, and, after the members have expressed their opinions, on the order of the presiding officer note the final conclusion underneath.

3
In case there should on any point be any difference of opinion among the burgomasters and schepens, the vote of the majority shall be followed according to the rules of procedure, but he shall not be at liberty to divulge outside the court the opinion of the minority, but if requested to do so by the minority he may enter their opinion underneath the order or decision of the majority.

4
After the adjournment of the court he shall carefully copy into a register the complaint and the answer of the parties and all the orders of the burgomasters and schepens, and once or twice a year deliver an authentic copy thereof to the secretary's office of the Director General and Council.

5
For each order issued by the burgomasters and schepens, or entered on the margin of a petition, he shall be entitled to receive a fee of twelve stuivers for writing, and for entering the same in the minutes six stuivers.

6
In order to accommodate residents as well as strangers, he shall be at liberty to draw up petitions for whoever asks for it, provided that he causes the same to be signed by the petitioner, for which he shall receive a fee of sixteen stuivers if the petition has to do with civil matters, and otherwise twenty stuivers if the petition relates to questions of slander of minor offenses, and for drawing up an affidavit he shall receive twenty-four stuivers.

7
But petitions and remonstrances which by order of the burgomasters and schepens are to be presented or exhibited in their official capacity to the Director General and Council, together with all other writings and instruments drawn up by order of the aforesaid burgomasters and schepens, he shall write gratis on the yearly salary promised him by the Director General and Council.

Finally, he shall promise and swear to practice and perform all that is hereinbefore mentioned to the best of his ability and knowledge and furthermore, for so far as his capacity is concerned, to promote and help promote the honor of God and his pure religion, the sovereignty of the High and Mighty Lords the States General, together with the high jurisdiction and authority of the Hon. Directors and their supreme government, already established, or hereafter to be established, without planning, much less practising, anything contrary thereto. So truly may God Almighty help me.

And to the aforesaid office was chosen and appointed Jacob Hendrickson Kip, formerly chief clerk in the secretary's office of the Director General and Council of New Netherland.

The first bench of burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam comprised: Burgomasters, Arrent van Hattem and Martin Cregers Schone, Paulus Loep, Abraham der Grift, Martin van Ghez, Allard Amundus, Willebe Beckmanc and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven.—Rec. N. Am., I: 49. Cornelis van Tienhoven, the provincial fiscal, served this court as schout or prosecutor. The separation of this function did not occur in the city before 1660 (q.e.). Jacob Kip was appointed secretary to the municipal government.—Rec. N. Am., I: 546.

The first court session of the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam is opened with prayer, the text of which (imperfect at the beginning) is preserved in Rec. N. Am., I: 48-49: "...In addition it has pleased Thee to make us the rulers of the people in this place. Oh, Lord, our God, we mortally men acknowledge, that we are not worthy of this honor, we are also too weak and unfit to discharge this trust, unless Thou, oh God, gives[tt] us assistance. We pray Thee, the Fountain of all good Gifts, make us fit through Thy grace, that we may do the duties, imposed upon us, faithfully and honestly. Enlighten for this purpose the darkness of our minds, that we may distinguish right from wrong, truth from lies and give and clean just decision as judges, having our eyes on Thy Word, which is a sure guide to simple wisdom. Let Thy law be the light upon our paths and a lantern for our footsteps, that they may never leave the path of justice. Let us remember, oh Lord, not good and bad men, but the innocent and strangers, according to the same rules of truth and never deviate from them as a favor to anybody, and whereas gifts blind the eyes of the wise, keep our hearts from greed, grant also, that we condemn nobody lightly or unheard, but listen patiently to the litigants, give them time to defend themselves. Thy mouth and word be our counsel. Grant us also the grace, that we may use the power, which Thou has given us, for the general benefit of the authorities of the church, protection of the good and the punishment of the bad. Incline also the hearts of the subjects to truthful obedience, that by their love and prayers our burden may be lightened. Thou knowest also, oh Lord, that bad and ungodly men usually vilify and speak against Thy holy ordinances, therefore arm us with strength, courage, wisdom and confidence, that we may oppose all evil and bad things earnestly and zealously and fight for truth and justice, until we are dead. Please also, oh good Lord, to bless the resolutions, to be taken by us, that they may be carried out and have effect to the honor of Thy holy Name, for the best of this place, entrusted to us, and for our salvation. This prayer was followed by the Lord's prayer, no doubt said in unison. The Dutch original is reproduced on p. 10-a, IV.

The burgomasters and schepens of the city of New Amsterdam, at this their first court session, give notice that they will hold their regular meetings "in the house hitherto called the City tavern, hitherto the City Hall ['Stadt Huys'], on Monday mornings."—Rec. N. Am., I: 49. For reproduction of the page of the record book containing the entry of this transaction, see Pl. 10-b. They continued to meet, however, at Fort Amsterdam on the 10th and 17th, but began their proceedings at the city hall on the 24th of this month.—Ibid., I: 51, 52, 54. On Dec. 24 (q.e.), they asked the directors of the West India Co. for the ownership of the city hall, "either as a free gift" to the city, or "else on a reasonable valuation." The company, in May, 1654, granted the building to the city.—Ibid., I: 146, 219, 291. For the erection of the city tavern (modern Nos. 71-73 Pearl St.), see 1662. The building was sold to John Rodman in 1989 and later demolished.—See Aug. 17, 1649. With the establishment of municipal government, the settlement, "for the present extending to the Fresh Water" (see the "Form of Government"), formally becomes the city of New Amsterdam.

The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam resolve to propose to Stuyvesant and the council that "at the first opportunity, the weighhouse be opened for the convenience of everybody, to weigh all wares, none excepted," which are delivered in the city, "and to appoint somebody to weigh everything above 50 lbs.," for which he shall have "a fee of one penny per pound, payable by both purchaser and seller, each one half or as they agree;" also, that "all weights and measures, such as ell's, schepels, tuns, half barrels, quarters and cans" shall be stamped, "according to the custom of Old Amsterdam." The proposal "to put up public scales" was before the council on the 18th, but, as nothing was settled at this meeting, the burgomasters and schepens renewed their request on the 24th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 53; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196. Stuyvesant and the council replied, on the 26th, "that, when proper, a weighhouse and scales" should be built and made, and that an ordinance concerning the same should be passed as soon as the weigh-house was ready, and weights and measures which conformed to the Amsterdam standard were furnished.—Rec. N. Am., I: 76. Also, they granted a "special subsidy" to the weigh-house, which was to be regulated by the standards of Amsterdam. The burgomasters and schepens were, in the meantime, to direct the schout "to regulate, weigh or measure all weights, yard and other measures accordingly and stamp them with a mark," as they should devise.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196. The weigh-house and scales were established in the spring, before May 4, 1654 (q.e.),—Rec. N. Am., I: 195, 246.

Regulations are made by ordinance for the inspection of tobacco by the tobacco inspectors, Isaac de Forest and George Holmes, New Netherland tobacco is not to be inspected in the months of December, January, and February, and at other seasons only on certain days of the week. The tobacco, if unmerchantable, is to be burned by them at once. They are empowered "to unhook all the Tubs or Hogheads coming here [New Amsterdam] from Virginia and offered to them for inspection," so that they can "see into the middle of the Tobacco, where usually fraud occurs." Fixed inspection fees are to be paid, and the inhabitants of the city are warned not to hinder or molest the inspectors, "but if need be, to lend them all reasonable assistance."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 139-40. The two newly-created burgomasters of the city took part with Stuyvesant and the council in the enactment of this ordinance. It was renewed, on March 10, 1655.—Ibid., 191. The council resolves "that the ordinances concerning farmerservants and the brewing and malting of hard grain be published and posted."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 196; another translation in Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 140. The full texts are not among the records; the ordinances may have been simply renewals of former ones.

Governor Loockermans transports to Henry Breier a lot on the shore of the East River, south of Wolphert's Valley (part of lot in Liber GG: 47).—Liber III: 11. The grant in Liber GG bears date March 17, 1646. According to modern maps, this land was in the block bounded by Cherry, Roosevelt, and Oak Sts., and the Bowery.

The burgomasters and schepens begin to hold their proceedings at the Stadt Huys (city hall).—See Feb. 6.

Domine Samuel Driscius receives a ground-brief for a large tract of land, including what are now both the south corners of Broad and Wall Sts., down Wall St. as far as N. 45, and down Broad St. to within 75 feet of Exchange Pl. It included the sites of the building of J. P. Morgan & Co., the Wilkes building, the New York Stock Exchange (in part), and other structures in the financial district.—See Castillo Plan, C. Pls. 52, 92a, Vol. II, and II: 286; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, II: 391.

Stuyvesant and his council meet with the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam in general session. Letters from the directors at Amsterdam "and the last received current news from New England," concerning warlike preparations in the province were read, the joint meeting resolves to prepare for the defense of the city by establishing a burgger night watch to "stand guard in full squads over night" at designated places, but beginning at

1635 once "at the City Tavern, now the City Hall" (Pearl St. and Mar. Counties Alley); secondly, it was voted "that Fort New Amsterdam be repaired and strengthened," and, thirdly, as the fort can not contain all of the inhabitants in it, all the houses and dwellings in the City, it is considered desirable "to surround the greater part of the City with a high stockade and a small breast-work," behind which in time of peril the inhabitants can be sheltered from attack and defend themselves and their possessions. It being deemed impossible at this time to protect the outlying villages, with their scattered inhabitants, by stockades, or defend them by other means, a concentration at New Amsterdam is planned, "for the better protection of one place." The joint meeting considers ways and means for defense, and, among other things, provides that Skipper Jan Jansen Visscher be secretly instructed to "make ready with his ships, loaded with pieces of artillery, in case of emergency."—Rec. N. Am., I: 65-66. On the afternoon of the same day, a provisional list of contributions, amounting to over 5,000 florins, was fixed upon by the burgomasters and schepens for the expenses of defense.—Ibid., I: 66-67. This list of names is the earliest assessment list of the kind for the City. At the same time, the city authorities made record that the burghe guard was ready, but asked the provincial government to furnish them fuel and light. The city agreed that Manhattan should "be fortified with palisades and a breastwork;" that the fort should be "strengthened for defense," and that the city, transept, houses, in it from four to five thousand florins, with which "to carry out the needed works," the money to be refunded later "by all interested in New Netherland after taxation of their estates."—Ibid., I: 66-67. See March 15.

13 The burgomasters and schepens resolve to ask the provincial authorities if it is not wise to first set off the city of New Amsterdam "in the most convenient way with a stockade," and, when this has been done, to put the fort "in a proper condition of defense as a place of retreat." They offer to furnish from four to six thousand florins for this purpose on the credit of the "community interest." They inquire whether it is considered necessary that it be written and the letters that have already been sent, "some delegations" be despatched "to the respective Colonies of New England," so as to expedite the relations between New Netherland and New England and continue "former intercourse and commerce," besides learning how far the New Englanders are "affected by the differences and the war" between the mother countries in Europe.—Rec. N. Am., I: 67-68. Stuyvesant and the council answered at once that they were "pleased with these propositions," and agreed that the city's fortifications should be first made properly. Though delegates were to be sent to the different New England colonies with credentials and instructions from the provincial body, that body, on the 17th, voted to delay awhile the sending of agents "till time and circumstances should require" their immediate departure. —Ibid., I: 68; N. By a plurality vote, the burgomasters and schepens choose Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven and Willem Beeckman to represent the city on a joint committee to have charge of fortifying the city. On the previous day, the provincial council had chosen its first councillor, Johannes La Montagne, to act for them. This joint committee now advertises its readiness to "receive proposals for a certain piece of work to set off the City with palisades, 12 to 15 feet long, by the rod," and announces that prospective bidders can "hear the conditions and look over the work" on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 18th, at the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., I: 69. The specifications were recorded in the city court's minutes, as follows: "The palisades must be 12 feet long, 18 inches in circumference, sharpened at the upper end and be set in line. At each rod a post 21 inches in circumference is to be set, to which rails, split for this use shall be nailed one foot below the top. The height of the rails shall be 4 feet high, 4 feet at the bottom and 3 feet at top, covered with ends, with a ditch 3 feet wide and a 2 feet deep, 2 feet within the breastwork. The length of the ground to be lined with palisades is 180 rods, the end of the rods being the last of the money. Payments will be made weekly in good wampum."—Ibid., I: 79, where a sketch is shown of a detail of the proposed breach, 12 feet square, and it shall be covered by different palisades, at 50 florins per rod, and 40 florins per rod. The committee in charge, however, offered to let the work only at 25 florins per rod. No bidders were found at so low a figure, hence the committee suspended the bidding Mar. provisionally and declared the higher bids to be prohibitive. After confering on the matter, the committee agreed to an alteration of plans, all the houses and dwellings in the City, it is considered desirable "to surround the greater part of the City with a high stockade and a small breast-work," behind which in time of peril the inhabitants can be sheltered from attack and defend themselves and their possessions. It being deemed impossible at this time to protect the outlying villages, with their scattered inhabitants, by stockades, or defend them by other means, a concentration at New Amsterdam is planned, "for the better protection of one place." The joint meeting considers ways and means for defense, and, among other things, provides that Skipper Jan Jansen Visscher be secretly instructed to "make ready with his ships, loaded with pieces of artillery, in case of emergency."—Rec. N. Am., I: 65-66. On the afternoon of the same day, a provisional list of contributions, amounting to over 5,000 florins, was fixed upon by the burgomasters and schepens for the expenses of defense.—Ibid., I: 66-67. This list of names is the earliest assessment list of the kind for the City. At the same time, the city authorities made record that the burghe guard was ready, but asked the provincial government to furnish them fuel and light. The city agreed that Manhattan should "be fortified with palisades and a breastwork;" that the fort should be "strengthened for defense," and that the city, transept, houses, in it from four to five thousand florins, with which "to carry out the needed works," the money to be refunded later "by all interested in New Netherland after taxation of their estates."—Ibid., I: 66-67. See March 15.

14 The burgomasters and schepens resolve to ask the provincial authorities if it is not wise to first set off the city of New Amsterdam "in the most convenient way with a stockade," and, when this has been done, to put the fort "in a proper condition of defense as a place of retreat." They offer to furnish from four to six thousand florins for this purpose on the credit of the "community interest." They inquire whether it is considered necessary that it be written and the letters that have already been sent, "some delegations" be despatched "to the respective Colonies of New England," so as to expedite the relations between New Netherland and New England and continue "former intercourse and commerce," besides learning how far the New Englanders are "affected by the differences and the war" between the mother countries in Europe.—Rec. This added another modifying idea to those of March 15-19 (p. 94), which had been preserved in the Council's minutes. The very sawyers who were to cut the lumber on May 12, when Stuyvesant and the council met with the burgomasters and schepens and conjointly enacted an ordinance for carrying out the scheme of fortifying the city of New Amsterdam with palisades. The edict provided for appointing the physical labour on the works among the inhabitants by rotation in four divisions of three-day shifts, until completed, which it was believed would take two or three weeks. Persons in opposition or in default were to be fined for their first offense, to forfeit their burgher-right for the second, and to be subjected to arbitrary punishment and banishment for the third offense. By inhabitants was meant "Burghers, Merchants, Mechanics or the crews of ships, sloops in harbor or to come there." Those who could not work themselves might provide a fit substitute.—Laws Of Or. N. Neh., 143-55 another translation, with additional preface, is in N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 202-3. Stuyvesant and the council resolve that commissioners be sent on an embassy to Virginia; they appoint Fiscal Van Tienhoven on behalf of the company, and ask the burgomasters and schepens to nominate another from their board to accompany him. On account of the war between the mother countries in Europe, this embassy was designed to promote a continuation of correspondence, peace, and commerce with the Virginians. Aerant van Hattum, president of the board, was commissioned with Van Tienhoven by Stuyvesant. Their mission to Virginia had no evident results, because Gov. Richard Bennett and his council felt themselves unauthorised to enter into negotiations without advice from their home government, but promised to submit the proposals of the New Netherlanders to their superiors in England. On Dec. 16, Stuyvesant, judging that an answer had now been received by the Virginia government from England, commissioned Rev. Samuel Drisius as diplomatic agent "to remind the said Honorable Governor and Council of Virginia of our former good intentions, which we still have and our propositions and to learn their reply." Stuyvesant's acts in this matter were highly approved by the directors in Amsterdam and the results were beneficial to New Netherland.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 202, 217, 241-2, 250, 260; Rec. N. Am., II: 85-86.

8 "Mr. Allert Anthony and Mr. Augustyno Hermans, assisted by Mr. Cornelis de Potter, in quality as attorney of the creditors who have claims against the estate or person of Mr. Augustyn, have jointly agreed and covenanted that Schepen Pieter Wolphersen [van Couwenhoven] and Frederick Flipesa shall estimate the value and worth of the lot, house and outbuildings standing and situate [partly on the present Nos. 33 and 35 Pearl St.] next the Company's Warehouse" [the Pack House]; and satisfy themselves with the appraisal on both sides.—Records N. Neh. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 110 (N. Y. State Library). The petitioners, on May 12, appraised "the stoe house and lot with the outbuildings thereof" at $8,000 gilders.—Ibid., III: 111.

24-25 Two New England agents negotiate with Stuyvesant concerning their differences; they left abruptly the next day, warning the Dutch and the Indians of New Netherland not to offer offence to the English of the United Colonies.—Brothod, ep. cit., I: 552, and authorities there cited.

6 Notice is sent to Stuyvesant and the council by the directors at Amsterdam that their body has been increased by the appointment of Nicolas de Sille as first counsellor.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 269.

6 The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant that Adriaen vander Dock, upon his petition, has been granted the right to practice as an advocate in New Netherland, he "having received his degree at law from the University of Leyden and been admitted to the bar by the Court of Holland." Stuyvesant is directed to have the petition forwarded, and to examine the documents and papers in the secretary's office there. Stuyvesant is to complete his already begun Description of New Netherland, the directors advise Stuyvesant that he may "let him have such documents and papers, as may be thought of service to him in completing his history," but warn Stuyvesant "to be herein cautious that the Company's own weapons may not be used against us and we be drawn into new troubles and quarrels."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 211-12. This documentary investigation, apparently, was never made by Vander Dock, and certainly was not employed in his little booklet first published in 1655, entitled Beschrijving van Nieuw-Nederland.

6 The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they have appointed Cornelis van Ruyven, "coming over with this ship" (Koninck Salomen), as secretary to the council of New Netherland.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 211.

6 The directors at Amsterdam give a formal letter to Nicolas de Sille, about to go to New Netherland as a member of the provincial council there.—Col. Hist. Miss., Dutch, 278. Sometime after his arrival at New Amsterdam (the document is undated), he addressed the following petition to the directors at Amsterdam: "Nicolas de Sille humbly makes known, that to him, on July 24, 1653, an open letter had been given to take along addressed to Director Fr. Stuyvesant and the council, to acknowledge the petition as first political and military councillor of the Director there [New Netherland], to reside in said capacity in the fort, to deliberate with and in conjunction with his Honor concerning all matters that by the nature of his office transpire, etc., further in respect of the "Long, or Rump, Parliament," and the council of state.

10 May 8-9 During the war between the English & Dutch in 1653, Capt. Underhill received a Commission to seize [sic] the lands on the Connecticut belonging to the Dutch. The Commission bears date May 24, 1653. The lands were seized & confiscated. They consisted of a few acres only near the conflouence of Mill River & the Connecticut. The fort or blockhouse of the Dutch [Fort Good Hope] stood near the bank of the Connecticut, on the South side of the stream called Mill River. I have seen some of the pieces of bricks belonging to that house, lying on the banks of the connecticut. They were of a light color, like the bricks of some old houses which I have seen in New York or Albany."—Miller Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Society.

3 June 18, 1790, Noah Webster, writing to Rev. Dr. Samuel Miller from New Haven, April 9, 1810, said: "The following facts are stated from the records of the Town of Hartford, & from personal view.
The mishap

For three weeks the city has now been strengthened and secured by palisades. Stuyvesant now calls upon the burgomasters and schepens to fulfil the rest of their agreement of March 15 (p. 17), i.e., "to put the fort into a proper state of defense as a safe place of retreat." He tells them that, relying upon their previous representations, he had been led to believe that "all mercantile business and trades" were "at a standstill," and that the "promised monies" for public works had been "already used up." They asked to be relieved "from further taxing the citizens" yet they requested authority to raise, as occasion offered itself, "money amongst the citizens" in the most civil manner."—Ibid., I: 91. Their idea soon revealed itself in a demand for the revenues on wines and beer (see Aug. 2). But Stuyvesant came back at them, on Aug. 12. He said that, "in violation of their solemn promises made both in writing and orally," they had failed to "lend a hand to repairing and strengthening" the fort, and he protested against the running at large of hogs in the city, to the damage of the "newly finished works of the fort." Two days later, therefore, the burgomasters and schepens sent their messenger "to notify the Burgheers that every one of them" should "take care of his logs or keep them in the city until the fort and recently constructed works" were "finished with palisades."—Ibid., I: 97-98.

Because "some however uncertain rumors" have come to hand concerning the "gathering of the English in the North, especially in Rhode Island," Stuyvesant warns the burgomasters and schepens "not to allow any citizen or inhabitant" of the city "to remove," and the fiscal is charged "not to grant passes to yachts, until the crews and the yachts" have, "as previously ordered, come down or until further orders according to the course of events and new reports."—Rec. N. Am., I: 91.

The burgomasters and schepens call together an assembly "of the proprieaters and inhabitants" of the city hall, and cause to be read to the meeting "a specified account of the expenditures made so far for the entrenchments of the City and similar works," which amount to 7,500 florins. The assembly is asked "what measures should be taken, to pay for the expenditures already made and yet to come," and votes unanimously "that nothing more" shall be contributed unless Stuyvesant and the council surrender "the whole excise on wines and beer" to the city treasury. Moreover, the assembly votes that the board shall inform Stuyvesant of its determination, and agrees to meet again in case the proposal is rejected. On the same day, Stuyvesant gives his oral answer that he can not "think of surrendering the excise on wines and beer, now payable at the Company's office," for else he would "be obliged to discharge immediately all the soldiers, now expected from the Fatherland; also that the citizens only paid the tapsters' excite." Therefore, the assembly resolves to "make the contributions to the government, and the entire revenues from the excise are granted to the city. With this failure of further contributions, it was adjudged "impossible to keep the work, already begun, going without paying for it." The burgomasters and schepens said they lacked the power to provide the means, and protested that, "if later some unexpected measures are taken by them" that they "should not be blamed for not having done their duty."—Rec. N. Am., I: 93-95.

On Nov. 11, another assembly of the commonalty met with the board at the city hall, and was notified of Stuyvesant's consent "that from this time forth all the excise of beer and wines" should be paid into the treasury of the city and be "employed for the public good." But, as there were no funds then available from this source, "though very much needed at this perilous time," it was urged that "some general taxes and means must be provided." The board asked the commonalty if they would submit "to such ordinances and measures" as the board would enact and adopt for the support of the city. An affirmative answer was given unanimously and the commonalty obeyed the burgomasters and Schepens in all things as good subjects are bound to do," attesting their resolution with their signatures.—Ibid., I: 126-27.

On Nov. 19, the burgomasters and schepens resolved, because of Stuyvesant's consent that the city be granted the excise "from the first of November," to "apply verbally to the Director General for a resolution, he and they forward not only the Company's, but also our own necessary work and have assisted with our own as well as the Company's negroes, trainpersonal [trained person] and property." He wants them to aid "both in furnishing money and in completing the newly ready fort," and particularly to see that measures are adopted to keep the hogs "from the newly made walls and works of the fort."

The Iconography of Manhattan Island

In the fall of 1653, a number of petitions were submitted to the Directors of the Dutch West India Company, requesting permission to construct a fort on Manhattan Island. The petitioners, including the city fathers of New Amsterdam, feared an English invasion and sought protection for their city. The Directors, however, were hesitant to grant the request due to the company's financial difficulties and the potential for conflict with the English. The matter was ultimately resolved through a compromise, and the fort was constructed a year later. The fort, known as Fort Amsterdam, served as a symbol of the city's growing importance and its desire for self-sufficiency. It also reflected the ongoing tensions between the Dutch and the English in the region. The fort's construction was a significant event in the history of New Amsterdam, marking the city's transition from a small settlement to a more robust and fortified community. The Iconography of Manhattan Island provides a detailed account of this event, highlighting the city's resilience and its role in shaping the early history of the United States.

Notice is given that two sloops will leave New Amsterdam for Fort Nassau (Albany) every Monday, and that passes are to be obtained from Arent van Hattem, presiding burgomaster, and Willem Beeckman, one of the scheeps, every Saturday morning at eight o'clock.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 294.

11
In a naval battle off the Texel, Admiral Tromp is killed and the Dutch fleet yields to the English, making the latter masters of the channel.

Daniel Litschoe, in a suit against Gillis Pietersen vander Gouw, in the court of burgomasters and scheeps, demands payment of the second of the three instalments for a house and lot he had sold to the defendant's deceased mother-in-law, Trintje Scheerenborg (or Scherenburgh), by deed of Jan. 22 of this year. This property lay between the houses of Litschoe and the outside of the palisade of the city (now Wall St.), on the shore road of the East River (now Pearl St.), next to the ditch and adjoining the water gate. The lot had been diminished by a guard-house erected on a part of it by the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 351. On Sept. 1, the court decreed that the guard-house should be removed, so that it might be determined if the lot had been curtailed beyond the original survey and bill of sale.—Ibid., I: 113.

On Dec. 8, Litschoe petitioned the court for the removal of this guard-house, in order that he might be enabled to collect his pay. The court replied that the removal had been contracted for and would be executed "as soon as possible."—Ibid., I: 139.

On March 2, 1654, Litschoe again demanded in court the second payment (216 florins). The defendant renewed his request for delivery of ground according to the bill of sale, and also asked delay of payment until May 1, to afford him opportunity to sell the house and lot, "being now a vacant estate," and promised then to pay the second and last payments together. The city court acquiesced in this request.—Ibid., 170. Apparently this transaction went off on Aug. 29, 1654.—Ibid., I: 179, note. Gillis Pietersen vander Gouw was co-heir to the property with his brother-in-law, Isaac Kip. Another guard-house had been erected near the same site before 1660.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 8a. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

On Oct. 7, 1656, the owners were ordered by the burgomasters and scheeps to set back the fence of their "garden near the City gate, by the East river," because it was "standing too near the City wall, to the obstruction of the public and was formerly cut off by the general survey of the City," made in 1656. This was deemed necessary "so that wagons and horses" might "conveniently and easily carry on" as was usual on this part of the city, they were promised "satisfaction on the valuation of arbitrators."—Ibid., I: 179. The city's arbitrators, on June 30, 1657, reported an agreement that the city pay to the owners 550 guilders in merchantable wampum, within a month. The city court, therefore, ordered them to "pay the obligation to Gillis Pietersen and Isaac Kip for this sum, and then "mortgaged the said house and lot," whereupon the owners "delivered up the deed and conveyance to the city."—Ibid., VII: 162, 163. See also Innes, New Am. and Its People, 277-78, for disagreements.

The burgomasters and scheeps resolve unanimously "to propose orally" to Stuyvesant that he agree with them as to the necessity of sending "a personal embassy to those of New England, where the General Assembly will be convened, according to report, on the 25th of August, in order to see how much can be effected with them respecting the state, on which point they would consider it necessary first at all previously to send a messenger, etc."—Rec. N. Am., I: 102.

Niclaus de Sille sails from Holland with his five motherless children and a maid. He arrived at New Amsterdam on Nov. 3 (q.v.). He describes his voyage and arrival in New Netherlands, where the weather was changeable and the wind was strong. It was three times ready to give battle, for we had a ship with seventeen passengers and had over eighty persons on board... The third of November, on Saturday afternoon, we anchored before Fort New Amsterdam, adjacent to which lies the city of New Amsterdam, on the island of Manhattan, in New Netherland. We fired five shots with a cannon, and those of the fort reported us. The citizens were gathered in the streets and the soldiers were under arms, for they knew of my coming, as the ship De Geldersche Bloom, which ran out of the Vly [the channel between the islands of Vlieland and Terschelling, on the north coast of Holland] with us on the 25th of August and lost us near Hitlandt [Shetland Islands] in a storm, had arrived twenty-four hours ahead of us. The fiscal, Timhoven, therewith proposed on board of me to go on shore, where I and my son [his eldest son, Laurens] were very cordially welcomed by the council, the burgomasters and the scheeps (for General Stuyvesant had gone to Fort Orange) and the entire commonalty, and were conducted to the fort, to the house of the general. When we came to the bridge all the canons were discharged and the soldiers charged in proper form. In the house we were well entertained by the council and the magistrates, and the next day all my children were likewise welcomed and entertained until my lodgings were ready. The eleven the Honorable General [Stuyvesant] and his wife came home, who entertained me also. In the afternoon he convened the council, wherein I was made to occupy the first seat, next to his honor. This, in brief, is the account of my arrival here.—Quarterly Journal of N. Y. State Hist. Assn., I: 100, ff., where De Sille's letter is prefixed for the first time, by A. J. E. van Lozer. In 1656, De Sille succeeded Cornelis H. Van Hattem as provincial factor, and was also appointed schout of New Amsterdam. See also May 23 and Sept. 23, 1654, for his account of the country.

Michiel Paulusen's wife requests of the burgomasters and scheeps "payment of what her husband earned with his sloop in fetching palisades for the City works:" a few months since. They allow Paulusen ten florins "for each load of palisades," or a total of 140 florins for fourteen loads.—Rec. N. Am., I: 112.

As "some friends" have "applied to the Director General and Council for a commission of marque and reprisal against the English," Stuyvesant requests that the burgomasters and scheeps will "please jointly to repair at once to the Hon. Director General." This they do, and he reports that, "pursuant to the resolution," he "issued the order to Skipper Willem Temeseman."—Rec. N. Am., I: 117.

A great assembly of the country was called by Stuyvesant and the council, "with the knowledge of the Burgomasters and Scheeps," to be held on this day, being Thursday, in Fort Amsterdam. The city is represented by Burgomaster Marten Cregier or Krieger and Scheep Paulus Leendertsen vander Gritt, who had been chosen, on Sept. 9, by majority vote of the board, and "commissioned and authorized to assist in deciding all occurring subjects relating to publicgood," and to report back to the board "after the conclusion of the Assembly."—Rec. N. Am., I: 117.

At an assembly of deputies and delegates "of the respective Colonies and Courts of New Netherland," there are "counsel, published and posted ordinances and resolutions touching the great and excessive dearness of all sorts of Merchandizes, Provisions, Grain and Laborers' wages." The minutes of the assembly and the texts of the ordinances promulgated are not among the records, but their purport can be divined from a letter of the directors at Amsterdam to Stuyvesant and the council, of March 12, 1654, in which the directors expressed surprise that these resolutions had been published without their knowledge or consent, and in which they ordered alterations or abrogations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 251-52; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 149-50.

Aukca Jansen sues Augustyn Heermans on a contract for building the latter's house. This, the "great house" of Heermans, was at what is now the north-west corner of Pearl and Pine Sts. The house was built in 1653, although the deed for the property was not recorded until 1656.—Liber Patentis, III: 84 (Albany). By order of Gov. Colvle, the house was demolished in 1675.—N. Y. Col. Docs., I: 626-27.

The brewery of Govert Loockermans is mentioned in a suit against Claes Pietersen Kos, in which he seeks to compel Kos "to make the roof of the brewhouse" as contracted for by him.—Rec. N. Am., I: 121. It stood on his granted lot at the corner of the Craef (now Broad Street) and Hoogh Street (now Stone St.). This lot, originally granted to Anthony Jansen, but neglected by him "as an offensive pool," was given to Loockermans by a ground-brief of Sept. 15, 1664, "to build upon."—Book GC, 158, in office of sec. of state, Albany. The brewery and land, a little later, came into the possession of Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, his brother-in-law.

The Lutherans of New Amsterdam petition Stuyvesant for Or.4
the privilege of sending to Holland for a minister, "and also to organize separately and publicly a congregation and worship, and to have on Oct. 6 by the Dutch clergy, Megapolensis and Drius, in a letter to the classis of Amsterdam, on the ground that it "would tend to the injury" of their church, "the diminution of hearers of the Word of God, and the increase of dissensions," of which they said there had been a sufficiency for years. They feared that such a conclusion "would pave the way for other" and so that in time" the province "would become a receptacle for all sorts of heretics and fanatics." The Lutherans, they said, had made similar requests twice before to Stuyvesant, besides writing to the states-general and the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam. The Dutch clergy requested the Amsterdam directors to use its "influence" with the directors to have "the project of our Lutheran friends" rejected. Stuyvesant trusted them as one "zealous for the Reformed Religion," who "would rather relinquish his office than grant permission in this matter," since he considered it "contrary to the first article of his commission," by which he had promised, "with an oath, not to permit any other than the Reformed doctrine."—Rec. N. Am., I: 317. See Addenda.

The classis considered a complaint against the Lutherans of New Netherland, on Jan. 1, 1654, which had been presented by the "Deputati ad rei Indicia, in Curso," of New Amsterdam, and thenceforward inclined to oppose the plan of the Lutherans because "the Mennonites, as well as the other English Independents, who are numerous there, might seek to introduce like public assemblies."—Eccles. Rec., I: 520-21. On Feb. 25, 1654 (g. v.), a formal resolution was passed by the directors at Amsterdam prohibiting the Lutherans of New Netherland or any other than that of the Reformed Church.

—Ibid., I: 322. This action the directors communicated to Stuyvesant and his council in a letter of March 12, advising that no similar petitions ought to be received, but "rather to turn them off in the most civil and least offensive means in order to induce them to listen and finally join the Reformed church and thus live in greater love and harmony among themselves."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 525. As soon as the formal resolution had been passed, the classis of Amsterdam wrote to tell Megapolensis and Drius of its success in securing a refusal of "the Lutherans in every particular," and rejoiced that now the established church would "be maintained without being hindered" by either Lutherans or "other erring spirits."—Eccles. Rec., I: 322-23; cf. I: 348-49. This letter Megapolensis and Drius acknowledged with thanks on July 15.—Ibid., I: 346.

That settled the matter during the Dutch régime in New Netherland, so far as granting any right of ministry or public worship to the Lutherans was concerned. However, it did not deter the Lutherans from holding meetings surreptitiously in private houses. These and other "convocations and gatherings" came to the notice of the classis of Megapolensis and Drius, who on July 15, 1656 (g. v.), appealed to the provincial authorities for suppression of them, and, on Feb. 1 (g. v.), an ordinance was issued against all assembly, "whether public or private," differing from the Dutch Reformed Church, under penalty of a fine of 100 pounds Flemish to be paid by unqualified preachers. This law was aimed against the Independents at Middelburg (Newtown), L. L. and the Lutherans of New Amsterdam.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 536; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 211-12; Rec. N. Am., I: 20-21. When the Directors at Amsterdam received a copy of this "placat against the Lutherans," as well as information from Stuyvesant that recalcitrants had been committed to prison, they ordered him not to "publish such or similar placats" without their authority, but to pass over such matters "and let them have free religious exercises in their houses." "For it has always been our intention," said the directors, "to treat them quietly and leniently."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 534. See June 14, 1656.

This was a concession to the Lutherans, who had again appealed to the directors at Amsterdam for the privilege of public worship, in like manner as was allowed their sect in Holland. But it "grieved" the members of the classis, who met in the succeeding summer of 1655, and, finally, on Oct. 5, 1656, to determine the deputies to protest against "this general permission of all sorts of persuasions."—Eccles. Rec., I: 354-55, 357. The deputies reported on Nov. 7 concerning their conference with the directors of the company, as well as with a committee appointed on behalf of the city of Amsterdam; but all they could learn was that the affair was "still unsettled, and the settlement a good way off." Oct. 7.

Meanwhile, in New Amsterdam, the Lutherans had petitioned Stuyvesant and the council (Oct. 24, 1656, g. v.) for permission to enjoy the privileges granted to them, so that they might "not be hindered" in their services. The council, the said, would "list of prayer, reading and singing, until...a qualified person" should "come next spring [1657] from the Fatherland" to be their "minister and teacher." On the same day, Stuyvesant and the council directed that the ordinance prohibiting conventicles should remain in effect, but should not prevent "each in his family, from holding such religious services, as was proper, and according to their faith," in the meantime further orders from Amsterdam were to be sought.—Ibid., I: 358-60.

When the Lutherans were endeavoring to secure a preacher in 1657, the opposition in the classis and in New Netherland became very active. The directors, on April 7, 1657 (g. v.), reassured Stuyvesant and the council that they would stand by their letter of the preceding June 14, and would by no means "grant to the Lutherans or any more liberty regarding the exercise of their religion" than therein stated. The interpretation of this letter, understood by the Lutherans at Amsterdam, and the right to hold and sing according to their faith, in the meantime further orders from Amsterdam were to be sought.—Ibid., I: 358-60.

The Lutherans in old Amsterdam, in the meantime, had taken the bull by the horns and issued Johannes Ernestus Gutwasser (or Gutwasser) to a Lutheran meeting in Middelburg (see July 5, 1657). Knowledge of this in classis raised a storm of opposition. It also stirred Megapolensis and Drius, who petitioned the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, on July 6, against permitting the Lutherans to "obtain a foothold" and then "extend themselves" in other parts of the province, which would be injurious "to the policy of the government, as well as of the Reformed Religion," unless nipped in the bud. Herein, they thought, lay a source of great contention and discord, for already during the past year "some husbands" had "forced their wives to leave their own church, and attend their conventicles." Moreover, there were so "many" persons "of that persuasion," that the Dutch Church would be deplated, its deacons or general poor fund would be diminished, and the poor orphans, widows, and others of all persuasions, would suffer. So also, if Lutherans were permitted to have public worship, "the Papists, Mennonites and others would soon make similar claims," resulting in a "Babel of confusion," and would "prove a plan of Satan to smother this infant, rising congregation, almost in its birth, or at least to obstruct the march of truth in its progress."—Eccles. Rec., III: 377, 380-81, 386-88.

The burgomasters and schepens, for whose consideration these woful forebodings had been drawn up and presented by the Dutch clergy in person on July 13, informed Stuyvesant and the council a day later that Gutwasser had just arrived in the ship "Goude Meulen" (see July 1657), had been summoned before them and, when interrogated as to his purposes, had "frankly answered," that he came on behalf of the Lutheran consistory, "to occupy the position of a preacher here, as far as it would be allowed." The city fathers considered this an invasion of their oaths, so they ordered Gutwasser not to officiate in public or private, nor to present his credentials to the Lutheran "congregation, as he called it." Stuyvesant and the council answered that they were "pleased with the zeal and desire" of the city court "for supporting the Reformed doctrine and excluding schismatics," and ordered the strict enforcement of the edicts already several times promulgated. On August 13, the city court thanked the two Dutch ministers "for their care in this matter," and "appreciated" the same time informed the classis at Amsterdam (cf. Aug. 14, and Sept. 8, 1657) that the "worst" had "come to pass;" that Gutwasser had arrived in July, "to the great joy of the Lutherans, but to the special displeasure and uneasiness" of the Dutch congregation; yes, even the whole country including the English were displeased, and it was ordered that Gutwasser be sent out of the country.—Ibid., I: 393-94.

Stuyvesant and his council ordered his deportation by resolution on Sept. 4 (see Sept. 8, 1657). On Oct. 10 (g. v.), the Lutherans of New Amsterdam petitioned to have the order set aside which required Gutwasser to "depart in the ship, the Waag," now ready.
in New Amsterdam. For particulars of his reception, see Aug. 25, 1653; and, for his estimate of the country, see May 23 and Sept. 23, 1654.

4. The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council that they are sorry to learn of the "irrational and false charges that the people of New England" have brought against them. They write: "Upon hearing the rumors from New England they [the English] have magnified these false reports, apparently started at their own instigation and have forged and published in London the most shameless and lying libel, which the devil in hell could not have produced, under the title 'The Second Ambonya Tragedy or truthful Account, etc.' [See Bibliography]. We have caused a translation to be made of it and send you a copy of it hereafter. We regard the strategic measures employed by that nation in order not only to irritate against us their own people, but also to bring down upon us the whole world. You must therefore proceed with great caution, for we cannot expect the least good from that nation at present."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 216.

5. A petition is presented to the burgomasters and schepenen "signed by certain Burghers and Inhabitants praying that a Burgher Schout may be chosen and qualified and that the Company's Fiscal may no longer trouble himself as Schout about Citizens' cases."—Rec. N. Am., I: 127. See April 9, 1666, regarding the separation of the office of schout of New Amsterdam from that of the company's fiscal.

At a provincial assembly in September, various edicts were promulgated in an endeavor to regulate prices by which merchants in New Netherland should be governed in disposing of their imported goods. A selling price at one hundred per cent above invoice was established. Now, however, on account of the new arrival of "Passengers, Merchants and Traders" who have not been "prejudiced in the matter of the entry of their Goods and Wares," a change is made by an ordinance in council, which fixes an appraisable price on certain enumerated items and directs that, in the case of all non-enumerated articles, the purchaser may demand to see "the true Invoice of the actual first cost," and the seller may receive from the buyer a fixed price of one hundred and twenty per cent. "over the first and actual cost, and no more."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 149-51.

This ordinance was published the next day (29th), when "some of the principal merchants and traders" of New Amsterdam had been called together by the council to have communication thereof made to them. These merchants "deemed it then advisable to deliberate with others and to submit their opinion on this matter in writing" to the council, which they did in a remonstrance on the 22d, in which they declared the ordinance to be virtually confiscatory of all their profits, since no allowance was made for "heavy export and import duties" paid, respectively, in Holland and New Netherland, for "charges for convoy and direction, the heavy freight bills and premiums for assurance, interest on capital invested," and "damages of leakage and decay"—all of which "made the first cost of goods . . . more than 70 or 80 p. c. higher than abroad." They declared they had no intention of exacting unfair prices from the people, but would treat them "like honest traders and good fellow-citizens" yet, they requested a suspension of the ordinance until they could no longer sell them without great loss to themselves or their principals, and asked to be allowed "to sell according to the usages of the Fatherland and other countries," where commerce had a free hand and prices were governed by circumstances and "the first cost and expenses."

They had resolved, in case of refusal, they would "keep their goods until the return of better terms," and not suffer loss or sell at a small profit.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 221-22.

On the 25th, Stuyvesant and the council replied, and demanded a bill of particulars, showing injury, losses, and leakages.—Ibid., XIV: 223. A committee of the merchants answered this demand, on the 30th, by another bill of counter-assertance, in which they were against fixed rates for losses, derived in a few specific cases, as

For nearly a month this remonstrance was unanswered, but on Nov. 19, 1654, the burgomasters and the council met at Amsterdam in and said the order for fixing prices was "impracticable," "highly injuries to the State," a sure means to banish all trade and at the same time deprive the Company of a large extent of their revenues" in Holland and New Netherland, and would prevent an increase of population and cultivation" in the province.---Ibid., XIV: 244. See Sept. 14, 1653.

Complaints having been made to Stuyvesant and the council concerning the incursions and robberies of a certain Thomas Baxter, a fugitive from this province, and his companions, they resolved: "to send letters to and summon from each of the nearest suburbs either burgomasters or deputies to meet at the City hall in this City and to whom we think advisable to join two respected members of our High Council, to wit... Johan la Montagne and... Cornelis van Werkhoven, authorized... to deliberate with the other delegates for... Security of the

On the following day, the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam chose by vote from their board Marten Cregier and Paulus Leendertsen van der Grift, to act with the other delegates.---Rec. N. Am., I: 111.
The delegates met in general assembly on the 26th. The English delegates, however, sent in a written protest against the provincial government, and asked the burgomasters and schepens "to enter into a firm alliance with them" but, on the 27th, the delegates of the city said they were willing to be at peace with their English neighbours on Long Island, yet could not enter into the proposed alliance without the general consent of the director-general, the council, and the adjacent districts and villages.
To this the English delegates replied that, if the city would not join them, "they would form a union on Long Island among each other." The city's delegates suggested that "it would be better to write about it" to the directors at Amsterdam, and, meanwhile,
"they would keep well-informed of and assist them against robbers and other disasters of that kind to the best of their abilities and live with them as their friends." After they had agreed "to come together again from the respective places..." to order the proposed alliance.---Ibid., XII: 232-235.

On Nov. 29, Cregier and Vander Grift reported verbally and in writing to the burgomasters and schepens what had been done in general assembly; whereupon, the city board by resolution petitioned Stuyvesant and the council that the assembly, proposed for Dec. 10, be granted as a necessity, and in order to "remonstrate" to the directors at Amsterdam in such manner as was pertinent "for the general peace and welfare of the Country."---Rec. N. Am., I: 111-112. The council replied, on Dec. 3, that the objections and conduct of the English delegates bordered on revolt against the government; vilified the supreme authority, and contained clamours. They disapproved the principle "that subjects, bound to the authority of the Government by their oath and duty to allegiance and obedience, cannot enter into a defensive and offensive alliance without the knowledge or order of their Government and their Council... and above all pass any resolutions without their knowledge," which, as was clearly evident, they had done.

This answer by the burgomasters and schepens, on Dec. 5, to vote unanimously to "go in a body" to Stuyvesant, "and with all respect" request him to allow the meeting of the proposed general assembly on Dec. 10.---N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 226-27. Stuyvesant and the council replied, on Dec. 3, that the objections and conduct of the English delegates bordered on revolt against the government;
"that the magistrates of New Amsterdam, who were not yet in office a full year, had for the present not the right of nomination, the same having been withheld by the Director-General and Council for good and sufficient reasons, until the Lords-Directors at Amsterdam on Nov. 10 had ordered the appointment of Commonalty."---Rec. N. Am., I: 131-132. On Dec. 16, the magistrates of New Amsterdam, before being installed and taking the oath in the presence of the Director-General, were each by name and surname and by his office proclaimed from the front of the Council Chamber and the community was called upon to express their objections; and that the same procedure was followed "at the installation of other military officers, if a Captain, Lieutenant or Ensign, before the whole Company, if a Sergeant or subordinate officer before the section."---Ibid., XIV: 235. See also Dec. 14.
Stuyvesant and the council appoint Johannes de la Montagne, one of their number, as head of an expedition "to pursue, attack and capture" certain English pirates, led by Thomas Baxter, who are said to have been hiding at Flushing, L. I., and its vicinity, and who have committed depredations in New Netherland.---N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIV: 237. This was to Baxter who, earlier in the year (March 20), had contracted to furnish the palisades for building the wall of New Amsterdam.---Rec. N. Am., I: 73-74. His capture and subsequent fate are recounted by Brodhead sp. cit., I: 565.
The burgomasters and schepens sign a note in court for 835 florins, in favour of Cornelis Steenwyck, payable a year from date, for materials delivered to the city.---Rec. N. Am., I: 143.
Stuyvesant, as a memorial to the directors and burgomasters, the schepens complain that their authority, derived from the original instructions of Stuyvesant, of Feb. 3, is too limited for the proper government of the burgheers. They ask that they may be permitted to adopt a form of city government, "as far as possible," similar to that of Amsterdam, and be empowered to fill the office

1654 of schout of the city, separating this office entirely from that of Dec. the company's fiscal, so as to make the office of schout an indepen- dent office, and the appointee a member of the city court. They apply also for a change in the excise revenues; for the right to levy some new imports, and to have the farming out of the ferry to Brooklyn for authority, "to verify the execution of deeds and conveyances of houses and lots within this City, the fee simple of which is sold, as well as of mortgages according to the custom of the City of Amsterdam," and that, for this purpose, they may be allowed "a City seal different from the seal of the province." On account of the constant dread of invasion "by the hostile English," they request a supply of firearms, and they petition for the house (Stadt Huys or city hall, formerly the city tavern) belonging to the West India Co., in which they hold their meetings.—Rec. N. Am., I: 144-46.

The directors at Amsterdam answered this memorial, on May 18, 1654 (p. v.), and reminded the burgomasters and schepens for having organized a popular assembly and for sending over remonstrances to Holland. They warned them "in no wise to hold private conventicles with the English or others," whether for "deliberation over matters of State," which they declared was none of their business, or, which they considered worse, "to attempt an alteration in the State and Government thereof." So far as the reply to the memorial was concerned, the directors granted the city the separation of the office of schout from that of the company's fiscal, but provided that the schout should be appointed by the director-general and council, instead of by the city court; they denied them exemption from payment of the salaries of civil and ecclesiastical servants, and suggested the levy of some "new small excise and impost," with the commonality's consent and confirmation by Stuyvesant; they conceded to them the execution of transports and deeds of conveyance of houses and lots, but only within the city itself, and without depriving the director-general and council "of the power hereof conferred on them to dispose of the lots already granted" and which remained vacant. By these concessions the board was required to furnish to Stuyves- ant, and the council when demanded, a "return of the transports, deeds and inchoinations executed theretofore." An order was given in Holland "for making a City Seal." The distribution of munitions of war was denied the board and reserved to the director-general and council; but the city tavern was granted to the city as a city hall, on condition that no one should claim "any right to it individually, or to alienate or mortgage it collectively."—Ibid., 217-19; also "Directors to Stuyvesant," in N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 260, ff.

These despatches from Holland were sent over by the ship "Goade Beer," and were communicated to the board at a special meeting, on July 21, 1654 (p. v.). At the same time, Stuy- vesant in the council, when asked if the latter had received the appointment of schout, but he, being "agrieved by the instructions given him," declined.—Rec. N. Am., I: 216-17; N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 280. This caused a delay in the filling of this post "until another experienced person" could be found; hence, on Aug. 31 of that year, the city court requested Stuyvesant and the council to appoint a schout "in conformity with the order of the Lords Patrons" in Holland.—Rec. N. Am., I: 233.

— Recognitions of six ships, sent over with goods to New Netherland in this year by the West India Co., Amsterdam chamber, netted fees of 32,603: 7 florins.—N. Y. Col. Papers, No. 1223 (a), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

— In this year, we are told by Valentine, the county seat of Jacobus Kip was built on his bouwery in the neighbourhood of Second Ave. and 55th St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 950). Stanford's Map Ref. Key, IV, Appendix VII, contains note: "St. Bishop Kip in which he states (p. 99) that it was built "in 1655, of bricks brought from Holland. ..." No definitive authority is quoted by either of these writers. The only positive information that we have is that the house was erected before 1668, as it is shown on the Nichols Map (Pl. 108). It was demolished in 1834.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, IV, Appendix VII, note 98; and Stanford's Map, note 89.

— Jacob Kip, secretary to the city, is confirmed as "Receiver and Bookkeeper of the Revenues" of the city by the burgomasters and schepens, his salary to commence on Nov. 25, 1653.—Rec. N. Am., I: 150. He was the first person to hold the new position.

— Tennis Kraay or Craaz, "an old burgher," requests of the burgom- masters and schepens a commission for the office of city crier, "as he has long filled the office."—Rec. N. Am., I: 151.

— Claes van Elsland, Jr., requests a salary as court messenger of the city, and a proper commission for the office, as well as "a liberal allowance for his services rendered for about a year."—Rec. N. Am., I: 152.

— Simon Joosten, having asked of the burgomasters and schepens permission "to keep a Tavern over at the [Brooklyn] Ferry" (in place of Cornelis Dircksen Hoochulant) for the convenience of Travelers," is granted his request for one year, upon conditions for payment of the excise as prescribed by the board.—Rec. N. Am., I: 152. See 1658, for earliest recorded mention of the ferry. See also June 2, 1654.

The first annual term of the first board of burgomasters and schepens being about to expire, the board resolves to call, in a body, on Stuyvesant, to make inquiry whether he desires them to nominate a double number of candidates for a new board; also how many of the old board should retire, and how many should remain in office. The following day they presented the matter by formal petition, to which Stuyvesant and the council replied, on the 28th, that no changes should be made, except the filling of two vacancies in the board, as now certified. The others were desired to continue in office "and the rule of peace and harmony." Salaries were also granted them—to burgomasters 350 florins, and to schepens 250 florins per annum, out of the city revenues.—Rec. N. Am., I: 156-57.

Specified duties are proclaimed on imported Indian goods, brandy, wines, beer, and salt, which are to be paid henceforth, "as the staple right," at New Amsterdam, in lieu of the standard one per cent, duty imposed, but "not hitherto collected," from merchants "from their cargoes and Merchandizes." The export duties are unchanged.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 153-55. As certain merchants of the city had petitioned for exemption from the payment of the new duties, a concession was made by way of a reduction of tariff on most of the articles enumerated, and salt, on account of its scarcity, was put upon the free list, on July 22.—Ibid., 171-73.

Stuyvesant and the council summon the burgomasters and schepens to a joint meeting at the fort, at which they debate "in what manner the piracy of certain English pirates should be stopped." The board recommended as the "best means" "to station a vessel with 20 to 30 men for a certain time at and about Minnewas [Manhasset] Island in order thus to be able to keep a watch on everything." The next day, Stuyvesant, at the city hall, signified the council's consent to the above plan. The latter also proposed the apportionment of a tax levy for the support of forty men, amounting to 1,600 florins per month, which was referred to the council for advice and approval. No action had been taken by the 19th, when the board urged a speedy decision. This brought a favourable response, on the 23d, from Stuyvesant and the council, who agreed to the levy among the towns.—Rec. N. Am., I: 158-59, 165-66, 168-69; N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 248-49.

At the instance of President Arent van Hattem, an order is passed that Jacob Steendam, the poet of New Netherland, deliver to the court messenger twelve cushions, made for the burgomasters and schepens, and the messenger brings them into court (at the city hall).—Rec. N. Am., I: 158.

In a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, the burgomasters and schepens ask for "a grant of authority provisionally to impose" certain duties on imported and exported goods, on ship tonnage, and on beer and wine, etc., and to be permitted "to appoint two sworn Beer Carriers." They plead that this grant is necessary to pay the debts incurred for the construction of public works. The council, on the 21d, consented to the burgher excise, but denied them the duty on imported goods or exported merchandise, etc., as being not applicable to any one particular city or place, but reserved for the province in general.—Rec. N. Am., I: 166, 169.

The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam resolve not to permit any Lutheran pastors in New Netherland, nor any other public worship except that of the Reformed Church.—Rec. N. Am., I: 822; N.Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 255. See full record under Oct. 4, 1653.
The two burgomasters and a majority of the schepens appear before Stuyvesant and lodge a grievance with him, because he and the council, without their knowledge, have "interdicted and forbidden certain farmers' servants to ride the goose on the feast of Bacchus at Shrove-tide." This interdict was served by the court messenger, Claes van Elandt, Sr., "on the farmers' servants the day before in the absence of the said council," though "in contempt of the supreme authority, violated the same." — Rec. N. Am., I: 171. The sport of plucking, pulling, or "riding" the goose consisted of smearing the neck and head of a goose with oil or soap and fastening it by a rope between two poles. The contestants would try to get the goose to stop and attend a man who would seize the price. He who bore off the goose was declared to be king of the festival. — Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 332.

On this day (Feb. 25) also, when the burgomasters and schepens protested against the decree, certain interrogatories were addressed to Harmen Smeeman by Stuyvesant and the council, during his examination by this supreme court on a charge of having, with others, violated the interdict. Several of these persons, including Smeeman, the ringleader of the party, were fined; two or three others, for behaving in an insolent manner, such as laughing at the court and threatening Stuyvesant, were committed to prison. The burgomasters and schepens afterward rode upon the decree and sentences as an invasion of their judicial authority; but Stuyvesant and the council declared that the board was only an inferior court of justice and could "in no wise infringe on or diminish the power and authority of the Director General and Council of New Netherland," in which matter the burgomasters and schepens felt themselves especially those who tend to the glory of God . . . prevent more sins, scandals, debaucheries and crimes, and properly correct, fine and punish obstinate transgressors." At the request of the city court, the imprisoned persons were released by an order in council, on the 25th — Rec. N. Am., I: 172—73; another translation in N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 249—50; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch 135.

A year later, on Feb. 8, 1655, Fiscal Van Tienhoven told the burgomasters and schepens that "he had been informed that the country people intended to ride the Goose on the 25th last year," and asked if the court intended to do anything to suppress it, as it was interdicted by the resolution of the council. Thereupon, the court decided that the fiscal, ex-officio, should "declare the same to be illegal." — Rec. N. Am., I: 286. Nothing is recorded again about this festivity until Feb. 26, 1658, when Stuyvesant and the council refused permission to the farmers and their men, in the vicinity of New Amsterdam, to indulge therein. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 191.

Cromwell, the "Protector," writes to the governors of the New England colonies: "We are assured you have been long since acquainted with my hostile attempt upon the filthy proceedings in reference to this Nation; whereby the long continued amity betwixt us and them hath not only been disturbed, but an open and fierce war raised and prosecuted, to the shedding of more blood. . . . It hath often been presented to the state here, that all (or at least some) of your colonies have met with unmercifully and unchristian dealing from that people; in which respect, as also in compliance to your native country (according to the declaration of the late council of state, dated the 19th of July, 1652, which we doubt not was sent you) it was expected you would have improved the present opportunity to ease yourselves of that burthen, and vindicate the English rights in those parts." He continues: "We have added to the number and strength of ships design'd for those parts upon another service, and in them sent such proportion of ammunition, powder &c. as may be helpful to your stores in that kind, for furnishing a competent number of land solders; as also given commission to [Maj., Robert Sedgwick and Capt., John Leverett], that if there be a concurrence in your colonies to the week . . . their utmost assistance may be given for gaining the Manhattes or other places under the power of the Dutch. We have refer'd to such, as are to be trusted by us to consider with you, that you shall commit the managing of that affair; and to determine what number of men may rationally be sufficient to carry on the design; that being fittest to be concluded upon the place, where the numbers and strength of the enemy, with his condition in other respects, may be best understood." — Docs., State Papers, I: 722. All these time instructions are given to the commanders of the expedition. —Ibid., I: 731. Among other things, the instructions say: "If the Lord give his blessing to your undertaking, that the forts and places be gained, you shall not use cruelty to the inhabitants, but encourage those that are willing to remain under the English government, and give liberty to others to transport themselves for Europe." Before the council saw this design against the Dutch, and the diversion of the expeditionary forces sent for the dislodgment of the French from the coast of Maine, see Brodhead's Hist. State of N. T., I: 582—86.

Nicholas Terhaer, by an order of Stuyvesant and the council, is forbidden to sell liquor any more. —Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch 156. On June 8, he was prosecuted by the schout in the court of burgomasters and schepens for taping to the Indians on Sundays during sermon, as well as at other times, for making a great uproar, striking a burguer, and threatening another with a knife. He denied the charges and said his wife had exchanged only a mug of beer with Indians for fish, together with half a gill of brandy, in which she had put water. The city court condemned him "from this time forth not to tap or to retail any wine or beer," and to be "absolutely excluded from said business," as well as fined. — Rec. N. Am., I: 207. On Aug. 17 and Aug. 18, chap. 5, he petitioned unsuccessfully for the revocation of his tavern license on the ground that he had "enjoyed his privilege," and that "he has been so successful in the same that he may make a profit by it." —Ibid., I: 228, 231, 240. He renewed his petition to the court on Oct. 5, which granted him, provisionally, on the 12th, permission to tap, "he meanwhile paying attention to his behavior, on condition that he, first and foremost, pay the proper excise on whatever he sells, and that he keep the . . .饮酒 societies in the business relations between the government of New Netherland and its superiors, the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Amsterdam, is brought out forcibly in a letter of the latter to Stuyvesant and the council, which states that they are "frequently embarrassed by not having the general and special account books," "no books of account" having been "sent over for several years," and they command that "the missing books and accounts be sent to Amsterdam "speedily by the first ship," and a regular "detailed statement of the expenses and revenues" every year thereafter. —Ibid., I: 253. Singularly enough, no treasurer's or receiver's account books of the Dutch period are now known to be extant, either in Holland or America.

The burgomasters and schepens declare that they witness "with sorrow the dilapidated state of the works erected last year [see March 15, 1654], consisting of walls of earth, and palisades along the river, which were commenced not only with great trouble, labor, loss of time and cost of the commonalty, but as far as exigency of the time and case required and demanded, were finished with the aid of the good Commonalty in the completest manner." They appeal, as Dutch, and that their expenses amounted to as much as three thousand dollars. —Ibid., I: 250, 252. "Laxness in the business relations between the government of New Netherland and its superiors, the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Amsterdam, is brought out forcibly in a letter of the latter to Stuyvesant and the council, which states that they are "frequently embarrassed by not having the general and special account books," "no books of account" having been "sent over for several years," and they command that "the missing books and accounts be sent to Amsterdam "speedily by the first ship," and a regular "detailed statement of the expenses and revenues" every year thereafter. —Ibid., I: 253. Stuyvesant visits Fort Orange (Albany) at the end of this month to examine into difficulties there over jurisdiction, boundaries, etc. In April, after he had returned to New Amsterdam, various decisions were made on these matters by him and the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 178; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 256-59.

On Aug. 10 (q.v.), Stuyvesant and the council passed an ordinance for regulating the business of the weigh-house, in which they referred to "the complaints of some evil-minded persons," who had charged "that certain rascals, called 'runaways,' and 'ports' or 'bills of lading,'" were guilty of "frequenting Long Island and the mainland between the Dutch and New England, spying out even the city of New Amsterdam, under the color and guise of Travelers. They have committed depredations 'at the Flatland,' and, it is alleged, have received in their nefarious acts protection and covert from some of the inhabitants in the English towns of the Dutch province. These practices induce Stuyvesant and the council to issue an ordinance, which enjoins everybody from communicating with, aiding, or abetting the freebooters in any manner. Prompt publication of the presence of pirates is to be made to the nearest magistrate, and whoever fails to do so is to suffer confiscation of property and banishment. The magistrates of the different villages are required to establish and maintain a watch for apprehending the outlaws. As an encouragement to the people to do their duty, they are promised 10 thalers "for every Pirate or Vagabond" who is "delivered into the hands of the Director General and Council or their Fiscal." Strangers in any place are to make their identity known by passes, or, if without a pass, to be examined by the local magistracy. Inhabitants are "not to lodge any unknown strangers without first making known their names to the proper officers of the place. Guns are not allowed to be discharged between sunset and sunrise, except when a raid is manifest, and then three discharges are to be made in quick succession, as a signal to the nearest watch, and so in succession by watches, to call together 'each under his competent Officer, at the appointed place of Rendezvous.' This ordinance was published and posted throughout the province of New Netherland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 155-58. For regulations regarding the defense of the Dutch towns on Long Island, see ibid., 159-60.

On Aug. 27, the burgomasters of New Amsterdam directed the council to notify all who were engaged in the "West India Company," or those in New England, that they must assemble at the weigh-house and give up their names to the proper officers of the place. This was done, and the names of 100 men were given over to the authorities on that day. The ordinance required that all goods be weighed and measured at the weigh-house, and that all complaints be referred to the weigher, and that no one should trade in, read, or sell goods that had been weighed and measured at the weigh-house, or that had not been so weighed and measured. The ordinance was published and posted throughout the province of New Netherland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 174-77.

The burgomasters and scheepen, on Sept. 22, appointed the directors at Amsterdam of their part in proposing the erection of a "Public Scale," and complained that whereas Stuyvesant "was pleased, last Spring, to order, himself, the erection of the Scales," he did not "grant the proceeds thereof" to the treasury of the city. They appealed to the directors for a grant of the revenue to the city, or to so dispose of the matter as was deemed proper.—Rec. N. Am., I: 194. On Oct. 27, the directors at Amsterdam had learned of the regulations for weights and measures, and said they were now "at ease" in the matter; that they had ordered and were sending over "whole and half schepel measures."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 350. The ordinance of Aug. 10 was renewed, with amplifications, on April 25, 1656 (q.v.). Office hours were now established at the weigh-house, during which alone the regular weighing should be done. Extra pay for extra weighing out of hours was prescribed. The farmer of the weigh-house was required to "take care that the Scales or Balances" were "kept clean and free from dirt," and that the scales were regulated before they were used; also "that such cleaning be frequently done to the Weighing-house," in times of bad weather.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 224-27. This weigh-house was probably on Pearl St., near the pier built on Schuylers Hook in 1638-9; but there is no documentary evidence to prove its exact location. See, however, Frisipece, Vol. I, and ibid., 347, 355. See also "Alderton's Building," or the "Duke's Plan" (Pl. 10, Vol. I).

A new burguer excise is enacted by the burgomasters and scheepen, in conformity with the authority granted to them, on Feb. 23, by the director-general and the council. Regulations for the administration and observance of this ordinance are prescribed in detail.—Rec. N. Am., I: 194-96. In a duplicate of this city ordinance, in ibid., 17-18, the date of publication is given as the roth.

Isaac Allerton's place (on the south side of Pearl St., between Fulton and Ferry Sts., then the shore of the East River), is referred to under this date.—Rec. N. Am., I: 194. Also "Mr. Allerton's place" is mentioned in court proceedings of Aug. 3, 1655, and "Allerton's Wharf" in a proceeding of Sept. 6, 1655.—ibid., 347, 355. See also "Alderton's Building," or the "Duke's Plan."
The first party of orphans arrived in the autumn, in charge of a matron (Coll. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147), and, on Nov. 9, Stuyvesant and the committee met with the Mayor, Mr. [Izaak] Allerdingh, and lodged there the children sent over by the Poormasters.—Ibid., XIV: 296. The "written conditions" or "rules" made for their care in New Netherland met with the approval of the directors, who, on May 26, 1653, wrote they were about to send another party of boys and girls in the ship "De Waagh," a man-of-war. This ship arrived at New Amsterdam on Aug. 15—Ibid., XIV: 322. Seventeen orphans, boys and girls, ranging in ages from 12 to 23 years, came in this ship. The burgomasters of old Amsterdam recommended them to Stuyvesant's care, and besought him "to receive these children and youth kindly."—Ibid., XIV: 325-26. Another party of "six children from the Almshouse" was sent over in 1653, in the ship "Trouw," to be "apportioned to farmers."—Ibid., XIV: 434.

This plan of sending over orphans had been considered by the directors at Amsterdam as early as the year 1650, when it was proposed to transport "500 to 400 boys and girls," but it then came to naught, "being found to offer too many inconveniences."—Ibid., XIV: 136. It was taken up anew in 1652, when all arrangements were made to send over 150 orphans, at the charge of the city of Amsterdam; yet, when they thought they "were quite sure of it, it happened that the ship of the English Parliament, commissioned with letters of reprisal" against the Dutch, captured about 60 Dutch merchants, among them one from New Netherland, and put a stay upon the proposed plan.—Ibid., XIV: 166-67. These orphans were to be bound to their masters as apprentices "for four years, during which time they were to receive clothing and board or if they chose fl. 60 [£24] annually for clothing themselves." If a girl married, with the consent of the director-general, before the expiration of her time, she was to be granted her freedom. Those who served their full time could remain with their masters, so much were they pleased with them; whilst those who wished to remain free of service were to be granted twenty-five morgens (50 acres) of land each, or as much thereof as they were willing to cultivate.—Ibid., XIV: 166-67, 175-76.

By the same letter the directors in Holland accede to the request of the burgomasters and schepens that the office of schout be hereafter separated from that of the company's fiscal, but that the appointment of the new officer shall be made by the director-general and council.—Rec. N. Am. I: 218; N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 262. The change did not, however, become operative at this time. See May 30, 1656.

They propose, further, the appointment of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter as the first incumbent of the separate office of schout of New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 262. Stuyvesant and the council did not heed this request, no doubt because Kuyter had showed himself as one of the new schepens of the court.—Ibid., XIV: 244. When the directors wrote, on Nov. 23, they were already aware of the recent murder of Kuyter; yet, in that letter, they said they demanded a reason from Stuyvesant and the council why Kuyter "was not appointed as proposed," a respect they considered due to them, instead of the appointment of someone unknown to the directors. This was a reference to the choice of Jacques Cortelyou, who, as they seem not to have known, had refused to serve.—Ibid., XIV: 280, 302. See July 21, 1654.

In compliance with a petition made by the burgomasters and schepens on Dec. 24, 1653, the directors now empower them to execute transports and deeds of conveyance for houses and lots within the limits of the city of New Amsterdam, but with certain reservations. For this purpose, they also agree to have made in Holland a city seal, differing from the provincial seal of New Netherland, which they promise to send over when finished.—Rec. N. Am. I: 219; N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 266. The seal, "cut in silver," and also a "painted coat of arms of the City of New Amsterdam," were sent from Holland in July, in the ship "De Pereboom" (Peartree). See Dec. 8.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 309; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 241. Impressions of this seal are very rare. There are several in the New York Hist. Soc. Collected, intended to be conveyed and lodged in the south side of the Markveld Steeg, east of the Markveld (present Whitfield St.), to Jan Evertsen Bost. See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82e, Vol. II, and III: 255 (No. 214); Frousteprise, Vol. V; Wilde, Civic Ancestry; Pine, Seal & Flag of the City of N. Y. See also Dec. 24, 1653.

Finally, the directors state: "... we have granted and allowed, that the foresaid patent bulye in which the Burgomasters and Schepens meet, shall be given to the city to be appropriated to its use. ..."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 262-65.

The directors at Amsterdam say, in a letter to the burgomasters and schepens, that they cannot understand why they should allow themselves "to be stirred up by the disaffected to far as not only to assist in organizing an independent Assembly without authority but moreover to send in remonstrances," which the directors consider, in the present circumstances, to be very inexpedient," however advantageous they may otherwise be. Rec. N. Am., I: 217; there is another translation, in N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 266. To this the burgomasters and schepens replied, on July 27, that they were not guilty of fomenting disaffection, and they knew of none; that they had not meditated "holding private conventicles with the English, or others," or deliberated "on matters of State, or, what is still worse," attempted "to make a change in the State and in the Government thereof." They said their only object was to present to the directors in Holland an account of the state of the country, because they believed "necessity most imperatively demanded it."—Rec. N. Am., I: 221, 222.

Carl van Eaglebreest gives a ground-brief for a lot at the north-east corner of Exchange Pl. and Broad St., the site of the Mills building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 391.

Cornelis van Tienhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot now covered in part by the Broad Exchange building, corner of Broad St. and Exchange Pl. This is of Exchange Pl. from the middle of Broad St. very nearly to William St.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 396.

In a patent to Carl van Brugge, the Sleep Pasture is mentioned (Liber HI: 216, Albany), but not for the first time, as stated in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 967. An earlier mention occurred in a patent of July 1, 1623 (q. v.).

Nicassius de Sille writes from New Amsterdam to Maximilianus 23 van Breckerke of The Hague, and describes New Netherland, thus: "This country suits me exceedingly well, I shall not try to live as long as I live. We are knapping very much fit for all Europe, as to how it may be with the English [in the war with the Dutch]. We have here such neighbors also, but they do not attack us as yet. We receive no news from Patrias, which at times causes us to heave a sigh. We are waiting for good news in their papers."

This country does a large trade in furs, especially beavers, which are sold to us by the savages by the thousand for Dutch merchandise. All the people here are traders. Big cattle and oxen and horses are still scarce. They are not slaughtered much, for the main object is to get the increase. It goes here after the manner of the Old Testament; wealth consists in oxen and horses to plow with, and in cows, sheep and goats. The country can supply us with grain; children and pigs multiply here rapidly and more than anything else, but there is a lack of women; we need people to cultivate the soil and to increase the population. There is plenty of land and forest, and the soil is good. He who comes from Patria with farm laborers can in one year cultivate enough land to support himself on what he gains. Horses and oxen they must buy here. The rivers are full of fish, good edible fish, which is very cheap, three large sea crabs for a stiver; also fruit. The Indians offer these for sale. Likewise venison, which I bought this year. For the winter at least.—Rec. N. Am., I: 261; N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 282. The musquash, oysters, we pick up here before our fort; among there they are some so large that one must cut them in two or three pieces. The weeds consist mostly of strawberries, catnip and blackberries. There is a good increase of poultry. The Indians bring us wild geese, turkeys, partridges, wild pigeons, ducks, and many other wild birds and animals; in fine, we are a paradise, forget Patrias. Beer is brewed here as good as in Holland, of barley and wheat. Wheaten bread is more common here than rye or buckwheat. Oats, peas and corn are fair. In the way of fish we have perch, sturgeon, bass, herring, mackerel, weakfish, stone bream, eel, twelve and thirteen, and various other kinds of which I do not yet know the names. My children already begin to speak the language of the savages and can trade with them. No gold or silver circulates here, but beaver and mink. Indeed, the Indians are worth one stiver, and three black beads one stiver. We can buy everything with it and gladly take it in payment. In short, once more, it is good here, but last winter the Spaniards left us and the Frenchman ran away, but the Duke of Brandenburg stands by us faithfully and allusion to kinds of wines we must keep him company with a little smoke. We are looking again for aid from the friends [i.e., wines] who deserted us, for their absence makes us melancholy; they all drink here, from the moment they are able to flick a spoon. The women of the neighborhood entertain each other with a pipe and a brass; and in all, even old, they all smoke. Tobacco costs here but a shilling a pound of the best quality. Very good tobacco is grown here, and the trade in Virginia tobacco is very large, so that for a very fine people here give away the tobacco by the pound for nothing. I intend one of these days to start a large tobacco plantation myself." In a postscript of July 15th, he states that "Owing to the bad weather, the ship was held up. We had to keep it both on account of the ammunition and the crew, but we frightened them so that as yet they have not made war against us. We have bravely fortified ourselves for defense. Furthermore, I know nothing more to write than that there are no sparrows flying here as thick as the sparrows in Holland this time of the year and eat strawberries and cherries. They are shot here by the thousand in our squares, streets and gardens. They taste like partridge. We wish only for peace." In another postscript, on July 17th, he writes: "A ship just arrived here from Amsterdam with tidings of peace, to the joy of us all."—Quarterly Journal of the N.Y. State Hist. Ass'n, 2: 101-3, de Sille's letter, here first printed by A. J. P. van Lers. See also Aug. 23, 1653, and Sept. 23, 1654.

Notwithstanding that peace negotiations between England and the states-general were in progress, a number of ships were sent to New England in May and June to purchase tobacco. The ship was held up. We had to keep it both on account of the ammunition and the crew, but we frightened them so that as yet they have not made war against us. We have bravely fortified ourselves for defense. Furthermore, I know nothing more to write than that there are no sparrows flying here as thick as the sparrows in Holland this time of the year and eat strawberries and cherries. Stuyvesant submits proposals to the council, saying: "For about the same or two reasons has been current, which were confirmed last evening in detail by Mr. Isaac Allerton, that 10 or 12 days ago six ships arrived at Boston from Old England, namely, two merchantmen and four meol-of-war of the Parliament or the present Government of England, having on board Colonel Susses, Captain Levertet and a number of sailors. Each vessel, also ammunition and engineers' implements. Mr. Allerton declared not to know, whether they were intended to be used against us or against the French, for the instructions had not yet been opened and were not to be opened until ten days after their arrival at Boston. As the best way of calculating this must have been done yesterday or the day before, but we cannot and shall not know their tenor and correct meaning, until the blow is struck and then it will be too late. The continuance of Captain Levertet's losses suffered at the hands of and the deeds committed by Captain Hull last year and the repeatedly received information, that they had both gone to Old England last fall with the view of soliciting and obtaining ample authority to proceed against this Province and its inhabitants, to no good, but warn us to be on our guard and while trusting in God to consider all possible means of defense." Stuyvesant called the meeting, among other things, to consider how to provide for maintaining "the Nation's honor and the most effective protection of this place and its inhabitants."—N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 167-68. The council's resolutions, of June 2, are in ibid., XIV: 269-71.

The Swedes, under John Rising, deputy governor of New Sweden, captured Fort Christina, on the South River, and took off goods from the Dutch on Trinity Sunday, and name it "Trefaldigheet," or Fort Trinity, placing Swen Schute in command.—Broedhead, op. cit., I: 577, 592-94. Stuyvesant found opportunity to retaliate on Sept. 22 (p. 21).

An agreement (only a fragment of which survives) is signed by Egbert van Horsum and the provincial secretary, in regard to the ferry from New Amsterdam to Breuckden, which reads: "And in order that the Ferryman may the better pursue his business, it is granted him on the part of the Hobole Company, that he shall have the use for a time of the Ferryhouse standing on Long Island, providing he keeps it in necessary repair at his own expense; the committee on the part of the Hobole Director General and Council promising to give the Ferryman all proper support in regard to his business."—Records N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 113 (N. Y. State Library); N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 266. See July 1, 1654. On Aug. 13, Van Captain Hull and a group of men from Breuckden at the ferry on that side of the river.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 581. On April 26, 1655 (p. 3), he made a contract with three carpenters for the construction of a new ferry-house, which was to be 30 by 18 feet in dimensions.

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 270, but with revisions made from the original Dutch text.

At a meeting of Stuyvesant and the council, it is adjudged that the people of the English villages in New Netherland are inclined rather against, than for, the government, and for that reason it is resolved unanimously "to pass them in silence and not to call upon them either for the repairs or for the defense" (of New Amsterdam), so as not to "draw the Trojan horse" within the city's walls.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 270.

Albert Linneweber is ordered by Stuyvesant and the council not to infringe the rights of Eghbert van Borsum, who has rented the ferry, by passing people over the East River.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 138. See 1658, Jan. 20 and June 1, 1654.

Among other things, Stuyvesant writes the burgomasters and schepens that he has not been able "to discover up to this time" that they have "undertaken anything towards the defense" of the city or "the repairing of its works," that it appears to him they are "huddled to sleep by an idle rumor of peace." He upbraids them for their unfurnished promises, and warns them of his apprehension in case of an invasion, "that, for want of repairs and defence of the outer constructed work, our own arms and cannon, planted last year [1653] on the outer works [along the present Wall St.] contrary to our wish and advice," will be turned against the city. If they can not, as they declare, repair and defend the outer works, they ought to see to it, he says, that the cannons are "removed and brought here," where they can serve the city and a menace, and restored to the fort.—Rec. N. Am., I: 209.

The city court called a special meeting for the following day (9th).—Ibid., I: 208. On the 13th, they replied to Stuyvesant and the council that they would willingly assist, "according to their ability," in fortifying and defending the city. The provincial authorities considered it reasonable "that the Outside people should do their share of constructing, repairing, and defending, and said they were "well disposed to command the same by proclamation," since it was only a fair return for the help "rendered and got up three [or four] times last year [1653] by the Burgomasters and Schepens for the Outside people," and, therefore, "a few obstinate and refractory persons" should be punished as they deserved. The city fathers concurred in the necessity of such an order, and they promised to "employ all diligence and means, to commence the work most speedily," on condition that "proper Regulations" were "first adopted as to the manner the works are to be constructed and made."—Ibid., I: 210-11. The result of this was the provincial ordinance of June 14 (q. v.).

13 Rumors of an invasion by New Englanders having reached Stuyvesant and the council, they propose to the burgomasters and schepens the defense of New Amsterdam and New Netherland. These suggestions are "that besides the repair and security of the fort, the old ditch (Gracht) be dug up and gabbons be set up [there], which being done, to fortify the City Tavern [city hall] with a small earthwork and breastworks, and to plant on the same 2 or 3 light pieces." The proposals provide also for changes in the outer works or palisades, built in the previous year—"the cannon be removed from thence, lest they be turned on the city by an enemy, especially as the angles are completely destroyed."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 272-73, but with revisions made from the original Dutch text in the N. Y. State Library. The above suggestions seem to mean: (1) the repair and securing of the fort; (2) the deepening and reinforcing of the ditch that ran along the present Broad St.; and (3) the fortifying of the city tavern, which, on May 18 (q. v.), was granted by the West India Co. to the city as a city hall, for which purpose it had been used since the latter part of 1653 (see Feb. 6 of that year). Regarding repairs of the ditch, see Aug. 34. It is not certain just when the city hall defenses were completed, but they are shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Frontispiece, and Pl. 82, Vol. II), and were soot thereafter superseded by a "rooded" or stone half-moon, which appears on the map of the city on the following Tuesday (the 16th), "with a spade and axe, to help to construct and repair such works" as will be "pointed out to them by the Director General and Council or their commissioners," for which the labourers are to be paid two guilders per day. Those drafted are obliged to respond or, in default, to pay a fine for each day's delinquency.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 161-62; N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 275-76. Overseers and superintendents of the works were chosen and regulations were also made on the 16th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 214-15; N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 278.

The merchants of New Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council, approve of a levy or "toll of one tenth on all goods and merchandizes" that may be sent to Holland "during this summer" subject, however, to repayment or return in a year, for the security of which the revenues of the city shall be "a special bond and mortgage." They ask that the city "be allowed to nominate six able members" of the community, from whom three shall be elected by the provincial government, "to control the expenditure and distribution of the said moneys subject to the orders" of the provincial and the city authorities.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 276-77. On the 17th of June (16th), the burgomasters and schepens, instead of nominating six, as the merchants had proposed, designated two of their number by plurality vote, from whom Scheep Ollof Stevensen van Cortlandt was elected in council. Cornelis van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, acted with him, on behalf of the superior government. Their first order was that of treasurer and paymaster—"in fact Administrators of the moneys . . . raised from the Merchants."—Ibid., XIV: 278; Rec. N. Am., I: 214, 215.

Michael Jansen, of Pavonia, (N. J.), which was "within the jurisdiction of this City of New Amsterdam," appears before the burgomasters and schepens and asks permission "to brew some beer," for "the accommodation of the neighborhood." His petition is granted and an agreement is made with him for one year to pay 50 guilders as an annual excise for all beer he shall brew and sell at Pavonia, and an additional legal excise on all beer that he may deliver at New Amsterdam or any other place to tasters or other persons.—Rec. N. Am., I: 214-15.

The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council on May 18, enclose a placard or edict, which orders them to publish, post and execute with diligence. It relates to promoting the increase of cattle in New Netherland, and the directors suggest that the object would be greatly forwarded if a census were taken of the number of cattle in each colony and recorded in a register. This edict is not among the records, but the letter in which it was enclosed was received in New Amsterdam in July, and publication of the edict must have been made at that time.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 171; N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 261. This was the first general census of cattle proposed for the province.

The first ferry ordinance is issued by Stuyvesant and his council. It is thought to be necessary because "very great confusion and disorder prevail more and more among the Ferrymen on both sides of the Ferry of the Manhatans [present Dover and Pearl Sts., and Fulton St., Brooklyn] to the serious inconvenience of the Passengers and Inhabitants of this Province, so that those under the necessity of going over the ferry, frequently have to spend long days and nights, and then again are constrained to give up their journey not without gross extortion of double and higher fare, disputes and other unmanly practices to the great loss and vexation of Strangers and the good people of this Province." The idea of the ordinance is to provide service "in a proper manner . . . and at the small rates, term and manner," and also to have some other new ferry only "the Leece of the Ferry," who has the authorization of the government, "shall be at liberty to keep or have any Ferryboats or scows to carry or convey over strange passengers or inhabitants of this Province, or cattle, goods, or any thing else, his own property excepted, on pain of being penalized. The lessee is also "bound to keep continually his Ferry provided with proper boats and experienced men, and maintain on both sides of the River" for public use. "A covered shed or lodge" is sheltered from inclement weather. The lessee is given permission to build for his convenience a flat-bottomed boat to convey across Wagon, Cart, Plow, Cattle, etc. and receive for the service such rates of ferriage as are now established. The adult fare is six stuivers (12 cents) for single persons, or half that when two or more persons are ferried over, but only "half fare" is charged "for a child under ten years" of age. The lessee may refuse service to anybody who does not pay the ferriage in advance of transportation. The hours for running the ferry are "on Summer days, only from 5 o'Clock in the morning till 6 o'Clock in the evening, provided the Windmill [west of Fort Amsterdam] hath not taken in its sail, and in the winter months from seven in the morning until five in the afternoon, but not "in a tempest, or when the Windmill hath lowered [refeed or furled?] its sail in consequence of storm or otherwise." The ferriage rates are not collectable from the director-general, members of his council, mariners, or bailiffs, or any other person except the lessee of the ferry.

The ferriage rates are not collectable from the director-general, members of his council, mariners, or bailiffs, or any other person except the lessee of the ferry.

   The lessee of the ferry is commanded to "affix a copy of this Ordinance publicly in the ferry house on both sides of the Ferry."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 162-65. See June 1 and Sept. 22, 1654.

4. Aug. 5, 1654
   One secret meeting was held on June 28, and another on Gravesend, L. I., by about 50 Englishmen among whom were some privateersmen from the North, the rest being English subjects...from the villages of Gravesend, Heemstedt and Meddelburgh. It was rumoured that they were bent upon mischief against the Dutch.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV, 278-79. These rumours reached New Amsterdam and caused some of the recalcitrant English residents to "immediately remove and carry away their movable, furniture, beavers and other valuable to the English villages," thereby causing increase of uncerine and spreading disaffection among the good and well disposed citizens of the city and in the rural districts also, whilst exposing the weakened state of the city to "injury and other external enemies." The States-General and the council therefore issue an edict, which forbids any more removals of goods, on account of "any evil report," to the outlying settlements, under a penalty of the forfeiture of such goods; and those who have repeatedly committed such acts are to lose also their citizenship and be banished from the city within twenty-four hours.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 166-67; G. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I, 584-85.

5. Aug. 5, 1654
   The "works of the Fort" of New Amsterdam have been repaired and restored 2 or 3 times at considerable expense and labor, and every tred under foot and thrown to the ground by the Hogs, from which the new repaired and newly laid out works are said to be "exposed apparently to the same danger." This state of affairs is responsible for an ordinance passed by Stuyvesant and the council, which requires the inhabitants to so secure their goats, sheep, and especially hogs, that they cannot run at large; and, if any are found within 24 hours after the ordinance has been published "on the walls or constructed works of the Fort, either on the outer or interior works," they are to be impounded.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 170.

   The ordinance of July 1, 1654 (q. v.), relative to regulating the purchase of lands from the Indians is renewed.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 173.

7. Aug. 5, 1654
   The necessity of devising and considering ways and means for the support of "Civil Government, Divine Service and the Militia," has been urged repeatedly upon the burgomasters and schepens by Stuyvesant and the council, who now again remind them that it must be done "without any further dilatory exceptions," and that an answer must be given by the following Monday, "together with an account of the receipt and expenditure of the Tapsters' Excise" collected by the city.—Rec. N. Am., I, 223-24.

8. Aug. 5, 1654
   The board appoints Paulus Leendertson van Grift and Oloff Stuyvesens van Corlandts, together with Secretary Jacob Kip, "to prepare the account of the expenditures incurred last year on the public works," and orders the receiver to "briefly make out the balance of the Excise and then communicate the same to the Hon.[illegible] General together with the Resolution adopted on the letter, and likewise verbally to propose some points."—Ibid., II, 224.

9. Aug. 5, 1654
   On Aug. 10, they made an estimate of the expenses for "the outer and inner works constructed this last year for the defence of the country," which amounted to "about sixteen thousand guilders," and offered their quota, which they claimed to be "about three thousand guilders." This proportionate share they engaged to pay if they were furnished with authenticity by the council "to lay a tax on real estate" under their jurisdiction, wherever they might find it.—Ibid., II, 224-25.

10. Aug. 5, 1654
    On Aug. 31, they offered to "support henceforth at the expense of this City of New Amsterdam" the following: One minister, a preacher, who should be at the same time schoolmaster, one dogwhipper or beadle, a schout, two burgomasters, five schepens, 4 Aug. 23, 1654, a secretary, a court messenger, and such others as they deemed necessary. They also offered to devote "some small subscriptions," in case the revenue proved insufficient. — Ibid., I: 233–37. They opposed supporting the military, as a concern not of the city alone, but of the country in general. — Ibid., II: 233.

On Aug. 27, Vander Grift and Van Cortlandt met Stuyvesant and the council on invitation, and were informed that the council were extending, for the benefit of the citizens, a tax of 10 per cent on all real estate. This was also the lines submitted by the city fathers on the 10th, and, therefore, the burgomasters and schepens resolved, on the 31st, "to levy the one per cent on all real estate" within their jurisdiction. They said they hoped no objection would be made by the Schepens and the council to their action.—Ibid., II: 233–34. A full reply was made by Stuyvesant and the council, on Sept. 16, which contained a reasonable concession in connection with the real estate tax levy, but in which the city fathers were severely castigated for "deceitfully and per-versely" misleading the director-general and council in not fulfilling their promises and agreements, and for misapplication of the excise revenues. They were told that the excise revenue would be taken away from the city and be let to the highest bidder, so that the salaries of the clerksmen could be paid, and that their memorial and the council's answer were sent to the directors in Holland. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 291–92. Submitting this letter to them of Sept. 16, the burgomasters and schepens memorialized the directors at Amsterdam, on Sept. 22, and claimed, what must have been an untruth, that they had not yet received an answer from Stuyvesant and the council to their memorial of Aug. 31.—Rec. N. Am., II: 246–47. Meanwhile, Stuyvesant and the council retaliated by advertising the lease of the tapsters' excise of the city to the highest bidder, and against this the city fathers protested, on Nov. 23, averring that this revenue was theirs by authority of the directors at Amsterdam.—

9 Secretary Van Tienhoven delivers to the burgomasters and schepens a "printed Placard about building on the lots" in New Amsterdam, and another "Placard about buying and taking possession of lands without the knowledge of the Director-General and Council, requesting, that they may be published by the Burgomasters and Schepens," which they do this same day, "in front of the City Hall after the ringing of the Bell." —Rec. N. Am., II: 223–25.

11 Adrian Vincent, having petitioned the burgomasters and schepens, is granted "permission to retail brandy and other strong liquors out of doors by the large and small measure . . . on condition that he pay the proper Tapsters' Excises." —Rec. N. Am., II: 225. Vincent was at the present Broad and South William streets, then, however, respectively the Heere Gracht and the Slyck Steegh. See Castello Plan, II: 293– applied by the burgomasters and schepens during their control thereof.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 284.

14 An ordinance for regulating the duties of the provost-marshal or jailer is passed by Stuyvesant and the council. This official is declared to be a subordinate of the director-general and council and under the immediate control of the fiscal. The ordinance provides that for arrests he is to receive specified fees and for minor offences certain fines, whether the prisoners are from the army or the community. His residence is "in Fort New Amsterdam," where he is provided with the keys, locks, and chains of the prisoners. He is not obliged to take the prisoners to lock up and feed the prisoners in the manner . . . ordered by the Fiscal." He is required to visit the prisoners in the morning and evening, and take particular care that no files, rope, ironwork or anything sharp" is left with any of them. Other duties also are prescribed

16 The council also makes a contract with the "continue of the Scheep's Canal" (present Broad Street) by Aukens Jansen and Christiaen Barentsens, carpenters having "again fallen down," due to "the heavy rain and water," the burgomasters and schepens contract with them for reconstructing it and bringing it again into good condition" for the sum of 23 guilders, and 9,256 guilders. —Rec. N. Am., II: 231.

Jan Vinge appears at the court of burgomasters and schepens and complaints "of the damage he sustained by the erection of the Dutch fort on the banks of the river after he had closed the pass. His cattle were destroyed by the Swedes," who destroyed the signpost of the fort. He also demands compensation for his livestock, which were damaged by the Swedes, and for the damage to his property, which was taken away by the Swedes. He is referred to Stuyvesant to arrange the matter with him.—Rec. N. Am., I, 220. On Nov. 25, Stuyvesant and the council issued an order that such new fence be erected for Vinge at public expense.

Pieter Lassus, for himself and partners, sells to Petrus Stuyvesant "the little ship called Abraham’s Sacrifice, in length from stem to stern 61 feet, in width 19 feet, hull 9 feet, with standing and running rigging, sails, cordage, anchors, cables, and furthermore, whatever appears by inventory, good and bad." The above named ship now lies and can be seen, to the said Hoehle General’s account of the Directors" of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. The transaction is for 400 beavers, "and in addition the payment of half the monthly wages earned" during two and one half months, "amounting in all for the entire ship’s crew, to fl. 235 net." In the inventory of things sold with the ship are "a prince’s flags," "2 swivel guns," "2 iron 3 pounders," "some halls, muskets, and gunner’s powder-horns.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), III: 120 (N. Y. State Library).

—Chronol. van Stuyvesant, II: 8, June 4, 1654, infringes on the rights of burgoers and schepens that he has found "drinking clubs [parties], on divers nights at the house of Jan Peck [Peek], with dancing and jumping and entertainment of disorderly people; also tapping during Preaching, and that there was great noise made by drunkards," especially the last Sunday, "in this house, so that he was obliged to remove one to jail in a cart, which was a most scandalous affair." The sheriff demanded annulment of Peck’s license and a fine, to which the court agreed on the 26th. By Nov. 2, Peck, by petition to the court, sought leave to tap again. On Nov. 9, the court warned him to behave himself, and, in consideration of his being "an old Burgler," and being "burthened with a household of children and more besides," restored him to his tavern privileges. But Peck was in the court city again, under charges by the provost-marshal, in December, and, on Jan. 6, 1655, was ordered by the provincial council not to sell any liquor in future without a permit.—Rec. N. Am., I, 253–256, 259, 261, 264, 272; Col. Hist., MSS., Dutch, 145, 19.

Nicolaus de Selle writes to A. de Mist Uyten Hague, "from America, in New Amsterdam in New Netherland, on the island of Mananthans, the 23rd of September, my birthday" (he was born in 1610), and says: "I wish that you were here with me. I should look you in my cellar where you had found so many things, if I were to do to you that your mind should be filled with wrath so long? If my sudden departure [from Holland] is the cause of it, I cannot help it, for after I had taken the oath [as first councillor for New Netherland] on Thursday, I had to go on board the following Saturday. God be praised and thanked, we arrived here safely and soundly. I hope that you need not depend on my letter sent to Mr. Beeckerken [see Aug. 23, 1653]. This country is good and healthful, for as yet there is neither a doctor nor an apothecary, and the people are seldom sick. We have excellent rivers, game and fish, yes, even grain and cattle enough to feed us. They brew good beer here, but the wine still comes from the fatherland, although there are enterprises people here who plant vineyards. Farmers are needed here to turn the woods into plowed land, and there is a lack of women, for it is a fruitful land for everything. The increase of cattle and people, but mostly of children and pigs, proceeds marvelously; in fine, I shall not go back to Holland, but intend to remain here for the rest of my life.

"Since my arrival no ships have arrived, except one yesterday, so that a mistrust [fourth of a gill] of brandy costs twelve stuivers [24 cents]. The Frenchman and Spaniard were driven away, but now show up again and bring recruits to the Brandenburger [reference to various wine]. We have here the same fruits and vegetables as in Holland, for this country is almost like Holland, only of melons, watermelons, peaches and sweet and sour cherries there is an abundance. I can not praise this country enough.

"My children begin to speak the language of the savages, and to practice their manners, in order to get out of his financial troubles, principally with a nursed servant to his children, in Holland.—Quarterly Journal of N. The Iconography of Manhattan Island

The city council resolved that early measures must be taken to repair and protect the said house with sheet piles (Schoeying).—Rec. N. Am., I: 291–2.

On the 10th of this month, the burgomasters and schepens, with the approbation of Stuyvesant, proposed the establishment of a Rattle Watch [Nachtwacht] of 4 to 6 men, "to guard the city by night, and that all persons who desired to "undertake the same" should be on hand "on Monday next, the 16th November, about 11 o'clock, at the City Hall," where the conditions could be heard. On the appointed day, "the rules for the Rattle Watch were made." Only three members of the board were present, and they "waited until the appointed time" (11 A.M.), but nobody came to take up the night watch, so "the meeting adjourned without anything having been done."—Rec. N. Am., I: 265. The watch was successfully established on Oct. 4, 1658 (9 p.m.).

Warner Wessells presents a petition to the court of burgomasters and schepens, in which he asks leave to sell beer and the small measure, on paying the proper excise. The request is denied, because "neither brewers nor Distillers can tap, according to the custom of this City, and the placards of the Noble Director General and Supreme Council."—Rec. N. Am., I: 266. See Cas- tellos, see also Nov. 23.

The provincial council resolves as follows: "Whereas there are no bidders come at present, the Tavernkeepers’ Excise on beer and wines to be consumed in this City [New Amsterdam] during the next year should be let publicly to the highest bidder on next Monday at the house of Sergeant Daniel Litschoe [Pearl and Wall St], and this is to be made public by handbills."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 306.

It is resolved by the provincial council "to let publicly at the Perry at the first opportunity to the highest bidder the excise on wines and beer in the village of Brooklyn, Midwout, Amster- coort and adjacent places."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 527.

"Albeit Pieterse, Trumpetter," requests permission from the burgomasters and schepens "to sell beer and wine by the small measure, on payment of the proper excise," which is granted to him.—Rec. N. Am., I: 269. His tavern stood at the present No. 78 and 80 Broad St, near the site of the Pempah building. See Castello's Plan, II: 254, 259.

Dec.

Before the provincial secretary, Cornelis van Ruyven, appears "the Hoeïï Fiscal Cornelis van Tienhoven," making a declaration that he, "on behalf of the Honourable Petrus Stuyvesant director general of this Council of New Holland," has farms. It is not clear how this petition was heard, as on the 24th President Couwenhoven enters himself as bail for Cornelis Hendricksezen from Dordrecht, who was entered as security for Wessells in the transaction. On Dec. 9, 1655, Wessells also had the farming privileges for beer and wines consumed by tavern-keepers and tapsters on the west end of Long Island.—Records N. Y. (Q)Actions issued).—Rec. N. Am., I: 254, 259.

Stuyvesant states that, in view of the burgomasters and schepens, at a joint meeting in Fort Amsterdam, of "the necessity of his voyage to Curacao." He proposes that the city council be augmented to its full quota, which results in the selection of Allard Anthony as a burgomaster and Johannes Neuvis as a schepen, who take the oath of office.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 305; Rec. N. Am., I: 271.

Stuyvesant delivers to Martin Creigie, president of the board of burgomasters and schepens, "the painted coat of arms of the City of New Amsterdam and the seal, cut in silver, sent by the Noble Lords-Directors in the ship De Perse" (Pacitoe).—Rec. N. Col. Docs., XIV: 309.

The burgomasters and schepens vote a recess from ordinary sessions of the council until three weeks after Christmas, "as the winter and holidays are at hand."—Rec. N. Am., I: 271. See Dec. 24.

By resolution of Stuyvesant and the council, Andries Huyde is given a permit to act as surveyor.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 144. A few days later, he petitioned for leave to keep a school at New Amsterdam, but this request was referred to the minister and con- sistory by the council, on Dec. 31 (Sept.),—Ibid. Vacancies having occurred in the list of officers of the burgher companies of New Amsterdam, they are filled as follows: Lieut. Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift is appointed captain "in the Company under the blue flag," Daniel Litschoe is advanced from sergeant to corporal, and Jacobus Steenwyck is named as ensign.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 310.

Stuyvesant sails with three ships from New Amsterdam on Christmas eve for Curacao, to establish trade in the West Indies.—Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 396-97, 623. He had chartered the "Perse" (Pacitoe) for the expedition, on the 32d,Pieter Lucasen to command the ship "Abraham’s Sacrifice," and Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift to command the ship "Dolphin."—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 58, 144. After an absence of nearly seven months, he returned to New Amsterdam, in July, 1655 (Broodhead, op. cit., I: 607), and, on July 14, the council made record that he had submitted to them a report of his trans- actions in Curacao and the Caribbean Islands, which report ordered to be deposited in the office of the provincial secretary.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 150.

One of the first ordinances proclaimed during the administration of Stuyvesant was an edict against destroying or stealing fences, fruits, etc. from the farms, orchards, or gardens in the province (see July 1, 1647). Through repeated renewals and post- was, this law was generally observed; but now (1654) complaints are made that burghe w and farmers are being "daily robbed of Clayboards, Palisades, Posts, Rails, and other fencing stuff." The earlier penalty had been a fine of 100 gulders, besides arbitrary punishment. The new law now enacted, in midwinter, provides that corporal punishment be inflicted, "without mercy or favor," on any one who is found guilty.—Laws & Ord. N. Y. Neth., 185-86. That this promise was not fulfilled is evidenced by the daily complaints that were made in the following autumn, when Stuyvesant and the council referred to the matter in another ordinance, of Oct. 9, 1655 (q.v.), which provided even severer penalties—branding and whipping for the first offense, and for the second violation the guilty one was to be “punished with the halter until Death ensue.” To make the capture of Andries possible, he was offered twice, with a promise that their names would be concealed.—Ibid., 1652, 155. This last named ordinance was renewed on Dec. 30, 1658 (ibid., 365), as it was also on Jan. 7, 1659 (Rec. N. Am., I: 42–43).

Andries Hudde petitions the Dutch council for a license to keep a school in New Amsterdam. The petition is referred to the minister and consistory.—Cal. Dutch MSS., 144 (Albany). Pratts Annals of Pub. Education in N. T. State, 19, ascribes this petition to Dec. 31, 1665, an obviously impossible date. Hudde had been, for years, a prominent figure in the province; he was appointed, on Oct. 12, 1645, to be consistory at Fort Nassau, on the South River, a position he was still occupying four years later.—Cal. Dutch MSS., 51, 98. Prof. Kilpatrick considers this request for a license unusually interesting, because it was referred to the minister and consistory. “When we take into account,” he says, “the ecclesiastical hatred of heretical teachers common in Holland, and Stuyvesant’s fanatical zeal against heretical sects, we are inclined to wonder whether suspicion may not have rested on Hudde’s orthodoxy. . . . That Hudde should have wished to teach is strange considering his many business concerns.”—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 113. There is no record of his petition being granted.

In this year the first ferry-house was built on the Brooklyn side of the East River.—See Castello Plan, II: 245.

“But in that interim of time the Indians aboute the Manahattans fell vypon the Dutch & in their first furie killed all they could light vypon, burning their houses destroying their Cattle, but vypon better considerations spared the lives of such as they tooke & put them to ransome especiale for powder & lead, & in one place att one time took 70 of them prisoners, & would not ransome them without a good quantity of powder & lead, & by report 44 small barrells with lead proportionable, besides other Comodities And that to such an astonishment & terror of the Dutch that the bowers or fameris generally left their habitations, & betooke themselves to their Cittie New Amsterdam, where the affrighted burgers or Citizens themselves were as ready to gett aborde such ships as were then in the harbour, with what goods they coulde and to bid a vlimon vale to their New Netherlands . . .”—Clarendon Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 9.

During the Indian troubles of this year, Staten Island was cut off, “having above twenty 6sous slain, who were of [Melyn’s] Children, Nephews, Servants & Tenants: The Town consisting of about 400 houses was burn’d. Goods made plunder off [sic] & yot’ Petitioners of [sic] father & mother & two sons with all that survived were taken into a barbarous Captivity by the heathen.”—From original petition of Jacob Melyn, son of Cornelis, to Richard, Earl of Bellomont, governor of New York, Nov. 29, 1669, printed in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1913), XLVI: 156–58.

In 1655, Claes van Elslant was an official surveyor in New Netherland (see also 1648).—O’Callaghan, Reg. N. Neth., 37.

Recognizances of seven ships sent over with goods to New Netherland by the West India Co., Amsterdam chamber, netted fees of fl. 22,977:8:8. Among these ships was the “Nieu Amsterdam.”—N. N. Pet. Nrs. No. 1221 (17), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

In this month, during a severe winter, “all rivers” about New Amsterdam are “frozen and the land and roads covered with snow;” it is possible to cross “the east river on the ice at White Stone,” L. I.—N. T. Cal. Doc., XIV: 311, 312.

Cornelis van Tienhoven, the provincial secretary, informs the burgomasters and schepens that the provincial council intend to appoint Durck van Schelluyne as “Concierge” (high constable, bailiff, or city marshal), and asks if they have anything against it.—Rec. N. Am., I: 378. The new officer received his appointment from the provincial council, with the city council. His commission was signed by Secretary Van Tienhoven, and had “on one side thereof” the Provincial Seal, impressed on red Wax.” His duties were “the maintenance of justice and the execution of judgments” that were rendered either by the council or the city court in civil cases. Stuyvesant was absent on his journey to Curacao when the appointment was made, but knew of the proposal on Dec. 17, a week before his departure.—Ibid., I: 282–83.

Bellamy’s instruction, as transmitted by the city council, ordains that the council and consistory, in lieu of these they burned.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145, 146; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 186–88; Early Rec. of Albany (Notarial Papers), III: 11–12.

Certain persons having cut up and burned a number of the city’s palisades, on account of cold weather, are let off by Stuyvesant and the council on condition that they cut and repair all Afterwards, in lieu of those they burned.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 145.

On this day, and again on Feb. 1, the burgomasters and schepens ordered certain public auctions “in front of the City Hall.” This allows the place where these public sales were habitually held. —Rec. N. Am., I: 279, 280.

Jacob Steendam, the poet of New Netherland, is summoned to the city court for having erected his house, without the consent of the fence owners or city surveyors, wholly out of the line of the street (Hoogh Straat, now Stone St.).—Rec. N. Am., I: 275–76. The house was on the lot now 26 Stone St. Its rear was the present 59 and 61 Pearl St.

The provincial council having appointed a new board of burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam on Jan. 31, its members now take their oath of office. The burgomasters are Allard Anthony and Olief Stevensen van Cortlandt, and the schepens Johannes Nevis, Johannes de Peyster, Johannes Pietersen van Brugg, Jacob Strycker, and Jan Vinje (Jean Vige). They took their seats on Feb. 8.—Rec. N. Am., I: 281–82, 283; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146.

The directors at Amsterdam grant permission to Jews to reside and traffic in New Amsterdam.—Oppenheim, Early Hist. of the Jews in N. Y., 12. For subsequent proceedings, see March 14, 1656.

The burgomasters and schepens vote to meet on the next day with the council “for the purpose of agreeing on something relative to the Fire Inspectors, chimneys, and the banks of the river” of the city.—Rec. N. Am., I: 388–89; cf. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146.

Cornelis van Tienhoven informs the court of burgomasters and schepens “how Gysbert van Imbroek has by petition requested the Supreme Councillors for permission to make a lottery of a certain quantity of Bibles, Testaments and other books according to catalogue, that two be appointed to value the same, and to select something for the Poor therefrom; and asked if Burgomasters and Schepens had any thing to say against it, as it was a matter, which concerns the Commonalty.” The burgomasters and schepens considered the plan advantageous and resolved that it be proceeded with.—Rec. N. Am., I: 288. On March 1, the board was informed that the council had given its approval to the “book-lottery . . . and that the books be accordingly valued at one hundred [7%] over the Invoice, whereof the poor should receive one third including expenses; the surplus to be for petitioner.” Johannes la Montagne was chosen to represent the council, and the burgomasters and schepens selected by the council, Anthony and Johannes Nevis as commissioners to conduct the said lottery.—Ibid., I: 291; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147. This is the earliest recorded lottery held in the city.

Cornelis van Tienhoven, the sheriff or chief, informs the burgomasters and schepens that “some of the Company’s Soldiers and Servants” will seek permission to tap beer, etc., which he opposes because “many Soldiers and Servants” will thereby “be led into debauchery” and “many irregularities” will occur. The same day the board refuses a permit to a soldier to tap.—Rec. N. Am., I: 286–87, 288.

Caspar Steynnets is granted by the burgomasters and schepens permission “to tap beer and wine, for the accommodation of the burgheery and strangers.”—Rec. N. Am., I: 287.

The council grants a request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam that they be allowed “to demand for a Deed executed before them for Houses and Lots” situated within the city’s jurisdiction, one beaver or eight guilders, to be applied as follows: Three guilders for the seal; one and one half guilders for two schepens who sign the deed; three and one half guilders as a fee for the clerk.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 189.

Januarius, an Amsterdam merchant, is at present residing in New Amsterdam next door to the tavern of Michiel Taden (11 Pearl St., where a part of the Maritime bldg. covers the site). He is charged by the farmers of the excise with selling liquor without a permit, and at the same time they ask...

Cornelis van Tienhoven, as burgomaster in the court of 1 burgomasters and schepens against "Abram de la Sina" (Abraham de Lucena), a Jew, charging him with keeping his store in New Amsterdam open during sermon, and also with selling by retail. He requests that De Lucena be deprived of his trade and be fined guilders. The case is put over; and, apparently, there was no execution in either case.—Rec. N. Am., I: 291.—See Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. T., 6 (note), 7, 73. This is the first case on record of a Jew in New Netherland being prosecuted for breaking a Sunday ordinance. At this meeting, the burgomasters decided that the petition requiring the Jews who arrived in September, 1654, to depart forthwith should take its course. No further action was taken.—Ibid., 5-7.

The city hall is encumbered "by a quantity of salt deposited therein by Cornelis Schut," as well as by other goods and lodgers. Therefore, the burgomasters and schepen order Schut "to provide himself with a store-house for his salts," and the lodgers to find other quarters, "so that the City Hall be not wholly spoiled by the salt, nor occupied by others."—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. Schut delayed his removal of the salt, and was warned by the board on April 12 that they would remove it at his expense.—Ibid., I: 304. On April 16, a messenger, "for various reasons," requested the resolution of the resolution of the order.—Ibid., I: 308. He was again warned by the board through the court messenger, on Aug. 16, "without further delay" to obey the former orders promptly.—Ibid., I: 340. Schut requested, on the 25th, "a little time to remove his salt from the City Hall," which was granted to the former orders and given three days in which to comply.—Ibid., I: 348.

Guert Coerten petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to tap, but, for the time being, he is refused.—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. On the 8th, he renewed his request and was referred to the decision thereon.—Ibid., I: 395.

Jan Rutgersen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for leave to "sell beer by the pot in the City Hall where the little sail loft was given him to dwell in." The board grants him permission "to lodge in the City Hall for one month, as his house was burnt down in the winter, at the expiration of which time petitioner shall depart; meanwhile he can look out for another dwelling," but the rest of the petition is denied.—Rec. N. Am., I: 292. On April 19, he requests, by another petition, that, "inauthor as he is wholly impoverished by the fire, and an old inhabitant, he may have leave to sell, with others, a few tritels and a can of beer and wine, and to receive lodgers," which is granted.—Ibid., I: 398. See also Castello Plan, I: 296; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980, for his tavern on the Herre Gracht, now No. 69 Broad St.

The provincial council issues an order on the application of the burgomasters and schepens for a transfer to them of the building formerly occupied by the "Stadt Huys," and for two years used as the city hall ("Stadt Huys"), which now passes wholly under the city's jurisdiction.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1475 Rec. N. Am., I: 291. This building had been granted to the city by the directors at Amsterdam, on May 18, 1654 (g.v.)—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 262; Rec. N. Am., I: 219.

The two burgomasters visit the meeting of the council and suggest "how necessary it was, that proper attention and care should be paid to the matter of survey." One of the fence viewers, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, having gone to Curacao with Stuyvesant, leaving Van Tienhoven as the only remaining fence viewer, the burgomasters, therefore, request that "another fit person, conversant with surveying," be adjointed to Van Tienhoven, "in place of the late fence viewer, Lubbertus van Dinclagen." The council finally designate Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhouwen for the place—Rec. N. Am., I: 295—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1475.

Ten residents on the "Staat van de Graeff," or street from the ditch (Brouwer or Brewers', later Stone Street, running from Whitehall to Broad St.), petition the burgomasters and schepens, saying that they have found "by daily experience that the said street is more and more unfit for public use," therefore, they are inclined, for their "own accommodation and the public good, ornament and welfare" of the city, "to pave the said street with round stone [cobblestones] on the first favorable opportunity." They propose that this work be authorized and executed by the city, and request "permission and such directions in the premises as to surveys, levels, and drains, etc." as the board considers best for the community. The petitioners pledge themselves "to furnish the stone, the raising and laying necessary thereto, each to the extent of his house and lot, and further to follow the general rule relative to paving and expenses," and ask that others, if unwilling, shall be constrained to do likewise, "so that if the work be begun, it may be completed." The board grants the request ordered by the court, etc., to the new surveyors to cooperate with them "soon, so that the necessary work can go on. Meanwhile, the property owners are "to prepare all the materials necessary thereto."—Rec. N. Am., I: 300-1.

This work was not executed, however, before the year 1658 (see page 24, 1658), when it was ordered by the council to be repaired and paved, etc., at the expense of the abutting owners.—Ibid., II: 909-10; VII: 167. It has often been claimed that this was the first street paved in New Amsterdam. That view is untenable. The record itself refers to "the general rule relative to paving and expenses," as a system in vogue and understood by the petitioners. See, however, Oct. 25.

Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, writing to the classis of Amsterdam about the arrival of Jews at New Amsterdam (see Sept. 22, 1654), says: "For as we have here Papists, Mennonites and Lutherans among the Dutch; and also many Puritans and Independents, we have [not only] the necessity of the case, but also the example of Baal answered us by the name of Christians; it would create a still greater confusion, if the obstinate and immovable Jews came to settle here."—Eccl. Rec., I: 335-36.

The burgomaster and court-martial of the city asks the burgomasters and schepens to procure two drums, one for each of the burgomaster companies; this is referred to the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 302. On May 15, the burgomasters and schepens grant the purchase of the drums, "at the least possible cost, which shall be paid for out of the City's funds."—Ibid., II: 314. See also Aedenda.

Jan Paulusen Jacquet petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to sell drink out of his house by the pot with other trifles." Granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 301-2.

Harmanus van Hobooken is appointed by the council, with the consent of the consistory of the church at New Amsterdam, "as chorister and Schoolmaster" of the city, "as fifty-five guilders [$144] per month, and one hundred guilders [$30] extra, per year, for expenses." He succeeds Willem Versius (see Oct., 1649).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 147, trans. in Dunhout, Hist. of the schepen of the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church in the City of N. Y., 23. He was mentioned as a petitioner, on Feb. 21, 1669, to the burgomasters and schepens, who said they would consider his case after he had informed them of "what he is allowed for each child per quarter."—Rec. N. Am., I: 39. Some months later (Nov. 4), he asked the city court to be "pleased to grant him the hall of the city for a dwelling," and for two years, to use it as a dwelling," because he did "not know how to manage for the proper accommodation of the children during the winter," as they required "a place adapted for fire to be warmed, for which their present tenement was "wholly unfit." Moreover, he said he was "burthened with a wife and children, needed quarters for them, and could not "pay so heavy a rent as a whole house" cost. The court did not allow him the use of "the hall and little room" in the city hall, because they were "not at present in repair," and were "required for other purposes." Yet, as the youth were quite numerous, he was granted: 100 guilders allowance for house rent, "for a school."—Ibid., II: 219-20. On Jan. 16, 1660, (g.v.), he petitioned the burgomasters for "an allowance from the City, as he is "behind hand with the building of the School [i.e., rent, not construction, as some have believed], and for divers other reasons set forth in the petition." They allowed him "his current salary," to be paid "at a more convenient season" on their order upon the treasurer, and abolished his allowance therefor.—Ibid., VII: 244. His services ended when Evert Pietersen was commissioned to replace him, on May 2, 1661. On Oct. 27, he was granted his request for other employment, and was engaged as "Adelborst's" public clerk. The city council, he was ordered to serve as schoolmaster and clerk on Stuyvesant's bowery, when not needed in the company's service as "Adelborst."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231, trans. in Dunhout, op. cit., 29-30; ibid., 235. On April 28, 1663, he was referred to as "Deacon at the bowery" of Stuyvesant.—Min. of Officers Masters, II: 44.
CHRONOLOGY : THE DUTCH PERIOD : 1626--1664

Apr. 1655
Fire-wardens were created, and fire regulations made, by the ordinance of Jan. 23, 1649 (q.v.).—*Enez & Or'd. N. Neth., 82--83.

1663 [By order of the burgomaster and schepens, no person was allowed to build a house higher than a chimney. Arent Egbert must erect the cellar at his own expense. The carpenters must furnish the nails.]

For this work one hundred guilders [940] are promised together with one whole good otter skin. Moreover, Egbert must deliver all the flat wood-work required for the house—to wit boards and wainscoting.

See A. Linde is appointed tobacco inspector.—*Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148.

The city court enacts an ordinance for governing the time of attendance of the schout, burgomasters, schepens, and secretary, "both in Ordinary and Extraordinary Sessions,"—namely, "to appear, on notification by the Court Messenger, at all ordinary sessions in the City Hall precisely at 9 o'clock on the ringing of the bell; or at extraordinary sessions at the hour appointed." Those who arrive half an hour after the ringing of the bell or the time appointed, when the court messenger shall turn a sand box, or hour glass, are to be fined six stuivers; if an hour late, twelve stuivers, and if wholly absent, or arriving after the court has adjourned, forty stuivers for each time, unless a good excuse is given, "such as sickness, being from home, to wit at Fort Orange, at the South or North." These fines are to be paid down immediately, "without any exception," and to be "collected by the others, to be expended or employed in time and circumstances, as by plurality of votes" is found proper.—*Rec. N. A., I: 306.

For a quart of wasses, permission to keep a tavern, and his petition is granted.—*Rec. N. A., II: 308. His house was on the site of the present 69 Broad St., where now the building of the Consolidated Stock Exchange stands. Rutgersen's house was sold under execution in 1665 (Ibid., IV: 104, 167, 182, 207), and he soon afterwards died.—Ibid., VI: 74. See Castello Plan, II: 256; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 920; Pl. 174d, Vol. III.

Nicholaes Langervelthus, a corporal in the soldiery of the West India Co., petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to tap liquors. As he is a servant of the company, his request is referred to the council for approval, which he obtains; whereupon, the board allows his request.—*Rec. N. A., I: 308.

The form and manner of construction of an ordinary house in the Dutch period of New York's history are described in the following contract for the erection of the ferry-house, or tavern, on the Long Island side of the East River, for Egbert Van Borsum, the ferry-man (see June 1, 1654):

"We, Carpenters Jan Cornelissen, Abram Jacobsen, and Jan Hendricksen, have contracted to construct a house over at the ferry of Egbert Van Borsum, ferry-man, thirty feet long and eighteen feet wide, with an side passage of four feet, to place in it seven rooms, one on the north side, one on the south, one on the west, one on the east, one in the rear corner, one in the front room and one in the inside room, with a pantry at the end of the bead [beetle]; a winding staircase in the fore-room. Furthermore we, the carpenters, are bound to deliver all the square timber—to wit, beams, posts, and frame timber with the pillar for the winding staircase, spars, and worm, and girders, and foundation timbers required for the work; also the spalls and nails for the interior work; also rails for the wainscot are to be delivered by us.

"For which work Egbert Van Borsum is to pay five hundred and fifty guilders [520], one-third in beavers, one-third in good merchantable wampum, one-third in good silver coin, and free passage over the ferry so long as the work continues, and small beer to be delivered during work.

"We have subsequently contracted with said Egbert Van Bor- sum to build a cellar-kitchen under said house, and to furnish the wood for it—to wit, beams and frame timber. There must be made two door-frames and two circular frames with windows therein, with a stairway to enter it, and to line the stairs in the cellar round about with boards, with a chimney mantel in the kitchen, and to grooves of it. Egbert must excavate the cellar at his own expense. The carpenters must furnish the nails. For this work one hundred guilders [940] are promised together with one whole good otter skin. Moreover, Egbert must deliver all the flat wood-work required for the house—to wit boards and wainscoting.

"Dated 26th April, 1655, at New Amsterdam." [Signed] "Jan Cornelissen Cleyn"

From Stiles, Hist. of Brooklyn, I: 224--25. The "betsey," meeting in this document, Stiles explains, was built-in, "like a cupboard in a partition, with doors closing upon it when unoccupied," so that the sleeping apartment of an inn could accommodate several travellers with sleeping quarters, and, in the daytime, the room could be used for the general public.

Arent Jansen, the provost-marshal or juleter, is granted by the burgomasters and schepens permission "until further order to reside in the little side room of the City Hall in order to be able more conveniently to attend to the prisoners."—*Rec. N. A., I: 314. Prisoners under bond are confined in one of the rooms of the city hall, as shown by another record of this year.—*Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 146.

Three thieves confined at Fort Amsterdam break out, and are advertised by lue and cry, and summoned to return to the fort before the third beating of the drum, on pain of having their names affixed to the gallows.—*Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148. One of these was evidently a sentenced person, for on the 14th, he was conveyed to the place of public execution and hung until dead. At the urgent solicitation of the public at the place of execution, his sentence was commuted by the court to perpetual banishment.—Ibid., 148--49.

Peter Rudolf receives a ground-brief for a lot for a house and garden at the present No. 46, and part of No. 44, Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and I: 245--46; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 57, Vol. II, and I: 374.

Randel Hewit (or Rendel Huwiet), an Englishman, who has been temporarily denied permission to keep a tavern and lodgers, is now allowed to do so by the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam.—*Rec. N. A., I: 280, 317. In March, 1666, his wife, Margaret, was up before the city court in his behalf, charged by the schout with infractions of the tavern ordinance.—Ibid., II: 53. He probably conducted the tavern at the east end of Richard Smith's building, which covered the site now No. 91--95 Pearl St. See Castello Plan, II: 312, and Innes, New A.m. and Its Environs, 220.

Michiel Paulissen, or Paulussen, "old burgher, and his wife a Native of this country," petition the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to sell drink on the premises by the small measure." It is granted to them, "on condition of their lodging strangers and others" and paying the "tavern license and duties."—*Rec. N. A., I: 317. Paulussen's two houses were on sites now Nos. 49 and 51 Stone St. See Castello Plan, II: 309.

Rev. Johannes Megapolensis, minister at New Amsterdam, June 1655 and 1656, and Jan de Poyer, a deacon of the church as well as a schepen of the city, appear before the council and state, "in behalf of the Board of Overseers of the Poor of the city, that said Board had some time ago bought for the behalf and best [behest] of the poor a certain bowling situate on the other side of Hellgate. This "Poor Farm" was "obliquely opposite" a small island "commonly called Hunticken or Borger Joris Island," in that part of the present Borough of Queens which overlooks Berran Island.—*N. T. Cal. Docs., XIV: 328. The poor of the city were aided from a deacon's or poor fund obtained from "alms collected among the people, and some fines and other incidental sums," of the town schepens, and of the council, of the mayor, and the burgomaster, *Nar. Neth., 337, 362. Among the Joy Papers, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., there is a colored pen and ink "Map of the Lands adjoining to the [Brooklyn] Ferry," on which this "Poor Bowry" is located exactly as above stated. See also reference to the "Arme Bowry" in Selyns list of streets.

fences on Manhattan Island, appear at the court of burgomasters and schepens against Pieter van der Linden, Hendrick van Dyck, the wife of Paulus Leerdenrett, vander Grift, and Egbert Woutersen, for having sold, "nowithstanding the proper notice served on them," in failing to repair "the common fencing here on the Island of Mannhattans, jointly," so "that the cattle belonging to them and others" may not escape and be lost. The defendants are fined, except Vander Linden, who is "an old man," and has been excused before making or repairing the common fencing—Rec. N. Am., I: 81-111.

28 The city court of New Amsterdam resolves to propose to the council the raising of funds for the city's needs, by a tax for stamping and marking weights and measures; also that each tavernkeeper be obliged to take out quarterly a license, and pay therefor six guilders. The consideration of this proposal was renewed, on July 5, when it was signed; but it did not induce authorization from the council.—Rec. N. Am., I: 347-28. The burgomasters and schepens, therefore, renewed their petition, on Jan. 17, 1665, and urged approval of this proposal, to which Stuyvesant and the council assented on the 18th.—Ibid., II: 15-46; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 158.

Stuyvesant returns from his visit to the West Indies, where 11 he failed to open up trade relations with the English.—Broodhead, op. cit., II: 605. See Dec. 24, 1654.

19 The burgomasters and schepens resolve that, "whereas it is at present the Dogdays," no ordinary session or court shall be held "during the said Dogdays."—Rec. N. Am., I: 333.

27 The Jews of New Amsterdam petition Stuyvesant "to be permitted to purchase a burying place for their nation. The council considers the request, and votes that, as there are no deaths and hence no immediate need of a place, a grant of land belonging to the company will be made to them when "the need and occasion therefor" arises, especially as the Jews intitate that they do not wish to bury their dead in the common burying-ground.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 150; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. T., 75—76. The Jews renewed the request on Feb. 12, 1665 (g.n.).

Resolutions were passed by the directors at Amsterdam, on Nov. 19, 1654, granting to two private traders permission to sail in their ship, the "Witteriapert," from Holland "to the coast of Africa and trade there for negro slaves to carry to New Netherland and sell to the inhabitants," which is done, they say, "in consideration of the promotion of population and agriculture in New Netherland."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 304-5. This vessel arrived at New Amsterdam in the summer of 1655, and these "Negroes lately arrived . . . from the Bight of Guinea" were taken as the occasion of an ordinance passed by Stuyvesant and the council, on which declared that they had been "carried and exported hence" without the company or the inhabitants of the province "having derived any revenue or benefit thereby." On this account, the edict provided, there should be paid a duty of ten per cent. ad valorem, on all negroes "carried or exported" from the province, and in the event where negroes were imported, the importer was to pay the cost of their importation, and of the ship's voyage. This was, apparently, the first cargo of negro slaves imported directly into New Netherland from Africa. See also April 4, 1673.

17 The burgomasters and schepens assemble this day to open a certain letter received by the Ship "de Waegh" (the Balance) of Amsterdam from the directors and dated May 26 of this year, which is read by the secretary. In this letter, the directors complain of the failure of the city to provide subsidies for the defraying of the common burdens of government, which, they say, is "contrary to the laws of all well regulated countries and cities, and in especial opposition to the government of this city." They urge that, "in this present conjuncture of time and circumstances," a further delay cannot be borne, that they have considered the necessity of securing means, and, therefore, have resolved upon the following taxes, viz:—ten stuivers on each morgen of land, per man; ten stuivers on each hand of horn cattle, per year; the twentieth penny, yearly, from the rent of houses. They also conclude to return the excise revenues to "the general treasury of the Company."—Rec. N. Am., I: 340-41.

25 This day is set apart by proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council to give the inhabitants of the city a day of fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, for invoking the divine blessing on the coming Dutch expedition from New Amsterdam against the Swedes on the Delaware.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 91-92. The proclamation was published by the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam "from the City Hall after previous ringing of the bell," on the 20th. All common business, "such as ploughing, sowing, mowing, fishing, hunting, etc., as well as all games of tennis, ballplaying, etc., was hung and drining," were forbidden on this fast day, "on pain of arbitrary correction."—Rec. N. Am., I: 342-44. See Sept. 5.

The captains and officers of the train-bands of New Amsterdam having asked Stuyvesant and the council "whether the Jewish people" who reside in the city shall also "train and mount guard with the Citizens' bands," after consideration, the council declares that "the said notice" is "not admitted or counted among the citizens" for such purposes in old Amsterdam or any other city in Holland, and that for this and other reasons they exempt them from military service in New Netherland, subjecting, however, all male Jews between sixteen and sixty years to a monthly tax, in lieu of service, and in consideration of the exemption.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 96; Laws of Ord. N. Neh., 191-92. On Nov. 5, the council heard a petition from Jacob Barsimmon and Aser Levy, two Jews, asking for leave to stand guard with otherburgers of the city or else to be relieved from the tax; "as they must earn their living by manual labor." This request was refused, but a consent was given to them "to depart whenever and whither" they wished.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 155, translated in full in Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. T., 25. It is evident, however, that Levy was admitted to keep "watch and ward" (lecti en mando) before Dec. 11, 1654, when he made the fact the ground of his application for admission as a burgfer of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 154. Cf. Oppenheim, op. cit., 24-25, 35.

The council orders the enrollment into the militia companies of New Amsterdam of all persons who live by sailing sloops up and down the river, and who have no fixed place of residence in the provinces.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 154; MSS., July 1, 1665 (g.n.).

On this day (Sunday), "after the sermon," the squadron of seven vessels, with a force on board of between 600 and 700 men, sets sail for the South River, against the Swedes. Stuyvesant is in command, accompanied by Vice-Director De Sille and Domine Megapolensius. On Sept. 11, they secured, without firing a gun, the capitulation of Fort Casimir, which the Swedes had held since June 1, 1654 (g.n.).—Broodhead, op. cit., I: 604. On Sept. 25, the Swedish Fort Christina surrendered.—Ibid., I: 605. For fuller treatment of this subject, with different dating of the above events, see Johnson, Dutch Settlements on the Delaware, II: Chap. 47; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 91-97.

The Indians make an unexpected attack on Manhattan and its environs, murdering and robbing the people and burning their property.—Rec. N. Am., I: 365; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 99. It was an act of vengeance, due to the suspected. "coup de main," on Feb. 18, 1664, when Van Houten and his party killed a half-dozen of New Netherlanders in their garden.—Broodhead, Hist. State of N. T., I: 666-7. There is another good contemporary account in Hallificate Mercurius, deed 6, 130-31. See also Van Tienhoven's account under Nov. 14, 1655.

To protect Stuyvesant's bouwery on Manhattan Island, during the Indian uprising at this time, some Frenchmen are hired by Cordeci Aertsen, by order of the company's fiscal, to remain on the property with him. Stuyvesant is absent on his expedition against the Swedes on the Delaware.—Rec. N. Am., II: 90-91. See March 6, and May 1, 1656.

The provincial council writes to Stuyvesant on the Delaware, 17 informing him of the Indian depredations at Manhattan and its environs, thus: "Madame, your Honor's wife, with her whole family and all those, in whom your Honor and she are concerned, are well. As the citizens are unwilling to go, other people's horses are sent far from the Manhattans, we have had advice to hire to Frenchmen, to protect your Honor's bouwery on the Mannhatts, subject to your Honor's pleasure. We'll keep as good watch as possible, and expect your Honor's speedy return, to lie in the fort night and day with the citizens, its difficulties, are not certain in common life like soldiers. We had much (more) to say, but not to grieve your Honor more, we will be silent, till another occasion, about the great murder of 100 men in 9 hours; all the country-people are flying, except those of Amersfoort [Flatlands], Midwout [Flatbush], Breukelen and the English villages. There is a great deal of lamenting here, which was given to the town by people of Manhattan "with murder, robbery and fire." Two members of the provincial council now meet with the board of burgomasters and schepens to consider "the present dangerous condition of the times." With unanimity, the conference adjudges it "necessary that the works of this City be again repaired," and resolves "that the burgomasters and schepens shall be required to repair with plank [§ 6] feet high, nailed to the sides of the Palisades," and the fence viewers of the city are commissioned "to contract for the said works at the smallest expense and quickest dispatch, in the presence" of the two burgomasters.—Rec. N. Am., I: 365, 366.

"This work was completed by Sept. 28, when the burgomasters reminded the council in writing that, with the council's knowledge "and at the request of the commonalty for the greater safety and security" of the city, "the outer works" were "furnished with a curtain of planks against an assault of the barbarous Indians." At this very time, Anthony van Cortlandt and the latter, and issued an appeal to the council for authority to raise, by a contribution among the commonalty, funds to pay for constructed public works and other work "still to be performed," which was estimated then to amount to "about Four thousand guilder."—Ibid., I: 365.

Two days later (Oct. 16), the council gave its assent, but advised that, before a final decision was reached, the schepens should be consulted and their signature obtained to the proposal, after which "further consideration" would be given to it by the council on the return of Stuyvesant from the Delaware, whence he was "daily expected."—Ibid., I: 365.

On Oct. 11, Stuyvesant and the council voted authority to the city to collect money and, if necessary, to make an assessment; also, at the proper time, to impose a tax on lots, houses, and real estate, for securing revenues for the repair of the city's works, the city hall, and other changes.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1531; Rec. N. Am., I: 366–67; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 196–97. From Oct. 11 to 15, the "trading skippers, merchants, factors, passengers and . . . Common Burgelry" of New Amsterdam were obligated for 6,500 florins as voluntary or assessed taxes to the city's treasury.—Rec. N. Am., I: 365–75. On the 16th, the council empowered the burgomasters to collect the subscriptions and, in cases of nonpayment, to levy by execution.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1531.

All of the assessments were not readily collected, so the burgomasters, as treasurers of the city, on Feb. 1, 1656, appealed anew to the council for power to collect them; whereupon the council reference the matter to the commonalty, a step, as a sufficient warrant of authority.—Ibid., I: 365. Debts incurred for the planks were being liquidated by the city in the autumn of 1656 (Rec. N. Am., II: 165, 168, 171, 183); but, as late as Nov. 7 of that year, the city authorities said, when writing to the directors at Amsterdam, that "not one third part" of the assessment had been paid, "through inability of the Commonalty" (Ibid., II: 218).

The directors at Amsterdam again try to regulate the collection and transmission of the mails.—See summary under Aug. 6, 1652.

Orders are issued for the guard duties of the garrison.—See Sept. 17, 1652.

The director-general and council daily hear great complaints that "posts, rails, clapboards and other parts of the fences, being put around open fields and gardens" are being stolen day and night. They now order that anyone who wholly or partly strips any planted land of any of these protections shall be "whipped and branded for the first offense," and (for a further offense) "punished with the rope until death." Anyone reporting the offence shall be rewarded and his name concealed.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42–43.

For earlier provisions, see Dec. 31, 1654. This ordinance was renewed May 3, 1659, and Jan. 7, 1659.

A general agreement is levied to pay the city's debts.—Rec. N. Am., II: 366–75. For subsequent developments, see March 8, 1657.

An express having been sent to the South River to call the energetic director (Stuyvesant) home to New Amsterdam, he returns to revive the spirits of the colonists, among whom consternation had spread on account of the recent depredations of the Indians (see Sept. 15, 1656).—Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153. During "these dangerous times" of Indian depredations, some of the inhabitants have not hesitated "to go into the Country in small parties, or when going out in stronger force, to separate from each other." Through this exposure, some people, caught off their guard, have been taken captive, whilst others have been killed by the Indians. To prevent this state of affairs, Stuyvesant and the council decree that nobody shall attempt "to go inland" without a pass from them, and that, when permission has been obtained by a party, no member shall run off or become separated from his associates. Those who act contrary to order are, if taken captive, to pay their own ransom and the expenses of their return.

The burgomasters write to Stuyvesant and the council that they find, by daily experience and petitions presented to them, that there are in the city widows and orphans for whom they deem it necessary that proper provision be made, "in order that they and their property and effects" may "be properly employed and administered." They request, therefore, the commissioning of certain persons who may attend to that duty, "as Orphan Masters." At the same time, they submit four names to the council, out of which two are to be designated. Stuyvesant and the council, accordingly, commissioned Pieter Wolhoven and Pieter Cornelissen Van Veen, on the 19th, "to take charge, in the aforesaid office of the Estate of the widows and orphans in communication with and after instructions from the Burgomasters."—Rec. N. Am., I: 380; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153. The appointees served as overseers of orphans, and the two burgomasters continued to sit as judges of the orphans' court, until an independent court, in the nature of a surrogates' court, was created on Feb. 25, 1656 (p. v.).—Rec. N. Am., II: 44–45.

The minutes of the court, from 1655, were translated and edited by Berthold Fernow, in two volumes, for which see the Bibliography, Vol. V. On Nov. 29, Jacob Kirp was appointed vendue master or public auctioneer to the court of orphan-masters.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153. See Feb. 10, 1653.

Many people have been taken captive during the past month by the Indians in their depredations. Some persons, "by going backward and forward to the Indians," are responsible for the circulation of false reports, both among the whites and the Indians, for which reason Stuyvesant and the council now forbid any further communication of this kind. Whenever a boat is despatched by the government "to have a talk with the Indians about the ransom of Prisoners," on its return, the anxious inhabitants of the shore of the North River (very likely the Beaver Path), and by "unseemly clamor" alarm the Indians and create an unfavourable suspicion, so that they will "not come over to speak with the Director General and Council." A stop is put to this curiosity by an ordinance. Those who are "found in or about the streets" whenever "the Director General's return or returns, or when any Indians come over to the city, are to be arrested by the military and confined, and parents are "particularly admonished to inform their children hereof."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 200–1; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 153, 152.

Commissioners appointed by Stuyvesant, in the name of the Hon'ble Directors of the West India Company on the one part, and Capt. Thomas Willett, of Plymouth in New England, merchant, on the other part," cause to be recorded at the provincial secretary's office a bill of sale to Willett of the ship "Abraham's Sacrifice," for 3,539 gilders, "payable in good beef and pork, to wit: the fresh unsalted beef and pork to be delivered at the Manhattan clean on the hook at three stivers and a half the pound, on beef; and the pound of good pork at four and a half stivers; the salt beef in barrels, four stivers, the salt pork in barrels five stivers; it being understood that the half of the purchase money must be paid in the above-named provisions, all in good condition, previous to this winter, and the other half in the spring in the month of April [1656]. . . . It is also agreed that the Prince's flag shall be retained by the Company, on condition that so much bunting shall be delivered to Mr. Willett as is necessary to make an English flag."—Record N. Neth. (O'Callaghan's trans.), III: 138. (N. Y. State Library.)

interest of the item is in its reference to the repair of the street, which, if paving is meant, is the earliest recorded reference to paving in the city. See below.

First Councillor Nicolas de Sille makes the following extraordinary anidiversions with respect to Director-General Stuyvevant and Fiscal Van Tienhoven, in a letter to Hans Bontemantel, one of the directors at Amsterdam and a commissioner for New Netherland, in a holograph in the N. Y. Pub. Library, N. Neth. Papers, No. 1124. An annotation by Bonteman-tel reads: "Answered the 11th March, 1666." The text of the answer is not extant. The translation of the De Sille letter follows:

"Mr. Bontemantel:

I have to report our sad experiences, and the common misfortune. I hope that the Honorable Estimates of the General will now at least open their eyes and not place any more confidence in the flattering letters. We have been, as you will perceive from the general letter and the journal of the first of September, at the South River, where we have captured the fortresses Casemier and Christina from the Swedes without any combat or firing a shot. While lying before Christina, we received letters, that at the Manathay some hundreds of savages came, who were destroying there by murdering, setting afire, and taking captives, so that the General departed from us on the 19th of October, in the small vessels for New Amsterdam in New Netherland, leaving me behind with Captain Conijnx to regulate everything at the South that was required for the repair of Fort Casemier, as you will be more explicitly informed by the journal. In consequence thereof, I arrived here only on Friday night, the 22d of October, finding everything in a bad condition, the houses on Staten Island all burned down, and those at Pavan's, with some others, more than 100 dead and many prisoners, who are daily ransomed by us. There were ten nations of savages and only a little over sixty of them were killed, the others still use menacing threats, lying in the envious of Manathay, but we have invited their chiefs to us, who have promised to come and reach an agreement. The community and all the householders who have sought refuge here, call for revenge and murder against the fiscal and two or three others, whom they loudly proclaim by name to have been the only causes of the attack. The General is not praised, because he does not investigate, but upholds, as it appears, the fiscal; does not lend much ear to the complainants, and when I say anything, or make inquiry, or want to do something, nobody pays attention to me. Everything happened in my absence, so that I do not know how things continue here any longer. I must allow that, in all to bide little for me, the wagon does not go straight, everyone folows his own counsel; the General and the fiscal act together, but make it appear before everybody as if they were great enemies. La Montagne is also in the cabal. The people want to go to Hol-lantz and I cannot consent with them to depart with their armed orders; therefore it is now my humble request that you will show yourself favorable toward me. Whereas, when I propose something, or should do something, they will not give me instructions by which I can act or give orders, as has already happened when the General went to Curaçao, and other times. Neither will he [Stuyvevant] give me orders, saying, 'do as you please;' and he takes me all over with him, wherever he goes, which I neither will nor can refuse him, though it is highly necessary that one of us always remain here to keep everything in good order, as I have proposed several times but was answered: 'Have you any writing or authorization for that?' And, perhaps, had either one of us remained here, this [Indian depredation] would not have happened. And what has been done at the South River, Captain Conijnx and I could easily have accomplished. But if I have to go along with one or the other, then the one who remains can clay his part, and they understand each other. For this reason I have requested before an Act or authorization from the Honorable Lords Directors with which they did not comply, hence I prefer to you the following request, if you think it advisable, to present it to the meeting, and to support the same, that I may have some influence by virtue of their case those two [Stuyvevant and Van Tienhoven] should be continued [in their offices]. If not, as we hope, that a General be sent who is not selfish, and no untutored fiscal, and also another able councellor; because I and La Montagne have only two votes, and the director and the fiscal have three together, so we are Oct. 27 obliged to follow them whether right or wrong, whether it be to the profit or loss of the Company, and, therefore, everything cannot go well here; but I fear an evil and short end. I have also before written about these matters to Messrs. van Beeck and Man, and have learned that my correspondence was not very acceptible to their Honors. But I protest before God and the world, that if no alteration takes place in this matter, that I cannot perform my duties with a good conscience, for, moreover, everything is going to ruin here. I would write more, but you and the Honorable Lords Directors will be fully able to read in the general letter and the journal, and the accompanying affidavits, about what has passed here. I also think it advisable, that the passengers and the other people, who now go over with these two ships, should, each in particular, be examined; because they were all present and under arms. Then the Honorable Lords will speedily discover the reason and know the cause through which these disasters have befallen us.

"Now ending this, I commend you and all friends to the protection of the Almighty and recommending myself to your good graces, I remain, Sir,

"Your honor's obliging servant

Nicolas de Sille"

Stuyvevant addresses a confidential letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, although there is a contemporary copy in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1125 (2), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. No text of an answer from the directors is known to be extant. A digest is given here of the most important items in Stuyvevant's letter, viz: He says he returned from Curaçao to "Mannades," on July 10, in the ship "De Liefde." Councillor Nicolas de Sille not a trustworthy man; exploit on South (Delaware) River, against Sweden, and account of expedition to be had from his journal and general missives sent over to directors; has no confidence in Johan de la Montagne; blames massacres by Indians on official of New Netherland; 28 boweries destroyed, 12,000 schoepels of corn (grain) burned, 40 Christians massacred, and about 100 captured, mostly women and children; his opinion, that firm peace with Indians is best thing; that they be kept from coming into any village or place with arms (guns); that they be obliged to deliver up murderers to be punished; that drunken Indians be kept in prison; that when animals are killed by them, they should be made to pay for them; refers to swearing, drinking, and prof-fanation of holy Sabbath; admonition needed to make a contract with English, offensive and defensive; separate country dwellings not yet close to one another; commonality want revenge against Indians; Fiscal Cornelis van Tienhoven hated, and even English speak against him; Vice-Director Mathys Bex, of Curaçao, could be made in ships because they have much fine credentials from Reuf, and later of Stars, where he had been director; former Fiscal Van Dijck charged with betraying an Indian to death, and selling much brandy to Indians, making them drunk; Cornelis Jacobsen Steynwyck sent to Amsterdam with commission to do and adjust everything as instructed on behalf of New Netherland.

Stuyvevant and the council address a general missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which, also, has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract exists in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1125 (3), in the N. Y. Pub. Library, and the answer of the directors is proposed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 63-64; XIV: 140, ff. On account of the importance of this item, the principal parts are here summarized, with more or less particularity, viz: Letters relating to the sale and delivery of the lands on the South (Delaware) River were all seat over to Amsterdam by the ships "Volommen," and "Waeterhont," in 1671; all old and new documents obtainable to be sent in best form by the ship "Nieu Amsterdam," but former Director-Gen. Kieft took away many of them; treaty of Hartford, 1659; usurpation of "Meerst Pel" (Thomas Pell) of the land called "Vreelant," and other English intriguers; English claim the West Indians' author for the two, and that they had only a limited "octroy," but that declared to be untrue, the company had an enduring right for all time from the states-general; concerning the levying of a subsidy on the commonality of New Amsterdam, they promise that advices will be sent by the ships "Wael" and "Bontckoec;" Jewish freedom considered very dangerous, since Christians were hindered in trading, and freedom granted to them made it impossible to refuse it to Lutherans and Papists; little obtained from the commonalty for expenses against the English in the late war, or against the Swedes before the fortresses were taken with plans; Indians burned 28 bouweries and 10,000 shekels of corn; changes made in the ground-briefs to be sent to the directors; revenues from land, beer, and wine; revenues of New Amsterdam countermanded by the company; income, in 1655, was 22 to 23 thousand guilders, but now greatly reduced and expenses heavy; pertinent financial report now impossible, yet to be sent by ship "Waeg" for each year, if Carel van Brugge, the bookkeeper, does not prove dejectile; full report of the exploit at the South (Delaware) River sent in enclosure No. 15; principal land conveyances and copies of particular acts to be sent over; Indian deeds and conveyances; Indians sell as often as they secure buyers; Dutch rights against Swedes over the South River to be sustained, and Dutch argument based upon prior possession, since they had there three fortresses, in the north, in the middle, and above on the river, in 1654 and 1656, together with a trading-house surrounded by palisades, etc., although afterwards deserted, and later in 1659, bought and fortified at the mouth of the river, about the Horeckill on the land of Swenendael; and, again, in 1655, Fort Nassau was laid out in the middle of the river, being five or six years before ever the Swedes came on this river; copies of lands bought from the Dutch and Governor result of 1658; given in enclosure no. 71; sending authentic copy of provisional boundary made with the English, at Hartford, in 1650; carpenters and work at New Amsterdam; faults in bookkeeping system to be overcome by improvements; villages of Breuckelen, Midwoud, etc., cannot support minister at present, and Petrus Horn, preacher at Tamarica, in Brazil, known to all, and he was minded to go to Holland in the "Waeg," so that these villages might learn who was to be their teacher; change in ships' recognizances from 16 to 10 cent. not conducive to trade; conditions on the Delaware; letter from Stockholm reveals that a Swedish ship lay ready to come over to New Netherland and then to defend the Delaware; magistrates of New Amsterdam require excise collected in New Netherland and loans of Le Bijou were sent from Holland; many passengers held back when ship "Nieu Amsterdam" sailed, and some protested; complaint against "schotten" (traders) who sell to Indians, to the damage of regular merchants; no firelocks ("snaphaenen") to be used unless 3½ feet long; surgeon-barbers needed for Curacao, Delaware River, and other places; sending remonstrance on account of depressed state of the company; sending Cornelis Jacobsen Steven- wijk, clerk, as agent in Virginia, and permitting him to authorize him to remonstrate everywhere by word of mouth.

The Treaty of Westminster is signed by England and France.

England is left in possession of Acadia.—Winsor, IV: 1651 V: 476.

Cromwell declares war on Spain; the war continued until 1659.

Notwithstanding the repeated publication of ordinances prohibiting the running at large of gents, some of the inhabitants still allow their goats to come within the city limits. The "loud complaints" of the burgurers to Stuyvesant and the council, that these animals are destroying gardens, cornfields, fruit-trees and other trees in their rampage, induce them to renew the former prohibition, and to demand that all goats be kept and herded beyond or across the Fresh Water, and at night be shut up in a barn or stable, on pain of forfeiture if found south of the Fresh Water, for the benefit of the poor.—Land & Ord. N. Neth., 201-2.

Stuyvesant addresses a particular letter to the directors at Amsterdam to Bruce, which has been lost. In the N. Neth. Papers, No. 1235(5), in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The most important items are digested here, viz.: Complaint against the secrecy of the directors at Amsterdam; Indians in New Netherland are stirred up by the Dutch to resist the plan of capitulation; aiding by a breach, and not by the force of habit; Councillor La Montagne is a bad instrument—a snake harbored in the bosom of the colony. La Montagne's "mix up" with the Swedes after the capitulation; La Montagne went to church, and, on the way, in the presence of Fiscal Tienhoven, Capt. Cregier, Lieut. Newton, and Secretary Van Ruyven, uprooted a Dutchman's garden, in the presence of the burgurers; recommends keeping a watchful eye on the Swedes, etc.; handmaids wanted to equip the burgurers (byrdywyten), also 200 soldiers capable of guarding all; Swedish commander, Ryuing, gone to Sweden, via England; he requested passage money and was given 300 pounds, Flemish, to be returned in six months, etc.; transport of well soldiers to Sweden.

See Nichols, Delaware, for further petition for the burgurers and specie for permission "to tap and to keep taverns and lodgings," pleasing misfortune, he having been driven away from his place by Indian troubles, and his property having been burnt and lost. Granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 395. This seems to refer to Nicolaes Jansen, baker, who, on May 15, 1665, (p. v.), received a ground-brief for a lot on the Pearl St., between Whitehall and Broad St.—See Castello Plan, II: 268; and Dutch Grants, II: 386.

On account of "divers petitions" presented to the burgurers and specie by refugees and others who are inclined to settle in New Amsterdam, and who have requested "small lots in the city, on which each, according to his ability," may erect a house, the board has presented the matter orally to Stuyvesant, who answered that "a proper survey must be first made." They now apply to the council, requesting cooperation and the commissioning of suitable persons to make the survey. Stuyvesant and the council reply the same day, "adjudging the survey particularly necessary," and appoint Johannes La Montagne, councillor, and Allard Anthony, burgomaster, together with the regular fence viewers or city surveyors, "to advance the desired survey," as they judge fit, "without any regard to persons, gardens, or places," in order that settlers may neither (Col.) nor (Lat.) be lost. If it is found that the survey happens "to run through any person's garden," the surveyors are "specially authorized to value, in the readiest and most reasonable manner, the lots coming, according to the aforesaid survey, on the ground already disposed of, only learning the several times, in the knowledge and advice of the Director General and Council."—Rec. N. Am., I: 393-394; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 155. This resulted in the making of a survey of the city, which "survey and plot map of New Amsterdam," according to which the streets were staked out, was confirmed and approved by the council on Feb. 25, 1656, (p. 63).—Col. Hist. Mus. Dutch, II: 165; Rec. N. Am., I: 43. This is the earliest plan of the city of which we have any knowledge. It may have been made by Frédéric de Koninck.—See Lost Maps, II: 165.

Stuyvesant recommends that "no Indian, coming to any place, village or hut, shall be allowed to remain there over night, except in a special place, to be fixed upon for that purpose according to the localities of the village," and "that no Indian with any kind of arms shall be allowed to come into any place or hamlet on the penalty of being seized and forfeiting the arms, which he has with him." He also decrees that the sale to any Indian of strong drink shall be punishable by imprisonment for a period not to exceed one year, and that the imprisonment of the drunken Indian "until he shall have told, from whom he has received the liquor."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 53-54.

An important recommendation is made by Stuyvesant to his council with respect to having fixed places for trading with the Indians. He says: "We ought to endeavour with all possible smoothness to balk the Indians in the use of their guns and ammunition; to accomplish which, it is, I believe, necessary, to prohibit generally, that anybody should trade and negotiate with the Indians except upon a certain place, to be determined upon, and further to forbid, that any gun or locksmith shall repair any lock or make a new one, except upon the showing of a note with our seal, in which the name, for whom, is stated and that then the gun shall be marked or branded and a record kept of them."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 54. See Nov. 27, 1655, for De Sillé's opinion.

Another recommendation is suggested to his council, that no part of the spacious and extensive country, in the neighbourhood of New Amsterdam, where there are no separate bouweries or plantations shall be made, but that the out-living farmers shall be compelled to draw together their deserted houses, and henceforth no one be allowed to settle in the open country, except in clusters of at least 12, 16 or 18 families huddled together, as the plan of Eltinge, or on the ground of by him and the council, or their deputies, and "that henceforward nobody is allowed to live on the separate places, which have been either burned or deserted" during the late Indian depredations. He also suggests that on the occasion of forming new villages and hamlets a blackhouse shall be erected for the sake of the inhabitants. —N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 53.

As there is some sentiment for beginning another Indian war, Stuyvesant tells the council why he thinks the time not propitious.
When it is suggested that some Indians might be captured, in order to exchange them for Christians held in captivity, Stuyvesant declares that it is "too dangerous for the present and impracticable besides." He adds: "I say too dangerous, because new occasion might thereby be given to the savage tribes either to murder the captives or to carry them off further forth without let or hindrance, with the hope to ransom them and I value the blood of one captured Christian more than 100 Indians." He thinks it better to get back the captives from the Indians "by the friendliest means, even if it were by giving some contraband articles as presents."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIX: 25, 53, 54. See also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., 3: 606-11.

14 Secretary Van Tienhoven, in reply to Stuyvesant's proposals of November 10 (q. v.), states that, "after a general peace had been concluded with the natives in August 1655, the peace and the articles of the treaty have been infringed and broken as follows: First in killing 114 Christians since August 1655 (up to 15th Septbr 1655) at different places and at various times, for which we have never been able to get justice done, much less satisfaction, notwithstanding we asked for it in accordance with the treaty, but on the contrary they have fouled us with lies and false reports." He says: "The Indians have committed their violation and broken the treaty of peace in an outrageous manner in this city [New Amsterdam] on the 15th of September last, as follows: In that they landed very early on the river shore within the city-walls from 64 canoes about 500 men, all in arms, without having given previous notice of it, and that they, immediately upon their arrival, although the citizens were at hand, ran in large crowds of armed men through the streets, breaking forcibly into the house of Mr. [Isaac] Allerton, bursting off the lock of the door, threatening and beating the people; that they quickly searched the house under the pretext of finding arms for Northern Indians, as they did in many houses in this city, until upon the complaints of the inhabitants, and to avoid further troubles, they were driven from the High Street [Hoogh Straet, now Stone St.] to the banks of the North river, where their canoes lay [sic] and they had landed in the morning." He adds: "In that the citizens and other inhabitants of this city, in all the different tribes were asked in a friendly manner "to appear at the Council-chamber in the fort, which they did." Here they were asked by the councilors, "in the presence of the Burgomasters, Schepens, citizens and military officers, for the reasons of their coming thus armed" and molesting the people. The council and city authorities thereupon requested that in the interest of mutual safety "and to prevent mischief and trouble the savages should remove themselves from this island [of Manhattan] to Noten-Island [now Governors Island], which they promised and then took their departure." But "instead of leaving, as they had promised, they joined in the evening, more, they shot after guard-mounting Hendrick van Dyck, the former Fiscal, with an arrow into the breast and threatened to kill Paulus Leendertsen [vander Griff], Captain of the train-hands, with an arrow." This led to the cry of "Murder, murder, the savages kill the Dutch," and "by this dismal cry the citizens, standing under arms in the fort, to keep good watch, were thrown rather into confusion and hastened without any order through the gates and over the walls, so that they came in conflict with the savages, who were prepared, on the strand. Two Dutchmen were killed and three wounded; three savages remained dead on the strand, where they were found (afterwards). After this rencontre had taken place the savages went over the river and elsewhere and burned during the night many houses, murdered and captured Christians, killed cattle, and a few days later cleared Staten-Island people and houses." This action was "contrary to the articles of peace, made in the year 1654, whereby it was expressly stipulated, that if reciprocally on one or the other side one or more persons had been killed or murdered, no general war should therefore immediately be begun, but that the injured party should make its complaints to the chiefs or magistrates of this city, when had it from the citizens, justice might be meted out to the malefactors, according to circumstances." Van Tienhoven gave judgment that it was "just and righteous to make war on the Indians for the breaking of the treaty and their fearful misdeeds." He believed it was necessary to reduce them to submission, which in March he considered it not feasible; therefore he recommended that authority to begin war be secured from the superiors in Amsterdam, and that in the meantime they should "dissemble, Nov. though it be unpleasant, and if possible not spare some small presents, in order to bring the savages to a truce, without making an absolute compact, and help the captives" in the hands of the Indians. He also urged preparation, by placing the villages "on a defensive footing, and beat the savages from Holland. Without such reinforcement from abroad, he said, he did not believe a war could, "humanly speaking, be brought to a desirable end." This opinion Van Tienhoven wrote out on the 14th, but "Delivered the 29th Novbr 1655."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 56-57. See also Sept 15, 1656.

Solomon Pietersen La Chair, notary public, is granted permission by the burgomasters and schepens "to keep [a] tavern in the house of Teunis Kraye" (present cor. Stone and Broad Sts)—Rec. N. Am., I: 401. This is the earliest reference to him in the records. He dwell in one of the houses owned by Jacob Stuyvendam, the poet, and had "lived there" one quarter "when suit was brought for the rent, on March 6, 1656—Ibid., II: 53.

Michiel Jansen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission "to tap, as he has in this recent [Indian] disaster been driven off and lost half his cattle "on the island of an old man with a large family." It is granted.—Rec. N. Am., I: 406. His deserted property was on his grant in Pavonia (N. J.)—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 37 (see also 61). The tavern house at New Amsterdam was at the present No. 12 State St.—See Castello Plan, II: 284-85, Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976. Jansen also had a brew-house on the Beaver St. tide of the present Demmonico building.—See Castello Plan, III: 502; and Feb. 15, 1666.

Councillor Nicolas de Sille, in reply to Stuyvesant's proposals of Nov. 10 (q. v.), says: "if the war with the Indians is brought to a close, first the natives must be forbidden not only this island [Manhattan] but also the city [New Amsterdam] and especially the fort and that all inhabitants must be interdicted to give them lodgings and, by penalty of the gallows, to sell or give them brandy, but that a trading place should be appointed for them, the Indians, outside or in small chapels representing the places most suitable: that the soldiers' quarters in our fort must be finished speedily, also the gates provided with locks, and other means of securing it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 54.

Councillor La Montagne gives his opinion in answer to Stuyvesant's proposals of Nov. 10, stating, among other things, that it cannot be determined whether the recent troubles with the Indians constitute ground for a war, "because it is necessary to know first, whether they [the Indians] were the cause of it or not." Referring to events which laid the Indians "open to suspicion," he says: "First the unreasonable gathering here of 1000 savages, without our knowledge or knowledge of this city, to attack, contrary to their usual manner, 50 or 60; was it not sufficient to cause suspicion of their bad intentions? And did not their insufferable insolence, shown by breaking into Mr. [Isaac] Allerton's house and beating some of our citizens in their own houses increase that suspicion?" He also adds: "As to captivity, experience has taught us, that they must be ransomed."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 55-56.

Seven Indians from Long Island appear before Stuyvesant and Pieter Wolphertsen [van Couwenhoven], the latter "the Lieutenant of the train-hands," and able to speak the "Indian language." One of the Indians, named Adam, who "spoke very good English," makes a statement on behalf of the chief sachem, "Marie-pain, called Tachpausan, alias Meartuninim, the well-known Tackpouche, chief of the Massapeogn, and the other Indians of the island, declaring their friendship and observance of peace during the late Indian troubles. "He further presents a box with wampum, which, he says, has been sent by his Sachem Tachpausan and the chiefs on the east end of Long-Island with the request to accept it as a token of their friendship," and as an assurance that whenever aid is needed from the sachem or his people, it will be given as fast as the need, so that the people may be "in peace." The provincial treasury has been severely depleted by "excessive expenses incurred the last year on account of the English troubles, and now again de novo created by the Southern [Delaware] expedition," as well as by the more recent "deplorable encounter with the Indians in the season of the year," an increase in the number of Indians and their increased throughout New Netherland.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 192-5. At the same time the brewing price of "strong New Netherlands Beer” is regulated by ordinance.—Ibid., 203–4; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 156.

32. Israel Bensel Valk is commissioned as provost marshal and takes office.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 156.

Dec. 30. Warners Weesela, at public outtry, again becomes the farmer of the tapsters’ excise on wine and beer consumed in New Amsterdam, for one year from date, at 5,000 guilders, payable in quarterly instalments. The excise rates are fixed by the provincial council.—Records N. Neth. (O’Callaghan’s trans.), III: 158 (N. Y. State Library); Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 156.

15. The court of burgomasters and schepens is adjourned, “according to the custom of our Fatherland,” until eight days after Christmas, for ordinary court days.—Rec. N. Am., I: 419.

31. The experience derived from past occurrences shows that celebrations on New Year’s and May Days have led to much drunkenness and other insolences, an unnecessary waste of powder, and deplorable accidents. See Dec. 30, 1658. An ordinance is now passed, on the eve of the new year, by Stuyvesant and the council, in which they forbid the firing of guns, planting of Maypoles, beating of drums, and treating with intoxicants on New Year’s or May Days anywhere in New Netherland, under a system of penalties for infractions of the law. The edict is at once published and acts on the same day, the New Year’s day of New Amsterdam, with the usual formalities.— Laws & Ord. N. Neth. 205–6; Rec. N. Am., I: 18–19, 419–21.

At some time prior to this year, Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt’s brewery was erected, as indicated by a reference in Rec. N. Am., II: 234. It covered the site of Nos. 11–13 Stone St.—See Castello Plan, II: 231–53; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963.

Prior to this year, a horse-mill was erected for Jacob Wolphertsen van den Broekhuizen at the rear of what is now 41 Stone St. It was demolished in 1660.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961. See also Dec. 20, 1656.

About this year, Hans Depper opened a tavern at the present intersection of Pearl, Bridge, and Broad Sts., where the Bush Terminal building now stands. It was discontinued in 1667.—See Castello Plan, II: 269; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

In this year, Charles II, while in exile, was invited to join the colony of Virginia, and be its king. This incident suggested the title of “The Old Dominion.”

From this year to 1659 England was at war with Spain, caused by English aggression on the sea. See Oct. 21, 1660.

In this year, Dominique Megapolensis erected a house upon his grant (Liber Deeds, A: 27), the site being that of the present Nos. 9 and 11 Broadway. Balthazar Bayard acquired the house in 1674.—Orig. Book of N. Y. T. Deeds, 1671–1675, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Col. Office, 415 (1913), 32–73. Augustus Jay subsequently erected a substantial mansion upon the same ground; and here, also, for many years, the Atlantic Garden stood, one of the famous taverns and places of resort in the early nineteenth century. See June 2, 1735; Pl. 56, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 950–51, 976; and Pl. 174, Vol. III. Valentine is in error in stating (Man. Corp. Coun., 1854, pp. 443–45; ibid., 1858, opp. p. 58; and ibid., 1865, pp. 613–14) that the Kings Arms Tavern, or “Burns Coffee House,” stood on this site. See “Atlantic Garden” and “King’s Arms Tavern” in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976, 979.

New Amsterdam contained, in 1656, when first surveyed, probably by Capt. De Coningh (see Nov. 10, 1653), 120 houses, and 1,000 souls. —O’Callaghan, Hist. of New Neth. (1848), II: 480.

The receipts of the West India Co. from recognizances and conveyances of ships to and from New Netherland, a total of eight ships, were 24, 81,448 florins. —N. Y. Neth. Papers, No. 1200, op. cit.

Stuyvesant, while staying over the 1660 (p. 2) to the directors of the West India Co., said: “We thought it advisable to send you also a small sketch of the city, drawn in perspective by Sieur Augustin Heermans three or four years ago,” etc. This view, which may be the one from which the original of Pl. 6, Vol. I, was engraved, was therefore probably drawn in this or the following year.

Governor’s Code of Laws is published in London. These laws are usually called the “Blue Laws of Connecticut.” —Winsor, III: 371–73.

Megapolensis and Drisius, the two Dutch clergymen of New Amsterdam, petition Stuyvesant and the council against the holding of “convicticles and gatherings” at middelburg (Newtowns, L. I.), by “some inhabitants and unqualified persons,” who presume “to teach the Gospel; whereupon, an order is made in council that “placards” shall be issued against the practice.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 336–37.

Among certain questions which Stuyvesant submits to his council for solution is one ‘whether it is not necessary, to make a general monthly muster of all men, able to bear arms, in each village or hamlet, to find out how they are armed and to take and list them, in order to prevent the selling or destroying of the arms.” The council resolves, thereupon, that the magistrates of each village be directed "to make inquiries in private, what arms the people in their jurisdictions had and to report them to the high Council."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 59. See also Nov. 10, 1657.

The isolation of the country people from one another has resulted in "many murders of People, killing and destruction of Cattle, and burning of Houses" by Indian incursions. This was particularly true during the Indian uprising of Sept., 1655. Stuyvesant and the council now declare that the inhabitants ought to profit from these sad experiences, and "form compact dwellings in suitable places," so that the government can assist and maintain its subjects. A provincial ordinance is, therefore, promulgated by them, commanding the scattered inhabitants "to concentrate themselves in the form of towns, villages, and hamlets," and declaring that those who remain thereafter "on their isolated plantations," will "do so at their peril without obtaining, in time of need, any assistance," and that they will "moreover be fined annually in the sum of 23 guilders for the behoof of the public."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 206–7; Rec. N. Am., I: 19–20; II: 17–18. See also Feb. 9, 1660.

The election of burgomasters and schepens took place annually, on Candlemas Day (Feb. 2). Until now, they were named and appointed solely by the director-general and council. A new election being near at hand, the ruling burgomasters and schepens now petition for the privilege to "nominate a double number of the new incoming Burgomasters and Schepens," from which the director-general and council can "at the usual time . . . select and confirm a single number." The requiree to nominate is at once granted, yet with a proviso that "no opponents" of the supreme government shall be included, and with a reservation that if the supreme authority chooses it can "commission any person . . . whom the nomination" suits.—Rec. N. Am., II: 16–17; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 158. On Jan. 24, Cornelis van Tienenhoven, the schepen, proposed “that a day be fixed for assembling," in order to make the nomination, and that, more especially, "each of the burgomasters present shall have a nomination without communicating the same to anybody else." Accordingly, the board met on the 31st, certified a double number of nominees, and requested Stuyvesant and the council to "be pleased to elect from them the wisest, most intelligent and best qualified." On Feb. 2, Stuyvesant and the council resolved, "for pregnant reasons moving them hereunto, . . . to continue for another year the Burgomasters and Schepens at present in office for the sake of peace and harmony, for the welfare of this City, and only to supply the two vacancies of Schepens with two other reasonable and proper persons," who were, however, among those that had been certified as nominees.—Rec. N. Am., II: 24–30. See, further, Jan. 30, 1658.

Stuyvesant and the council decree that, in order to prevent "sudden confabulations" in New Amsterdam, "no houses" shall henceforth "be roofed with straw or reeds," nor any more chimneys be constructed "of clapboards in the form of Taverns, Villages and required to promulgate the ordinance by placards. This they did on the 20th, "after former ringing of the bell," at the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., I: 205; II: 18, 19; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 207–8.

On Feb. 26, the burgomasters, realizing from former experience that many house owners were negligent in caring for their fires, and remiss in keeping their chimneys clean, from which confabulations had resulted because "the greater part of the houses" were of wood, "some covered with reed, with wooden and clapboard chimneys," named fire-wardens to inspect without interference and Germanize all the houses within the city, and to issue such orders in each place for fire prevention as they judged best, with power to see that these orders were carried out.—Rec. N. Am., II: 44. See also Dec. 15, 1657.
164 THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1656 Jan. 18 Cows, hogs, and other animals are reported as having been stolen in the meadows, and slaughtered by persons said to be whites, yet who go "under the guise and name of Indians." To prevent this misdemeanor, Stuyvesant and the council, by ordinance, establish an excise on slaughtered cattle, forbidding "every the butcher’s daughter" within the city of New Amsterdam, "or any other Town, Village or Hamlet on the Flatland," unless he first enters his cattle, on the day for slaughtering, with the magistrates of the particular place to which he belongs, or with the persons whom the magistrates have designated in the respective localities. The permit, for the owner or wife of the magistrate or collector one stiver in the guider on the true value of each animal, whether Ox, Cow, Calf, Hog, or Sheep. The proceeds are designated as local funds, to be used, "in time of need," for "the maintenance and protection of the public interests and the villages," such as "the levy of soldiers or purchasing of necessary ammunition." Transgressors are to be fined, and the proceeds divided equally among the informer, the officer, and for the public benefit. Publication of this law was made at the city hall on the 20th. The revenues received by the city of New Amsterdam from the slaughter tax must have been of some account. Stuyvesant declared, however, that he was ignorant of what was being done with this income, and, on Sept. 4, he made interrogation, which led to the farming out of the excise by the city authorities.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 208-9; Rec. N. Am., I: 29; II: 19, 1656.

24 The remaining burgomaster, Allard Anthony, presents to the burgomasters and schepens a proposal which Stuyvesant has made to him, namely, that it is "highly necessary to divide the Old Graveyard," now "wholly in ruins," into lots to be built upon, and to make another grave-yard, "south of the Fort," and to remove the houses standing there, on a valuation." The board decided that it is "highly necessary to establish a Graveyard at another place, or to put it [the old one] in good order," but that, for the present, it is "not . . . advisable to throw down the houses, south of the Fort and locate it there." They consider "it would be better, west of the Fort, in the neighborhood of the Windmill," where there is "a good hill clear of timber."—Rec. N. Am., II: 24-25. This mill was the grist-mill of the West India Co., and stood in what is now Battery Pl., at Greenwich St.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 901; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

This old burial-place lay on the west side of Broadway, a little north of the present Morris St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 907. It is also shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Pl. 82, Vol. II) and described in II: 221-22. On June 15, 1666 (g. v.), it lay open and unfenced, so that hogs rooted in it. It was estimated that the fencing there was cost 500 guilders (5000), a college fund, would be suggested to be taken up for that purpose; but in November of that year, on account of the scarcity of funds in the church treasury, the mayor and aldermen resolved to advance as a loan from the burgheers' excise a sum sufficient to pay for the work.—Ibid., VI: 253, 255.

Among the business proposed by the remaining burgomaster, Allard Anthony, to his associates on the board, is an inquiry as to whether it is "advisable to have the Homic General [Stuyvesant] for the bell which stands idle in the Fort, either as a present or on valuation, to hang it, and make use of it, at the City Hall." Whereupon, they decide it is desirable, and authorize him to take up the matter with Stuyvesant at the "first opportunity," and also to "promote its accomplishment."—Rec. N. Am., I: 25; March 29. It was, no doubt, shortly after this that the cupola was added to the city hall to accommodate the bell. It first appeared in the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82, Vol. II); see also description of Castello Redrafts, II: 144.

As "the church in the Fort" is becoming "more and more out of repair, without anything having been done to it," and as Stuyvesant is at this time "the only Church-warden," since the other has "already died," the present Anthony, asks the burgomasters and schepens if it is not "advisable that a new Churchwarden be appointed," and Stuyvesant discharged from the post. They decide to submit a double nomination of four names to Stuyvesant and the council. This results in the appointment of Nicolas de Sille and Gotter Leekermans as churchwardens on March 1.—Direk Crismen is appointed provost marshal or jailer in the fort by the council. He was discharged from the public service by them on March 19, 1659.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 158, 162. For Jan. 25.

Gross frauds and smuggling having for a long time been experienced in connection with "the duties on Peltries" and the "import of thin fur," the council of March 29, 1656, ordered that, "if any Peltries are imported," the provincial authorities now resolve "to publicly let them to the highest bidder" in the middle of the ensuing March, "except the duties of the Customs and the 5 per cent on the Peltries," which are sent "direct by the return ships to Fatherland." That a more certain prevention of fraud and smuggling may obtain, they waive the payment of the custom and permit, for the owner or wife of the magistrate or collector one stiver in the guider on the true value of each animal, whether Ox, Cow, Calf, Hog, or Sheep. The proceeds are designated as local funds, to be used, "in time of need," for "the maintenance and protection of the public interests and the villages," such as "the levy of soldiers or purchasing of necessary ammunition." Transgressors are to be fined, and the proceeds divided equally among the informer, the officer, and for the public benefit. Publication of this law was made at the city hall on the 20th. The revenues received by the city of New Amsterdam from the slaughter tax must have been of some account. Stuyvesant declared, however, that he was ignorant of what was being done with this income, and, on Sept. 4, he made interrogation, which led to the farming out of the excise by the city authorities.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 208-9; Rec. N. Am., I: 29; II: 19, 1656. It is decided that the municipality is "to divers complaints of the great frauds and smuggling" that continued despite the edict against the practice, so that another ordinance was issued on April 27, prohibiting embarkation or removal unless entry were made first with the farmer of the customs, "or his Collector," at the weigh-house, and it is, for different seasons, a permit having first been obtained, with a bill of particulars. Duties on furs, beer, brandy, and wines were clearly prescribed. Moreover, after entry had been made, the goods were to be transported "before sundown on board or to their place of destination." Home-brewed New Netherland beer was declared exempt from export duties.—Ibid., 250-51.

Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance forbidding "Conventions and Meetings, whether public or private," which differ from those forming part of the system of the Reformed Dutch Church, and they establish a fine of 100 pounds Flemish to be paid by unqualified preachers. This ordinance was aimed to suppress the Independents at Middleburg (now Newtown), on Long Island, as well as to prevent the Lutherans in their endeavor to establish a congregation at New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 211-12; Rec. N. Am., I: 20-21. See also N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 336 and Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 377, 158. For other proceedings, see June 14, 1656; Jan.-Feb., 1657. The condition of "the bank on the East River, near the City gate" (at the present Pearl and Wall Sts.), is bad, and it is deemed necessary by the two burgomasters of the city that "a firm sheeting of thick plank or boards be constructed; "to begin the same at the point of the old City Works," which lie thereby, "and again to raise up the fence; also a large and suitable gate [the water gate] according to the plan and design of Capt. Coninck [Frederick de Koningh], and already begun to be fixed in the works" that this work shall "be executed with all possible speed and without any delay or alteration." They also resolve "that the sheeting before the City Hall" shall "be renewed with thick plank or boards, like the other work at the gate aforesaid according to the plan of Capt. Coninck."—Rec. N. Am., II: 29. It is interesting to note that this captain, whose engineering plans for the improvement of the city were advertised, had been commissioned by the directors at Amsterdam, on May 24, 1655, to take command of the man-of-war, "de Waegh" (Balance), immediately after they had chartered her from the city of Amsterdam. She was one of the four largest ships owned by that city, carried 36 guns, and had a man-bur. The ship was commissioned to proceed to a place where she arrived on Aug. 13, 1655, under instructions to participate in Stuyvesant's expedition against the Swedes on the Delaware, in that year. She was the flagship of the expedition. Capt. De Kopingh's ship continued about Amsterdam for many months after the success of the Delaware expedition, and arrived again at old Amsterdam, May 1656. The writer lingered, ad interim, at Amsterdam that his engineering plans and survey were designed for the city.—N. T. Col. Docs., XII: 16.

7 As Stuyvesant and the council have decided that the prevailing burglary laws "must be changed every three months," Oldof Steven- sen van Cortlandt presides over the court.—Rec. N. Am., II: 30.

Lodewyck Wost, a burgher of New Amsterdam, is granted permission by the burgomasters and schepens "to sell wine and beer by the small measure."—Rec. N. Am., II: 33. His place is advantageous situated as a tavern near the roadside and landing-place, at the foot of the North River, "in front of the Nieuw-diers' path" (Battery Place), and close to the fort. See Castello Plan, II: 215-16. For later became captain of the watch.—See Nov. 15, 1658.

15 Michiel Janssen, a "farmer and former resident" in New Amsterdam, petitions Stuyvesant and the council for "a lot within the city next to Abraham Clock, 30 to 36 feet wide." He says he has lost his entire savings of seventeen years in New Netherland by the recent Indian depredations, "all of which [at Pauvonia] has been cruelly burned or taken away" by the Indians, leaving him, his wife, and six children with "no means in this world," and "he desires to gain a living" in the city. He is "granted a small lot . . . next to Abraham Martensen Clock, measuring in front and rear 26 to 27 feet and as long as the lot of the said Abram Clock, provided that the petitioner shall fence the afore- said lot on the side toward the street in the same manner as the fencing has been begun on the city-gate." But a memorandum added, states: "The above order was annulled for some reasons on the 15th February 1656 and another lot granted to him."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 61. That other lot was on "The Schriers Hoek." The building now at No. 11 State St. exactly covers the site of his house and tavern.—See Castello Plan, II: 283-85; and Dutch Grants, III: 391. See also Nov. 22, 1655, and Addenda.

21 In reply to a petition of Van Hobocken, the schoolmaster (see March 23, 1655), for financial assistance, the burgomasters and schepens direct him to let them know "what he is allowed by each child per quarter, pursuant to instructions from the General and Council, which being done, further order shall be taken on petitioner's request."—Rec. N. Am., II: 357.

22 The states-general ratifies the Treaty of Hartford, with respect to the boundary line between the "United English Colonies" and the "Dutch Province of New Netherland," which was agreed to on Sept. 19, 1650 (q.v.)—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 215, 457; N. Y. Col. Doc., I: 611-12.

Stuyvesant submits to the council proposals urging the providing of ways and means for the support of the government, the balancing of the public accounts, and the concentration of the outlying settlers into villages.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 160. These suggestions seem to have been renewed by him on March 3, when he added another proposal in relation to Indian affairs.—Ibid., 162. See also Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 524-35; Rec. N. Am., I: 21-23; II: 51-53, 62, 134-35.

The Sangen of July 27, 1655 (q.v.), for a burying-place. The council thereupon instructs Nicolas de Sille and Cornelis van Tienhoven "to point out to the petitioners a little hook of land situate outside of this city for a burial-place."—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 160; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 75-76. The location of this cemetery has been placed near the New Bowery and Chatham Square.—Oppenheim, 19; Daly, Settlement of the Jews in North America (1893), 35-42. See also chapter on "The Dutch Period," I: 60. That the burial-ground here pointed out was made use of, and that it was situated at the above place, was brought out in the battle hook of land, is conclusively shown by the record of it other than as above cited. The Jews purchased land in the same locality for a place of interment, in 1651-2, part of which still exists as the oldest burying-ground on Manhattan Island. Singularly enough, its oldest grave-stone bears date of 1682. See Pl. 30, Vol. 1; Landmark Ref. Key, III: 927; and Dec. 17, 1729.

25 The council orders that the judges be relieved from the duties of orphan-masters, as the business has greatly increased and they are unable to do justice to the obligations. They request the appointment of an independent court, in the nature of a surrogate's court, charged solely with the administration of the wills of "whatsoever" of the church members who are resident within the jurisdiction of the city government. Four names are submitted by the burgomasters, from whom Stuyvesant and the council elect and confirm Paulus Leendertsen van der Grift and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 161; Min. of Orph. Court, I: 14-15; Rec. N. Am., II: 44-45. See Feb. 10, 1653; Oct. 18, 1655.

A survey of the streets of the city of New Amsterdam, as laid down on a plan or map, "according to which the Streets" are "set off and laid out with stakes," is confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council. This, the earliest plan of the city of which we have any knowledge, was authorized on Nov. 10, 1655 (q.v.). The carrying out of the city improvements is now referred to the two burgomasters, "first and foremost of the city of New Amsterdam, and to the notice and fix a time within which everyone who has a claim against the city for being "damaged or injured by the said Survey" may present that claim, and have it settled on the lowest terms, and "for the benefit of the City." When there is a disagreement, the case is to be referred "to two or three respectable persons conversant with the subject and not interested in the Survey," who are to act as arbiters. After all is done, the burgomasters are to "appraise the aforesaid Lots according to the determined quota," and to distribute them amongst those who are prepared to build thereon, giving the preference to interested parties "to build on their own lots themselves, according to the Survey," if their circumstances allow it, "and remain in the mean time possessors and owners of their Gardens and Lots falling without the line of the Streets, until payment shall have been made therefore." If, however, vacant lots at the time of distribution, then disposal is to be made to others. It is left to the burgomasters to "determine what Streets and Lots shall be first built on, "only that according to ancient usage the patents required therefor shall be applied for and obtained from the Director General and Council."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 219-20; Rec. N. Am., II: 43. The burgomasters fixed the time for damage claims within the period of eight days" after publication of the notice (Feb. 26).—Rec. N. Am., II: 44. The plan of this most important survey is lost. It was probably made by Capt. Frederick de Koninck (see Feb. 1, 1656) during the early weeks of this year (Rec. N. Am., II: 44) while stationed temporarily in the city. It is also definitely referred to and attributed to him in N. Y. Col. MSS., VII: 301 (N.Y. State Library). O'Callaghan states that the survey showed 126 houses and 1,000 inhabitants.—Hist. N. Neth., p. 540. See also Castello Plan, II: 210; Nov. 10, 1655; April 21, 1656. For the second general survey, see April 19, 1656. As a result of this survey it appears probable that some of the streets were first named. See, for example, 1659; July 6, 22, and Aug. 8, 1658.

Jan Peecq or Peck, "burrthened with a wife and nine children," is appointed an officer and ordered "to act as broker of English merchants of the city, because he speaks both languages and is considered well recommended for the office. His remuneration is to consist of one and a half stuivers (3 cents) commission on "every pound Flemish, Holland currency" involved in the transactions, to be paid fifty per cent. each by buyer and seller.—Rec. N. Am., II: 45-46. This is the first instance we have met with of a brokerage system in operation in the city.

The city's first fire-wardens are appointed. See Jan. 18.

On Jan. 22, Stuyvesant and the council proposed the observance of a general day of fasting and prayer on March 1, on account of "the increasing population, the merciful protection against a dreadful and threatening war with our neighbours [New England] unexpectedly changed into a wished for and acceptable peace," etc. The proclamation recalled the Indian uprising of the previous year, when "many inhabitants" had been "savagely murdered and stripped of property and houses by the Dutch Indians, and many Burying- grounds and houses burnt, and the public good . . . retarded." This proclamation was published at the city hall on Feb. 24.—Rec. N. Am., II: 40-41.

The two burgomasters are authorized, after consulting with the captains of the burgher companies, "to cause a corporal's guard . . . to patrol and watch during Divine Service on Sundays."—Rec. N. Am., II: 51-52.

To prevent the burghers or others from lodging Indians in their houses over night in the city, the two burgomasters are authorized to prepare ordinances on the subject. At the same time Stuyvesant and the council advise them that in the event of "strange paladises in the form" already begun, as a better means "to exclude the wild barbarians and bring them inno subjection."—Rec. N. Am., II: 51, 52.
Charges having been filed by certain householders of the city Maat. with Stuyvesant and Councillor Nicolas de Sille, which place the 5 responsibility of “the last disaster and Indian Massacre” (Sept., 1655, p.5) upon those who were entrusted with the government during Stuyvesant’s absence on his journey to the Dutch 6 colony of Delaware, the petitioners are allowed to prosecute inquiry for elucidating their charges, and the burgomasters and schepen are instructed to appoint from their own number a commission “to hear and examine the witnesses” to be brought before them.
Accordingly, Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, burgomaster, and 7 John Pietersen, schepen, are commissioned thereunto.—Rec. N. Am., Ii: 54-55.

The following minute is made in the Register of Resolutions of the directors at Amsterdam, concerning free passage to New Netherlands: “Some deliberations having been had concerning the population of New Netherlands, it was resolved and approved, that all mechanics and farmers, who can show that they will be able to make a living there, shall receive, with their wives and children, free passage thither—provided that, if they should wish to return here, they shall be obliged to pay double passage, which shall be communicated to the absent members” (of the chamber).—N.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and his council, expressing their vexation over the Indian depredations of the previous year, and recommend “that not only the poor prison-8 ers must be provided for in a suitable manner until such as belonging to their families, but also such precautions may be taken at any instance, that such disasters are not to be feared in the future.” Regarding the proposed concentration of the people into villages, they add:
“Your Honors’ proposition, made for the security of the people in the opinion of the directors, is to clothe and provide for their settlements with some means of defence, sufficient at least against an attack, is not extravagant, we think, and it would seem to be quite advisable, to make a provisional treaty, that the savages must keep away from the places, where our people have settled.”
They suggest a possible “offensive alliance with the English, for which plans have been made before.” With respect to “the requested subsidy for the suffering and imperished people,” they think “the twentieth penny on the houses and the tenth on the plantations and boweries, which remained intack,” to be a sufficient revenue to be used provisionally for the year, and promise to exert themselves to secure something more than they ask from the city “for the relief of these poor people.” To prevent as much as possible the Indians from obtaining arms from the Dutch, “to their own damage,” they resolve “that the passengers and free men, who may henceforth go to New-Nether-9 lands, are not allowed from now to take with them a matchlock in place of a flintlock, as may be seen by their passports.”—N. Y.
Col. Docs., XIII: 63-64.

In a letter of this date, the directors at Amsterdam order Stuyvesant and the council to dismiss Cornelis van Tienhoven from all public offices held by him, and suggest that Nicolas de Sille perform provisionally, the duties of fiscal. His dismissal was due to a long series of complaints against him.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 342. A rumour of his dismissal reached the ears of the burgomasters and schepen on May 30, but as Van Tienhoven was absent on public business at the South (Delaware) River, the city court awaited his return and confirmation thereof. As fiscal he had been also city schout in the city court. He, himself, appeared in that court on June 7 (see summary under May 30), and gave confirmation of his dismissal, which had been ordered formally on that day by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., Ii: 108, 109, 113. Claudius, in a suitable manner and returned to his fiscal duties as fiscal of the city court, to the delight of the inhabitants. —De Sille applied for permission to seize all of the real and personal 10 Mar, estate, because it was found that Van Tienhoven’s wife (Rachel 11 Vigne) was nightly moving goods in baskets from the premises.
The council ordered De Sille to take an inventory of the personal effects, but fore against the sworn bonds of the deponent, and Van Tienhoven’s accounts had been audited. On Dec. 27, the wife petitioned the council for a revocation of the order for taking an inventory, and obtained a stay, but the order of attachment on the real estate was continued.—Ibid., 178. The council, on Feb. 6, 1657, ordered an examination to be made of Van Tienhoven’s papers, and the delivery to his wife of such as were found, and at the same time the sale of all that was found, to power to sell some lots in the Smith’s Fly. On March 15 of the last named year, the council appointed three commissioners to investigate the accounts, and Cornelis van Ruyen, the council’s secretary, was added, on the 27th, to assist them in their investigations.—Ibid., 181, 182. See also May 30, 1656.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: “The care and tender affection, which we have had all the time for promoting the increase of population and the cultivation of New Netherlands, has induced us to resolve and decide that henceforth all mechanics and farmers, who can prove their ability to earn a living there, shall receive free passage for themselves, their wives and children; provided that whenever they wish to return here, they shall pay

That Jews were not allowed to worship, collectively, in a syna-12 gogue in New Netherlands, is perfectly apparent from the correspondence between Amsterdam and Stuyvesant, as follows: “The permission given to the Jews, to go to New-Netherlands and enjoy there the same privileges, as they have here [Amsterdam], has been granted only as far as civil and political rights are concerned, without giving the said Jews a claim to, or privilege of exercising their religion in a synogogue or at a gathering.” This did not preclude them from the exercise of their religion, “in all quietness . . . within their houses.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 341, 351; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of Jews in N. T., 21, 35.

Sibout Claessen, on Nov. 9, 1654, petitioned the city court for relief from levies made by the Hartford treaty. On May 5, 1654, the city court ordered its immediate neigh-13 bours to plunk up their water front with sheet-piling (see Nov. 2, 1654). Claessen now exhibits to the city court his original petition of 1654, and points out the apostil or marginal note of the former burgomasters and schepen; at the same time he requests that the order be obeyed, “so that further loss be prevented by the high water.” The city court orders the city court messenger to accompany Claessen in calling on the neighbours, and, the work at the city court having been finished, to require them “to line the bank with boards,” in compliance with the order, or the work will be done by the city at their expense.—Rec. N. Am., Ii: 61.

On June 19, Sybout Claessen, Jacob Steendam, Adolphi Pieter-14 sen, Sybrant Janzen (also called Galma), Adriaen Blommaert, and Jacob Schellingen (son-in-law of Cornels Melyn) appeared at the city court as neighbours and expressed their unanimous consent “to construct the sheet piling before their lots near the City Hall on the Strand,” but asked that some provision be made for the work in front of the lot of Jochem Pietersen Kuyter, deceased, as nobody came forward to represent that property. They also asked for a confirmation of “the survey of the slip and their houses and gardens.” These petitioners “were ordered to proceed with the work, and Secretary [Jacob] Kip, as Vendue Master of the property of the deceased,” was instructed to pay the expenses against the Kuyter property’s proportion. The street inspectors or city surveyors were ordered “to complete, with all diligence, the survey of the sheet piling shown to a lot,” and Jacob Schellingen’s house, which lay “in the canal and on the road,” as projected by the survey for public improvements, was not to be proceeded with any further.—Ibid., Iii: 113.

By Sept. 25 (p. v.), the sheet-piling "in front of the City Hall [Now Pearl St.] and of the city gate, at Pearl and Wall Sts.," and at "other places thereabout," was finished.—Ibid., Iii: 170. On Oct. 2, Claessen was in court as plaintiff against Janzen and Pietersen for having failed to construct and make the sheeting, which, they said," had undergone". They were ordered to get to work together by the following Thursday, Oct. 8.
On Oct. 9, these "carpenters of the sheeting before the lot alongside the City Hall" came again into court and requested an order

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND
as to "how far" they were to "erect the sheet-piling." The two burgomasters were delegated to make an inspection and dispose of the matter.—Ibid., II: 185. Yet another hitch occurred in the way, and again in the city council when the magistrates requested the magistrates "to signify in what manner the wing on the sheet-piling at the Canal" (Graf) should be constructed; whereupon it was ordered that inspection be made the following day, when directions would be given.—Ibid., II: 203.

Although permission was granted by the burgomaster, a suit was taken in New Netherland to reside and traffic there, provided they did not become a charge on the or the West India Co., Stuyvesant and the council refused to permit them to own real estate or to carry on a continuous trade on the South (Delaware) River, at Fort Orange (Albany), and at other places in the province. A committee of the Jews, therefore, on Nov. 29, 1655, petitioned the provincial government not to hinder them in the enjoyment of their guaranteed rights; but, "for weighty reasons," their request was denied. One of the Jewish merchants at New Amsterdam bought a house at public auction, on Dec. 14, 1655, which, "for pregnant reasons," Stuyvesant and the council would not permit the seller to convey. On the other hand, the government levied heavily on the Jews for funds for the public works.

Now (March 14, 1656) the Jews petition anew, recite the issues involved, and take up the question of forgivening the provincial authorities on their previous petition. They declare they are "willing and ready ... to contribute according to their means," if they "may enjoy the same liberty allowed to other burgheers," in trade and in the purchase of real estate. Stuyvesant and the council seek to evade the undoubtedly right of the Jews to enjoy these liberties and declare them subject to the tax, because the public works are for "the security of the persons and goods of the inhabitants," including Jews.

In the mean time, the advice of the directors is sought as to "the purchase and ownership of real estate" by Jews. The directors, on June 16, 1656, reprimanded Stuyvesant and the council for having forbidden the Jews the open trade and ownership of real property, and ordered execution thereafter "punctually and with more respect." Jews, they said, were not "to establish themselves as mechanics," nor "to have open retail shops." The last prohibition did not stand; such Jewish shops or stores were already in operation at New Amsterdam before the directors wrote, and were allowed to continue.—Texts and translations of original records, in Oppenheim's Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., 9-14, 20, 21,

Members of the city court who abstain themselves from the bench are fined. The direction of these fines is now set down to be monthly.—Rec. N. Am., II: 63.

An ordinance passed to prevent drunkenness among the Jews, and prohibiting the sale of brandy to them, is published and posted at the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., II: 52, 85.

Burchardus Thomas Hall and Cornelis Perren (Barents), who have been commissioned by Stuyvesant and the council as overseers of fences on Manhattan Island, bring suit against nine persons, because "the common fence" has been out of repair, and has been put in order by them as overseers, for which they want the nine to pay, portionately, at the rate of "one guilder per load of cattle." The court first upon this rate, and the parties, "for the most part," are "willing to pay." Jan Vigo, however, says he has "a private pasture of his own," and so has no use for the common grazing place; but the court holds "that the erected fence" is "for the public advantage," and that those "in default in contributing their share in proportion to their stock," shall be bound to pay the same ... according to valuation," within fourteen days.—
Rec. N. Am., II: 92-93. For earliest mention of the Sheep Pasture ("Schaepen Weytie"), see July 1, 1654, and Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 967.

William Breuckman and Thomas Hall appear in the city court as plaintiffs against Skipper Lourens Corneilissen van der Vel and Jacob Schelling, charging that they have "applied repeatedly to debts to enclose by a common fence their land lying next to their's, and that they others have neglected "to enclose it ... whereby they suffer great losses from cattle to their crops." The defendants assert that their land is "not under common fence," claim they obtained from Kief "a particular groundbriet thereof," and are "not bound to make a fence in the City Hall."—Rec. N. Am., II: 85.

The magistrates and people of Gravesend petition Stuyvesant and the council for some ordinance and ammunition to protect their villege, which has been surrounded with palisades; they are granted "two of the pieces lying near the Packhouse on the Strand [Pearl Street] of the East river," as well as some powder and council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XVI: 547.

Some inhabitants of New Amsterdam, whose children and kinder were held by the Indians, petitioned the city court, on March 20, that means be raised "by a general collection or otherwise" for ransoming the captives. The court at that time approved, and recommended the matter for speedy action to Stuyvesant and the council. The latter now order a contribution in cloth to be made by each merchant of the city for this purpose.—Rec. N. Am., II:
64; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1655; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 68.

The determination of matters relating to the carrying out of the new survey of the city having been left to the burgomasters (see Feb. 25, 1656), the two street inspectors now complain to these officials that all "strokes are being run "of lots, houses and stoops" in the city without their knowledge, and that a penalty be imposed, to prevent the disorder occasioned thereby. They also ask for a graded fee for measurements and surveys, on lots, houses, stoops, and fences, respectively. The burgomasters order them "to pay particular attention, that all building be done in good order according to the last survey con-irmed by the Director General and Council," and no one is to build before these inspectors have been "on the spot." Fees are established as follows: for a door, or "such like," three stuivers (60 ct.); for a house, three guilders ($1.20).—Rec. N. Am., II: 80-81.

The ordinance for regulating the business of the weigh-house
(see May 4, and Aug. 10, 1654) is renewed with amendments.—

Stuyvesant and the council order that the excise be paid

The place was devastated by the Dutch Indians, in September, 1654 (q.u.), the people, being "driven from their houses," taking refuge in New ens for permission to conduct taverns in the city, which is granted to them.—Rec. N. Am., II: 93; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 381.

Two members of the Council of Safe Conducts, John Gravesend high constable, asks the city court for instructions as to the confinement of "persons of quality or of good name and character" who are arrested for debt, and is told to take them "to a decent tavern," if they pay their own expenses, or, "otherwise, to the City Hall."—Rec.
N. Am., II: 80. See also Jan. 18, 1655.

Sarah Schepmoo, widow of Jan Schepmoo, deceased, claims the ownership of a hand-bell (ichel) in use by the city court at the "Stadt Huys" or city hall. Having proved ownership, she is granted payment of ten florins ($4.95) "for the bell out of the burgher excise."—Rec. N. Am., II: 76, revised with Dutch original in office of city clerk, New York. There is no connection here with the bell (black) which the court voted on Jan. 24, 1656 (q.u.), to be hung on the city hall.

Sander Touren and his wife are ordered banished from New Amsterdam for selling liqueur to Indians, who became "exceedingly drunk" and were "surrounded by the New Amsterdam girls

XIII: 67-68.

The farming out to the highest bidder of the revenues of the weigh-house in New Amsterdam is considered by Stuyvesant and his councilmen. On Jan. 30, 1656, they passed an ordinance for regulating the weigh-house fees. No goods were to be weighed before the fees are paid and all goods weighing above 25 lbs. are subject to fees.—
common." Beeckman, as schepen, asks Stuyvesant’s advice in the May dispute "regarding a certain parcel of land, about 5 or 6 morgen large, lying within the public Enclosure [the Common] near the Valley, beyond the Fresh Water," where Vander Wel has refused and failed "pro rata to maintain with others the common fence, as he maintains it is not liable. Stuyvesant replied (on the 17th) that "special groundbrellas" were "passed for all lands within the Common Enclosure and even if they were not, and the lands lay within the Common fence, that would excuse no one from maintaining the publick enclosure, or from defraying the charges necessary thereon, or sliding to defray them." The deputation was obliged "to construct his part of the common fence" within two days, or lose his rights.—Rec. N. Am., II: 95, 96-97.

Harbouring of Indians "during the night," between the wall of New Amsterdam "and the fresh water," is forbidden by ordinance, after Stuyvesant and his council have conferred on the matter with the burgomasters and field officers of the burghe corps. A number of 25 guilders in a named, to be collected from anyone who hereafter lodges "a single Indian during the night without a ticket signed by the Director General or the Secretary." This action was taken to prevent massacres.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 228; Rec. N. Am., I: 22; II: 51-52, 107.

The directors Peter Cornelis van Tienhoven has been "dismissed from all his offices." This rumour reaches the ears of the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam. If true, it means that a vacancy, among others, has been created in the office of city schout. The city court says that they are "ignorant of the certainty" of the report, and decide to wait until Van Tienhoven, who is absent on a mission of investigation at the South (Delaware) River, has returned, and the dismissal has been confirmed. But the court decides, as soon as the fact is established, to ask Stuyvesant and the council, as they have several times requested before, to have the office of schout be filled as a separate office "from the Burgheye, unrelated to the office or person of the company’s fiscal.

In a few days, Van Tienhoven returned, and the burgomasters and schepens appealed to Stuyvesant and the council, to whom they also exhibited the concessions obtained by them from the directors, on May 18, 1654 (q.v.). They were answered, on June 7, that the separation of the offices could not be made, "at least not without further advice and information" from the directors. This was really hedging (cf. with N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 317); but that opinion prevailed, and Stuyvesant and the council appointed Nicolas de Sil | Tienhoven, who was absent on being an agent of the council, in the dual office, to serve regularly as city schout until a alteration should be made by the directors.—Rec. N. Am., I: 108, 109, 121; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 167, 168.

At an extraordinary city council session, on June 7, Van Tienhoven appeared, related his dismissal, and asked if the court "had any thing to say relative to the performance of his duties" while schout; if so, would they let him know, so that he might "purg him self" of any charges, or, if not, would they give him "a formal Acte as to his deportment" in that office. The court resolved, unanimously, that there was "nothing against him," but, "on the contrary," thanked him "for his services rendered for the good of the city, in a certificate confirmed with the city seal.—Rec. N. Am., II: 111. See also Feb. 2, 1653; March 13, 1656.

Prior to this date, as shown by a reference in a mortgage (Mortgages, 1655-60, trans. by O’Callaghan, p. 37), Jacob Wolphertsen van Tienhoven erected his brew-house, the site of which is now occupied by Nos. 27 and 29 Stone St. In a court record of Dec. 6, 1664 (Rec. N. Am., V: 167-68), it appears that he had for some years two partners in his brewery, Joannes Withart and Jacob Vis; also that a record of the amount of beer brewed was entered in the register of the company by themselves on variaiqo loans taken of them; but, from another entry, of July 25, 1665, it appears that he took as partners Vis and Symeon Jansen Romeyn.—Ibid., V: 281, 285. Jacob Wolphertsen died, bankrupt, prior to April 12, 1670.—Ibid., VI: 35. The mudoraters of his estate appear to have come to an agreement, in the absence of Oloff van Cortlandt, Johannes van Brugh, Cornelis van Baroos, in right of Sara Kierstert, his wife, and Hendrick Vandewater, "who appear to have being a sort of syndicate of creditors."—Innes, New Am. and Its People, 149. The English traders petitioned the burgomasters and schepens, on May 3, for a modification of the export duties as to beer, and were, by the council, refused. Stuyvesant, in reply (on the 11th), said that the request would be presented to the director-general and council for favourable action. The "free Trades" in the city, a week later, asked for "a repeal of the duty," as it tended to ruin the trade. The supreme authority now takes action by an ordinance, which establishes a new rate.—Rec. N. Am., III: 119, 1300 Vols. 317. Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto; also a contemporary extract exists, in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (q.v. in N. Y. Pub. Library, and an answer, in part, of the directors, of Dec. 19, is printed in N. Y. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 377, ff. On account of its importance, a digest of its principal items is given here, viz: They consider granting of freedom to the Jews in New Netherland, on a par with other residents, as "abominable," and say that the Jews have sought it several times, unsuccessfullly; calculation of the Swedes on the Delaware was necessary, reasons given; ship "de Waag" and Swedes on the South (Delaware) River; the ship "Mauritius" manned with 150 men; attempt to populate the South River in order to preserve it; all captives ransomed from the Indians, save two or three children (a reference to those taken during the raid of 1655); Indians come to Manhattan in large numbers, from one to three hundred, with things to sell, which Stuyvesant does not desist, yet always keeps an eye on them; wine and beer revenue this year, 5,030 floris; exported wine and beer; Renselaerswyck refuses to pay taxes (tenths), and also opposes the tapsters’ beer and wine excise; Heemsteed, Vlijingen, and Graevestede pretend exemption so long as Renselaerswyck does not contribute; Fisic Cornelis van Tienhoven and his brother, Adriaen, given releases in consideration of the fiscal’s good service for the company, and desire to go into other employment; Jan de Decker to be made commissary over the tobacco and "any goods in one," the office of burghe deputy, but is still at Fort Orange; the ship "Dolphyn" taken from the Swedes with cargo of tobacco, books and accounts to be sent, could not be got ready earlier, because Fisic Van Tienhoven was at the South River.

The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they would "have been better pleased" if the New Netherland government "had not published" the ordinance of Feb. 1, 1656 (q.v.), "against the Lutherans," and "committed them to prison," as it has always been their "intention to treat them quietly and leniently," and similar laws, without their consent, could not be established in future. They order Stuyvesant to "pass it over quietly and let them have free religious exercises in their houses."—N. Y. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 351. For further particulars regarding the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

In a letter of this date from the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, the first intimation is given of the division of the territory on the Delaware, which led to the establishment of the new colony of New Amstel, under the dual jurisdiction of the city of old Amsterdam and the company. Negotiations for the division were under way on Dec. 19, 1656, and the new government was in operation from 1657 until the surrender of New Netherland in 1664. For the documents, see N. Y. T. Col. Docs., XII.

A Jewish quarter, "in a convenient place on one or the other side of New Amsterdam," as the Jews might choose, is recommended to Stuyvesant by the directors at Amsterdam.—N. Y. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 350; 1656; Oppenheimer, Early Hist. of Jews in N. T., 33. No such concentration of the Jews was carried out.

Various farmers and owners of plantations on Manhattan Island appear before the council and are notified to pay their tax of tenths during the summer, keeping the same in the field; otherwise they lose their privileges; but, on June 27, the director-general and council passed an ordinance warning all persons who were obligated by patent or deed to pay tenths not to remove their crops from the field before coming to an amicable agreement with the government in the selection of the tenths.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1678; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 233; Rec. N. Am., II: 154-155, 136.

Dirck Houthuysen is appointed by the council as smith of the company.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 168. He rented a house owned by Dr. Jacob Hendrickzen Varreveranger, and abode in 1660, leaving an involved and insolvent estate behind him.—Rec. N. Am., III: 192, 253, 254, 255, 315; IV: 31, 39, 51.

166. A brief for a lot lying "beyond the Fresh Water, whereon his house now stands."—See Liber HH: 25 (Albany). He received a confirmatory grant for the same plot on March 7, 1695.—Col. Coun. Min., 105. The location was at the northern boundary of the present Chatham Square, at about Pell St., and is shown on Pl. 174, Vol. II (at about the northeast corner of Pearl and St.)

21 Isaac Kip receives a ground-brief for a lot now covered by No. 38 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 246; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 574.

22 Jacob Kip receives a ground-brief for a lot covered by the present 40 and 42 Broad St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 574.

The farmer of duties complains that vessels depart from New Amsterdam "without asking or receiving from the Fiscal a proper pass . . . and without duly entering their exported goods," which are subject to duty. To prevent the defrauding of the public revenue in this manner, a provincial ordinance is passed, forbidding "any Ships, Yachts, Banks, Ketches or any other vessels, of what nation soever," to "cast anchor before, or near" the city and to raise the same for departure to any place whatever, before "having asked and obtained a proper pass from the Fiscal; under a penalty of 50 pounds; Nobody is allowed "to embark any Pelties, Wines or Beer . . . subject to impost or duty," unless first entered and the duty thereon paid. Smuggled goods are made forfeit "three times the value thereof." The fiscal is also ordered to inspect the ships and cargoes before granting a pass.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 275-76.

24 Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven receives a ground-brief for a lot with building thereon called the "Old Church," the location of which was the present No. 39 Pearl St.—See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 266-67; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 382; also Aug. 19, 1656.

A joint petition was filed at Fort Amsterdam by the provincial authorities and the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on account of the increasing number of Indians who run about the city's streets in a state of intoxication, and to consider means for ascertaining positively "where they get the liquor." Now "suspicions point to one Jan Dirckzen and his wife, whose house the savages frequent" often. They decide that this couple shall "be privately informed and directed to leave by the next ship," but, "upon the intercession of the Burgomasters . . . and the requests of the preachers, and for other reasons," the deportation order is suspended, and instead a reprimand and warning are administered.—N. Y. Col. Docis., XXXIII: 69.

Dirck Claesen Braeckt petitions the burgomasters and scheepen for permission to keep a tavern, which is granted.—Rec. N. Am., III: 137 (cf. 131). This perhaps refers to Dirck Claesen, the potter, who dwelt on the East River shore at about the present Roosevelt St.

Stuyvesant and the council, as a supreme court, issue a commitment against Jan Peck, a tavern-keeper, for felonious assault on a soldier in his tavern in the Smits Vly. He is locked up in the city hall, where he protests to the city court that he is illegally held, as he is a married and law-abiding soldier's wife. —Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 170; Rec. N. Am., III: 144, 149. He was a leading tavern-keeper of the city (ibid., II: 265, 266, 268), but his tavern gave the city and provincial authorities considerable annoyance from illegal acts. See Dec. 30, 1663.

March 25, 1663-1664, a vendue-master, or person authorized in the supreme court of director-general and council for furnishing liquor to Indians. The case had come up before the city court, which referred it to the higher court.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 170; Rec. N. Am., II: 145. Tadens made his plea and answer. On the 31st, an Indian to whom he had sold liquors gave evidence to the court, and, on Aug. 7, Tadens was sentenced to a fine of 500 guilders, to be imprisoned until it was paid, and afterwards to be banished from the province. He asked that the banishment be commuted to a fine. On Nov. 7, he again petitioned the council for pardons and leave to reside on Long Island, which was granted, he to pay 25 beavers to the church.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 171, 172, 176. His tavern was on the south-west corner of the site of the Maritime building, and of No. 11 Pearl St. See Sept. 5, 1653; July 1, 1664. See also Castello Plan, C. Pl. 272; Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 398, where the reference should be "Key to Castello Plan, Block G, No. 4," instead of "No. 31." In 1663, he was several times charged with excise violations (Rec. N. Am., IV: 265, 320; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 257), and, on July 1664, was again charged with selling liquor to Indians.

Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract exists in N. Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (5), in V. Y. Pub. Library, and the answer of the directors, of Dec. 19, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docis., XII: 131-33; XIII: 70-71; XIV: 371-75. As it is important, the principal items are summarized here, viz: The account books sent over have many errors; Sinnekens and Maquaas; Sinnekens bring 4,000 beavers; ordinance against selling guns and ammunition to Indians to be to be 3 to 5 feet long; Sinnekens dangerous, not to be entertained in the fort or city of New Amsterdam, and trading with them to be done in a trading-house on the river. "Achter het Col," where the colony of Nederhout formerly was; negotiations for Maquaas land at Fort Orange; information received that a Jesuit from Canada has come into the Sinnekens country with about fifteen Frenchmen; Sinnekens a powerful nation, able to take revenue on the Maquaas and the Dutch at Fort Orange; desire for succor for the South (Delaware) River; all necessary are dear, and recommendations for cargoes; no improvement in trade to be expected, whilst beaver is saved on the continent, 90 guilders; this year good, and company's debts mostly paid; militia; income from tithes or tenths very small, and colony of Renselaerswyck will not pay tenths or excise; Jan de Decker's thanks for seat offered him in the council, but for weighty reasons cannot accept, as he must go to Holland; people at Fort Orange and Beverwyck built a church, toward which there was contributed, on behalf of the company, 1,000 to 1,200 beavers and a bell, the money being paid, and the court there given directions to solicit the bell from the company; Midwyck (Midwout) and Hemstede solicit through the preachers that, with a little bell, to send 500 beavers, to which Jan Couwenhoven, by reason of paying recognition of 25 beavers, on condition of making a "steel" for the court of Fort Orange.

An ordinance of the director-general and council renewes and amends former edicts prohibiting the importation of articles that are contraband, such as guns and munitions.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 236-39; Rec. N. Am., II: 150-51.

An ordinance of this date prohibits the use of brandy places for ships before New Amsterdam, on both the East and North Rivers, for revenue purposes, and to prevent smuggling and the entry of contraband.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 237-38, 248-49; Rec. N. Am., II: 150-51; Manatus Maps, II: 187. See Aug. 24.

April 8, of this year, the lot, now No. 39 Pearl St., with the "Old Church" which was built in 1653, was sold by order of De Forest and Stuyvesant to the highest bidder. —Y. Col. Docis., XIV: 346. Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven was the purchaser (see June 30, this year), but he almost at once became involved in debt and was obliged to give the deed to the bailiff, to sell the house and lot, as security for the debts. The "voluntary sale" was fixed by the city court for Aug. 19. At the sale Stuyvesant ordered, Isaac de Brouwer, the soldier's wife, to be the purchaser. At 71 (register's office, N. Y. County). On Oct. 2, the creditors of Van Couwenhoven, who had not yet been able to obtain the amount of their claims, were allowed by the court to have the purchase money lifted from De Forest by Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven, as vendue-master, in satisfaction of the debt.—Rec. N. Am., II: 151, 153, 177. See also 1653.

Stuyvesant appears in the court of burgomasters and schepens, and proposes new taxes. These the court requests in writing, "so as to deliberate thereupon." He draws up an informal minute, in which he gives the substance of what he wants. He says he has come before them solely to ask "once more and for the last time" that supplies be provided, since for want of them the city works are held up, such as surrounding the city with palisades, erecting "other forts or defences, and rendering it defensible and close against a sudden assault either of Indians or others." Worst of all, he says, the work already done is "wholly in ruins," and scarcely a hand is raised to repair anything. He does not impute this state of affairs so much to the "negligence or indisposition" of the city government as "to want of money" for repairs and the completion of what is unfinished. He reminds them of the many plans that have been proposed by him and the council for raising means, apart from the voluntary contributions that were taken up in the previous year. He says they have been allowed to collect a tax on "the cattle fattened for consumption" in the city, but he is ignorant of what they have done, and he deems it "not inadvisable to farm it out now." So, too, they have been allowed to "impose and levy something on beer and wine consumed" in the city, and, if it has not profited, the fault is mainly their own. The directors at Amsterdam have ordered the city to "at once enter" in the city. Some persons have lots of very great size, "whether for pleasure or in hope of future advantage and greater profit," which serve only to prevent and retard building operations. For this reason, the directors have instructed that the city shall impose and levy "a reasonable assessment on the lots," and this proposal is now urged anew by Stuyvesant, so that funds may be available to pay "the incurred debts," some of which have "existed already three, others two years," and that the leaders may "receive, henceforth, a reasonable interest, until the discharge thereof." He has adopted the plan to have an income fixed to provide a reserve fund, "to be used in time of need." He gives the city government the alternative of fixing upon a tax rate and of liquidating the city's debts, or of having the levy made by him and the council, who would then "assume the incurred debts to themselves" and repay, as far as feasible, "the decayed works, and endeavour to complete the work begun with palisades on the North River."—Rec. N. Am., II: 161-63.

On Sept. 8, the burgomasters and schepens voted to farm out the revenues of the slaughtered cattle and burgier's excise; to explain to Stuyvesant and the council why the new imports had been held up, "to impose as little as possible, and make therewith all necessary repairs," on condition of obtaining a formal grant that the same should forever "belong to the City and be disbursed by the Burgomasters;" to solicit from Stuyvesant and council a release of the commonalty "from the outstanding debts," or to write to the directors in the matter. Resolutions were accordingly drawn up on the 11th, in which the city government asked to be relieved from the expense of fortifying and strengthening the city's works, because the city was a "frontier place," wherein the entire country depended, and the charges should be defrayed "from the general revenue" of the company.—Ibid., II: 163-65.

Stuyvesant and the council replied by apostil on the foregoing points on the 20th, claiming that the conditions for new imports were "premature," because indefinite; "somewhat unbecoming," because a "perpetual and everlasting tax," and "unjust," and "unnecessary," since it was "unexamined" to take anything from the burgomasters and schepens which had been imposed by them "on the burgery by consent of the Director General and Council." But they were counselled to "deliberate on some ways and means to be introduced with the previous kind consent of the Directors General and Council."

The city court, on the 27th, concluded that the marginal answer did "not agree with the intention of the petition."—Ibid., II: 174-75. They resolved, on the 28th, "to write at the first opportunity" to Holland, "in order to prevent as much as possible all imports," II: 176. They opposed the slaughter of cattle and the burgier excise on wine and beer, after some delays, farmed out on Oct. 30, at 710 and 4,200 florins, respectively.—Ibid., II: 176, 179, 204, 288-89. On Nov. 7 (p. 98), Sept. they addressed their grievances to the directors at Amsterdam.—Ibid., II: 216-19.

The fees for a bill of lading at the custom-house, and for the government porters for carrying goods to the company's public warehouse, are prescribed by a preliminary Decree. The same also fixes the fees for passports.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 249-50.

Country food products have been brought to New Amsterdam "now and again by Farmers to be sold," who are "obliged frequently to remain a long time at the Strand with their wares to their great damage and expense, because people who live at a distance from the beach on the East River are unaware that such things are being offered for sale. This inconveniences the burgier and seriously damages the farmer, who often loses more "by his absence from home" than he gains from his sales. Therefore, Stuyvesant and the council, seeking a remedy, order that "henceforward the Saturdays shall be Marketdays here within this City, on the beach near or in the neighbourhood of Master Hans Kiersteeds house" (at what is now Whitehall and Pearl Sts.).—Rec. N. Am., II: 215; 1656; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 251. See also Castello Plan, II: 267-69; Landmark Map Rep. Reel, III: 955; PI. 172; Vol. III; and Frontispieces, Vols. I and II. This was the first public market-place in New Amsterdam.—See I: 125, and De Voe, Market Book, 36.

Several commissioners are named by the burgomasters of Amsterdam, Holland, to have the oversight of the affairs of that city's colony of New Amstel, on the Delaware. On the 16th, the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co. selected two of its directors for the same purpose.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1322 (6), in N. Y. Pub. Library. This record is new, and not among the printed evidence.

Although orders were issued on Oct. 7, 1655, in regard to the soldiers of the company's garrison at New Amsterdam, requiring them to appear "before the colors at beat of drum," and to post themselves and pay its debt to the "superior and inferior officers." So now another order is given, requiring every soldier to appear "fully armed before the colors," and if found absent on the third beat of the drum, "he shall suffer a fine for the first offence and corporal punishment for the second. If he breaks ranks while standing or marching, or discharges his gun without an order from his superior officer of the troop, he is to be fined a month's pay. Those who are detailed on guard duty are ordered to appear fully armed at drum heat and not to absent themselves without leave, nor put a substitute in their stead, unless with the knowledge and consent of the Director General, the Captain," or a "qualified officer at the time in command, on penalty of forfeiting half a month's wages for the first offence, a month's pay for the second, and corporal punishment thereafter. Other regulations are made against appearing drunk on guard, drinking while on guard, etc. Nor are the soldiers to discharge their muskets "either within or without the fort," except by order of duly appointed superiors. The sergeant of the guard is obliged to drill his men every morning at least an hour and a half, when the weather is "dry and suitable." Fines are distributed, one-third to the complainant and two-thirds to the officers and soldiers of the company.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 272-74.

Jan Jansen, Jr., petitions the city court for permission to keep 21 a tavern, and is granted his request.—Rec. N. Am., II: 170.

The sheet-piling "in front of the City Hall (Pearl St. and Conns-ties Alley), and before the Water-port on the East River (Pearl and Wall Sts.)" was "not rooted"—otherwise they would "be thrown away by the surf (from Broad St. to the city hall)," was by this time "finished." It is now "deemed expen-dent, not only for the welfare" of the city in general, but "for the neighbours resident about the beach in particular, that the sheeting be altogether erected and completed," and the burgomasters and schepens give notice through their court messenger to all persons present at the Director General and Council, "to come to the City port and City Hall," to line their lots properly with planks, "according to the executed plan and survey," made by Capt. De Koninck in the early part of this year, and to finish the work by Dec. 17, or suffer a penalty of 25 florins each, and have the work done by the burgiers, at the bonfire on the beach.—Rec. N. Am., II: 171; Dec. 20, Govert Lockermans informed the city court that the sheet-piling was "not being proceeded with according to order," to the court again sent its messenger around "to notify the occupants or proprietors of the lots" involved to do each his part properly and without further delay, or the provisions of the former order would be enforced.—Ibid., II: 250-51. See also March 15, 1660.

Houses, fences, gates, etc. are erected in New Amsterdam by many persons without the knowledge and approval of the official surveyors, which results in a great deal of irregular and bad building, and tends to the discredit of the city. It is, in fact, an infraction of an ordinance of July 25, 1647 (p. 92). Therefore, the city court now renews the provisions prohibiting irregularly erected, and publishes the same from the city hall on the 28th.—

Stuyvesant has resolved to go to Fort Orange (Albany) to settle affairs there, but the two burgomasters attend a meeting of the council and beg him "not to go . . . in the existing circumstances of the Country"—namely, the fear of an Indian attack. He says he must necessarily be at Fort Orange yet, as the magistrates "of Breuckelen, Amersfoort and Middelwout" have also requested him to remain in the city, he calls another conference of the burg-omasters and council at the fort on this day, "to come to some resolution" on the subject. The city court adheres to its former request, and the burgomasters do not attend the conference. The council, however, declares his voyage is necessary, and he goes to Fort Orange.—Rec. N. Am., II: 175-76, 179; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1669, X19, 255-56.

It having been found that export duties are often paid with very bad beavers, so that when the company's receiver tries to make purchases with them these beavers are refused as payment by the merchants, even "by the very same persons" from whom they were received, "to the serious loss and damage both of the Company and of its Servants in this country": therefore, the fiscal and the provisional receiver are instructed "not to receive for the export duty any other pey than good, whole, merchantable Beaver," and in no case to accept "any Summer skins or drielings" (meaning those at 3/4 the full value), which are "generally rejected and refused by the company already here."—Ibid., II: 74-75.

Eight guilders to the exchange is the rate named for exported merchandise. The "remitted 4 per cent" duty is made payable in silver coin, at the rate current in Holland, or in good beavers, "reckoned no higher than six guilders, or in goods," if the company needs them, "at 50 per cent advance on the duty." Odd amounts are to be adjusted, payment to be made "in silver coin, or whole strung Wampum," according to the value then in vogue, or by a return of any overplus amount by the receiver, in like coin or wampum. Half beavers or small pieces are to be valued at Eight per pound.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 979.

Willem Bogardus appointed by the council to be comptroller of the company's wind-mill, situated west of the fort. He was appointed, on April 25, a clerk in the office of the provincial secretary, which post he still holds.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 166, 175, 183; Rec. N. Am., II: 22.

George Wolsey (or Woolley), of Yarmouth, Eng., who, as representative of Isaac Allerton, Sr., resides in Allerton's warehouse (present Pearl St. and Peck Slip), applies to the city court for permission to keep a tavern there, but is refused. On the 24th, he petitioned the supreme council, which gave its consent on the 26th, for one year.—Rec. N. Am., II: 183; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 39, 176. Wolsey was one of the curators of Allerton's estate in New Netherland, in 1699-61, and had removed from Manhattan Island before May, 1664.—Rec. N. Am., III: 90, 258; V: 65.

The voyage of the schoon, burgomasters, and schepens, Evert Duycynghe, the New Amsterdam glazier, supplies glass for the church windows in the fort, for each division of which he charges two and one-half beavers. Evidently, these were leaded sash with painted family arms, as he was told by the court to collect payment from "each one, for whom the glass was" put in.—Rec.
N. Am., II: 229-30, July 23, 1668. The unfounded statement has been made, based on this and similar records, that glass making was practised in New Amsterdam in Dutch times. See also Addenda.

Mention is made of the tavern kept by "Michel" Jansen.—
Rec. N. Am., II: 219. Michael Jansen (Vredeland) built his house, at (present) No. 12 State St., in 1666 (N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 61), but went hence to New Jersey in 1661.—Laws & Ord., N. Neth., Key, III: 979.

Hans Dreiper is permitted to tap.—Rec. N. Am., II: 197. His tavern, on the modern plan, would be at the intersection of Pearl, Broadway and Broad Sts., now covered by the Post Terminal building. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

The Luthers petition Stuyvesant and the council for permission to enjoy their own public worship.—Eccles. Rec., I: 358-60. See summary under Oct. 4, 1663.

The laws previously granted against the desecration of the Sabbath and the giving of intoxicants to Indians (see June 18, 1665) are constantly disregarded, Stuyvesant and the council make another law, providing that all ordinary labour on the Sabbath, as well as hunting and fishing, shall be prohibited, "on pain of forfeiting One pound Flemish for each person." Moreover, a double fine is prescribed for "any lower or unlawful exercise or Amusement, Drunkenness, frequenting Taverns or Tippling houses, dancing, playing Ball, Cards, Tricktrack, Tennis, Cricket or Ninepins, going on pleasure parties in a Boat, Car or Wagoof, between, or during Divine Services." A fine of six guilders granted to each person is to be levied against tavern-keepers or tapsters who entertain clubs, tap, give away, or sell "any Brandy, Wine, Beer, or Strong Liquor to any person before, between or during the Sermons;" and "every person found drinking" is to be subjected to a fine of three guilders. Taverns are also not to entertain parties or self-intoxicators "to any excess," at any time, on Sunday or any other days, after the posting of the guard or ringing of the bell, under the same penalty." This order exempts "inmates of the family" or domestic guests, or "persons appointed on public business with the consent and by order of the Magistrates." The law enforces against "the very dangerous, injurious and damnable sale, betowal and giving" of intoxicants to the Indians, and puts a complete ban on this traffic, under punishment for disobedience of a fine of 500 guilders, corporal punishment, and banishment from the country. Everybody, even servants, are enjoined to give information about intoxicants, and failure to reveal is to charac-terize the delinquent as "privy to" the infringement and make him liable for the payment of half the fine. Peddling liquors of any kind along the rivers by skippers, sloop owners, canoemen, boat men, "or any other free or bound Inhabitants," "is to be stopped, and shipments of liquors are to be made only in conformity with prescribed regulations, under a permit, subject to subsequent proof of delivery made to the consignee.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 30. Note the variations in the two translations. See also Jan. 9, 1657.

The new "Dutch" (or Colo.) clock, upon his petition to the council, is granted appointment as a notary in New Amsterdam.—Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 176. On July 21, 1661, he was suspended by the city court for six weeks, on account of irregularities in office, and later was fined for a similar offense.—Rec. N. Am., III: 438-49, 441.

Dirck van Schellinne resigns his office as "Conceige" (high constable, bailiff, or city marshal) of New Amsterdam (see Jan.
18, 1665), and Matthaeus de Vos, city notary, applies to the city court for the office, pleading as a recommendation that the burguomasters have "already conferred on him the appointment of governor of the City Hall" (Gastelnachts). The council gave him the place on the 6th, and his appointment was confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council on Dec. 7—Rec. N. Am., II: 220-21; Cal.
Hist. MSS., Dutch, 177.

Three sworn butchers are appointed for the city by the burguomasters and schepens, "to serve in butchering and cutting up, and to provide, have and possess their own ropes, hand-barrowes, troughs and other articles requisite for slaughtering." Rates for slaughting and dissecting oxen, cows, calves, pigs, sheep, and goats are established, subject to approval by Stuyvesant and the council.— Rec. N. Am., II: 222-23. On the 20th, the city had granted to Stuyvesant, "by the Governor's approval, a privilege to the ruches for being in the bed of the river and for making a "profession of slaughtering," or should "kill for himself," the right to do so,
"but at such price as the Court" had fixed or should establish, and only receiving "a proper permit from the Farmer."— Ibid., II: 274.

Cp. Locher Op Dyck applies to the burgomasters and schepens for permission to keep a tavern, "as he hired the house next the City" (city hall?), and was "occasionally asked to lodge strangers 6 Good Hope (Hartford, Conn.). He held an imperfect patent for Coney Island from 1644 until declared void in 1652. In 1656, he was the plaintiff in a complaint at the bench of the city court of New Amsterdam.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 49, 70, 109; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 57, 360, 508; Rec. N. Am., II: 276.

7 The frequent resolution of the burgomasters and schepens to lay their grievances before the directors at Amsterdam (see Sept. 7) now finds expression in a letter, in which they petition for the restoration to the city treasury of the revenue of the weigh- scales and the ferry. See the "Form of Government," of Feb. 2, 1653. They also say that the receipts from the slaughtered cattle and the burgher excise are by no means adequate to pay for the general public works which were less for more urgent "repairs and erection of the City Walls," which were hastily built of sods and afterwards a plank curtain added, but are now fallen into ruin; nor for "the sheet piling along the river;" for "the repairs of the City Hall," for "watchhouses;" for "the building of schools;" for "the construction of the Graft (Canal) and other similar mat ters," necessary "to serve for better defense of the city in war;" all of which, they add, could be done if the directors would favour the city with the additional revenues, "and release it from the old debts incurred in the troubles" with their English neighbours. They say that, on account of "the inability of the Commonalty, not to mention the third part," has been collected of the general assessment levied in Oct., 1655. Among other things, they ask that effect be given to the former grant of the directors, of May 18, 1654, in regard to the separation of the office of city schout from that of the company's fiscal.—Rec. N. Am., 216-19. But the directors, on April 7, 1657, informed Stuyvesant that they were still resolved "not to separate the office of Schout from that of the Fiscal . . . that the duties of both be performed by one person."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 328.

8 On the other hand, Stuyvesant and the council made a prov ision for the fourth of the revenue of the weigh- scales to the city treasury, on Jan. 25, 1658 (see summary under Jan. 22, 1658), subject to ratification by the directors at Amsterdam; but the directors objected, on Feb. 13, 1659 (p. 9), because the grant had been made without first consulting them, and Stuyvesant and the council replied, on July 29, that the proceeds had never been handed over to the city and, in view of their displeasure, would not be paid over without their order.—Rec. N. Am., II: 314; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431, 442, 449.

8 William Hallett, a Baptist, who was confirmed as schout or prosecuting officer of Vlissingen (Flushing) in March, 1656, is now held by a prisoner by order of Stuyvesant, who says that, "in the audiency to call and allow to be called conventicles and gatherings at his house," and, in violation of the provincial ordi nances, has permitted "an excess and interpretation of God's Holy Word, together with the administration and service of the sacraments, the exhortation and baptizing by one William Wickendam,"—a Baptist from Rhode Island but native of Oxford shire, England, all of which the authorities declare to be "in direct contradiction with the general political and ecclesiastical rules" of the mother country, and particularly violations of the provincial laws, which they declare Hallett "as Schout . . . was bound to uphold and strictly enforce," but nevertheless "himself . . . transgressed and disobeyed." Hallett is dismissed from his office, fined 50 pounds Flemish, and ordered "banished" from New Netherland, meanwhile being held a prisoner until his fine and the costs of the court are paid.

On the same day, the provincial court sentenced Wickendam to pay a fine of 100 pounds Flemish and be banished, but to remain in prison until he paid his fine and the costs of the prosecution. However, on the 11th, the court (having been "credibly informed" that Wickendam was "a very poor man with a wife and several children and the bread of trade," and that he "did not have . . . what he had no means" remitted his fine, on condition that he quit the province and, if ever caught thereafter within its confines, be obliged to pay the sum remitted.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 343, 369-70.

No appeal was made to the charter of the town by the court. For the reasons mentioned in the preceding note, the mayor of Flushing did not guarantee freedom of worship, but freedom of conscience. It was only when this freedom of conscience seemed to be called into question by an order from the Hon. Director General not to admit, lodge and entertain in the said village any one of the heretical and abominable sect called the Quakers, that the people of Flushing appealed to the right guaranteed in their charter.—Zwarte, Religion in N. Neth., 164-66.

20 by his next door neighbour on Pearl St., Hon. Jacob Strycker, because he neither repairs nor pulls down his chimney, which endangers "the whole street" with "a sudden destruction by fire." Strycken, and his wife, Mary Joosten, are forbidden to build any more fires, "under any pretexts," and the case is put at the disposal of the fire inspectors of the city. Stryeken and his wife had come over from Holland in the previous year, and were soon in court, charged by their neighbours with living "dreadful and immoral lives," for which they were threatened with banishment.—Rec. N. Am., II: 317; II: 230-31.

20 Paulus van der Beeck, as farmer of the burgher excise, asks the city court to "fix some hours in the day" when he may "issue licenses" and when they may be "taken by the Burgers;" also that the brewers he prohibited from delivering beer, except through the sworn beer carriers, "so as to prevent all fraud." The court decides that "the Farmer or his collector shall sit every morning from 8 to 11 o'clock, and in the afternoon from 1 to 4 o'clock, at a certain place," which Vander Beeck says will be "the office of Isaak d'Forest." Here, and only at the prescribed hours, licenses are to be issued, "except occasionally to some strangers" who may want to take a brew by the fire inspectors, and are accommodated out of hours. The delivery of beer is allowed the brewers only through "the sworn beer carriers or one of them," unless special consent is given to the contrary.—Rec. N. Am., II: 218.

23 Solomon La Chair, as farmer of the slaughter excise, suggests to the city court specifications for regulating the business of his office, and the court establishes rules, rates, and fines, accordingly,—Rec. N. Am., II: 232-33.

22 Needie or Cornelia Wessels, mother of Warneer Wessels (see Nov. 23, 1654), petitions the burgomasters and schepens for "leave to sell" the fourth of the public weigh- scales, and asks "on condition that she observe such order as is proper therein."—Rec. N. Am., II: 233; cf. 265, in list of tavern-keepers. Stevens locates this tavern on "Paerel Street" (Pearl St.), near "de Heere Graft" (Broad St.).—N. Y. Herald, Dec. 17, 1893.

23 Paulus van der Beeck, the farmer of the burgher excise in New Amsterdam, sends a communication to the city court of burgomasters and schepens, requesting to be maintained in his rights. He states that he went on the day before with the court messenger to the house of Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, brewer and one of the burgomasters, "to inspect his cellar," in order to find out if any beer or wine or wine merchant he has sold, or will sell, will endanger the public health. The court, he adds, has prevented him from catching all the other brewers in town who have not made a return to him. He cites a law of old Amsterdam, of 1586, as his evidence that beer should not be taken to any houses from breweries "without a permit from the city magistrates." As the brewers have failed to make entry through him, he maintains that he has the right to search their cellars, and asks that Van Cortlandt and the other brewers be compelled to pay fines. With Van Cortlandt and other brewers as members of the court, a ticklish situation is presented. The members of the bench who are not brewers are unwilling to "decide absolutely in the case," so it is agreed that they shall communicate with Stuyvesant about the question and, after deliberation, make a decision. The brewers claim they are not classified as "beer merchants," so are not under the law cited. These points were submitted to Stuyvesant, whose answer came in a provincial ordinance on Nov. 25, which further regulated the excise. It was a compromise, so far as the immediate controversy was concerned.—Rec. N. Am., II: 233-37; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 263-65. (These two translations of the ordinance of Nov. 25 are irreconcilably different.)

24 Under Beeck again asked the court, on the 28th, for "an act of consent, to visit all cellars and houses, in order to prevent all smuggling, and for the maintenance of the City excise." The court decided that all who received wine or beer from Holland or other places should have to "bargain with the Farmer for what they consume," and that the case was to be "presented at the bench," and when disagreements occurred the court would regulate the same. The brewers who were members of the court objected to Stuyvesant's ordinance as prejudicial to the interests of all brewers in the city, and determined to address Stuyvesant in the matter, so as "to prevent, if possible, the same being enforced." A conference was held with him on the 29th; he told them that he had "the greatest concern," and now left a message in the city court to "make such an order on the Farmer's petition" as this court "should deem proper."—Rec. N. Am., II: 237-38.

Vander Beck was summoned before the city council on the 30th for examination; he insisted that the regulations be enforced, that the brewers be bound, "like other Burguers, to pay the Burgher excise," and he required to make every of what they brewed as soon as they put it in barrels, "so as to prevent all frauds," and to "regulate the guaging," and also enter what the brewers had hitherto failed to have entered for excise. The immediate outcome was a set of rules drawn up by the burgomasters and schepens, which Stuyvesant approved on Dec. 5, and which were published and posted at the city hall on the 6th, so that nobody might "pretend ignorance."—Ibid., II: 27-28; II: 238-41.

On Dec. 11, Burgomaster Van Cortlandt, Schepen Jan Vigne, Schepen Willem Beekman, and Pieter van Couwenhoven, all brewers, and three of them members of the beach, were defendants in the city court, charged by Vander Beck with smuggling.—Ibid., II: 244-46. The cases were postponed; but, on Dec. 22, the farmer of the excise delivered his answer in court and the schout and remaining members of the bench, who were not under charge, voted for absolvine Vigne, Beekman, and Van Couwenhoven. The charge of smuggling, because the order in regard thereto was not made until after the acts complained of were committed. But they were required to pay to the farmer specified sums as well as the costs of suit in each case. Van Cortlandt's case was not so easily settled. The court could not "agree in opinion," and concluded "to go in a body" to Stuyvesant, "with all the papers" in the case, "hear his advice thereupon, and follow his conclusion."—Ibid., II: 249, 250, 252-54. For the regulations that followed upon this excise matter, see Jan. 9, 1657.

The burgomaster of Amsterdam, with the advice and consent of the lords of the states-general, promulgated a revised code of regulations governing the transportation of all persons to New Netherland, whether servants, colonists, or "other Free persons," and their conduct during the voyage. The fourteen chapters of this important code concern: First,—obedience due to skippers and military captains; the administration of justice by a board of six persons on shipboard, consisting of the skipper, supercargo, commander of the soldiers, pilot, chief boatswain, and gunner. In case of conspiracies or "notorious capital crimes," on either the outward or homeward voyage, the guilty persons, after investigation by the board, are to be delivered over, either in Holland or in New Netherland, "according to their deserts." Second,—penalties for cursing and blaspheming; respect due, to the clergy; the requirement to attend morning and evening prayers. No man shall raise or bring forward any question or answer on the subject of religion, on pain of being placed on bread and water three days in the ship's galley.

Third,—no persons to be received on board without passports; no persons, "bound to service," etc., to be brought from New Netherland by the skipper, etc. "except with special consent of the Director there, on pain of forfeiting Six hundred florins for each person." All skippers, etc. are to keep a journal on each of their voyages, which they shall "deliver over to the Burgomasters or their commissioners, appointed over the Colony in New Netherland," or suffer penalty. Officers, soldiers, and sailors are required to repair on board the ships at drum beat. They shall not run their ships into foreign ports, except in case of urgent necessity justifiable under bond. Persons going to New Netherland in the service of the city of Amsterdam shall be bound to remain there and to serve by water and by land, for the term of four years, exclusive of the time spent in going and returning, or as much as may be required, the City, and this Voyage may require." They may be sent home sooner, however, at the discretion of the city officials of Amsterdam. Penalties and punishments are prescribed for deserters.

Fourth and fifth,—provisions relating to wages under various circumstances, the care of passengers, etc.

Sixth,—provisions relating to private trading enterprises by persons in the service, the disbursement of goods from the public store, etc.

Seventeenth,—the obligation to be content with fixed rations during the voyage. "Every one shall be bound to drink every day his ration of wine without being permitted to save it or sell it to any body else, and the ration of him who may not require to drink it shall remain in the pipe, and he shall not be at liberty to demand said portion afterward." A penalty is provided for stealing provisions, or throwing food overboard on the pretence that it is not good, except by consent of the skipper or commissary.

Eighth,—the care and inspection of arms and powder.

Ninth,—the duty of surgeons to give due service cheerfully, with no other compensation than monthly pay.

Tenth,—regulations relating to wills and the property of deceased persons.

Eleventh,—orders concerning various offences and disorders on the voyage. Dice, cards, or other implements of gaming are not to be brought on board, under penalties for infractions, "unless the skippers or ship's Council should permit something of the sort for pastime." The loser of a wager in a forbidden game shall not be obliged to pay, or, having paid, the winner must repay it or let it be deducted from his monthly wages, and both winner and loser shall pay a fine. Any person guilty of drunkenness, assaying, drawing a knife in anger, or doing bodily harm to any person, "shall be nailed to the mast with a knife through his hand and there remain until he draws it through and if he wound anyone he shall be keel-hauled, forfeiting nevertheless six months' pay." If guilty of mutiny, "he shall while thus shine be thrown into the corpse, and forfeit all his monthly wages and booty." A person who carries "fire or a light into the hold, the ship's battery or the powder magazine," or who uses "any fire or candles except by permission of the Skipper and Commissary," shall be "whipped with cat-o'-nine-tails through his quarters," etc. To further prevent the danger of fire, and "the trucking which arises from bartering tobacco and drink," there is prohibition against selling or bartering of tobacco, and against the use of it except during the day, and then only on the forward deck before the mainmast, with the consent of the skipper and commissary.

Twelfth,—concerning the enforcement of all these regulations.

Thirteenth,—the duties and obligations of the soldiers and council of war. "All Military Officers and Soldiers, and when necessary all others in the City's employ shall, without any exception, be bound . . . . to labor at erecting and repairing of Ports, Batteries, Trenches and other works. . . . " Every one shall be charged with his arms and have their cost deducted from his monthly wages received from the City. . . . " No one is permitted to do injury to the person or property of the inhabitants of New Netherland, "whether French, English or other Christian Nation, or to the Natives of the Country they are to be delivered over, either in Holland or in New Netherland, "according to their deserts."

Fourteenth,—prohibitions of war not to be sold to Indians. "And, therefore, every one must, if needs be, submit to a proper inspection and examination of his Chests, Cases, Casks and other packages, before he be able to go ashore."

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "We consider a change of the value of your currency, that is, placing the beaver at 6½ instead of 8, and wampum at 8 for a siver, instead of 6, a matter of great importance and have therefore deferred the consideration of it until next spring. Meanwhile we shall think about it and later inform you of our opinion and wishes."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 372. See April 7, 1657.

The directors at Amsterdam, in order to obviate any "further expenditures and troubles," write to Stuyvesant their "consent to have the fort there [New Amsterdam] surrounded by a wall of cut stone," and say they intended "for that purpose" to send over "some good masons also some carpenters, in the spring." They recommend to Stuyvesant, meanwhile, "to prepare the work there and have everything ready as far as possible. They say it is "not necessary to wait for the required sailors, because the Company's negroes are "sufficient to bring and fetch the needed material."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 377.

A year later (Dec. 22, 1657), they wrote again, as follows: "At your urgent solicitations and in order to push the walling in of the Fort we have engaged three stone-masons, who with . . . . sailors, called for formerly, are now going over at such wages, as the enclosed list shows, as yet we have not been able to obtain the tenants, because they are more inclined not to enter service and to go there as free men, as some are doing now with these ships, so that if need be you may employ them on day's wages."—Ibid., XIV: 401.

On March 19, 1658, Bartholomeus van Schel and the two other masons who had recently arrived from Holland to complete the stone wall around Fort New Amsterdam applied to the council for an increased allowance, which was granted.—Col. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 192. A few months later (Aug. 19), Stuyvesant presented proposals to the council for completing the stone wall of the fort, as well as for enclosing the city at the river side with palisades.—Ibid., XIV: 200.

The extra allowance granted to the masons displeased the directors, who, on Feb. 13, 1659, wrote: "We cannot approve of it, the more so as according to your testimony these men are progressing lazily and slowly in their work. We direct you therefore, to discharge them, if these masons are not willing to work diligently are properly stipulated pay of 14 fl., and in that case to deduct and make them pay for the passage here (Holland). To finish the work on the fort you may then engage such English masons, as understand to build with stone."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 458. Stuyvesant and the council explained, on July 23, that the increase of one guilder in wampum was not in day's pay, but for board money, and said a change would be made in the boarding regulations of these men to meet the objections.—Ibid., XIV: 459.

We see, then, that the plan for walling in the fort with stone had its inception in 1656, yet that the actual work had scarcely begun before 1658, and was still in progress in 1659. We know that Bartholomeus van Schel and the other masons received their discharge from the public service on May 23, 1661.—Col. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 224. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944.

The receipts from duties in New Netherland during this year are estimated by the directors at Amsterdam to amount to 1,400 florins ($25,500), which does not include "all the other revenues in the country." Nevertheless, all the revenues together are "hardly sufficient to pay the old debts," gross defalcations having taken place in the treasury through the misconduct of Adrian van Trevene and other clerks. Cornelis Stuyvesant, the report by the directors to Stuyvesant, N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 372.

An important criminal action has been before the city council for several months, in which Geert (Gertrude) Coerden and her husband, Guert, have been accused of slandering the reputations of Cornelis Steenwyck and the wife of Willems Beekman, one of the shepherds. The gossip of New Amsterdam has a live subject, and Beekman pursues the case relentlessly.—Rec. N. Am., III: 184, 200, 250. But the court considers its authority "too limited" to pronounce judgment, which inspires them to petition Stuyvesant and the council for an extension of authority, so as to be able to "apply and execute sentence in all criminal matters, capital cases excepted."—On the 21st, Stuyvesant and the council granted this inferior court the right "to judge all injuries and criminal delicts of a minor degree to branding and incarcering," unless an appeal was taken to be by the sentence of the court, within six hours after sentence had been pronounced. If the judgment of the lower court was confirmed or revised by the higher, the final "execution of the punishment of the prisoner" was to be left to the city court of aldermen, burgomasters, and schepens.—Ibid., II: 250-75; Col. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 178; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 268-69.

In a deed recorded this day, Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven conveys to Nicholas de Meyer the "lot where the Mill stands" on the south side of the Suck Steegh.—Liber deeds, A: 85 (New York). This mill stood in the rear of the present No. 41 St. Nicholas St. See Castello Plan, II: 508-10; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961, and Pl. 174, Vol. III. See also 1656 and 1660.

The council grants Isaac de Forest permission to conclude a contract with Jacob Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven for all the strong beer he shall brew for a year.—Col. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 178. As Isaac de Forest is being pursued in court by his creditors, it is obliged to sell off some of his property to avoid an execution sale by either the sheriff or the city marshal. He seems also to have considerable owing to him by others, which he cannot easily collect.—Rec. N. Am., II: 172, 249, 381. De Forest, engaged in other things, to prevent the abandonment of Van Couwenhoven's "well-situated brewery" (the site of present 27 and 29 Stone St.), and to save its owner from ruin.—Innes, New Am. and Inns People, 147, 148.

But Van Couwenhoven continued to be harassed by debts. On Jan. 21, 1658, he was sued in the city court for the payment of a mortgage of fl. 64319 st. on "the stone house, the mill and lot which he owned, and on Feb. 11, the attorneys of the mortgagor asked the court that "the mortgage be sold by execution," so that the moneys might be obtained.—Rec. N. Am., III: 307, 326, 340, 368. Perhaps about this time, Van Couwenhoven formed a partnership in the business of brewing with Johannes Witthart and Jacobus Vis, which could not have lasted many years, judging from a long court litigation, in 1664-5, over the closing of this accounts of this copartnership, said then to have ended "several years" before.—Ibid., V: 154, 158, 165, 167, 281, 283. At any rate, Van Couwenhoven continued the brewery, heavily mortgaged to Pieter Rudolphus (4 April 1657).

On June 12, 1665, Fredryck Flypse (Philippe), who had only recently married Rudolphus's widow (Margaret Hardenbrook), exhibited in court a "judgment, mortgage and settlement" against Van Couwenhoven, and demanded in satisfaction thereof the sale by execution of the "brewing materials, hypothecated to his predecessor and subsequently to him." To which Van Couwenhoven replied he had already "allowed his dwelling house, brewery and its contents to be sold for sale on the 2d July next," so as to satisfy his creditors therefrom, and the court ordered Flypse to wait, "saving his action in case of preference or concurrence." On July 11, E. and W. de Greef, for a warrant to the city marshal "to sell the dwelling house, brewery, brew vat and brewing apparatus" of Van Couwenhoven in satisfaction of the mortgage, which the court ordered the marshal to execute, who presently undertook to seize his beer kettle and brewing apparatus.

When Van Couwenhoven appealed to the court (July 19) for leniency, he was ordered to see Flypse in the matter.—Ibid., IV: 256-57, 271-72, 283; Bulson, Hist. of Westminster Co. (ed. of 1881), I: 511-12.

Gysbert Op Dyck and Claes van Eldant, Jr., are admitted as court measurers of the city, each receiving a yearly salary, of 150 guilders, on behalf of the West India Co., and 50 guilders, each, on the part of the city.—Rec. N. Am., III: 276.

A renewal of the ordinance against any person shooting 18 or drumming, etc., on New Year's day, or planting Maypoles on May day, is published from the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., III: 554.

The West India Co. expended fl. 5,26910 st. during this year for transporting and victualling soldiers who went over to New Netherland in the ships "Ducat," "St. Jan," and "Gulde Otter," as well as for certain persons conducted back to Holland, for ammunition, etc.—New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Nicholas Bernard receives a ground-plot for a lot on William St., if he will undertake to be now being part of the site of the building of the National City Bank.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and I: 406. Stuyvesant and the council receive "manifold complaints of Inhabitants and Strangers... respecting the great, excessive and intolerable dearness of all sorts of necessary commodities and household supplies, the prices of which are enhanced from time to time, principally, among other causes, in consequence of the high price of Beaver and other Peltries in this country beyond the value, which, by reason of the great abundance of Wampum, is advanced, to ten, eleven and twelve guilders for one Beaver. And Wampum both for want of Silver and Gold coin, as yet the most general and common Currency between Man and Man, Buyer and Seller, domestic articles and daily necessities are rated according to that price, and become dearer, from time to time; the rather, as not only Merchants, but also, consequently, Shopkeepers, Tradesmen, Bakers, Baldyers, are embarrassed in their business, as much as 40 or 50 per cent when they sell their wares for Wampum or for Beaver. This tends, then, so far to the serious damage, distress and loss of the common Mechanics, Builders, Farmers and other good Inhabitants of this Province, that the Superior and inferior magistrates of this Province are blamed, abused and cursed by Strangers and Inhabitants, and the Country in general receives a bad name, while some greedy people do not hesitate to sell the most necessary eatables and drinkables, according to their insatiable avarice, viz. the can of Vinegar at fl. 18 stivers; the can of

Oil at 4½ guilders; the can of French wine at 40½ stivers; the gill of Brandy at 15 stivers, and two quarts of home brewed Beer, far above its price, at 14½ stivers, &c., which the greater number of men and women considered as great a disgrace than the greatest offense of the Wampum, that it partly stood, partly long; that they must give 11@12 and more guilders before they can covert the Wampum into Beaver.

These conditions determine Stuyvesant and the council to work out regulatory measures, in an ordinance of this date, which declares: "Wampum a commodity and merchandise in the matter of commerce and wholesale trade; to wit, only among those who import it from abroad, or trade it in this Province with Indians for Fur; but inasmuch as, for want of Silver and Gold coin, or other pay, Wampum must, in smaller quantities, serve as currency between Man and Man, Buyer and Seller," it is resolved "to rate Wampum, and as far as is possible to cause it to be rated at the value of Beaver, the Beaver being still reckoned, until further Order and advice from Patria, at Eight guilders and no higher." To prevent further "complaints of misconduct of the Wampum" and loss to the Company's treasury, it is ordered that hereafter "Wampum shall not be paid out or received, between Inhabitants and Inhabitants of this Province, even for merchandise or for contracts made before this in Wampum, by the tale or stiver, but only by a stamped measure, authorized to be made and stamped for that purpose, by the Director General and Council, the smallest of which measures shall be five stivers; the whole ten, and the double twenty stivers.

If a purchase amounts to less than the smallest measure, or 2½ stivers, the "receiver or the Payer" are to "make up the smallest fraction under or over 2½ stivers, by the tale" each whole Wampum bead being reckoned at half a farthing, and each black bead at one farthing. Publication of the law and obedience to it "everywhere within this Province of New Netherlands" is enjoined. A fine of 50 pounds, Flemish, for the first infraction and double penalty for a second offence are the punishments to be meted out to those who purchase or pay by the tale, or any other measure than that Ordained and stamped," as provided for by this law.—_Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 292-93._

On Jan. 8, Nicatus de Sille, the first provincial councilor, informed the burgomasters and schepens that the director-general and council intended "to publish a certain Ordinance relative to the zeewan and that by a certain measure," meaning the proposed law described above. He told them that the provincial authorities wanted the advice of the city fathers therein, who, considering it "a matter of great importance" to the public, thought it wise "to invite some of the principal Burgurers and traders to the City Hall, and in the course of a Great Council, to open the subject for the public good."

The afternoon of the 8th was fixed upon for this purpose, when the meeting took place in the city hall. Stuyvesant was accompanied by De Sille. The city bench was represented by Allard Anthony, Brad zend, Snelling, Jacob Carthy, and Jacob Stycykker, Jan Vigne, Willem Bockelman, and Hendrik Kip. Those invited by the city bench, "after having communicated with" Stuyvesant, were Cornelius Steenwyck, Gouvert Locockermans, Joen Tuinema, the baker, Coenraet Ten Eyck, Isaac de Forest, Daniel Litscho, and Abram de La Nov. They assembled "in the ordinary Council Chamber of the City Hall." Stuyvesant placed before the meeting "certain oral propositions relative to the decline of the zeewan and the causes thereof." He told them the subject had been considered "in the Supreme Council at various times about six months or longer ago, and that it was finally resolved to fix the zeewan at a certain rate wherein his Hon' submittted a sample, which should be about eight zeewans for one stiver. He then asked "why it should not be so rated... or if possible to propose and to aid in devising a better expedient," since it was "the intention of the provincial government to reduce... the burden of pay, because the Commonalty can obtain necessary for that, and to obviate the severe scarcity which now causes a difference fully of 30 per cent in all payments in zeewan." The invited representatives of the commonalty were "requested to refer to conser together upon..." the subject; they did so, but returning again said they deferred "for the Hour and Burgomasters and Protectors of the Commonalty" to make "such disposal" as they might "deem expedient." They also declared that, "as no zeewan is to be expected immediately, that they should wish much, the rating may be postponed for 6 or 8 weeks or longer until the trade comes and every one can get rid of what zeewan he has. They maintained also "that changing the rate of the zeewan will not make anything cheaper or better accommodation, but create considerable confusion," and that, as it would immediately become known to the Indians, more would be charged for everything by the Indians, who would "enrich themselves," and as a consequence the rate could never be restored to a former state. Then "various debates arose thereupon." The invited representatives of the people "finally withdrew, leaving the determination "to their Superior and the Burgomasters and Schepens."

Then, "after divers debates in Court" between Stuyvesant, de Sille, and the burgomasters and schepens, "it was determined to postpone the rating of the zeewan to a better and fitter opportunity, and to let it go at the same rate as it has done to the present time; and it was thought necessary to make a difference by Ordinance in the payment of zeewan, silver, beavers or tobacco as already exists among all as well in trade as in labor, and to fix the price accordingly of beer, wine, bread, and other daily necessaries, each different according to the pay."—_Rec. N. Am., II: 260-61._

Formal suspension of the ordinance, "until the Wampum be somewhat reduced in quantity," was voted by the provincial council on Jan. 9,—_Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 292-93._

On Dec. 22, the directors and burgomasters, and the Wampum ordinance, sent it back to Stuyvesant, with a "few alterations," adjudged that wampum should not be rated or exchanged at a higher rate than in New England, and ordered that all ordinances or edicts should in future be issued in the name of the chamber of Amsterdam, instead of using only the title of the West India Co.—_Bibl., II: 292; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 400._ See Jan. 8, 1657. See also Nov. 29, 1657, for the further ordinance concerning wampum.

A conference, "in the form of a Common Council," is held between Stuyvesant, de Sille, the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, and seven of the principal merchants of the city, "in the ordinary Council Chamber of the City Hall," to deliberate concerning the decline of wampum as money (for full particulars, see Jan. 3); but other matters are "proposed and decided to be taken into deliberation," and with this view a memorandum is made by the schepens. These proposals relate to establishing a "law of citizenship" or Burgerech, "to keeping open store and selling by retail practised to the present time both by Jews and all foreigners."—_Rec. N. Am., II: 260-62._

WARNER WESSELL applies to the burgomasters and schepens for "the office of gauger and officer of beavers" in the city. He receives the appointment. On the 9th, he took the oath, and, on the 15th, regulations were made for him for gauging and stamping or branding "all barrets, whether beer barrets, half barrets, quarters or other cases made or used in the city," and delivered from one to the other, whether to Vrouwenburg or elsewhere. New Amsterdam was allowed to make delivery of any barrets before they were gauged, and a penalty of 25 guilders was fixed upon for infractions of the ordinance.—_Rec. N. Am., II: 293; III: 160, 161, 162, 166-67.

An ordinance was passed by Stuyvesant and the council on Oct. 26, 1656, by which it was forbidden to carry on the business of bakers or tavern-keepers without a license, to be renewed every three months. On the 30th of that month, the edict was published at the city hall of New Amsterdam, and it was to become operative from Nov. 1,—_Rec. N. Am., I: 26-27; II: 207, 208; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 262._ See also Nov. 23, 1656.

The burgomasters and schepens now resolve to "summon all the tapsters of the city to appear at the city hall on the morrow, to be informed of their duty to take out quarterly licenses and pay each time 6 fl. or one pound Flemish ($2.40). Accordingly, 22 tavern-keepers, men and women, whose names are recorded, were licensed together and bound by bond whereby the commonalty can obtain necessary for that, and to obviate the severe scarcity which now causes a difference fully of 30 per cent in all payments in zeewan."

The invited representatives of the commonalty were "requested to refer to conser together upon togheter..." they did so, but returning again said they deferred "for the Hour and Burgomasters and Protectors of the Commonalty" to make "such disposition" as they might "deem expedient." They also declared that, "as that there must be a fixed price for beer, yet, on wines, which were

Jan. "not so necessary for the common people," they allowed discre-9 tion and there was no fixed rate. The price of beer was fixed upon as "sixteen stuivers" or "one Vries" (4 mengen = 5 qts.), and licenses were ordered to be taken out within a day after publication of the record.

The city authorities did not favour the licensing of the bakers, because it was "not customary in any place for tradespeople to pay anything in this shape," and said, if such a thing were introduced,
"it should here be imposed also on other handicrafts.

On Jan. 11, the presiding burgomaster informed the court that a committee of the tavern-keepers had requested through him "an abatement" in the license fee from six to three florins, as no more was required of tavern-keepers in Holland; and that the sale price of the "Vries" of beer be fixed at 12 or 13 stuivers. The court held fast to its original order, and required its enforcement, especially "as many" had "already paid." Some of the tavern-keepers, hower, petitioned anew, on the 17th, but got no further concession.—Rec. N. Am., I: 28-39; II: 266-68; cf. also the 23, another provincial ordinance was passed with regard to licensed taverns and the excise under supervision of the subaltern courts of the villages throughout the province.—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 296-97.

13 The city court passes an ordinance prohibiting everybody from using in the city "any other oil, weight or measure than that used" at old Amsterdam, and directs that all these measures in use in the city shall be brought to the city hall once a year, on Jan. 25, to be there stamped as correct, by the court messenger of the city, "in the presence of two of the Courts." A stamping tax is fixed upon, and a series of fines is established against those who use any unstamped measures.—Rec. N. Am., I: 29-30; II: 260, 262, 266-68.

16 Numerous complaints are registered with the provincial government concerning "the chopping of Firewood and cutting of Timber on lands claimed by divers Priviledges: Originating from the fact that many land-grasping Inhabitants of the province have received, several years ago, many and large tracts of land on Letters patent from the Director General and Council, on the express agreement to cultivate and improve them," but which in many cases the patentees have "allowed to lie" waste, un fenced and unimproved. Such a dire-gard has militated against the interests of the West India Co. and curtailed its revenue, whilst it has delayed "the settlement of the Country." Other inhabitants, who have sought "to earn an honest living for themselves by chopping and cutting Firewood and Timber," have been hindered by the patentees of the unimproved lands, so that guards have often ensued. Stuyvesant and the council, on this account, order all persons who claim any lands, by virtue of patents or deeds, to "properly set off and fence them in,"
so that the government may visualize what lands still remain ungranted, and give permission for the chopping of firewood or timber "on unfenced lands," at the most convenient places, without hindrance from anybody. The ordinance was published at New Amsterdam at the city hall, on the 24d.—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 294-95; Rec. N. Am., II: 274.

22 The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, in a petition to the provincial government, remonstrate against the daily increase of peddlers, who are arriving from Holland and refuse to sell their goods in the city, but rather proceed "immediately to Fort Orange or to some other place, and, having finished their trade there, to return to Holland and the hinterland," so that the city derives no profit from them. They now allege that "even the provisions" which were brought over from Holland in the summer of 1656 have had to be "received from Fort Orange, because the trade there is "much better" than at New Amsterdam.
This commerce is daily increasing, and by the twelfth article of the Freedom and Exemptions, which designated Manhattan Island as the staple port for the whole province of New Netherland.
The city government having assumed obligations for defence against English encroachments and the Indians, the city fathers request that the commonalty be favoured "with some privileges.
They ask a grant of the burgomaster, "Citizenship, "one of the most important privileges in a well governed city," and the restriction of public trading within the jurisdiction of the city to those who will be known as burghers. Residents who are not regular settlers, they say, should "not be allowed to trade at any quarter" in the environs of the city, except by permission of the supreme authorities.—Rec. N. Am., II: 273-75.

4 On Jan. 30, a council, answering the forergiving representation of the city fathers, admitted the justness of the complaint against the itinerant peddlers and the fatal consequences thereof to the people of New Amsterdam. They decreed that henceforth traders who arrived in the province should "be held, by acts of staplegood and pursuant to order and instructions of the Lords Patriarchs of the City and the States, to set up and keep an open store within the gates and walls" of New Amsterdam "in a hired or owned house or room and to ask from the aforesaid Burgomasters and Schepens, beforehand, the common or small Burgerright or citizenship (Prooster rechts) to enable them to trade." For the right, 20 guilders were to be paid to the city, and "during their stay in this City" they were to "bear like other Burghers and citizens their burdens, expenzes [taxes], rounds [tochens] and watches.

The city was granted also the privilege of establishing a "Great Burgerright" for those who might apply for it, and to collect a fee of 50 guilders therefor. Only those persons who possessed the great burgerright could be nominated and hold office in the city, and they were to have certain concessions, such as freedom from arrest by order of any inferior court in the province.

On the 31st, the city fathers asked for an "explanation of the conceded privileges," i.e., to learn what the privileges of the large and small burgerrights should apply. They requested that the great burgerright might be held by all former schouts, burgomasters, and schepens, those then in office, as well as those who were to be chosen presently for the new year.—Ibid., II: 286-

Reply to this query came in a provincial act on Feb. 4.
It is designated for the great burgerright all persons who had been and were then "in the High or Supreme government of the Country . . . and their descendants in the male line" all former and actual Burgomasters and Schepens of New Amsterdam and "commanders descended to the burgomasters of the Gospel," now or formerly in office "and their descendants in the male line;"
the commissioned officers to the Ensign inclusive "belonging to the City regiment," as well as "their descendants in the male line." Others could procure the grant by virtue of the method provided in the law of Jan. 30.

The small burgerright was given to all persons who had been bona fide residents for the preceding year and six weeks; to "all born" in the city; to all who had married or thereafter might marry "native born daughters of Burgers," and to those who should secure the latter by possessing "the system laid down in the law of Jan. 30. The proceeds from burgerright fees were to be spent by the burgomasters "principally in the strengthening and circumvaluation" of the city. The law ordered the burgomasters to make out lists, respectively, of the great and small burghers, in a true Register, and deliver a "copy thereof into the Office of the Secretary of the inhabitants general and Council."—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 501-3; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 180.

On Feb. 6, forms of certificates of the great and small burgher-ights were drawn up, and, on March 29, the burgomasters issued a warning against trading in the city save by those who procured a burgerright. On April 9, all who claimed to beburgers were ordered to hand in their names to be registered.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 181; Rec. N. Am., VII: 147-48, 149.

Persons who had had a residence in the city, and removed, forfeited their burgerrights and were required to reestablish them-se lves according to law. The burgomasters did not accept a"prorogavide, and the city bench confirmed them in cases brought up in court.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 149, 158.

From April 10 to May 3, there were inscribed on the records of the city the names of 20 great burghers and 266 small burghers (ibid., 150-53); cf. the twelfth article of the Freedom and fusal of burgheright to Jews). In Jan., 1658, when the nomination and election of new city officials was being taken up, a communication was sent by the director-general and council to the city court which referred to the "small number of the Great Burghers and the consequent trifling change of persons fit for city magistrates.
Therefore, the council, "owing what is owing to the old and suitable persons," men like Isaac de Forest and Frederick Lubberken, who came to be among the best citizens of their generation in the province.—Ibid., II: 315.

The burgomasters and scheeps resolve to petition Stuyvesant Jan. 22 and the council for the privilege of appointing official cities with the approval of the supreme provincial authority. They formally 12 made this request on the 21st, as a privilege appertaining to municipal cities. It was agreed, because it is a “violation of the order in Netherland.” Action is deferred.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272.

The brewers of New Amsterdam ask the city court to prohibit Paulus van Baecck, farmer of the burgomaster’s excise on wine and beer, to sell his drink to any other Amsterdam, as it has been, because it is a “violation of the order in Netherland.” Action is deferred.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272.

Jacques Cortelyou petitions for the office of surveyor-general, receives the appointment, and takes oath of office.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 180.

"The city of New Amsterdam, by a proclamation, on the 9th of March, have been, because it is a “violation of the order in Netherland.” Action is deferred.—Rec. N. Am., II: 272.

On Jan. 29, a majority of the city council favoured a double nomination by itself of a treasurer for the city, but consented to lay the matter aside, temporarily, at the request of their presiding burgomaster and the schout. But the two burgomasters, who took office on Feb. 1, brought the matter to the attention of Stuyvesant and the council, who decided, on March 6, “that henceforth the place of Treasurer” should “be filled and served by the last retired Burgomaster,” one of the two going out of office each year, and, accordingly, commissioned Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt “to administer the City’s income on orders signed by the Burgomasters then ruling and not otherwise,” whom the burgomasters now confirm in office (on the 8th).—Rec. N. Am., II: 282; VII: 144.

The city’s revenues are not forthcoming and the city’s debts remain unliquidated. A general assessment levied in October, 1655, has not been paid by many persons in New Amsterdam, and Allard Anthony and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt have “disbursed considerable of their private funds” in the city’s interest as a loan. The two ruling burgomasters, therefore, resolve “that the moneys expected from the Farmland of the Burgier Excise and the Slaughtering” shall be used to reimburse “the aforesaid gentlemen” in deduction of their disbursement in the year[s] 1655 and 1656, but that those who have not paid for the old assessment of October, 1655, shall be implored to do so, in order that recent debts and current expenses may be met.

On the 9th, the burgomasters drew up a list of nearly sixty delinquents, among them quite a few of the principal inhabitants, whose debts aggregated 14,088 florins, and ordered collection to be made by a court messenger. The city treasurer, however, soon complained that the moneys were “not brought forward” and, on the 29th, the city marshal was “charged to distress by execution” the delinquents for the amounts due.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 140–41, 142±3, 144, 145.

On account of “increase of trade and population,” the business at the company’s warehouse and scales on the Strand of the East River, as well as transportation of beer and wine by the beer porters, is clogged. Stuyvesant and the council consider it imperative to not only increase the number of sworn labourers at the said Warehouse and Scales, but also the number of scales, to do justice in daily shifts of at least three each; “to work together in one common purse,” and, “in case of fire, freshet or other very urgent necessity,” to be ready to repair to the place of disaster “before all others,” as well as to attend upon the arrival of all ships in sufficient numbers to “accommodate the shipper and that stranger,” and the burgomasters are enjoined to name a double number of men from whom the allotted number are to be appointed by the director-general and council. The burgomasters, when undertaking the nominations on the 15th, found the number of applicants too few, and were able to name only twelve men, of whom six were chosen by the burgomaster, and six by the council; but the burgomasters were enjoined to name a double number of men from whom the allotted number are to be appointed by the director-general and council.

Pieter Tonnaeman, whom the council appointed on the 6th to be a church-mast at New Amsterdam in place of Nicolas de Selle, retired, is now confirmed in office by the burgomasters.
Pieter Corneliszen Vander Veen, a merchant of New Amsterdam, in a petition to the burgomasters, says he has "incurred great expense on his dwelling house at the corner of Pearl Street" (south-west corner of Pearl and Whitehall Sts.), and is "about to make greater improvements as an occupations account, he asks them to provide that "a Square may remain and be made by resolution there." The burgomasters refer the case to Stuyvesant for settlement, but he declares "the aforesaid Square was disposed of, long before the distribution of the lots was granted to the Burgomasters," and therefore does not belong to them, so Vander Veen is referred to Stuyvesant and the council, "if dissatisfied."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 147, 149.

House and lot he had obtained by deed of Oct. 15, 1653, from Govert Loockermans, as attorney for his wife, Mariet Jansen, late widow of Timen Jansen, and Vander Veen had married, on Jan. 7, 1655, Elsje Tymenzen, Jansen's daughter. He died in 1661, and, in 1663, his widow was married to Jacob Lestier, whose occupancy of the house, better known by his name, then had its beginning.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 271, 379. Certain lots in the city of New Amsterdam were granted in 1656 "to divers persons who were in want and had no places to build on." Some of these persons having failed to build or even make preparations therefor, "to the evident obstruction of population," the burgomasters now give notice and warning that all delinquent grantees shall "be bound to make preparations within 14 days from date to build on their lots," or suffer forfeiture.—Rec. N. Am., 1658, 84. That this order still failed to move the delinquents is evident from a provincial ordinance of Jan. 15, 1658, on the same subject.—Laws & Ord. N. Neh., 352—357; Rec. N. Am., I: 36—37; II: 301—315.

For some time it has been known in New Netherland, as well as in the tobacco trade, that agents, have been committing frauds by the shipment of "poor, bad, rotten or mouldered Tobacco," making gross overcharges for this poor stock, so that the importer cannot even "realize the ship's freight." A provincial law is now passed to provide for a better inspection of tobacco, namely, "the Virginia Tobacco . . . as well as that of New Netherland." To prevent the fraudulent changing of brand marks on hogsheads, a new system of branding of both Virginia and New Netherland tobacco is prescribed for the different grades. Exported tobacco, designed for Holland, is subjected to inspection "by a proper, trustworthy and sworn person, in or in front of the Company's store." on the 24th of May, 1656. See Castle Plan, tobacco is "embarked or shipped." The poorest quality, which is marked zero, cannot be exported "except on the Shipper's own account," and his giving "sufficient security for the ship's freight and other charges" to be incurred. The bills of lading and invoices are obliged to carry the findings of the inspector as to quality and brand marks, "in addition to the Merchant's marks." A fine of one pound Flemish is fixed upon for every hogshead shipped in violation of this law.—Laws & Ord. N. Neh, 307—9.

Silkworm culture in New Netherland is proposed by the directors at Amsterdam, who send over "a small box with eggs, that the experiment" may "be made there also." In this correspondence they refer to boxes of silk arrived at Amsterdam from the English in Virginia.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388; more eggs were sent over in December of this year (ibid., XIV: 401), and in December, 1659 (Ibid., XIV: 452).

To Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant: "Concerning the proposed change of the value of your currency or reduction of the beaver and the wampum, we have after due consideration come to the conclusion, that depreciation of the currency means destruction of the commerce and consequently ruin of the country. To prevent greater improvements as an ordinary occurrence. On this proceeded gradually beginning with the wampum, which is to be reduced from 6 to 8 for a stiver; it being well understood that this reduction shall not take effect before the beginning of next year, 1658, and in the meantime, upon the receipt hereof, the people promised that, in the meantime, all measures are published here in all well-governed republics and kingdoms, to cause the least possible inconvenience and loss to the community." The reduction on the currency value of beavers from 8 to 6 guilders is deferred.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council that they have "by no means the intention to grant the Lutherans any more liberties or whatever to them." On June 14, 1656, and by which they still stand.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388. For all particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

The directors at Amsterdam inform Stuyvesant that they are still resolved "not to separate the office of Schout [of New Amsterdam] from that of the Fiscal . . . that the duties of both be performed by one person."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 388. See Nov. 7, 1656.

It appears that Stuyvesant and the council have applied to the directors, at Amsterdam, for some ship carpenters, but that the directors, thinking that house carpenters were meant, "because of the small shipping owned there [New Netherland] by the Company," reply that it is expensive to engage such people, "and therefore trades as carpentering, brick-laying, blacksmithing and others ought to be taught to the negroes, as it was formerly done in Brazil," they further, that "this rule has "sufficient fitness for it," and that it will "be very advantageous."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 387.

Nicholas Verleth (or Varlett) is appointed by the council as a commissioner of imports and exports, and Warner Wessels is chosen inspector and sworn to aid in the exercise of this office, 1659; he, as a burgomaster, was granted permission to receive merchants' goods on storage in the public store of the Company.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 183, 184.

Andries Jochemsen petitions the burgomasters and schepens for permission to ship negroes for three negroes on Sunday during the time of preaching, contrary to law, and requested that he "be condemned not to tap any more for a year and six weeks," paying also the costs of the prosecution. The court ordered Jochemsen to "deposit the money with the Secretary" of the city, and provisionally ordered him "not to tap."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 9. On Jan. 4, the case came up again. A petition from Jochemsen was considered, in which he declared that, if given time "until the next Court day," he "would prove to the contrary" the charges against him. The schout was, thereupon, ordered "to produce and deliver to him the last River, bearer of the aforesaid negroes, who shall appear with witnesses."—Ibid., IV: 13—14. On Jan. 31, the court examined further into the charges and decided "that the negroes of Cornelis Steenwyck, Govert Loockermans and Tomas Hall be summoned" to court on the next court day.—Ibid., IV: 34—35. On Feb. 14, the schout produced his papers in the suit, and requested that Jochemsen "be ordered to produce by the next Court day the papers in his defence, on punishment of deprivation of right," to which the court agreed.—Ibid., IV: 33—34. On Feb. 28, the schout appeared against the aforesaid negroes. Resolved Waldron acted as their interpreter, and they were asked "one by one . . . if they had not drank one Sunday during the preaching, at Andries Jochemsen's house!" Their testimony disagreed, but in the main showed they were at his place only once, when the preaching was nearly over. The case was continued until the next court day.—Ibid., IV: 41—42. On March 7, the schout read "definitive judgment on the monies deposited" by Jochemsen regarding the irregular tapping on the Sabbath to negroes and heard the 28 Feb. last. Jochemsen again denied the charge. He was asked to swear "that he gave no drink, either directly or indirectly, himself or by his wife, at the time when Steenwyck's negro made the alleged.tap," and the judgment was rendered. He confirmed the same "on oath at the hands of the President," and the court then excused him from the fine and dismissed the case.—Ibid., IV: 45—46.

Schout Tonneman, however, kept an eye on Jochemsen. On June 12, 1653, he charged in court that Jochemsen had violated the ordinance for tavern-keepers, alleging "that he saw people sitting" at his house "at night between ten and eleven," which was contrary to the law, which required that "no person can tap after nine o'clock." Jochemsen denied the charge. He said they merely "sat together conversing with each other, among other things of the sale of houses." The court then simply reprimanded him, which was done in his absence from the chamber.—Ibid., IV: 234-35. But he stood about returns, etc. Upon this, they did not continue the hearing. The court court that Jochemsen be fined 25 guilders "for having sold drink by the pot, found to be too small, . . . defrauding the public and wronging them intentionally;" also the schout requested another fine of 34 guilders "for having there found on Sunday, being the 17th instant, seven at eight persons bowling and two others sitting ticktacking or playing backgammon," in violation of provincial ordinances recently reviewed by the city court. Jochemsen said in rebuttal that he had "not tapped with the pots seized nor made any use of them, admitting that he tapped, but that such was done after the preaching at the Bowery was over." This referred to the service at Stuyvesant's bouwery. The court condemned him to pay a fine of ten guilders "for having tapped with unstamped and under sized cans," and decreed that "no tavernkeeper can have in his house any other pots than those of full size and stamped" as the law requires. The rest of the charges were dismissed.—Ibid., IV: 264-65.

Tibout Riverseen asks the burgomasters for permission to keep a tavern in New Amsterdam, but they answer that it cannot be allowed until he has purchased his burgerecht in the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 15.

Jan Cohen Hendrickus, or Henriques, a Jew, asks the burgomasters for "permission to bake and sell bread" in New Amsterdam, "as other bakers, with but closed door." The request is denied as "directly contrary to the special privileges granted to the burghers and as contrary to the orders of the directors at Amsterdam. On the same day, Aner Levy, another Jew, petitions "to be admitted a Burgher" claims it ought not to be denied him, because he keeps "watch and ward (ocht en wacht) like other Burghers," and exhibits to the burgomasters a certificate of his burgerecht in old Amsterdam. They decree, "as before," that it cannot be granted, and refers the Levy to Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 154. A committee of the Jews of the city, on April 20, drew up a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they expressed their "great surprise" at the turning down of Levy's request. They exhibited proof of the burgerecht as enjoyed by Jews in old Amsterdam, and asked that their people should not be excluded therefrom in New Amsterdam, in view of the guarantees of freedom accorded to them by the directors at Amsterdam. Stuyvesant and the council endorsed upon their petition a command to the burgomasters "to admit the petitioners and their Nation to the Burghership, in due form."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1653-57, App. C. Oppeheme, Early Hist. of Jews in N. Y., p. 36. See also Aug. 28, 1655.

A second general survey of New Amsterdam was finished shortly after this time by Jacques Cortellyou, who was appointed surveyor-general in 1653. The survey was not completed apparently had been completed by May 3, altered considerably, in some localities, streets, lots, and fences.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156-60.

For the general survey made in the previous year, see Feb. 25, 1656.

"Certain neighbours of Marten Creger or Krijger "on the Grant" (ditch or canal, now Broad Street) petition "for the repair of the Grant," but the burgomasters defer the determination of the matter "until the general survey [be infra] be done."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156. This survey was completed within a few weeks thereafter, and, on June 26, the burgomasters appealed to Stuyvesant and the council for a loan to the city of 1,000 to 1,500 florins, with which to repair "the City's works as well as the City Hall as the sheet piling at the Grant," and promised "to repay it from the City revenue" at the earliest opportunity. Work of excavating and sheeting the grant, so as to make it accessible for small boats, was declared to be "just commenced," on Dec. 3, when it was also agreed to pay returns, on June 6th, and demand was made of the by the house holders or their servants, and "again filling up" what had been excavated. On Jan. 25, 1657, the city authorities were reminded that no accounting had ever been made for the loan, which had amounted to 1,000 florins ($200), received by the City "for the repair of the burgewal" (canal).—Ibid., IV: 313; III: 197. Shewing of a part of the grant had been first put up before the summer of 1654, for we find in August of that year that heavy rains and tides had broken down the planking thereof, necessitating a reconstruction.—Ibid., I: 231. The larger operations began in 1657 proceeded slowly. On Feb. 21, 1658, the city court summoned before it "the three labours of the gracht" (canal), and asked them whether they had seen any complaints. They replied that the weather was unfavourable. They were told that complaints were being made against them because there was no filling in, and they were ordered to go on with their work at once and "not stop."—Ibid., II: 336; VII: 173. The work on the Heere Gracht, as it was now called, was completed in 1659 (Ibid., VII: 210, 215), and cost 27,921 florins, which amount was levied early in 1660 on the owners of lots on both sides of the canal.—Ibid., VII: 246-47.

The "neighbours in the Glaziers Street" petition the burgomasters "for a cart way to the Strand" of the East River, and are informed that their request will be given "further attention" as soon as "the general survey" of the city is made.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 156. The street referred to was the Slynck Steeg (Muddy Lane), now South William Street. "Glaziers Street" was an allusion to Evert Duycykng, the glazier, who lived and had his business there. The street was an impassable at the time. As an alternative, the lane was cut through, and since Street (William Street) was extended. See Pl. 82e, Castello Plan of 1660, and II: 299.

Warner Wessells and Paulius van Beek, farmers of the weigh-scales at New Amsterdam, ask the burgomasters to have "a sworn attendant on the Scales," appointed, according to the custom in Holland, and propose the name of Joost Goderisens (or Godemus) for the place, "promising to give him a reasonable fee from themselves in addition to his ordinary salary . . . , and even to keep the great book" (ledger as distinguished from journal). As the weigh-scales concern the company, the matter is referred to Stuyvesant. On the 26th, Goderisens received the appointment and took his oath of office to "do equal justice to every one, both buyer and seller, . . . and duties and honestly enter all that shall be Weighed."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 155, 156-57. At the same time, Wessells asked "that they may be shown the places, and the corrections . . . corrected and stamped," they being "not correct."—Ibid., VII: 157.

Pursuant to an order of the burgomasters to the inhabitants of New Amsterdam, to make known what damage they have sustained by the survey of the city in this year, Daniel Litscho asks an award for a lot "taken away by the survey." Other claimants included Johannes Nevius, for a lot; Madalaine Vincent, for part of a lot cut off for making a road; Jan Vinge, on behalf of his sister, Rachel, widow of Cornelis van Tiemboen, "for the lot through which the road is run;" Allard Anthony, "for the survey through his garden and the taking away his lot given again to Borger Jorissen in satisfaction for Borger's lot, through which the street was run;" Albert Leedertsen, "for the survey through his lot, which was granted his wife" by the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 159-60, 164.

Among the claims put in against the city is one by "the heirs of de'c Aarysente Cuvile" (Adrienne Cuvile, mother of Jan Cuvile), "for breaking of fence, and injury of grain, etc., in consequence of running the Walls of this City through their land." The burgomasters disallow the claim, because it is for damages resulting from the survey of 1656, whereas their recently-issued order relates only to damages claimed for losses resulting from the later survey of 1657.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 159. For the surveys referred to, see Feb. 25, 1656; April 19, 1657.

The burgomasters issue a formal notice to the inhabitants of New Amsterdam to regulate their fences "according to the general survey" just completed, and to do so within two weeks after due notice.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 160.

Daniel Litscho demands payment from the city for planking which he delivered "for the arranging the shore piling" of the East River.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 158.

The "Deputati ad causas Indicas" report to the classis of Amsterdam that a Lutheran minister named John Earnest whywisser has been "sent to the North River" (Hudson), and recommend a remonstrance to the burgomasters of old Amsterdam as an aid in securing from the directors of the West India Co., Amsterdam chamber, a refusal of permission to the Lutherans overseas to "freely exercise their forms of worship."—Eccles. Rec., 177, for full particulars about the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

The council grants amnesty to all deserters who return within two months.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 185.

Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance regulating the delivery of incoming mail. — Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 313; see summary under Aug. 6, 1662.

The burgomasters, Allard Cummony and Paulus Leechter, as yet as Stuyvesant and the council that they are "forced almost entirely to neglect their private affairs relating to their families," on account of their daily preoccupation with the city's affairs. They say they attend "all ordinary and extraordinary Court days along with the Scheepen," sit every Thursday on city business, and are also obliged to "attend to building, piling, surveying and a multitude of Burgher matters." It appears that Nicolas de Sille, the schout, is endeavouring "to dispose the said Burgomasters from their presidency, and to make himself president of the Bench," a right they claim by concession of the provincial council with approval of the directors at Amsterdam. Therefore, "in order not to nullify the privileges given and granted," to their court, the burgomasters ask for their dismissal "from the Bench of Scheepen," so as to be able to "properly attend to the matters concerning their office and the City," and request that "the presidency of the Schout and the Scheepen" be disposed of by the director-general. The article also says, "the influence of the benches of Scheepen" must have been disallowed by the provincial authorities, although the records are incomplete and do not reveal the answer given to the burgomasters, but show that they never were separated from that duty. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 162-63.

Johannes Everseus Guttenasser, the first Lutheran clergyman sent to New Netherland, arrives at New Amsterdam in the ship "Goude Meulen," "to the great joy of the Lutherans, but to the special displeasure and uneasiness" of the Reformed Church in the city. — Eccl. Rec., I: 395-96. Brodhead, op. cit., I: 635. For particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1667.

Christian Barentsens receives a ground-brief for a lot, including the south-east corner of Wall St. and Broadway, the south-west corner of New and Wall Sts., the bed of Wall St., between the corner of New St. and Broadway, and a part of the bed of New St. — See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II and II: 156; Rec. N. Am., VII: 178.

Megapolensis and Drisius, the Dutch clergymen of New Amsterdam, write to the Classis of Amsterdam:

"We have had an Indian here with us for about two years. He can read and write Dutch very well. We have instructed him in the fundamentals of the faith, and in the answers publicly in church, and can repeat the Commandments. We have given him a Bible, hoping he might do some good among the Indians, but it all resulted in nothing. He took to drinking brandy, he pawned the Bible, and turned into a regular beast, doing more harm than good among the Indians." — Eccl. Rec., I: 395-96. See July 15, 1654.
On this day a strange ship approached the fort, "having no flag flying from the topmast, nor from any other place on the ship." 6

It fired "no salute before the fort," as was "usual with ships on their arrival," and "no honor or respect" was accorded the fiscal when he boarded her. The master of the ship, when he came aboard, "resembled a man of a high character," and was "dressed in a cloth of gold," and he "stood still with his hat firm on his head, as if a goat." With some difficulty, Stuyvesant learned that the ship had "come from London in about eight weeks," and at last discovered that it was "a ship with Quakers on board." She sailed away again on the next day bringing on board and hiding in a place, "several hundred negroes, in the language of the Dutch clergymen, Megapolensia and Dritisus, who recorded the particulars of the ship," "all the cranks of New England retire." 9

These Quakers left at New Amsterdam "two strong young women." (Mary Weatherhead and Dorothy Waugh), who, "as soon as the ship had fairly departed... began to quake and go into a frenzy, and cry out loudly in the middle of the street, that men should repent, for the day of judgment was at hand." The inhabitants, "not knowing what was the matter, ran to and fro, while one cried 'Fire,' and another something else." Theupt of the matter was the arrest of the women by the fiscal and an assistant, who "seized them both by the head, and led them to prison." On the way, and in prison, the women "continued to cry out and pray according to their manner," and "from this circumstance, the fiscal and clergymen perceived 'that the devil is in the same everywhere.'" —ET, Rev. I: 397-400, 407-10, 419, cf. Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 636.

The smuggling of imported goods into New Netherland continues, "under the name and cloak of Sailor's freight," and is detrimental to the company, the farmer of the revenue, and reputable merchants, who are unable to compete with those who evade the customs duties. A provincial act of this date prohibits "all Skippers, Ship's Officers and Sailors" from bringing "with them any goods or merchandise, under the name of Sailor's freight, without exhibiting" in port "a correct list thereof signed" in Holland, and, moreover, not of a value "two months' wages," under a penalty of forfeiting "unentered Merchandise or goods." —Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 314-15; cf. 346, art. 21. The directors at Amsterdam, on Dec. 22, approved with some modifications this act of their representatives in New Netherland, and sent over printed copies of the revision to be placarded. They reverted to the subject in subsequent correspondence. There was some question as to the meaning of the clause about not bringing in a value above two months' wages, as to whether the same was subject to or exempt from duty. So, on Dec. 22, 1659, the directors informed Stuyvesant and the council that it had never been their intention to make "the same clause in the Netherland...to trade to the amount of two months' pay without paying duties." —N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 400, 459, 420, 427, 430-31, 438, 448.

Stuyvesant writes a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the purport of which has been known only in part from an answer of the directors, on Dec. 22 (printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 75-76; XIV: 399-401), although a contemporary extract exists, in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (7), in N. Y. Pub. Library. Stuyvesant discusses affairs at Curaçao; a Spanish prize, Capt. Augusto Beaulieu, a Frenchman, commander; Lutherans; massacre of Indians, etc.; soldiers wanted; provincial salaries, 33,000 guilders.

The consistory of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Amsterdam, Holland, receives a letter from the Rev. Johannes Ernestus Guttwasser, announcing his arrival in New Amsterdam, but telling of orders issued by "Mr. Steinbautz" for preventing the "exercise of Lutheran religion." —From archives of Evan. Luth. Church, Amsterdam. See also Sept. 8, 1657; May 5, 1659.

Stuyvesant and the council address a general missive to the directors at Amsterdam, in answer to theirs of April 7 (printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 183; XIV: 386-90; cf. their answer, Dec. 22, printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 400-401). Stuyvesant's letter has not been known hitherto, although a contemporary extract is preserved in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (7), in N. Y. Pub. Library. On account of its importance, the principal items are here summarized, viz: Reduction of wampum from 6 to 8 for a stone, etc.; they have 10,000 hogs, and weekly editions exceed 5,000 florins, in New Netherland; masons needed for repair of the forts and company's works; no able negroes fit to learn a trade; express surprise that the company should allow a Lutheran preacher to come over, since a state of unity is not promoted thereby; books of the receiver, Cornelis van Tienhoven, have been badly kept, but to be put in shape, and sent to the directors; beer and wine sent to Virginia, etc.; tobacco; fierce murders daily by the Indians; ask that powder be sent over with all ships for the magazine; proper orders against smugglers; passage money paid by the company.

Previously published laws relating to an inhibition against the New York Merchants, and declaring that "the Governor and Merchants without the knowledge of the Fiscal or his deputy" have not been "observed as they ought to be," and the company is thereby "subjected to serious loss of revenue." A new law demands a "strict observance," and prohibits loading of any goods on vessels before "duly entered," under a penalty of confiscation. —Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 316.

The consistory of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Amsterdam, Holland, receives a letter from the Rev. Johannes Ernestus Guttwasser, relating to further experiences in New Amsterdam, and enclosing certified extracts from resolutions of Stuyvesant and his council, of Sept. 4, 1657, in regard to himself. —From archives of Evan. Luth. Church, Amsterdam. See also Aug. 14, 1657.

The financial records of the West India Co., from this date until the end of June, 1658, show receipts in New Netherland from various sources, of 9,742-518 florins; and expenditures for monthly wages of employees, 11,574; tobacco, 34 florins; also, for the monthly pay of soldiers, 797-18 florins. It is doubtful if these accounts are complete. —New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Thirteen ships' recognizances of goods to and from New Netherland produce receipts of 31,160-18 florins for the West India Co. —New Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

The city authorities, with the approval of Stuyvesant and Oct. 8 the council, forbid everyone from building "within a cannonshot from the City's wall." On Jan. 15, 1658 (9, v.), the provincial government declared by ordinance that "no Dwelling-houses should "be built near or under the Walls of Gate," until the vacant lots in the city had been properly improved and built upon. —Rec. N. Am., I: 32, 35; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 327.

Formal notice is given by the city authorities to everybody under their jurisdiction, regulating the slaughter and consumption of "any ox, cow, calf, sheep, lamb, hog or goat" from this time until Sept. 26, 1659, as well as the use of imported, salt, or fresh, meat. —Rec. N. Am., I: 32.

The Lutheran clergymen, Johannes Ernestus Guttwasser, is ordered by Stuyvesant and the council to depart from New Amsterdam, where "Wag" (Scales) when he is ready to return to Holland. On Oct. 10, some of his people authorities were obdu - rate and demanded compliance, saying that two ships had sailed since he was first ordered departed on September 4th. —ET, Rec., I: 405-7. For full particulars of the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not hitherto been known, although a contemporary extract exists, in New Neth. Papers, No. 1222 (8), in N. Y. Pub. Library, and an answer of the directors, of May 20, 1658, is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 214; XIII: 80; XIV: 417-20. On account of its importance, a digest of principal new items is given here, viz: Inventory of goods in ship "De Hey," sent on behalf of the Swedes on the Delaware; Cornelis van Ruyen to give correct accounts of the company's ex- chequer; complaints against Alrichs, that ship "De Waag," laden with clapboards, was detained, and freight of merchants at the Delaware left behind; James Grover, a sedulous English merchant, accomplice of George Baxter and James Haybert (Hubbard), who, in 1653, set up the arms of Cromwell at New England, receives from Stuyvesant a letter, which he brought back to the village of Gravesend on purpose to have it read there, but the authorities of Gravesend sent the letter unopened to the provincial authorities at New Amsterdam; fear that English on Long Island will revolt and go under protection of England; Indians on Cape Repage took about 500 pounds of trade goods and 10 hogs from the Indians seized hogs from plantation on "Staaten" Island, and plundered a small ship; ask recruiting of soldiers; understand no Lutherans are allowed to preach and same forbidden at New Amsterdam, whilst Lutheran preacher, Jacobus Erneetus Goetwater, is to be deported; desire policy toward Spanish, French, and English who come to buy.

30 Stuyvesant addresses a particular letter to the directors at Amsterdam, the text of which has not been found; though contemporary extracts are preserved in New Neth., Papers, Nos. 1223 (8), and 1223 (9), in N.Y. Pub. Library, and it is cited in a letter of the directors, of May 20, 1658, printed in N.Y. Cal. Doc., XIV: 418. A digest of some important parts is given here, viz: English at the eastern end of Long Island seek, through a written report from Cromwell, to be taken under custody of England; their hope built upon a missive written by Cromwell, "To the English well affected on long island, in America," which letter was brought into the village of Gravesande (Greavesend), and the messenger sought to have it opened and read there; Cromwell's letter and enclosures sent to Holland, etc.; advises the directors of keeping a watchful eye on the situation, so that the whole of Long Island may not be spoiled for the company through a revolt of the English, and thus become a total loss to Dutch, as well as the whole region of the North River; recommends sending over more free persons, to strengthen the provision of soldiers against Captain H. de Raeth, skipper of "De Waecht"; all goes well with the English masters at New Amsterdam, but carpenters are needed; wants 18 to 20 sledge-hammers (mocceren) to split clapboards, also some iron and coal; complaint about smuggling of wampum under cover of the colony of New Amstel on the Delaware; complaint against Skipper De Raeth for his insolence; Stuyvesant seeks permission to go over to Holland.

The burgomaster order "that a notice be drawn up about the stealing of the timber" by persons in the city, and "also a place wherein the goods are desired; and that the goods be delivered to those against Capt. H. de Raeth, skipper of "De Waecht"; all goes well with the English masters at New Amsterdam, but carpenters are needed; wants 18 to 20 sledge-hammers (mocceren) to split clapboards, also some iron and coal; complaint about smuggling of wampum under cover of the colony of New Amstel on the Delaware; complaint against Skipper De Raeth for his insolence; Stuyvesant seeks permission to go over to Holland.

A provincial ordinance for regulating the currency is passed by Stuyvesant and his council. It follows in general the premises of the suspended law of Jan. 3 of this year (which see for particulars), but shows a variation in the tabulated prices of necessaries, namely, "articles of food and drink." The new ordinance is designed "to introduce some better order herein, as far as possible," since nothing better has been discovered "after much serious consideration and advice, even of the Lords Patrons themselves." Therefore, wampum is declared to be "in trade an absolute merchandise, to buy, barter, sell and rebarter it at wholesale, according to the value and quality thereof. But, inasmuch as Wampum, for want of Gold and Silver Coin, as already stated, must still serve as smaller change, it is necessary to reduce the Wampum House [Pearl near Broad St], the Wampum due the Company for Rents or other outstanding debts, and to keep, receive and pay it out at Beaver value, the Beaver being reckoned still, and until further advised from Fathland, at 8 guilders; therefore, fixing and reducing the Wampum at the general Counting House, provisionally, from six to eight White for one stiver, and from three to four Black Beads for one stiver, at which rate Wampum shall be received and paid out, after the publication and posting hereof, at the general Counting House, without any distinction of persons; private trade, or sale of goods charged to the Company shall be computed according to the value so much lower, at least not higher, than the price of Beaver. If, on the other hand the Receivers are willing to continue the old rate, the Director General and Council resolve and ordain that the Company, or its servants on its part, can then agree respecting the quantity or portion of Wampum to be taken, as it is ordinarily current. Since some persons may have in their possession "a large quantity of Wampum," a recognized commodity, and suffer loss from sudden action, Stuyvesant and the council declare that they "do not intend, by this reduction of the Wampum at the general Counting House, any alteration or impairing of the Private Contracts, Agreements or sales of Merchandise heretofore made or hereafter to be made," and they grant the privilege to public debtors, who pay within three months at the company's counting-house, to rate at six white and three black beads to a stiver, after which time all payments must conform with the new regulation. On July 11, 1658, the burgomasters of New Amsterdam resolved "to propose to the Board of Burgomasters and Scheepen the regulation of the Seawant (Wampum)." — Rec. N. Am., VII: 189. On Sept. 14 following, the city court "resolved to fix the seawant at eight white and four black beads for one stiver, and to communicate the same" to Stuyvesant. — Ibid., III: 10. In this communication, which was sent on Sept. 19, they said that they perceived a great quantity of wampum that had come from New England to the great advantage of the latter and loss of this place, as much as that of those of N. England give 25 per cent more of the seawant they bring hither, whereby this place is so overstocked that it is held in so esteem, and bakers, brewers, traders, labourers, and others are so particular, that much difficulty is experienced in selling to them; and they requested the province of England, therefore, "provisionally to fix the seawant at eight white and four black beads for a stiver," if Stuyvesant and the council considered it "for the advantage of the Commonalty." — Ibid., III: 16; Cal. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 201. The new ordinance was issued on Nov. 11, 1658 (p. 4).

Meanwhile, however, the burgomasters and scheepen wrote to the directors at Amsterdam, telling them that "the money and daily currency in this Province, and especially in this City of [New Amsterdam], consists of seawant, in which great deception occurs, on account of great quantities of wampum coming from the neighbouring places, so that it is of no value any more, and no business can be done with it with the merchants, traders, shopkeepers, bakers, brewers and other such like, or any thing with difficulty be bought for it, unless goods be paid for (8) three to four hundred percent, and they get had without," they sent letters to their correspondents in Amsterdam, saying, "Thus we send over to Stuyvesant "silver coin of an unusual stamp or mint, and having received that, better order can be introduced then by the General and Council in the Seawant and beavers." — Rec. N. Am., III: 17. The directors at Amsterdam, in a long letter to Stuyvesant and the council, on Feb. 15, 1659, revealed that Stuyvesant had sent them a "private letter" in which he had said "that it would be very desirable, if coin could be brought to New Nether-land; They, however, saw "as yet no chance for it, there being many more places in the world, where this kind of currency is not to be found, as for instance among the people along the Gold Coast of Africa, where for want of it they make shift with some kinds of dress goods or small shells or other objects of little value, which for all that has quite as good a circulation, for anything will pass as currency in trade, as long as a value is placed upon and benefit derived from it." They added: "Even if we saw any chance and had the means to bring coin into the country, we see no way of keeping it there, especially as long as so much is lost on the return cargoes from there. The experience in Brazil has taught us the same lesson, for notwithstanding that the gold and silver coins were made 25 to 50 p. ct. lighter, specie could not be held there, but was at a premium. The general Counting House, for a further crying down of wampum by a general reduction of it. They did not agree with Stuyvesant's limitation of the reduction "only in the Company's office," but were "quite sure that a general reduction will cheapen all commodities and goods and therefore the laborer and the people generally will profit more by it, than the natives" (Indians).—N. T. Cal. Doc., XIV: 418. See also Oct. 9, 1658.

Claes van Elslandt, Jr., one of the city court messengers, is ordered by the burgomasters to find out from the persons who have obtained recent grants of lots from the city if they will begin to build on them, and to inform those who will to make their appearance at the city hall on the morning of Dec. 6. On that day (not the 7th, as of record) a number of persons appeared in regard to this matter, or to be interrogated as to the shooting of the bank of the East River (de Waaie) before their lots. Hendrick Willemsen, baker, also appeared, as the burgomasters had set up a fence beside the city hall. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 166-67.

Complaints having been made to the burgomasters and scheepen that many of those in the city are having their patroons to linger unduly long in their taverns, not only taking from them their earnings but also receiving goods in pawn, in payment for more drink, to the impoverishment of families, who have become a burden to the deaconry or poormasters of the city, the tavern-keepers are now therefore forbidden "to receive in pawn any goods, of whatever nature they may be, such as clothing, furni-
Frequent complaints having been made to the city authorities that timber for piling, for building houses, etc., is being stolen and carried off, the burgomasters, on Nov. 15, ordered that a notice be drawn up on the subject. Such a notice is now issued by them and the scheeps, prescribing "arbitrary correction for the first offenders." The treasurer, reporting the objection of a number of residents on Perel (now State) St., and, on Jan. 14, four buckets with private house marks were brought to the city hall. On the same day Evert Duycking, the glazier, agreed with another to mark the stock of buckets as required.—Ibid., VII: 207.

The burgomasters having inspected the fire-buckets, on Jan. 31, reported no. 124 missing, but made record of 122 others as placed according to former orders at houses named. The same day Van Laer brought 25 more buckets to the city hall, the balance of those he contracted for, which were "taken away by Evert Duycking to put the City Arms on them and to number them."—Ibid., VII: 209.

Paulus Lendertsen van Grit, the new city treasurer, was ordered on Feb. 28, 1659, not to collect "bucket money individually from the poor people" who lived "in hired houses" and could not afford the assessment; but to levy one half the amount and charge it "to the account of the owners" of the houses. The unpaid assessments were now to be collected by the treasurer through Resolution Walordon, the unders-chou, and by one of the court messengers, for the amounts registered on the revised assessment lists.—Ibid., VII: 215-24. Vander Grit was able to report, on March 28, that "something" had been collected. But, as "many" persons were "removing," the city treasurer urged that the unders-chou be "empowered to collect the bucket money before May."—Ibid., VII: 217-18, 220.

The burgomasters ordered the city secretary, on Aug. 8, 1659, "to give a minute to the Fire Wardens, ordering them to complete the fire ladders, fire hooks, and to inspect the buckets, whether they are tight and fit for use in time of need."—Ibid., VII: 228. For a later assessment, see July 8, 1661.

The English magistracy, about a quarter century later (see Feb. 28, 1657), required householders to provide buckets for themselves, the number for a house to depend upon the number of hearths in the house.—M. C. C., I: 187.

It is found that street alterations and fights continue, despite the laws against them, because the fine imposed is so small that quarelisse persons even joke about it. Therefore, Stuyvesant and the council prohibit anew such misconduct, because it is mischievous and sometimes leads to murder. The new fine imposed is 25 guilders "for a simple blow of the fist;" if blood flows,四种 the amount, and when perpetrated in the presence of an officer, burgomaster, or schepen, a double fine.— Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 325; Rec. N. Am., I: 34-35. See Jan. 18, 1656; July 1, 1660; Aug. 27, 1661.

Pietersen Verbruggen's, nos. 75-86; at Paulus Lendertsen van Grit's, nos. 87-98; at Niccius de Sille's in the Sheep Pasture, nos. 99-110; at Pieter Walpertsen van Couwenhoven's, nos. 111-122; and others at the houses of Jan Jansen, the younger, Hendrick Hendrickens Kip, the elder, and Jacobus Backer.—Ibid., VII: 207. Two messengers sent by the directors at Amsterdam are about to leave Holland for New Amsterdam to help in facing the fort with stone.—See summary under Dec. 19, 1656.
Evert Duycingh was referred to in this year as a "glass-maker."

-Liber Deeds, A: 132. Likewise in 1679, the Labadists, in their Journal (p. 276), recorded that he "made and painted in the city" (New Amsterdam) the glass for the church "in the Huspeus" (Esopus).

Regarding the interpretation of "making" of glass, see description of the Castello Plan, II: 299.

-Het Markf(Hyt Stool) (Steech meaning Lane) was mentioned in 1678 (probably for the first time on July 6) to an instrument recorded in Liber Deeds, A: 135 (New York). This street, a broad one, became Markfield Street by 1679 (M. C., I: 58-59, 61). It is, however, called Petticoat Lane on the Miller plan of 1695 (Pl. 23-a, Vol. I). In 1730, the Bradford Map shows it as Markfield Street.—See Pls. 26, 27, and 27-a, Vol. I.

The part of the street extending from Whitehall St. to New St. was sold by the city to the N. Y. Produce Exchange under authority of the Laws of N. Y., (1850), Chap. 139. Between New and Broad Sts., it is still Markfield Street.—See Pls. 82 and 87, Vol. II; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005. See also July 24, 1677.

The land gate, on Broadway at Wall St., is mentioned in a deed of this year.—Liber Deeds, A: 110. This is the earliest mention found. It is shown on the Duke's Plan, Pl. 10, Vol. I; also on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II.

The name "brugh street" (Bridge Lane) is also found mentioned in this year.—Rec. N. Neth., III: 142 (in State Library).

This broad street ran from Pearl to Bridge St., between Whitehall and Broad Sts. It had been closed by the time the Miller Plan was drawn (1695.)—Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. See also C. Pl. 87, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.

In this year, Corneli Steenwyck erected his dwelling-house.—Liber Deeds, A: 136 (New York). This house, a large and fine one for that time, stood at what is now the south-east corner of Whitehall and Broad Sts., known as No. 273 Whitehall St. An inventory of Steenwyck's house, made two years after his death (which occurred in 1684), valued this building at £700. See Castello Plan, II: 264-67; C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. Prior to 1763, this house became the King's Arms Tavern.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952, 979.

In this year, a house was built (see recital in Liber Deeds, A: 151, New York) on the site now covered by No. 34 Broad St., which later was occupied as the "Deaconies Huys" or deacons' house for the poor.—Tide infra Dominie Selym's List of 1686. The inmates were transferred, about 1701, to a house at what is now No. 37 Wall St.—Eccl. Rec., III: 146-61; cf. Liber Deeds, XII: 121 (New York); ibid., XXIII: 45, 57, 59; ibid., XXXII: 100. See also Castello Plan, II: 242, 246. The site is now covered by the State Library.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 952, 955; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

A great commotion over the preaching and activity of Quakers in various towns on Long Island, particularly at Flushing and Gravesend, leads to the arrest, examination, and fining of a number of persons for "harbouring the abominable sect of Quakers." The records relating to this subject are printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 402-91; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 188; Eccl. Rec., I: 409-10, 433. A good narrative account is found in Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 657-59.

Henry Breiser is ordered by the burgomasters to make up his sheet-piling in front of his lot on the East River shore, just north of the Ferry (Fulton Street).—Rec. N. Am., II: 289; ibid., VII: 166.

The secretary of the city is ordered to make out a list of all persons who hold the great burgage-right, in order that the retiring burgomasters and scheepen may nominate therefrom persons as their successors who are "fit for such dignity."—Rec. N. Am., II: 291.

In a proceeding before the city court, the provincial "Secretary's house in the fort" is mentioned.—Rec. N. Am., II: 297. We know the location of John More's house, the site of the secretary's office, from the map of the fort, that the secretary's office was then the first house in the fort to the right of the entrance. It is shown in the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82a, Vol. II), to the west of the fort gate, but not named; see also Pls. 23 and 25, Vol. I; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 975, title-page.

Pursuant to the practice in Holland, notice of proposed marriages had to be given by publication three times before solemnization of a marriage could take place. There were some persons who, after the third publication, delayed for weeks and months to enter the married state. This was in contravention of the laws in force and led to irregularities. The provincial government of New Netherland, therefore, now orders that marriages shall be solemnized within thirty days from publication, or published, or this, being impossible, that the persons in default are to appear in court and state their reasons. For the first week's delay a fine of 10 guilders is imposed, and for every week thereafter the fine is fixed at 20 guilders. Furthermore, no common law marriages are valid, but are supposed to be transferred to a court, where they are then to be fined 100 guilders, more or less, according to their station and ability to pay; whilst such persons may be "amerced anew therefor every month."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 328-29; Rec. N. Am., II: 37-38; II: 364.

There were "many spacious and large Lots, even in the best and most convenient part" of New Amsterdam, which lay vacant "without Buildings," and were "kept by their owners either for greater profit, or for pleasure." Ordinances demanded that they be improved, but these were unheeded. There were other people who were deprived of sites, even parcels of ground, "who would be encouraged in case they could procure a Lot at a reasonable price on a suitable location." Such a state of affairs promoted neither population nor business, nor did it add to "the embellishment" of the city. It is possible only because no penalty exists for neglect of the orders, and "the propriety owners," are "for a great many years, to the prejudice of the owners, have occupied the same without the approbation of greater profit or, using for pleasure, as Orchards and Gardens." The company's profits depend upon population, consumption of materials, and trade.

Because of the above-mentioned conditions, Stuyvesant and the council had "lately caused the vacant and uninproved Lots" to be surveyed (see April 19, 1657) by the "sworn Surveyor [Jacques Cortelyou] in the presence of the Burgomasters" of New Amsterdam, and had "found some hundreds of Lots inside the walls," south of the present Wall St., that were "not built on."

To encourage the use of these sites for building purposes, they now amplify former edicts (see, for example, Oct. 11, 1657), by requiring that all lots that "were lately measured and laid out by the Surveyor" shall, "immediately after the publication and posting" of the new act, be "assessed and appraised, first and foremost by the owners in possession, themselves," to the end that they may not thereafter "complain of under valuation," and that the owners, so long as they retain the lots or allow them "to remain without proper and habitable houses built thereon," shall "pay for the same yearly the 15th penny in two installments, the one half on Mayday," and the other half before the Fairday of the city; these proceedings to be devoted "to the fortification of the city" and the repairs thereof. The burgomasters are directed "to summon the Owners of the Lots without regard of persons before them" at the city hall; "to cause the Assessment to be made," and to "have it recorded by their Secretary in due form" and the city treasurer is to receive the proceeds for the city's use. Should anyone prove stubborn and refuse compliance, he is to be fined and his lots are to be appraised "according to the value and the situation of the locality."

He may retain them by payment of the tax rate on the new assessed valuation, otherwise he shall be obliged to part with them "for that price to the Burgomasters for the benefit of the City." Also, the burgomasters are empowered to condemn uninproved lots at the owner's appraised value, "for the account of the City, and to convey them to others" who will improve them. At the same time, the director-general and council, "in order to promote the great burgage-right, in order that the retiring burgomasters and scheepen may nominate therefrom persons as their successors who are "fit for such dignity.""—Rec. N. Am., II: 291.
Because "some Secretaries, Notaries, Clerks and other licensed persons" are exacting excessively large fees, Stuyvesant and the council order that nobody in New Netherland shall be allowed to draw up or write any public instruments, except those who are duly licensed and sworn by the director-general and council on Feb. 5 30 yr., and a table of fees is fixed upon in great detail. Licensed scriveners are obliged to keep a register of their 35 license, and are prohibited from accepting gratuities or receiving money in advance for services; nor are they to compound with anybody "about a Fee and pay for writing" that is as yet unlearned. How-
40 ever, they may receive a fee before or after a suit, on rendering a bill of particulars. Violation of the ordinance shall result in for-45 feiture of the license, and a fine of 50 guilders. All instruments are required to be signed by the licensed scrivener in the presence of the person executing the same, and are to be sealed, a fee of six

1639 had been surrendered to the city by the company. Stuyvesant, as director-general, could not give himself a valid patent. Therefore, he petitioned those who had the authority to secure him and his heirs in the possession of these lots, through regular processes. Stuyvesant said they of their own knowledge knew that he had "fenced, recovered and raised up, at great cost and labour, out of the water, certain lots, designated as a grant from the year 1647" by Kieft to Jan Pietersen, who had conveyed them to one Thomas Baxter, subsequently "a bankrupt and fugitive from the Province," and the same person who in the English troubles had turned pirate and plundered inhabitants in the Dutch province. On account of Baxter's absconding and failing to appear when summoned by ringing of the bell, his lots were forfeited and reverted to the company. Stuyvesant asked for the annulment of Kieft's ground-brief, which, however, he said, could not be "found on the Register," and for a new ground-brief, etc., to him and his heirs, so that they might "enjoy in peace the fruits of the great expense incurred and still [to be] incurred" on the property. The council allowed the ground-brief, "after proper survey be made," and the burgomasters gave "due conveyance thereof according to the survey," because the object was considered laudable, and the request could not well be refused.—Rec. N. Am., II: 329-331; VII: 172-73.

19 Jacob van Corlaer, whose name survives in Corlear's Hook (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965), was at this time a school teacher in New Amsterdam. He is ordered by the director-general "to cease holding school, until he has asked for and obtained the consent in proper form."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 412. For the remonstrance of his patrons, see March 5.

21 Jacob Leendertsen vander Grift is elected and confirmed by Stuyvesant and the council as "sworn measurer in matters of receipt and delivery of any grain, lime or whatever is measured by the same," as burgomaster in New Amsterdam, for the administration of his office.—Rec. N. Am., II: 337.

22 Claes van Elslandt, Sr., petitions the city court for the post of "hal knecht," or attendant at the shambles or meat market of New Amsterdam, because "both English and strangers" have asked that a person be appointed who shall "keep block, scales and weights in the shambles," to serve them when they come there with their meat, etc. The request was denied, on Mar. 7, "for certain reasons" not revealed in the record.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 349; VII: 173-74, 177.

Allard Anthony is ordered by the burgomasters "to make an inventory of all the papers remaining with him regarding the City; also the a/e of the Great and Small Burgher right." On the 28th, he exhibited all of the papers in the city court.—Rec. N. Am., II: 337, 343; VII: 174, 175.

Silbaut Claessen is ordered to raise the sheet-piling of his lot on the East River.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336; VII: 173. His lot ran through "Hoogh Straet" (now Stone Street) to the East River (now Pearl Street), just above the "gracht" or canal (now Broad Street).

Warner Wensel is "allowed the guaging of the barrel for all his life, but the brading for one year."—Rec. N. Am., II: 336; VII: 174. See March 19.

25 The city court directs that all fines shall be applied as follows: One-third for the officer, one-third for the city, and one-sixth, each, for the church and for the poor of the city.—Rec. N. Am., II: 340.

26 Upon notice by the burgomaster, Stuyvesant and the council now elect and confirm Willem Boeckman as an orphan-master and Hendrick Jansen vander Vio as a church-warden of New Amsterdam. They were accepted by the city on the 28th, and the secretary of the city was, on March 21, ordered to furnish them their commissions.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 340-42, 357; VII: 174, 175, 178; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 191.

Albert Jansen receives the grant of a lot. His widow, Elke Mar. Jansen, received it, on Oct. 19, 1660. The property is now the north-west corner of William St. and Exchange Pl.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82-82e, Vol. II: 287-88; Map of Dutch Grants, II: 395, and C. Pls. 82, 82e, and 87; Rec. N. Am., II: 343; VII: 176.

New origin of Crown Point on the map of the village of New Harlem on Manhattan Island is related in a provincial ordinance of this date. Stuyvesant and his council have contemplated the insecurity of the northern portion of the island, as Indian raids have demonstrated in recent years. To promote agricultural pursuits, the raising of cattle, and the security of Manhattan, "as well as for the greater recreation and amusement of this City of Amsterdam in New Netherland," they now resolve "to form a New Village or Settlement at the end of the Island, and about the lands of Jochem Pietersen [Kuyter], deceased," and those adjoining. This proposed new village is "favored by the Director General and Council with the following Privileges," to wit: Each settler to receive 18 to 20 morgens of arable land and 6 to 8 morgens of flats, to be exempted from the customary payment of "tenth" for a period of 15 years, beginning with May, 1665, but "on condition" that the grantee pay in instalments eight gilders for each tillable morgen of land within the three years, if during the three years, the claimant will not have driven off the lands by Indian calamities or otherwise. The provincial government promises the new inhabitants protection in their possession, to "maintain them with all their Power, and, when notified and required, to assist them with 12 to 15 Soldiers on the monthly pay" of the West India Co., "the Village providing quarters and rations." When as many as 20 to 25 families are settled in the village, there is to be erected an inferior court of justice, the membership whereof is to be chosen at first from a double number of nominees named by the inhabitants, and annually thereafter in the same manner, but on recommendation of the village magistrates in office. Also, when this stage of organization is reached, the village is to be "accommodated with a good, pious orthodox Minister, toward whose maintenance" the provincial government promises "to pay half the Salary; the other half to be supplied by the Inhabitants in the best and easiest manner, with the advice of the Magistrates of the aforesaid Village, at the most convenien time." The provincial government promises to assist the inhabitants at a convenient time in constructing, with the help of "the Company's Neergo, a good wagon road" from New Amsterdam "to the Village aforesaid, so that people may travel hence and thence at no expense." Without the aforesaid assistance, the village has a chance to get started, no other villages or settlements are to be allowed by the director-general and council, and "certainly not until the aforesaid number of Inhabitants" in Harlem is completed. To encourage intercourse "with the English of the North," a "Ferry and a suitable Scow" are contemplated, as well as "a Cattle and Horse Market."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 335-37. See Nov. 27, 1658. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

The burgomasters and scheepen refer to the director-general and council a petition reminding against the order to Jacob van Corlaer to close his school (see Feb. 19). The petitioners "find themselves greatly interested thereby, inasmuch as their children forget what the above named Jacob van Corlaar had to their great satisfaction previously taught them in reading, writing and cyphering, which was much more than the case of other children. The Burgomasters and scheepen join with the petitioners in requesting "that your Hon'ble may be pleased to permit the abovementioned Corlaar again to keep school."—Rec. N. Am., II: 348. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 115. The request was denied on March 19 (p. w.).

26 The council ratifies the appointment by New Amsterdam to New Amsterdam to lodge as many married soldiers as they can conveniently in their domiciles, at a certain rate.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192.

This day was set apart by proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council as a day of general fasting, prayer, and thanksgiving in New Netherland. Feb. 17, 1657-58, is set as the date of this observance, in January, in both Dutch and English. Publication was made in 1668 New Amsterdam "from the City Hall after the usual ringing of the bell," on March 4. Among the "signs of God’s just judgment and certain forerunners of severe punishment," the proclamation recited the "raising up and propagating a new, unheard of, abominable Heresy," as well as the desire to seduce many, 1668, were it possible, even the true believers." All amusements and hilarity were forbidden on this day.—Rec. N. Am., II: 346–47; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 190. Cf. Broodhead, I: 538–39.

19 A provincial ordinance is passed to prevent fraud in the shipping of tobacco to Holland. It requires the shipper to make a declaration to the fiscal of the company at New Amsterdam of the number of casks and the exact weight of each cask.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 337.

The provincial council resolves to rent the ferry at New Amsterdam (Dwete and Pearl St.) to the highest bidder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192. See May 28, 1668.

The provincial council resolves to farm out the wind-mill of the West India Co. in New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 192.

Bartholomew van Schel and the two masons recently arrived from Holland to complete the stone wall around the fort obtain from the council an increase in pay for board money.—See sum-mer, under Dec. 19, 1666.

The burgomasters make regulations for the branding of barrels, and choose Jan Jansen van Breeste (or Breestede), cooper, as brander for one year. All barrels are required to be branded anew in May of each year, with the year mark.—Rec. N. Am., II: 336, 345; 174, 177–78, 223. See also April 21, 1667.

Pieter Schabank (or Schabanc), the city jailer at the city hall, requests the burgomasters to allow him to "lay in beer for the prisoners, also, wine and liquors, free of excise, likewise fire and light gratis," which is granted on condition that he will not "allow any parties directly or indirectly," that is associated drinking.—Rec. N. Am., II: 335.

Replied to the communication of Mar. 5 (q.v.) from the burgomasters and scheepens, Stuyvesant says: "School teaching and the induction of School Masters depends absolutely from the Just Patrons, of which the Director General and Council for pregnant reasons interdicted Jacob van Corlaer, he having presumed to take such on himself without their Order." To which order and resolution "they still adhere."—Rec. N. Am., II: 348.

The school, which was also a religious institution, was likewise under the direct control of the colonial government. The preemption of Jacob van Corlaer to teach in a school without the order of the Director-General and Council brought a very clear assertion of the powers of the government, which then refused to grant the requisite permission even in spite of the humble supplication of the Burgurers and inhabitants and the intercession of the Burgomasters and Scheepens.—Zwickein, Religian in New Neth., 46. See March 26.

The president of the city court states that several of the inhabitants who have purchased their burgerright "for a year and a day" have failed to pay, and even scoffed at the burgomasters who have approached them for collection. On the next day (26th), the burgomasters decreed that henceforth all burgerrights must be paid promptly into the treasury of the city, and that those persons who had already procured the right must pay within 24 hours, or be subject to an execution.—Rec. N. Am., II: 359, 365; VII: 130.

The burgomasters and scheepens renew their system of fines for non-attendance of their members at the sessions of the city court.—Rec. N. Am., II: 356–65.

To Jacob van Corlaer’s petition for permission “to keep a school in this City for the instruction of children in reading, writing, etc.,” the reply is: "For weighty reasons the Director-General and Council decree, Nihilist."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 413. The petitioner’s school had previously been ordered closed because of his presuming to teach without proper authorization (see March 9).

The burgomasters offer to pay half of an account for planks delivered to them by Woutepen van Corlaer, because the delivery is for the benefit of the city and for the fort, the latter pertaining to the expenses of the company.—Rec. N. Am., II: 366; VII: 181–82.

It is ordered by the burgomasters that the street or lane running from the Street where the New Amsterdamer Still (Nieuwe St. or Pearl St.) between the lots of Charles Bridges (called Carol van Brugge by the Dutch) and Solomon La Chars, be left open provisionally "for the use of the City until further order."—Rec. N. Am., II: 366; VII: 182. This lane divided the original grants of 1645 to Thomas Willet and Richard Smith, and lay between the Stadt Huys Lane (Counties Alley) and the Burghers Path beyond.41

John Denman petitions the city court for payment of 935 florins "together with all lost and interest accrued thereof, arising from planks and nails delivered in the time of the English troubles [1653] for erecting the entrenchments of this City." He is referred to Stuyvesant and the council in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., II: 358–69. They gave him an order, on the next day, to the burgomasters and scheeps for payment of the account.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 193. See also Sept. 2, 1669.

John Denman asks the city court for permission to tap, but is refused, "the principal reason" being "that there is so great noise and racket" at his place "that the whole neighbourhood is kept awake." He says this happened while he was absent at Boston. The court advises him "pay attention to his conduct, and that such disposition shall be made as circumstances permit."—Rec. N. Am., II: 364, 369.

The provincial council resolves to summon the principal merchants of New Amsterdam, for consultation on proposed changes in the customs.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 194.

Abraham Pietersen, who has been the miller of the company at New Amsterdam, is granted a permit by the provincial government to erect a water-mill on the Fresh Water.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195. Innes says that it was a tide-mill, and stood near the present James and City Stys, on the brook of the Fresh Water.—New Am. and Its People, 346. Regarding Pietersen, see Castello Plan, II: 231–32; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961–62, where the mill is situated at Water St. near James Slip.

Certain laws are renewed, relating to the prohibition against importing munitions of war, unseasonable unloading and unloading of ships, and carrying persons away from New Netherland without a pass. These laws were apparently drawn up in Holland and sent printed to New Netherland for execution.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 346.

Cornelia van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, is ordered to make an abstract of the principal ordinances in force, in order that they may be renewed. This first revised edition of the laws, consisting of 21 sections, is approved by Stuyvesant and the council on this day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 346–46.

The burgomasters conclude, in compliance with a placard of the director-general and council, to authorize the city treasurer "to collect and take up from each house one beaver or eight guilders in seawant according to the rating of the Treasury." Those who cannot pay are to be listed and reported to the burgomasters, and the treasurer is required to collect the amount "from the occupants of the houses," and the tenant deducting half the sum from his landlord.—Rec. N. Am., II: 192.

Some persons are observed cutting sods "between the wall of this City and the Fresh Water," approximately between the present Wall St. and Pearl St., as well as on the Highway (Broadway), south of this street against "the convenience and usefulness of the road," and makes sods scarce when needed for mending and repairing the city’s fortifications. Stuyvesant and the council therefore forbid "all persons, of what quality soever... from attempting to cut or causing to be cut any sods on the Common Pasture," between the city’s palisades and the Fresh Water, as well as "on the Highway," without their permit, subject to a fine for infraction of the law.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 347. See also description of A Plan of the Commons (1785), in III: 869.

As to "further granting of lots," the burgomasters resolve "to proceed no further before a map thereof be made," and they decide to ask Stuyvesant "to order the surveyor to draw as soon as possible a map of the lots within this City."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 182–83. See June 13.

The burgomasters authorize the city schout, Nicolas de Sille, "to notify all who lie along the North River to level their barns and make open space, convenient to the General’s [Stuyvesant’s] plan."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 183.

Nicolas de Sille, city schout, is directed "to tell every one having vacant uncropped lands" to fence them within six weeks.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 183.
In a letter to Stuyvesant and the council, the directors at Amsterdam say: "Domine Dirisius has repeatedly expressed to us his opinion [see Feb. 12, 1653] that he thought it advisable, to establish there [New Amsterdam] a Latijn school for the instruction and education of the young people, offering thereto his own services. They report 'no objection to this project,' and add: 'If you too consider it desirable, you may make the whole expense by operating in their jurisdiction; but you must not fail to inform us, how such an institution can be managed to the best advantage of the community and kept up with the least expense to the Company.' To encourage Dirisius in his ministerial duties, the directors increase his board allowance to $100 ($120 per year, and grant him besides a house rent free on the island. He received $200. The provincial authorities carried out.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 419; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199, 202; and see Sept. 19.

In his latter days, Dirisius suffered from 'weakness' and 'a failure of memory,' which "disabled him from serving," and he died—Eccles. Repts., Min. (ed. by Palisot), I: 110-11; Corr. of Mem., 433. For another earlier Latin school, see April 14, 1652.

April 16

As Stuyvesant and the council have been asked to define what duty shall be paid for goods imported into New Netherland from Virginia, "the North [New England] or elsewhere," which are said which shall be "the only goods which imports, that theעבדechandies imported . . . outside this Province" shall pay ten per cent ad valorum, "except Provisions, Malt, Tobacco and Sugar," which shall continue to come in duty free. In the category of "Merchandises" are included "all Wines, Beer, Vinegar and Oil."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 348.

The provincial council by order extends the time for covering Willem Pietersen de Groot's house in New Amsterdam with tiles, until he receives them from Holland or Port Orange (Albany).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195. At the same time, the operation of the ordinance of Dec. 15, 1657 (p. 92), for the removal of all thatched or straw roofs in the city, is suspended for two months.—Ibid., 195; Rec. N. Am., VII: 184.

Pieter Schaalbanck is accepted as city messenger of the city court by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., II: 376.

The council of New Netherland approves of Stuyvesant's leave to go on official business to the South (Delaware) River. He returned to New Amsterdam on Monday, May 3, and reported to the council on the 15th concerning the affairs in the Delaware country.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195, 196; N. Y. Col. Doc., XII: 212, where an error in the printed record is "13th" for the date of his return.

An act continuing the ordinance of April 27, 1656 (p. 91), and further regulating the duties payable on imported and exported goods, is passed by the provincial government of New Netherland. To prevent persons from pleading ignorance of the law, it is ordered translated into Dutch and English, so that the facts can be disseminated by posters in these languages as well as in Dutch.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 349-51.

A provincial law is passed regulating court practice, particularly with respect to court messengers. Plaintiffs are required to produce witnesses through a judge of the court at least one day before trial, except in cases arising between strangers; the court messenger is required to make a written return of service, together with the Answer, to the court. "All judgments, interlocutory or definitive, whereby anyone is 'condemned to pay money, or deposit it in Court,' must be "put in execution within ten days," if no appeal has been lodged in cases that admit of an appeal. The method of carrying out the judgment by the court messenger is prescribed, as to attachment of furniture or movables, or even seizure of real estate and ejectments. For the delivery of summons and arrests, fixed fees are established for court messengers. Such fees are subject to the jurisdiction of the court, and any person who sends more than twelve summonses within one year shall be fined $20. The sum imposed on a single summons twelve summonses, of which six summonses are to be paid the acting sheriff for entering the action; for an arrest twelve summonses; for committing a person one guilden and four summonses; for keeping a prisoner over night two guilders, and for serving a mandamus one guider and ten stuivers. Court messengers are not allowed fees for services in cases wherein the company is concerned, but are obligated to serve under the regular salary allowance.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 351-56.

In a letter to Stuyvesant and the council, the directors at Amsterdam say: "Domine Dirisius has repeatedly expressed to us his opinion [see Feb. 12, 1653] that he thought it advisable, to establish there [New Amsterdam] a Latijn school for the instruction and education of the young people, offering thereto his own services. They report 'no objection to this project,' and add: 'If you too consider it desirable, you may make the whole expense by operating in their jurisdiction; but you must not fail to inform us, how such an institution can be managed to the best advantage of the community and kept up with the least expense to the Company.' To encourage Dirisius in his ministerial duties, the directors increase his board allowance to $80 ($120 per year, and grant him besides a house rent free on the island. He received $200. The provincial authorities carried out.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 419; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199, 202; and see Sept. 19.

In his latter days, Dirisius suffered from 'weakness' and 'a failure of memory,' which "disabled him from serving," and he died.—Eccles. Repts., Min. (ed. by Palisot), I: 110-11; Corr. of Mem., 433. For another earlier Latin school, see April 14, 1652.

A resolution in the provincial council provides that the city of New Amsterdam be enclosed with palisades, having two or three openings or gates, in order to prevent smuggling.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195; N. Neth. Papers, No. 1322 (q), in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On July 11, the burgomasters ordered "to set off the town walls in a method," as indicated in the benchmarks. Again, on Aug. 19, the council heard the details of Stuyvesant's proposals for enclosing the city at the river side by palisades, and for completing the stone wall of the fort.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200. The continuance of smuggling led the directors at Amsterdam to approve of Stuyvesant's plans, as they thought it necessary to stop the practice.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 427. See also 1656-7.

The provincial council resolves that Stuyvesant shall proceed at once to the Esopus, now Kingston, Ulster County, outrages having been committed there by Indians, and the colonists having demanded soldiers for defense. Stuyvesant departed with several private yachts, accompanied by Govor Locockernem and 50 soldiers, and arrived the following day. It was during this visit that he advised concentration of the settlers in a stockaded village, which was formed under the name of Wiltwyck. Stuyvesant remained until June 24, and returned to Manhattan on the 28th; but, owing to renewed troubles by the Indians during the summer, he again visited Esopus in October (see Oct. 9). Each time he left a garrison to guard the place.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 196, 201; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 77-90, 93-96; Cf. Brodhead, Hist. Statt. of N. Y., T: 647-49, 650-51. See also July 23.

As the provincial council resolves, since "the lease of the ferry from this Island of Manhattan [Dover and Pearl Sts.] to Long Island [Fulton St., Brooklyn] expires on the last of this month," to lease it again for a term of three years. As they "have ascertained, that the ferry cannot be let on the condition of being proposed" by them, "namely, that the lessee shall be bound to buy or build, within four or not longer than five months, a scow, large enough for the transport of animals and other goods; because the majority of the persons, who wish to lease the ferry, are people of small means, if not poor," and so heavy an expense cannot be incurred for such privilege; and the person that the lessee "shall not continue to de- und evade to induce the present ferry-man, Ephraim von Borsum, to continue "without public competition, for a fair equivalent . . . for the term of three years, on condition" that he shall have a scow built within four or five months. They appoint a committee of council to "bring about an agreement."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 421; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 196. See March 19, 1658.

The "Land Hoort" (land gate) is mentioned in a deed of this date, in which Christiana Barents conveys to Hendrick Hendricksen (Libre Deeds, A: 135); also in a mortgage of the same date on a lot in the "Heere Wegh" (Broadway, near the city hall); and on the lot in the 's Havens (probably the city hall). This was the gate at the present Broadway and Wall St., and these mentions of it are the earliest we have met with. It is also mentioned, under date of Dec. 12, this year, in Min. of Orph. Court, I: 59. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Just two months have gone by (see April 11) since the burgomasters decided not to grant any more lots until a map had been made, and since they asked Stuyvesant to order Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor, "to draw as soon as possible a map of the lots within this City."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 182-83. They now decide "to notify the surveyor," themselves, "to make out a Map" (ibid., VII: 189). On July 11, they agreed to instruct him "not to measure any lots except by foot wood-measure (hout voet); further to request the Director General that a map (Platte Kaart) be drawn of the lots measured within the City;" yet, when they brought the matter up before the whole city court on the 16th, "nothing was done therein."—Ibid., II: 410; VII: 189.

The dilatoriness of Cortelyou nett the burgomasters who, on Aug. 9, remonstrated to Stuyvesant and the council "that they had repeatedly requested the surveyor to make a map" (Platte Kaart), but could not get one from him, not even "a rough sketch." They besought the provincial authorities to order the surveyor to make the map with all despatch.—Ibid., VII: 195-94. Such an order was issued to Cortelyou by the council on Aug. 30.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 200.

The burgomasters "to give an order to the [Court] Officer, to survey every foot, &c., as an ornament to the place," and "to direct the Court Messenger to go around and notify every one," who has "received lots from the City," and to...

The first mention of Adam Roeschen, the first schoolmaster of New Amsterdam, appears in a record of this date.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 189. See also April 11.

18 Early in May, one Hermen Jacobsen Bamboe, who had been killed by the Indians, was buried in New Amsterdam. His estate was by his widow “kicked away with the foot,” and she “laid the key on the coffin”—that is to say, surrendered his estate for the benefit of his creditors. Curators for the administration of the estate were appointed by the court, among them Hendrick Jansen van der Vin. He now asks the court to prevent “the skipper of the sloop sailing for Canada” from taking with him Dirck Chessen, before the latter has given security for the payment of which he owes the estate of the deceased, which is granted.—Rec. N. Am., II: 406; VII: 187–88.

2 The inception of intercolonial trade between the Dutch at Manhattan and the French of Canada is interesting. In the autumn of 1657, Father Simon Le Moyne, the Jesuit missionary among the Mohawks, visited Manhattan. “He remained here eight days, and then returned to Fort Orange, and thence by land to Canada.”—Eccles. Rec., I: 434. He bore with him to Canada an expressed wish of the Dutch to open trade relations with the Canadians. On Feb. 18, 1658, Louis d’Alliboust de Coulonge, acting on this information, wrote to the Dutch and French were allies, he and the principal persons of Canada saw no reason why the Dutch should not be allowed to trade with Canada, and he therefore gave them consent to “come when they please under the condition that they submit to the same customs as French vessels, forbidding trade with the savages and the public exercise on land of their religion.” Father Le Moyne transmitted this letter to Stuyvesant, with his own of April 7, in which he said of the proposed intercourse: “May it therefore bring happy, beneficial and fortunate results. Dear friends of the Manhattans, draw your furrows through the sea to our Quebec and some time hereafter our Canadians will understand with God’s guidance safely reach your shores.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 415.

On July 2, Jean de Pré (also written Jean Du Pré, Jan Prê, or Perier), a native of “Commene [Commene in Flanders],” who received the small burgheirship of New Amsterdam in April, 1657, and is now aged 29 years, petitions the provincial council of New Netherland for remission of duties on a cargo of sugar and tobacco in the sloop “Jean Baptiste,” which is granted because it is the first trading voyage to Canada.—Rec. N. Am., II: 412; XIV: 230; note; VII: 175; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 197. He left some bearings for harbors, and Pré’s chart did at Esopus and Hudson’s Mouths; he was unable to complete it in court litigation, and impoverished her. He never returned, his ship having been wrecked on the Island of Anticosti. His widow was married to Cornelis Andriessen Hooghland.—Rec. N. Am., XIII: 19, 74–75, 78, 81; XIV: 230.

At some time prior to this date, Pieter Wolteraert was Crowned full of danger for his discouraged his master, for which he was given a deed, Nov. 18/28, 1664. The property was that on the present west side of Broadway, covered by the building of the Commercial Cable Co.—See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II, and II: 229–30; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 57, Vol. II, and II: 367.

The burgomasters having decided to regulate the working hours of the labouring classes of the city, and to determine when they shall “go to their work and come from their work, as well also their recess for meals,” the city court resolves “to draft a petition to the Director General and Council to establish Guilds.”—Rec. N. Am., II: 410; VII: 189–90. For examples of the operation of local craftsmen in opposition to the introduction of workmen from other provinces, who undertake to perform the same services at less pay, see April 2, 1747: Aug. 24, 1769.

From a court proceeding before the burgomasters and schepens, held at the city hall on this date, we know that the court met upstairs, and that the prisoners were confined “below.”—Rec. N. Am., II: 411.

The burgomasters resolve “to set off the City with a wall.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 190. For an account of the commencement of this movement for the city’s protection, and to stop smuggling, see May 13.

The burgomasters of the city resolve “to communicate with the General [Stuyvesant] relative to having a public Well made in the Heere Straat” (Broadway).—Rec. N. Am., VII: 190. As this is the only reference to this well in the records of the Dutch regime, it cannot be determined whether it was dug as proposed, or, if so, exactly in what part of the street it was situated.

The city court, of scrivener, burgomasters, and schepens, resolves to petition Stuyvesant “to communicate to the inferior Bench of Justice the privilege of the Great Burgher-right.”—Rec. N. Am., III: 410.

The council makes appointments of officers in the city military companies under the orange flag and under the blue flag.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 199.

Allard Anthony, as treasurer of the city, makes a demand on Isaac de Forest, schepen, for the payment of fl. 104, “for a shed purchased from the City,” but De Forest, alleging “that he paid Frantz: Clasen fl. 50, and again fl. 810 to Juffwes Wessels,” requests 12 days delay in the matter.—Rec. N. Am., III: 190.

The name of “Brugh Straat” (the present Bridge Street) appears thus early in a deed, in which Johannes Nieuvis conveys to Cornelis Steenwyck the property situated at the present 29 Pearl St., running through to Bridge St.—Lib. Deeds, A: 136–37 (register’s office, N. Y. County). See also Feb. 11, 1653; May 3 and 9, 1688; June 26, 1690. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 997.

Stuyvesant and the council address a missive to the directors at Amsterdam, which accompanies a large number of official papers. A liberal contemporary extract from this lot of papers, giving most important data, many of which have not been known hitherto, is contained among the deed books of the N. Y. Pub. Library. A partial answer from the directors, of Feb. 13, 1659, is printed in N. Y. Col. Doc., XII: 232–33; XIII: 98; XIV: 427–34. A digest of the chief contents of the enclosures is given here, 221: A statement from Jan de Decker, in June, 1658, concerning finances, and signed in the ship “OTTER,” which left the Texel on Jan. 6, 1658, and arrived in New Netherland on March 13 or 14: books loosely kept in the province, but new receiver (Van Ruyven) an honest man with good experience, his instructions; the late Fiscal Van Tienhoven’s accounts, reporting thereon too slow; inventory showing last state of magazine, stores, ammunition, etc.; outstanding debts from various numbers of houses of the company; old bookkeeper unfit, new one needed; fort must be repaired and made fit; company’s slaves must be taught trades; ships’ names and instructions for sending them over. Letter from Domine Dirius in regard to money. Ordinance changing value of beaver and wampum, beaver at eight guilders, wampum at three to four black and six to eight white the stiver. Order in regard to train-bands, powder, and lead, with cost; excise on wine, beer, and distilled liquors in tapsters houses at New Amsterdam, 10,500 guilders; and for Long Island, 75 guilders; report on what Stuyvesant had been doing; objections to beatings (see Jan. 30, 1658), about 60 to 70 Christians at Esopus, who have in rich soil some 900 sheep, and all the Christians have been concentrated in a trappade; Indians there promise to deliver up murderers when they find any. Report of Stuyvesant on occurrences at “Nieuwe Amstel,” at the Delaware; various settlers therein; no one to go within environs of Fort Alteha, in district of the company, to settle and build there; order concerning Sweeds on the Delaware; smuggling to be punished; Domine Welsius and Director Alrichs; colonists and Alrichs; various items about Sweeds on the Delaware; wages of masoos at Manhattan or New Amsterdam increased; appearance du Bruyn and tobacco coming from Curacao; declaration of Pieter Plovier: about skipper of ship “De Washbecke”; copy of confiscated goods of Melys; pieces and papers relating to Jao (Juan) Gallardo, a Spanish pilot. Resolutions of Stuyvesant and council in New Netherland: La Montagne made vice director at Fort Orange; Fiscal Van Tienhoven demoted; Pieter Tomassen named, provisionally, by the council, Jan. 3, 1657. Ordinance, Jan. 16, 1657 (p. u.), requiring everyone to have lands recorded and built upon or used, also in regard to cutting wood on others property; Jacques Cortelyou made surveyor-general New Am-

rich’s privileges, and conditions for acquiring same, Jan. 21, 1657: great and small burgheirships defended, Feb. 4, 1673; income to be employed for fortifying the city, Feb. 6, 1657; retiring burgomaster to be city’s treasurer, March 6, 1677; commission chosen to revise the disordered books of former Fiscal Van Tienhoven; Commander Juan Gutierrez trading in trading in Michigan, May 26, 1657; Rev. Johannes Megapolensis allowed for house hire and firewood, 500 guilders yearly, April 7, 1657; Fort Casemier, 1658 now named Nieuwe Amstel, together with the land beginning July 23 on west side of the Minquas or Cristina Kil and extending to the mouth of the river called "Boomptje Houck," and so far landwards to the shore and land of the Minquas, with all streams,kills, etc. thereof. The Director Jacob Alrichs, on behalf of burgomasters of Amsterdam, Holland, on April 12, 1657; Jaquet, commander on South (Delaware) River, departed, April 20, 1657. French priva-teesman, Augustin Beaulieu, came with Spanish prize into river and allowed to anchor; what occurred about the tides on Long Island; request of preachers to city authorities of New Amsterdam about the Lutheran preacher, Goetwaeser; several women of bad life banished; James Grover came out of England with letters from Cromwell, which were to be read in towns on Long Island, but magistrates delivered over the letters to Stuyvesant and council, who sent them to directors at Amsterdam, Aug., 1657, Lutheran preacher ordered to depart; Indian who broke into house and stole 20 beavers pardoned, Oct. 16, 1657. Rev. Gideon Schaefts, preacher in Renselaaryck, chosen minister at Fort Orange and Beverwyck, with particular, Oct. 16, 1657; Jan Juriaens ten Becker named "Conmies" at South (Delaware) River over the company's jurisdiction; ordinance concerning reduction of wampum and beavers, to eight guilders for the beaver, and from six to eight white and three to four black to a striver for wampum, Nov. 29, 1657 (q.v.); thatched roofs and plastered chimneys to be discontinued in New Amsterdam; every house taxed a beaver or eight guilders. Reformed towns toward 100 leather beavers in Holland, etc., Dec. 15, 1657 (q.v.); Quakers lodged at Vlisingen (Fishing), order for punishment; order about unimproved land in New Amsterdam, to be taxed or granted to others, etc., Jan. 15, 1658 (q.v.); marriage ordinances, requiring solemnization to be within one month of publication of bann, Jan. 15, 1658 (q.v.); city of New Amsterdam asks that fortification of the city be done by director-general and council and also asks for share of the import of weigh-scales; city promised assessment for liquidating debts incurred during Indian uprisings; tapsters to pay license fees quarterly; land to be kept from Indians, Jan. 30, 1658 (q.v.); freedom given for erecting on the island a village, everyone to have 18 to 20 morgens of land at eight guilders per morgon, and fifteen years exemption from payment of teinds, March 4, 1658 (q.v.); order concerning bears (?) on Loog Island, March 26, 1658; impost order on shipped goods, April 1, 1658 (q.v.); resolution to surround the city of New Amsterdam with palisades and to introduce two gates, in order to prevent smuggling, May 25, 1658 (q.v.).

1 The shoemakers of New Amsterdam are summoned before the burgomasters in regard to making some fire-buckets. See particular Dec. 15, 1657.

5 Jacob Alrichs writes to Stuyvesant from New Amstel, Del., "I learn with regret, that at the Manhattan your Honor has been visited by chills and fever."—N. T. Col. Doc., XII: 222. See Sept. 4, 1659.

8 The burgomasters agree "to propose" to Stuyvesant, "the paving of the Winckel [Market or Shop] Street, and to make one of the Burgers Overseer of the Ward (Buurmeester) on behalf of the Company."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 192. This street, now closed, was east of and parallel to Whitehall St., and extended from the present Stone to Bridge St. Its easterly side was occupied by the five large stone houses, or shops, of the West India Co. On the 15th, the burgomasters resolved "to communicate" to Stuyvesant "the grading of the Winckel Street and Bridge lane".—Ibid., VII: 194. The Brugh Sterck or Bridge Lane, no longer in existence, was at first merely a short passage running from the present Stone St. to the rear of the lot of Abraham Planck or Verplanck, which was on Brugh Street (Bridge St.), about midway between the Markveldt (Whitehall St.) and the graft or canal (Broad St.). Eventually it was extended through the Planck lot to Bridge St. and had a more contracted outlet through the next block to the shore of the river, short cut to the brick and wegh-house. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995.

12 Because it is found that "considerable brandy" is being sold by theburgers of the city to Indians, the president of the city court asks his colleagues if it is "not prudent to establish strict regulations," by a fine of 2 d. a gallon.

15 The city court directs the "Officer," or schout to warn all persons in the city who have "placed thatched roofs on their houses," or who have plastered chimneys, "to remove them." On the 27th, he reported that he had gone around as ordered, but Aug. 12 that the people "made fun of him" when he told them what was required of them. He asked the magistrates to fix a penalty on those who were "unwilling to obey the order."—Rec. N. Am., III: 119, 434.

15 The director-general and council act favourably on a petition from Jan Lubbersen (Lubberts) to be allowed "to open a school for instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic." He must "behave himself as such a person ought to behave."—N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 441. Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195. Lubbersen had been a clerk in the employ of the Company.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 141.

15 Until this time the city court held its regular sessions on Mondays. The provincial council now orders that in future the sessions be held on Tuesdays. Compliance with this requirement began on the 20th of this month.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 195; Rec. N. Am., III: 419.

19 The proposals of the director-general (see summary under 22 May 25) to enclose the city at the river side with palisades, and to complete the stone wall of the fort, are heard by the provincial council.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 429.

22 Megapolens and Draisius, the two Dutch clergymen of New Amsterdam, allege that the Luthers of the city are misrepresenting them to the directors at Amsterdam, and say the Luthers have "sought, for five or six years, to call a Lutheran preacher," and actually to force the Dutch and Protestant proposals on theAug. 1657.

27 As early as May 2, the burgomasters resolved to renew an ordiance of Feb. 20, 1657, in regard to the disposal of fifth in New Amsterdam, and to add to it an order for "the removal of privies on the street having been laid with the ground," also to propose to the whole city court the advisability of prohibiting the burghers from keeping hogs within the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 187. On Aug. 15, the burgomasters fixed upon the 19th as the time for publishing such ordinance (ibid., VII: 194). On that day an ordinance was drawn up, which ordered the removal of all such privies within eight days after publication, and required them to be rebuilt in such places as would prevent their becoming a public nuisance. The "roads and streets" of the city were "made unfit for driving over in wagons and carts" by reason of "the constant rooting of the hogs," so the ordinance provided "that every owner of hogs in and about the City" shall be obliged to "put a ring through the noses of their hogs," to prevent them from rooting.—Ibid., I: 38-39. The actual publication of the ordinance was deferred until the morning of Aug. 27.—Ibid., VII: 194.

27 Upon the initiative of the burgomasters, the city court of New Amsterdam passes an ordinance regulating the grazing system, and the dry and wet measures, so as to obviate disputes and "especially that everybody" may be "treated alike." All persons who use measures and weights in their business, either "for receiving or delivering wares," are now instructed to appear in person with their measures and weights on the morning of the last day of August, at the city hall, where the court agrees to sit "from 9 to 11 o. c. A. M. and 2 to 5 o. c. P. M. to mark the measures and weights brought," for which marking or stamping fees are established for the benefit of the city. Anybody who is caught using unstamped measures or weights, after the day set, is to suffer fines for the first and second offenses, and to have his store closed for the third violation. The enforcement of the ordinance is reposed in the schout, who has authority "to make visits of inspection and carry it out." An inspector of weights and measures is also created; his rates for stamping and his general duties are clearly set forth. Andries de Haas was appointed "Inspector in December, and Jan Jansen van Brestede was named official gauger of barrels.—Rec. N. Am., I: 397; 190, 202, 205-5, 211.

10 A remonstrance relative to foreign trade, "signed by some of the Burghers and Inhabitants," is handed to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam (Rec. N. Am., III: 13). The latter sent it to
11 Stuyvesant and the council on the 17th (ibid., 8-9), who, on the same day, adjudged it necessary to have the matter considered by the directors at Amsterdam (ibid., 15). The burgomasters then wrote a long memorial to the directors, in which they spoke of "the sober condition of the trade" and "the high price of goods," referring therein also to "a certain humble remonstrance on the subject of foreign trade," which had been placed in their hands by "many of the Commonality," and by which they hoped to offset the miseries and calamities of our wives, children and friends, having no place of refuge among any of our neighbours, being a prey to, or the slaves of the English

19
In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the burgomasters and schepens say:—

"Further, laying before your Honors the great augmentation of the youth in this Province and place, which yearly increases more and more, and finds itself now very numerous, and though many of them can read and write, the Burghers and inhabitants are nevertheless inclined to have their children instructed in the most useful languages, the chief of which is the Latin tongue; and as there are no means so to do here, the nearest being at Boston in N. England a great distance from here, and many of the Burghers and inhabitants of this place and neighbourhood having neither the ability nor children to send for learning, therefore again trouble your Honors and humbly request that your Honours would be pleased to send us a suitable person for Master of a Latin School, in order that our children be instructed in, and study such language, not doubting but such person here, many of the neighbouring places would send their children hither to be instructed in that tongue; hoping that, increasing from year to year, it may finally attain to an Academy [University] whereby this place arriving at great splendour your Honors shall have the reward and praise next to God the Lord, who will grant His blessing to it. On your Honors sending us a Schoolmaster, we shall endeavour to have constructed a suitable place for school."— Rec. N. Am., III: 15-16. This appeal from the municipal authorities makes it clear that Stuyvesant had not followed the suggestion of the directors that he "make an experiment by opening such a school," although Domine Dirius was offering his services (see May 20). For the answer of the directors, see Feb. 15, 1659.

23
In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the burgomasters and schepens write: "We shall again trouble your Honors and request you may be pleased to send us three new standards with their appurtenances, as the General [Stuyvesant] intends to divide the two Burgher Companies into three, and according to the specification hereunto annexed, whereby some necessaries are further requested for the use of this City."—Rec. N. Am., III: 17-18. The specification is not of record. On Feb. 13, 1659, the directors wrote: "The three flags, the partisans, halberds and drums, required for the trainbands, are sent herewith, also some drumsticks, snares and strings, to be used when necessary."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 523.

In a memorial to the directors at Amsterdam, the city fathers of New Amsterdam speak of the heavy tax imposed on New Netherlands tobacco, and request a grant of "some facility in the impost on tobacco, especially that of N. Netherlands," also that "the weight of the scales" at the weighhouse may be charged 6 per cent., as the English, who import "the greatest quantity of tobacco" to the city, "will admit of no discount" nor be "persuaded to it," so that the loss on the weight in Holland, which tobacco merchants suffer in consequence, ought not to be "so great and the Commonalty purchased low, so it is some necessaries are further requested from the merchants and traders."—Rec. N. Am., III: 17. The directors at Amsterdam disallowed, however, this sixth per cent. rate on Feb. 13, 1659 (p. n.)—Ibid., VII: 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 432.

The schout, burgomasters, and treasurer of the city, with the approbation of Stuyvesant attached the following proposal: "To let to the highest bidder the Excise on the Slaughter of all Cattle, whether salt meat in barrels or fresh brought to market for consumption within the jurisdiction of New Amsterdam "by Officers or common Burghers," but "the Company’s Magazine [Store] and the Hospital" are excepted. The excise is for the period from Sept. 26, 1669, to Sept. 26, 1670. The bargain was made on Jan. 1, 1669-70, "pay precisely every quarter of a year to the Treasurer of this City a just fourth part of the promised rent" in "good pay according to the rate of the general treasury." He is also obliged "to 1658 gave two sufficient securities for the promised rent-money. —

Sept. 23 Gerrit Hendricksen is the successful bidder for the farming. —

Jacob van der Stuyvesant went on his board as security on Sept. 28. — Rec. N. Am., III: 20-21. The excise was farmed out again, on Sept. 25, 1659, the successful bidder being Eighert Meindersen, and Daniel Tourneur and Jan Hendricksef Stillman acting as securities. The term was from Sept. 26, 1659, to Sept. 26, 1666, inclusive. Mein- dersen leased the "Landport" or land gate, which was at what is now Broadway and Wall St.— Rec. N. Am., III: 58-60. Cf. with ibid., I: 44.

A provincial proclamation for a day of general fasting and prayer is issued. A few days later, Stuyvesant went to the Esopus country (now Kingston) to pacify the region which had suffered from Indian depredations during the summer. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 201; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 93.

The burgomasters of New Amsterdam decide to write a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, conveying it by Cornelius Steevyck, in which a request is to be made for the right of sale of all real estate in the city. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 195. For the grant thereof, see Feb. 13, 1659.

"The burgomasters decide "to establish a watch" at New Amsterdam. They name nine men who have applied for the posts, and assign to each 24 watchmen for every watch, four of them to be on watch duty nightly. They are also "promised one or two beavers for candles and two to three hundred pieces of fire wood." — Rec. N. Am., VII: 195. This was the origin of the city police. Cf. the "corporal's guard," March 3, 1656.

"On the 12th of this month, the burgomasters provided articles for defining "the duties of the Rattle Watch." Among the provi- sions were these: All watchmen were obliged to go on watch at the usual hour, "before bell ring, or pain of forfeiting six stickers." If reasonable business detained them, they had to provide a sub- stitute, and failing therein to suffer a fine of two beavers for each omission, the proceeds being set aside "for the benefit of the general watch." They were subjected to a fine of a beaver for every time they were drunk on duty, or insolent, or committed nuisance in going the rounds; if "found asleep on the street," a fine of ten stickers each for offense was to be paid, and, if through sleeping on post, or neglecting, any arms were taken or stolen, the guilty watchman was required to pay for the loss. Profanity and blas- phemy against God were punishable by a fine of ten stickers; threat- enings and fighting were penalized; leaving the watch without permission involved a fine of two beavers for each offense. The watchmen were required to take an oath of obedience before a burgomaster. Regulations were made regarding among the watchmen of lock-up money, fines, prisoners of war. When the watchmen went on their rounds, they were obliged "to call out how late it is, at all the corners of the streets, from nine O'Clock in the evening until rewsitt beat in the morning," for which purpose they received 18 guilders, New Neth., 320, note. The city then pro- mulgated this order the next day. — Rec. N. Am., I: 39-40. But on Nov. 7, the city fathers sent another remonstrance to Stuyves- ant and the council relative to the value of wampum, and on the 11th of this month, Councillor De Decker submitted reasons and arguments in council on the subject, which led at once to the provision of another ordinance by that body. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 202. See Nov. 29, 1657; and Nov. 11, 1658.

"Stuyvesant sails from New Amsterdam to Esopus, now Kings- toon, "with about 50 men . . . to see whether the Indians had made good the losses caused by them, according to their promises." Given when he was there in May-June. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 91. See also May 28, 1658.

Nov. 9 The burgomasters and scheeps heat the council for leave to erect a pier (hoasf, erroneously translated "hoist") by Valentine in Men. Com. Coun., 1850, 445-46. On the 14th, the council by order gave permission for the construction of the desired pier and for collecting wharfage. — Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 202 (where the date is erroneously given as 1653). The original Rec. N. Neh., VIII: 1053, State Library. This pier, the first built in Manhattan Island, with the exception of the little dock built by Stuyvesant in 1648-9 (see July 4, 1647; 1648) at Schreyer's Hook, stood at the foot of the present Moore St. on Pearl St. Actual con- struction began on April 21, 1659 (see April 18, 1659). It was com- pleted on or about July 11, 1659 (q. c.), and was extended in Novem- ber, 1660 (see Nov. 3, 1660), and several times thereafter. It was known as the Wijnbruch (wine-bridge, or wine-dock) or weigh- house pier. — See Castello Plan, II: 214. See also Nov. 28 and Dec. 12, 1659.

"Resulting from a remonstrance of the burgomasters and scheeps (see Oct. 9, 1658), the provincial government now pro- mulgates another ordinance on the rates of wampum in New Netherland. The former reduction from six to eight white, and three to four black beads to a stuiver has not reduced prices in "needful commodities and family necessaries, arising, among other causes, from the abundance and uncertain condition of the Wam- pum, which in barter for Beaver, has risen to 16 guilders and more for one Beaver," resulting in a rise of 8 to 100 per cent, in the cost of daily necessaries. It is found "that the more Beads the Traders receive for a day's work," or "the night," on which they have taken in the market, the more they will give for a Beaver, and consequently, the dearness of wares and even of the most necessary articles, such as Beer and Bread, will continue and be exercised on the ground of the still too great disproportion between the Wampum and Beaver." It is again declared that wampum is "an absolute article of Merchandise, to be, according to its value and quality, bought and sold, bartered and exchanged by measure or guilders, as parties—buyer and seller—can agree, and that payment in Wampum above 24 guilders shall not be valid in law, unless it appear otherwise to the Court, by written contract or acknowledgment of parties." As wampum is "a means to procure family supplies for daily use," it is now deemed necessary "to reduce, not Wampum, but the most necessary articles, such as Bread, Beer and Wine, and to raise or lower the prices of them according to the value of Beavers, as the general market rate shall require." An interesting table for prices of commodities, as fixed by law, forms part of this ordinance, which provides that prices are to be regulated "by the Director General and Council themselves, or by the respective subaltern Magistrates, each in his jurisdiction, with knowledge of the Director General and Council." The exchange is according to three rates of prices for each commodity named, "to wit: Silver money, the equal in value exchanged with Beavers, as is generally reduced everywhere throughout this Province," namely, eight white and four black beads to a stuiver. Wampum had approximately half the value of silver and two-thirds the value of beaver in the price fixing when this law was written. — Rec. N. Am., VII: 80-81. The ordinance is contained in the Notice, 1659, 40-42. See also Nov. 29, 1657; Dec. 22, 1659; and April 21, 1660.

The burgomasters determine to commission the provost and a captain of the rattle watch (see Oct. 4), "from henceforth," to "collect and receive every month from each housekeeper for the support of the Rattle Watch, fifteen stickers, except those whose husbands" are absent from home, and "widows, preachers," and those who are "in somebody's service," according to a list provided. The next day Lodewyk Pos was "authorized and qualified" to collect the subscriptions.— Rec. N. Am., VII: 98-99. On Nov. 29, Johannes Nevis, the city's secretary, was ordered by the burgomasters "to receive the money" which Pos had collected in his house- to-house visitations. — Ibid., VII: 202-1. In his rounds Pos found there were persons whose names had been omitted from "the roll for the support of the Watch," so other names were ordered entered, in December.— Ibid., VII: 202, 205. In January, 1659, when Pos appeared before the burgomasters under interrogation, he told them that some 50 persons had not paid the watch tax; so, on Feb. 28, they ordered the treasurer of the city "to allow the Under Schout Resolvent Waldron" to go with Pos "to collect the watch money and to take a pledge" from unwilling persons.— Ibid., VII: 208, 210, 212, 217-18.

The petition of Johannes Nevis, secretary of the city, to the burgomasters, for permission to "plant the garden behind the City Hall," is granted to him, "together with the Court Messenger" (Pieter Schaalvandke). — Rec. N. Am., VII: 198.
CHRONOLOGY: THE DUTCH PERIOD: 1626-1664

1658
Martin Cregier and Johannes Pietersen Verbruggen are elected and confirmed as members of the court of orphan-masters of New Amsterdam.

21 November
These two additions to this court are made necessary because one of the old members, Pieter Wolphertsen Couwenhoven, was then away on some business on the South (Delaware) River, and because an epidemic of "hot fevers" had been raging during the year, "whereof many died." These deaths greatly increased the business of the court "in the regulating of estates."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 199, 1995; Min. of Orph. Court, I: 160. Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 205.

25
The earliest mention which we have found of "Maagde Paatje" (Maiden Lane) occurs in a mortgage of this date, from Anthony Moore to the heirs of Adrienne Cuville (or Cudville), late widow of Jan Jansen Dammen, and mother of the Vigne family, on the "Brewery & lot on the Maagde Paatje, bounded E. S. & W. by the land of S. & heirs & conveyed to S. Moore this date."—Book of Mortgages, 1654-1660, 115. On March 3, 1659, the property was transferred to, and a mortgage accepted by, Jan Jansen, the Younger.

Ibid., 117.

Another mention of the name is of record in a conveyance of Nov. 25, 1659, in Liber Deeds, A, 141 (New York); and later one dated Feb. 25, 1661, when Pieter Jansen, ship carpenter, asked the burgomasters "for permission to build a house in the Maagde Paatje, alongside of Cornelius the smith, back of the werry," which was granted.—Min. of Orph. Court, I: 77. This is the lot adjacent the corner lot of Cornelis Japton Cloo, at the present Maiden Lane and Pearl St. In another record, of March 18, 1661, the Maagde Paatje is mentioned as the utmost northern limit to which the rattle-watch or night patrol was obliged to make the rounds in "bad weather."—Ibid., II: 59.

All of these references, showing the Dutch origin of the name of this street, are earlier than any hitherto pointed out (cf. article on Maiden Lane, in Sixteenth Annual Report of Amer. Scenic and Hist. Preservation Society, 1911, app. E).

In a city court proceeding of Nov. 8, 1661, the lane is mentioned again. The case was one of theft, just ten months earlier, of "a quantity of cabbage at the house of one Pieter Jansen, ship carpenter, residing at the entrance" of the lane, which shows that Jansen's house had been built sometime between February and October. The accused party was Mersack Martens, a former mason in the employ of the West India Co., who had been "caught and taken over by the Watch" in the act, and then released by the officer, only to be caught again and placed on trial. He was condemned "to stand in the pillory with cabbages on the head" at "the usual place of execution," and thereafter to be "banished five years" from the city's jurisdiction.—Rec. N. Am., III: 405; 410; Min. of Orph. Court, I: 111; 112. The cabbage, belonging to the province, and, wishing to return to Holland by one of the ships making ready to sail from New Amsterdam, appeared before the burgomasters by petition, asking them to allow him to work in the city and earn a little money until his departure, which they allowed on Aug. 2, 1662.—Min. of Orph. Court, I: 153.

All persons who have "obtained Lot or Plantations in the newly begun Village of Haerlem" are required to take possession and begin to fence and plant there within six weeks' time, "on pain of having the Lots and Plantations" not so cared for granted to others.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 361. On the origin of Harlem, see March 4, 1658.

The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam having petitioned the provincial government for the establishment of two cattle fairs annually in the city, it is granted to them by an ordinance of this date. Two "Markets or Fairs," are authorized, "one for Lean cattle, to commence on the first of May and to continue until the end of said month; the other for Fat cattle, to commence on the 20th of October and to terminate on the last of November of each year, during which several periods No Stranger within the City or its jurisdiction is to be subject to arrest or by any means." The city court, "in regard to Fargiag," proposes that "in place of twenty stivers" the sum of "twenty-five stivers a head should be charged for the cattle brought over, on condition that the cattle remaining unsold should be carried back free of charge," if the ferry-man agrees to it.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 205; Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 364.

The privilege was promulgated by the city in due form on Jan. 7, 1659, according to a placard which the secretary of the city had been directed, on the 13th of the preceding month, to draw up, in which the burgomasters were "not to go to meet any one for the purpose of buying Cattle, except only at the place appointed, under a penalty" of fines for disobedience. The city court also directed that "conveyance was to be sought for the herd of everybody bringing cattle to the market", to be "put up." In April, 1659, the burgomasters made clear their intention, when they decided to give notice that "the Market for lean cattle" should be located "beside the Church Yard, where some stales were to be "fixed." Here these cattle were to be kept for sale. The location was the neighbourhood of the present Broadway and Morris Street, the site of the old "kirkhol" shown on the Castello Plan (see C. Pl. 82b, Vol. II).—Rec. N. Am., II, 1: 421; VII: 202-3; 202-21. See also description of Castello Redraft (Frontispiece, Vol. II), 534. See also Dec. 13, 1658; Jan. 7, March 7, and April 18, 1659.

It having been discovered that persons, under pretence of keeping boarders, are selling wine, beer, and liquors, "to the prejudice of the general Revenue and of the Tavern keepers," who are publicly licensed to sell, therefore a new law is passed requiring all boarding-houses to pay half the tavern excuse on stock and consumption of intoxicants.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 364.

Matheus de Vos, as attorney for Francois Fyn, patteeve of Varkens (now Blackwell's) Island, is granted an attachment against whatever property on the island may belong to Laurens Duyvems, a farmer, who caused the cattle to be driven by Jonas Bronck and first worked on a plantation belonging to Bronck in 1659. For his default on his lease, see Rec. N. Am., II: 257. Duyns was punished and banished from the province for selling his wife into immoral slavery, and for gross immoralities committed by himself.

Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 205.

The burgomaster Jacob Hendriksen VanVerrevaet petitioned the provincial council that a hospital be established for sick soldiers and negroes in the employ of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam. He is requested to look about for a suitable location and for a steward or nurse, and then report thereon to the council.

On the 3rd of the month, the council appointed Hillegje Wilburch, a Midwife, as matron of the proposed hospital, which must have been erected before July 10, 1660, as it is included in De Sille's list of that date (C. Pl. 84, Vol II) as the "Gasthuijs," or "Bruch [Bridge] Street," at the corner of the old brewery plot, behind the five stone houses of the company, then the corner of Bridge Street and "Orphaansbrugh Steeg." These buildings were erected on the Castello Plan (C. Pl. 82e, Vol. II). See also pp. 263, 351, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987. It had been demolished prior to May 24, 1674.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 204; and His. New York, 11: 297-308. This was probably the first hospital being erected on Manhattan Island. A reference to a hospital in September, 1663, occurs in Rec. N. Am., III: 20-21.

The secretary of the city court "is ordered to draw up a placard of the Cattle Market, Ordering the Burgomith not to go to meet any one for the purpose of buying Cattle, except only at the place appointed" by law, subject to penalties for violations.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 202-3. See Nov. 28, 1658; and Jan. 7, 1659.

Aris Otto buys a house from Michiel Paulussen, the site of the present No. 51 Stone St. Here Otto conducted a tavern.—See Castello Plan, II: 310, 402.

Daniel Etsche, having resigned as fire inspector on account of "his bad sight and other inconveniences," and the late Fire Warden, Cristiaen Bareus (or Barentsen), having gone to the South (Delaware) River and died there, the burgomasters propose nominations to Stuyvesant and the council, from whom the latter, on the 24th, confirmed Jan Jansen, Jo. and Joannes La Montagne, as Rec. N. Am., III: 705-707; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 204. On Jan. 4, 1659, the new wardens were informed of their election, and the president of the city court handed them their commission and instructions. Hendrick Hendrickseki Kip held over as the third warden.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 205-7.

The provincial ordinance is continued, prohibiting firing of guns, planting of May-poles, beating of drums, or selling of intoxicants, on May-day or on New-Year's day.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 366. See also Dec. 31, 1655.

1659

1659—Payments to the West India Co., for ships' recognizances, for goods to and from New Netherland, for the year 1659, amounted to 234,677 florins. In this year, there was sent to New Netherland, for the behoof of soldiers, in the public service, bread, "hoesman," and "bever," the sum of 3,909:13:8 florins.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

—During this year, Groessellers and Radisson explored Lake Superior.—Winsor, Nat. Hist. of Am., IV: 168.

—In this year, Edward Godfrey, Ferdinand Gorges, Robert Mason, and Edward Rigby, with others, patentees and inhabitants of "the provinces of Maine, and Liconia [Lyngion] in New-England," petitioned "the Right Honourable The Parliament of the Common-wealth of England" with respect to their alleged rights and possessions, of which they had been deprived; the fifth article of their complaint read: "Fifthly, The Dutch, or New Netherlands, their intrusion, insulting, unjust claim, the Center Heart and Bowels, of the Country Hudsons River, this year the month, Deleware Bay, and Canada River to be theirs, and grant sundry Patents (their proceedings he hath at larger) 55 years we have beat the Bush, our country to the Bird."—The original printed petition broadside, with manuscript additions, is in the Public Record Office, London. Photostats, made in October, 1920, are in the N. Y. Pub. Library, Carter Brown Library, Mass. Hist. Soc. Library, Library of Congress, etc.

—In this year, Jacob Stedman, the pastor of New Amsterdam, in order to aid the appeal to Holland to send over labourers for the farms in this province, as well as to invite immigration in general, invoked his muse in the cause, and sent to Amsterdam the first attempt in verse in New Netherland of which we have any knowledge. It is entitled The Complaint of a Father to his Mother," an alle gory in which New Amsterdam is personified as the daughter of the old city of Amsterdam, deserted by her mother and left to the kindness of her sponsors (the West INDIA Co.), but nevertheless grown to be handsome and with rich property upon which her envious neighbours (the English) have allowed their swine to roam. The poem (translated), in part, recites:

"For, I venture to prion, No one can a maiden know, Who with richer land is blessed Than th' estate by me possessed."

"See two streams my garden bind, From the East and North they wind,— Rivers pouring in the sea, Rich in fish, beyond degree."

"Milk and butter; fruits to eat No one can enumerate, Ev'y vegetable known; Grain the best that e'er was grown."

"All the blessings man e'er knew, Here does our Great Giver strow, . . ."

The poem was published by Henry C. Murphy in the Anthology of New Netherland (1865), 37-43. See also the "Memoir of Steddam" in ibid., 58-59. For his second poem, "The Praise of New Netherland," see 1661. See also Addenda, 1659.

—In a record of what it cost the West INDIA Co. during this year for transporting persons to New Netherland, with the loan of ammunition, etc., is an item for writing-materials for the school at New Amsterdam, amounting to 2905 florins.—N. Neth. Papers, No. 1220, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

—In this year, Martin Cregier erected a tavern at what is now No. 3 Broadway.—Liber Deeds, A: 177, New York. It was rebuilt in 1664 (Liber III, II: 115; Albany), and sold to Peter Bayard in 1658 (Liber Deeds, XIII: 185). See Castello Plan, II: 1171; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

—In this year, the new bridge at Mount-aldrick van der Vin's (Bread at Bridge St.) was constructed.—Rec. N. Am., III: 58. Shown on C. Fl. 82, Vol. II.

—During this year grants of land were made to divers negroes near Stuyvesant's borough.—Cal. Hist. MS., Dutch, 266.

Several of the bakers of New Amsterdam are asked by the burgomasters why they have failed to "bake any coarse bread," about which "the poor commonalty" have made complaint. They reply that it was because grain is dear and they have to "pay heavers for the grain," but get only "seven or five morgen in return," leaving them no profit. The burgomasters resolve to lay the complaint and defense before Stuyvesant.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 206. This led to the promulgation of a new bread assise, and the prohibition against the city buying "cakes and sugarpunes."—Ibid., I: 47-44. See also March 7.

Allard Anthony, the city treasurer, reports to the burgomasters that there is "not a styver in the Treasury," and that he is unable to get any money.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 206.

The provincial law and penalties with respect to stealing fence rails and posts, resulting in the destruction of gardens, is now again renewed, as it was on Dec. 30, 1658.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42-45. For earlier promulgations of this ordinance, see summary of Dec. 31, 1654; also Oct. 9, 1657.

The city authorities issue a placard or public notice concerning the establishment of two market days for the sale of lean and fat cattle in New Amsterdam.—Rec. N. Am., I: 42. See Nov. 28, 1658; March 7, 1659.

Fire-buckets are delivered at the city halls, and regulations are made for their distribution. See under Dec. 15, 1657.

Clack van Eijck asks the burgomasters for an appointment as Hal Kraght, or keeper of the shambles; but his request is deferred. There is no record showing any further action until April 18 (p. 20), when Andries de Haas was given the appointment, provisionally.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 207.

Evert Duycinking is ordered by the burgomasters "to put the Arms of Amsterdam in New Netherland on the windows of the City Hall."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 208. On Sept. 23, 1664, having done some glazing, he asked the burgomasters where he was "to receive his pay for making the windows for the City."—Min. of Orph. Court, Ill: 161.

Stuyvesant and the council receive an Indian grant of lands on the North River in East Jersey above Weehawken, including those sold to Michael Pauw in 1670. The Dutch from New-Amsterdam made the first settlement at Bergen in 1618.—N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 16, 20 et. seq.

Some time prior to this date, Cornelis Hendrickssen (Tambour) received a lot at the south-west corner of William and Wall Sts., now covered by the Atlantic building.—See Castello Plan, C. Fls. 82, 82c, Vol. II and II: 287; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Fl. 97, Vol. II, and II: 392.

Creyen Jacobsen receives a grant from the burgomasters for a lot on the west side of William St., just south of Wall St., the ground being now in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Fl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 392 Rec. N. Am., VII: 210.

Teunis Kraye (or Craie) petitions the burgomasters "to be Harbor Master; also tally master of the bricks and tiles imported from Patria [Holland] and elsewhere, and that his wife may super-

The two court messengers of the city ask the burgomasters to appoint them "door keepers of the Orphan Chamber" (Orphans' Court), which is granted to them.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 210.

Martin Cregier, having just been elevated to the office of a burgomaster, and his new duties precluding his giving time to the court of orphan-masters of which he is a member, the burgomasters nominate Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Allard Anthony as candidates. From them, Stuyvesant and the burgomasters, on the 10th elected Anthony as their successor, and, on the 10th, Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift and Joannes de Peyster were elected, receiving their commissions on the 14th. Anthony, of course, continued as a member of the court of orphan-masters with them.—Ibid., VII: 214, 217.

7 By a resolution of March 6, 1657 (see under March 5, of that year), the office of city treasurer was ordered to be filled by the last meeting. In Oct. 1657, Allard Anthony is now succeeded in that office by Paulus Leendertsz. van Grift, who takes over the records and is duly commissioned by the burgomasters.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 210–11.

Anthony was negligent in making up “the acct regarding the City” during his administration as treasurer, and was temporarily ordered, on June 27, to deliver in the account by nine o’clock on the following Monday morning (30th), so that Stuyvesant could “send it to Holland by the ship the Trouw” (Faith).—Ibid., VII: 217, 223.

The directors at Amsterdam find fault with Stuyvesant and his council because, on Jan. 35, 1658 (see summary of Nov. 1656), they granted a fourth part of the revenue of the public weigh-house at New Amsterdam to the city without first obtaining their approval. The provincial authorities replied, on July 23, 1659 (p. 438), that the proceeds had not as yet been paid over to the city treasury, on account of this complaint, and would not be before further orders were received from Amsterdam. In December, the directors made their displeasure again known, because their representatives gave away the company’s income without warrant of an authority promised upon “the reasons and the necessity for such a measure.” They were “ignorant of the revenues and expenses of the city,” and asked for a bill of particulars “by the first opportunity,” ordering meanwhile that the city fathers be obliged to “give without fail a detailed account every year of the revenues already granted to the city,” so that the directors might be able to determine “whether these revenues” were “properly administered.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 435, 441, 449; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 189.

In a very important letter of this date, the directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council, among other things, about “an enlarged freedom of foreign trade for the inhabitants,” which has been asked for. They find it fraught with dangers of an increase in smuggling and a deprivation of the country’s revenue. They have, however, “after mature deliberation,” concluded that “the experiment” of the provincial government should be undertaken on their ratification, “provisionally,” but with the proviso that the ships which go “thence to France, Spain, Italy, the Caribbean Islands and other countries to vend and sell their cargoes of the produce of the country, salted fish, wares and merchandise,” shall be “bound to return directly with the freights” they obtain therefrom to Amsterdam in Holland, or ago to New Amsterdam. These ships, and other ships, “Vanslycken” at the West India Co. derive from them in Holland. It is also “declared that no beavers, otters or other peltries” shall be “exported, except in ships” which come directly over to Holland. The directors say that whatever relates “to the duties to be fixed on the exported agricultural products of the country, timber, wares, salted or dried fish, and whatever else,” they would “rather refer” to Stuyvesant and his council for fixing thereon “such reasonable duties, provisionally,” with their approval, as may “be considered proper.” The directors come to this decision because, as they write: “We are ignorant here what your English neighbours have enacted hereupon in their own regard, and being fearful of committing herein some error through ignorance.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 225–26. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431.

The directors at Amsterdam, writing to Stuyvesant and the council, state that they have considered a recommendation made in Holland at the request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam and some of its principal inhabitants for “some feasible relief ... from the duty (Poght) on the N: Netherland tobacco,” and that they have “earnestly tried all possible means to exempt it entirely,” but have met with “difficulties and obstacles,” which they have been trying to overcome by “private hopes” for a psychological occasion, when they will press the matter again, and, if successful, communicate the fact to New Netherland.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 226–27. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431–32.

The directors of Amsterdam deny the request of the burgomasters of New Amsterdam for an additional sixth per cent, at the public weigh-house, as they perceive “great objections” to such a change. They write: “The merchants there on purchasing tobacco and other wares, on which the English do not allow any rebate or discount, can make sufficient calculation, without any danger, thereupon; as they doubtless do for everyone is sufficiently knowing [as] to his own interest and is therefore sufficiently alive and aware thereof.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 227. There is another translation in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431.

On Oct. 4, 1658 (p. 431), the burgomasters of New Amsterdam decided to ask the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam for supervision of all auction sales of real estate in the city. These sales were always conducted by the provincial secretary, who received a commission of five per cent, on all real property sold at the highest bidder at public venue. He had to attend the sales, and make all arrangements for carrying them out, collect the purchase money, and, “in case of bad debts, make up and pay the deficits,” as well as pay the provincial court messenger, who acted as the auctioneer. The arguments put forth by the city, why the office of auctioneer and the sale of real estate within the City should be committed to the charge of the commonalty or its Secretary, are so convincing that the directors at Amsterdam now grant the request and relieve Cornelis van Ruyven, the provincial secretary, from these duties. Hereafter, there is required to be “paid for sales of real estate into the Company’s treasury in cases of voluntary sales the 40th penny, one half by the seller, the other by the purchaser,” and on sales by the schout, in the nature of sheriff’s sales, “the 80th penny by the purchaser alone, together to be paid to the company.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 225, 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 435, 442, 450. See also Aug. 8, 1659.

The directors at Amsterdam, in a letter to Stuyvesant and his council, say: “The arguments brought forward [see Sept. 19, 1658], why the establishment of a Latin school there it is necessary to send from here [Holland] a fit and honest man, to instruct the children in the elements and foundations of the language, have induced us to decide, that such a teacher shall be inquired for, care being taken, that he writes a good hand, to teach the children also calligraphy; you may expect him by the ships sailing from here during the spring, to send with Mr. Schiller.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 227; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 431. Alexander Carolus Curtius was the teacher chosen (see Apr. 10, 1659).

Salt, as a commodity, is proposed as a special monopoly of the West India Co. in New Netherland. The directors at Amsterdam order that the stock shall “be stored in the Company’s Warehouse [at New Amsterdam] and not be sold by anyone except by the Company at a fair and honest price.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 439. On this, very strong criticisms were drawn up by Stuyvesant and the council, in their letter of July 23, showing in detail that the execution of this mandate would be an infraction of the company’s charter and a source of considerable expense, and at least obstruct, the commerce of New Netherland to the embarrassment and injury of the province and the company.—Ibid., XIV: 439–440. These arguments were convincing, and, on Dec. 23, the directors wrote: “We withdraw our former orders for the present, so that the salt trade may be carried with perfect freedom as formerly,” subject to the usual rule of delivery of “one fourth part of the cargo ... to the Company free of all expenses.”—Ibid., XIV: 449.

Cornelis van Ruyven, as receiver-general of the finances of the company in New Netherland, is given “an advisory and conclusive vote ... on questions concerning the finances,” by authority of the directors at Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 433.

The burgomasters resolve “to demand of the Church Warden[s] a correct acct of the property of the Church.” On the following day (22d), they handed to Stuyvesant and the council nominations for new church-wardens.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 213.

The burgomasters conduct a remittance of “the assessment” of the year 1655, “for furnishing money to the City Treasury.” On the 28th, he repeated his delivery of the assessment list, accompanied by “an obligation passed by Pieter Jansen Jemilsius, first of Nov 1655.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 213. This was the assessment of October, 1655, the first of which we have a list in the records.—Ibid., I: 166. The burgomasters prepare a draft of a certificate for granting the great burgerright in New Amsterdam, according to the privileges conferred on the city, on Feb. 2, 1657. At the same time they authorize the secretary of the city to receive fees, “for the writing of a great Burgher certificate and for the Graving of the Burgher certificate twelve stivers.” The certificates are issued by the presiding burgomaster, who affixes the city’s seal.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 214.
The Iconography of Manhattan Island

On March 7, the burgomasters resolved to summon before themselves, the schout, and the presiding schepen, on the 14th, “some Burghers who have “lots lying vacant,” in order to “have them apprised either by themselves or by the burgomasters,” in case they will “not build on them according to the Placard published from the City Hall by the Director General and Council and by the burgomasters, and given thereon by order of the Secretary” of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 214-15. For the ordinance alluded to, see Jan. 15, 1658.

The directors at Amsterdam select as Latin schoolmaster for Apr. New Amsterdam Alexander Carolus Curius (or Curtius), who has appeared before them as an applicant. He is engaged “at a yearly salary of 200 fl., of which one quarter shall be paid him in advance, that he may procure what books he requires. The Board further grants him a gratuity of 100 fl., which the Company will lay out in available merchandise to be used by him upon his arrival in New Netherland, where a piece of land convenient for a garden or orchard shall be allotted to him by the Director-General. He shall also be allowed to give private instructions, as far as this can be done without prejudice to the duties, for which he is engaged.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 456-57. Curtius sailed on the 25th. (p. 3.)

Peter Jansen Nijehog (or Niemgh) promises the burgomasters 18 “to go to work next Monday [April 21] at the commenced pier (hoft) and further to complete it.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 219. This was the new pier or bridge on Pearl St., at the foot of the present Moore St. See also July 4, 1647; Nov. 9, 1658; July 11, 1659; and Nov. 3, 1660. your Honors to be pleased to make the same known to your subjects, so that if any proprietor be among them, who may be inclined to repair hither with their Cattle at the time fixed in the enclosed, they may regulate themselves accordingly.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 215-16. See also Nov. 28, 1658.

The burgomasters resolve “to post some notices, that the Market for lean cattle shall be also beside of the Old Hall (der hoff, the cemetery on Broadway), where some stalls shall be set up, in order that those, who bring any cattle to Market for sale, shall offer them there.”—Rec. N. Am., VII: 220-21, revised with original manuscript in office of city clerk, New York. This indicates only a cattle market-place, for the sale of live cattle. See Nov. 28, 1658.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and his council: “We have lately been shown a small piece of mineral, which is said to have come from New-Netherland and which we found to be good and pure copper, so that we have thought it worth while to have it smelted. But since in the time of his visit (see Ref.) he was not ignorant of it and consequently demonstrated, that a copper-mine was said to be in the Neversinks, also that there was lying between the Manhattans and the South-river a crystal mountain, of which he says he brought several specimens, as your Honors will be able to hear from him in detail, as he at least is going over again.” They request, if possible, that “samples of the one or the other” be sent over to Holland by the first ship, so that “their quality and worth” may be ascertained, and that “are sure that the population there will increase upon the discovery of such minerals and in consequence also the country will so much sooner gain in prosperity and influence.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 99.

On July 23, Stuyvesant and the council wrote to the directors that they learned “with astonishment . . . , of a coppermine in the Newwingsh,” a thing unknown to them. They agreed, however, “to look for them either late in the fall or early next spring, when the woods and the hills are burned over and cleared of brush.”—Ibid., XIII: 100.

Stuyvesant is informed by the directors at Amsterdam that Curtius, the master for the Latin school (see Apr. 10), is sailing on the “Bever.” At the same time he is informed that the books, for the instruction of that school in Latin, could not be procured in the short time before the sailing, and will be sent “by the next opportunity.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 437. The Latin school had opened prior to July 4 (v. y.). Prodt. Kipknight gives the titles of several books which were sent by the East India Co. in 1643 to a similar school in one of the principal provinces. Probably the same books were used in New Amsterdam.—Kipknight, op. cit., 199.
The directors at Amsterdam send over "twelve copies of a little book, called "Ordinances and Code of Procedure before the Courts of the City of Amsterdam," which they ask to have distributed among the burgomasters and schepens, to be put into practice."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 437.

Richard Cromwell resigns the Protectorship.—Winsor, op. cit., My 2: 149.

The Lutheans of New Amsterdam write to the consistory at Amsterdam, Holland, of the departure of the Rev. Johannes Ernestus Goetwasser, and request the consistory to consent obtain from the state-general and directors at Amsterdam of the West India Co. to have another Lutheran minister.—From archives of Evangelical Luth. Church, Amsterdam. See also Aug. 14, 1667.

As the director-general and council have favoured the city with one fourth of the proceeds of the beam or public weigh-scales, for its own benefit, the burgomasters now authorize the city treasurer, Paulus Leendertzens vander Grift, to arrange with the [provincial] Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven for the proceeds and income of the beam, and to receive the money."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 235. See also July 23, 1669.

"Among those appearing before the burgomasters and requesting the small burgerright, is "Carel Beauvois of Leiden, intending to keep school here."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 235. Beauvois was engaged subsequently (July, 1661) as "reader, precentor, school-master and sexton of the village of Breukelen."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 290, op. cit.

July 4

A few weeks prior to this date, Alexander Carolus Curtius opened his Latin school, on the site of the present 26 Broad St. (Landmark Map Ref. Key, Ill: 94). For this purpose he had been dispatched from Holland, on April 25 (q.v.), by the directors at Amsterdam. He had but few pupils, less than 25. In addition to the salary received from the directors (see Apr. 10, 1663), he is informed on this day, at a meeting of the burgomasters and schepens, "that fl. 300 are allowed him as a yearly present from the City," an order on the city treasurer is also handed him "for fl. 50 over and above, which he thankfully accepts; but requests as he has but few scholars as yet, that his salary may be somewhat increased, as the beginning entails great expense, saying whenever he gets 25 to 30 children to the school he shall serve for less salary."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 223-24. The tuition fixed for boys at the school was six guilders per quarter.—Ibid., VII: 237. In a letter to the directors, dated July 23, Stuyvesant informed them officially of the arrival of Curtius, and added: "We hope and trust, that the community shall reap the desired fruits through their children, to which God may give his blessing: the state of the school shall be reported to you in due time."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 236.

Govt. Lookermans requests permission from the burgomasters "to lay a drain to carry off the water from his lot." They decide to have an examination made of the conditions, and then "dispose of the matter according to circumstances."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 224.

The secretary of the city, Joannet Nevius, is ordered to inform the "skippers lying in the roadstead" before New Amsterdam that the burgomasters and schepens have secured from the provincial government "authority to take from traders and skippers, for the erection of a Pier, and for the benefit thereof, 8 stivers per last for loading and discharging at the aforesaid Pier [on Pearl St. at the foot of the present Moore St.]; the smaller merchandise and goods in proportion," of which the skippers are to pay one-third and the owners or receivers two-thirds. Each skimmer then "lying in the road [of the East River], or in the North River about to depart," is "to pay his dues to the Treasurer" of the city "before his departure," for the benefit of the city, "on account of the accommodation received . . . through the above-mentioned Pier."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 235. See also July 4, 1667; Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, and Dec. 12, 1659; and Nov. 5, 1660.

Stuyvesant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam as to the proper steps to be taken in regard to the "Pier" for which they have made grants to the Treasurer of the city "before his departure," for the benefit of the city, "on account of the accommodation received . . . through the above-mentioned Pier."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 235. See also July 4, 1667; Nov. 9, 1658; April 18, and Dec. 12, 1659; and Nov. 5, 1660.

unless he has previously agreed otherwise with the sellers. For writing of the conditions and notices, for each page of from 25 to 30 lines, each line of 30 to 36 letters, 30 stivers; according to the Order on Secretaries' fees dated January 25th 1687. The Messenger shall be paid by the seller and shall receive for putting up a house or lot amounting to one thousand guilders or under, a 2½ stiver and of a house or lot over 1000 gul. four guilders, whether it be sold or not.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 228–30.

11. Stuyvesant writes to Esopus, now Kingston, concerning Domine Harmanus Bloem, who has preached several times in New Amsterdam, Brooklyn, and Midwout, "to the great satisfaction and pleasure of his hearers," and whom Stuyvesant has hoped to accompany to Esopus. He says, however: "I have suffered almost daily from a violent fever, which still continues, so that my indisposition does not allow me to go from home now. Instead, he sends Domine Megapolensis to accompany Bloem, and trusts the people at Esopus will find Bloem an acceptable candidate as a minister to them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 103; see also 105.

30. Augustine Heerman (or Heermans) requests the burgomasters by a petition for permission "to lay out his garden" (at the present Beaver and William Sts.), and they declare he shall "first satisfy Anthony for costs and charges in the garden," and, when that is done, he may "lay out and sell the garden."—Rec. N. Am., Sept. 231.

2. Cornelis Steevwyck produces in the city court his account against the city, and requests "that something now and again he be paid also an order on the Weighmales." On Nov. 18, his colleagues in the court voted him an order on the city treasurer for 300 guilders in partial payment of his claim.—Rec. N. Am., III: 37–38, 78; see also April 1, 1658. The very interesting account relates to the financing of the city's works in 1653, 1654, setting up a present Wall Street and shoring of the East River bank; improvements on the City Hall, and, more recently, materials furnished for the new pier or bridge at Pearl St. at the foot of the present Moore St. This statement, dated Sept. 1, 1659, is of record, viz:

To obligation signed by Burgomasters and Scheepens 1653 the 22nd Devel and again renewed de novo by Burgomasters and Scheepens 24 Jan. 1658, payable in 9 mo: in beavers ......... fl. 935.

12. Stuyvesant complains to the directors at Amsterdam that the "free people" sent over by the company and at its expense, proved, upon their arrival, "to be mostly traders and hence persons accustomed to labor," who quickly became "a charge of the Poor-masters," whilst others, "more honest," entered the military service. He tells them that what the country needs is "farmers, or farmalablers, foreigners and exiles, used to labor and poverty."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 444.

Stuyvesant informs the directors at Amsterdam that he has been ill "during the past four weeks, with a sickness and fever, and a hot internal fever" (perhaps typhoid fever), and indicates his convalescence under medical treatment, adding that he has now been upon his feet "for two or three days," but remains "still very sick and weak."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 444. See Aug. 5, 1658.

10. Megapolensis and Driius, writing to the classics of Amsterdam, say that Gautsweer, the first Lutheran clergyman in New Amsterdam, who was banned by Stuyvesant and the council, but who evaded deportation for several years and preached in defiance of the commands of the provincial authorities, was finally arrested, by order of Stuyvesant, "in his own house," and, "last spring [1659]," was sent by the ship De Bruynwijk [Porpoise] back to Holland.—Eccles. Reg., I: 449. For full particulars concerning the Lutheran controversy, see Oct. 4, 1653.

3. Cornelis Steevwyck is chosen a schepen of the city, in place of Jeronimus Ebbingh, who has departed for Holland in the ship "Moeseman."—Rec. N. Am., III: 45.

Twenty of the principal men of New Amsterdam address a remonstrance to the burgomasters who, they declare, are "sufficiently acquainted with the constant complaints" of the burgurers, of whom some have "fled from their lands and houses," turning to the city as a refuge in their poverty, in the hope of gaining a living there; that others who have tried to help the stricken have themselves been reduced to want, "so that the debts they have contracted from year to year among this poor Commonalty" are estimated to be "more than one hundred thousand guilders" ($20,000) above what they are able to repay; some have lost heavily in life and property during the Indian uprising in 1655, and now others, through dread of a similar destruction, have "left their lands and houses." The remonstrants say it is a matter of conscience to save the needy of the "Netherlands Nation," aiding them "by disbursement of money, provisions or by new advances of goods," but when this is done it is certain the debts contracted can never be repaid. The burden falls upon the burgurers who still enjoy the "rich lander" that works injustice. They aver that they support an "excessive heavy day and night watch; Yea, even every night," and also give "voluntary services against enemies at divers times for the public service," from which "public burthens" all "surrounding places" are exempt. They complain against "the Scotts or traders," who go to and fro with their ships, taking "all the profit out of the country, selling everything for cash (for which the old inhabitants must wait) without having to bear any burthens." They ask the burgomasters to secure the following reforms or concessions from the provincial government, viz: (1) The burgerright in all places in New Netherland under the company's authority; (2) that a burgier of New Amsterdam, who has left the city or the country for a year and six weeks, may retain his burgerright, provided he keep at least a free room, fire, and light in the city; (3) that no one coming first from Holland "shall be allowed to go to Fort Orange or other places with Cargoes to trade there with the Indians or Christians," unless he first obtains his burgerright in the city; (4) that no man shall be a burgier of the city unless he promises to remain in the country three years, otherwise he shall be obliged to pay 1,000 guilders for his burgerright, a sum they adjudge reasonable for those who come incured on the Netherland with cargoes; (5) that the privileges allowed the merchants of the island, "on the subject of foreign trade be forthwith published." These concessions, the remonstrants believe, will redound to prosperity and be serviceable alike to the province and the Fatherland.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 232–34.

On Nov. 5, the presiding burgomaster transmitted the remonstrance to Stuyvesant and the council with a recommendation for favourable action, leaving however the amount of the burgerright tax upon traders, if considered too high, to their discretion.—Ibid., VII: 236. Stuyvesant and the council, by apostl of Jan. 31, 1660, conceded virtually everything asked for, except the fourth item, which was disallowed as it was contrary to the order of the directors at Amsterdam, and because "prejudicial to this place."—Ibid., VII: 234–35; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 206.

Stoffel Mignières requests the burgomasters and schepens for salary as public tutors of the city; and it is told that this post is only beneficial and that he will have "to content himself with his earnings."—Rec. N. Am., III: 51. On Nov. 21, Hendric van Bommel was appointed, provisionally, to this post by the burgomasters.—Ibid., VII: 238.

On Nov. 17, Stuyvesant, speaking to the council, in a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, says: "Should your Honors deem it advisable, to attack the savages on account of the present and repeated murders, we have previously asked thereto for some cavalry saddles and pistols to organize a little troop of horsemen on Long Island" and on this [Manhattan] island, which would be of great service and very much needed with the savages. You have sent pistols before this, 25 to 30 common saddles are herewith respectfully asked for."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 111.
Stuyvesant writes to the directors: "The Latin schoolmaster or rector, lately sent over, complains of his salary, because, he says it is impossible to support himself decently with it, as you may see by his enclosed letter to you. Your repeated instructions do not allow him, to send any bills' calls of the distress of knowledge, with which we have therefore referred him to you, promising him our favorable recommendation: we now request your Honor's advice, whether a reasonable sum may not be granted him for board money. As to his services and his diligence, we must truly testify, that his industry is astonishing and the progress of the youth encouraging. The directors therefore request to send over some medicinal seeds and plants from the "Botanical Garden at Leyden" for cultivation in New Amsterdam.

—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 445. For the directors' reply, see Dec. 22.

In a letter of Feb. 13, the directors at Amsterdam granted greater liberty to the people of New Netherland in foreign trade.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 451; Rec. N. Am., VII: 225-26; see also Sept. 11, 1658. As a result, as Stuyvesant and the council now inform them, "several prominentburgers" of New Amsterdam freighted a ship, named the "Meolen" or "Grote Meolen," despatching her "directly to France," "with boards and other lumber... to be exchanged for wine and other goods." It was "the first attempt" to introduce direct commerce to France from New Netherland.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 445. On this account, some magistrates, on the following Sunday, Dec. 22, denied saying that whilst these undertakers clamoured for more, because they were "the first to attempt this channel of trade," these persons would "deny to have been accessories to the first fraud, committed by this ship or by her crew in bringing over, against special order, a quantity of beavers and other furs sold by them in France," as the supercargo himself had informed them. This was smuggling, which had to be stopped, or they would withdraw the liberty and privileges, provisionally granted for this foreign trade.—Ibid., XIV: 452.

Augustine Heerman and Resolved Waldron are commissioned by Stuyvesant as envoys from New Netherland to Gov. Jonas Fendall, of Maryland, to negotiate for the restitution and return of freemen and servants who have decamped from the Dutch jurisdiction and for other reasons, to promise like service on the part of the Dutch government to the province of Maryland; also to protest against the conduct of Col. Nathaniel Ulie in regard to the colony of New Amstel, on the Delaware, as a contravention of the articles of peace between the mother countries, in 1654, and to demand, therefore, from the governor and council of Maryland, "right and justice against the said Colonval Nathaniel Ulie with compensation of the said debt, already had through his frivolous demand and bloody threats."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 260-63. Heerman kept a daily Journal from their setting out from New Amstel, on Sept. 30, until Wal¬ drox's return from Maryland, overland, on Oct. 21. This impor¬ tant Journal has been printed.—Ibid., II: 88-98. Although the embassy was immediately unsuccessful, its work had far-reaching consequences. Fendall and his council treated contemptuously the exceptions advanced by the Dutch envoys to Lord Baltimore's patent. Nevertheless, those exceptions formed the ground upon which the English committee of trade and plantations decided, in 1663, that Delaware did not belong to Maryland.—Brodehead, Hist. State of N. T., 3: 669 (note).

A peace conference between the Dutch and Mohawks is held at the third Castle, Kaghnuwage. While there, the Dutch Commission¬ ers received "a package with letters, brought by a Maques of the third Castle from Trois Rivieres. It was directed to Mr. Jacob de Hinson, who being present," the package was opened, and found to contain, among other letters, one to Stuyvesant from Simon Le Goir, the French Jesuit Missionary.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 115-16.

Stuyvesant rides to Breuckelen, Midwout, and Amersfoort to reassure the people, who are in great fear of Indian depredations. Sept. 29

Stuyvesant calls together "the Burgomasters, Schepens and the captains of the trubands" of New Amsterdam and tells them of the "distress of knowledge," asked that they send off a letter (at Kingstown) and that succor and relief are "needed, which can only be secured with the assistance of the citizens." An effort is made to secure volunteers by the captains of the city militia. In two days, "not more than 6 or 8 made their appearance," because "terror and fear" had "taken hold of the citizens." In the meantime, Lieut. Bryan Newton was sent to the English and Dutch Councils, and Stuy¬ vesant called together the six soldiers of New-Haerlem, 3 from Staten-Island, the train-men down to the clerks" in the company's office, to whom he joined four of his house-servants, three from his bouwery, and "of 6 newly enlisted men, making up a company of 36 men." Enlistments went on slowly, because of the unwilling¬ ness of the citizens to serve, who even "encouraged and insti¬ gated each other not to let themselves be employed for the expedi¬ tion to Esopus," while some were bold enough to say they were now obliged to jeopardize themselves "against barbarous savages," being "bound only to defend their own place."

On account of Indian depredations, Stuyvesant and the council issue a notice in which they instruct everyone who is able and willing "to serve for the protection of the country, and destruc¬ tion of the Indians, whether monthly wages or as Volunteers for a month or General or for a year, or to Commander-In-Chief, or to Captain-Lieutenant Brijant Nuton [Bryan Newton], who shall give correct information to all."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 222.

Stuyvesant, in this hour of extremity, again "convened the magistrates and captains of the trubands" on Oct. 2, when he told them he had "36 to 40 men soldiers as train-men ready and hoped that 20 or 30 Englishmen would join from the villages. He "directed them to assemble under arms the three companies of citizens early next day," in order that he might, "by reminding them of their honour and duty," ascertain how many would volunteer, and, if this proved a failure, "to detail one of the three com¬ panies by lot and punish those, who opposed, according to their merits." This purpose was carried out the next day. The three companies were called out under arms, but when Stuyvesant asked who would go with him, although he was still weak from his sickness, as he remedied them, "not more than 24 or 25 men" came forward, "which number was thought to be insufficient." Therefore one of the three companies was designated by lot and ordered to be ready for embarkation the next Sunday after divine service, under a penalty of 50 guilders for dereliction. He told the members of this company that if any were "fainthearted or afraid" they could "find a substitute in some other company," but "a sense of honour and shame compelled all to be silent." On Sunday, after sermon, "the aforesaid company of citizens numbering about one hundred, embarked with the few officers and clerks and train-men, to whom came late in the evening 24 or 26 Englishmen and hardly as many savages from Long Island, who embarked the next morning." About noon of Oct. 6, they sailed from Manhattan, and on the 10th, on account of contrary wind and tide, landed "about a quarter of a mile below the Kil [Esopus River] in order not to lose any time and not to show any discouragement."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 124-24. See Oct. 29, 1659.

Augustine Heerman and Resolved Waldron, delegates from New Netherland, address the governor and council of Maryland in vindication of the Dutch title to the Delaware River. They allege such an appoisionment of America as gave "the Dutch the Manhatans, from 38 to 42" degrees north latitude. These Dutch plantations, they say, were "then called by the general name of Manhattans, after the name of the Indians, who first inhabited the same. And here 'tis to be noted that they commit a grave mistake who will confine the general name of Manhattans afore¬ said to the particular city, which is only built on the Hudson River, but at least the same particular place in the Province: As, for example, it is frequent, with many, still at this day, to say—to go to the Manhattans, or to come from the Manhattans—when they mean the whole Province, as they do by the name of Virginia or Mary¬ land, for the particular town is never named the Manhattans, but New Amsterdam."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 80-81.

By proclamation, on Sept. 30, Stuyvesant set apart this day 15
The schout, burgomasters, and city treasurer accept bids for farming out "the Burgher Excise of Wines and Beer to be consigned within the jurisdiction of this City of New Amsterdam, extending to the Fresh Water." The farmer is required to pay his "promised rent in good current pay" to the treasurer of the city in quarterly sums. He is obliged to have office hours— in winter, from 8 till 11 a.m., and 2 till 5 p.m.; in summer, from 7 till 12, and 1 till 5 p.m., and he is assured by two bondsmen for the payment of his rent. Paulus van der Beeck was the successful bidder, and Johannes de La Montagne, Jr and Thomas Verdon were his sureties, on Oct. 31.—Rec. N. Am., Ill: 68-69.

90 Nine directors at Amsterdam order that skippers sailing to New Netherlands shall not privately bring letters to Amsterdam from there; but that letters are to be carried in sealed mail-bags; and that failure to observe the order shall subject the skippers to a fine of 100 carudi guilders for each offense.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 446; Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 377; see also summary of Aug. 6, 1652. Stuyvesant promulgated the order on June 3, 1660.—Laws & Ord. of N. Neth., 138.

Nov. Nominations are made to fill a vacany of church-warden in New Amsterdam, caused by the absence of Pieter Tunneman, who has gone to Holland.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 237.

21 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam decide to send an order to Jacques Cortelyou, the official surveyor, to furnish them with "a memorandum of the breadth of each lot situated on each side of the Heere Gracht [present Broad Street] as far as it extends," which lots he has already "measured" in their presence.—Rec. N. Am., VIII: 237-38.

They again asked him for "a list of the measurement[s] of the lots" on Feb. 7, 1660; and, on Feb. 13, a record was made of 21 names of the persons taxed for the Heere Gracht or canal. At the same time, they directed the city treasurer "to collect and receive" from these residents the amounts assessed on each "in payment of the expenses incurred in making up and sheet piling the Canal."—Ibid., 245, 246-27.

On the 27th of the month, several of the residents appeared before the burgomasters to seek release from the assessment, alleging that they derived no benefit from the improvement. They were ordered, however, to pay their share, or else to do, on their own part thereof being due within a month.—Ibid., VIII: 248-49.

This did not settle the matter. A general petition was put into circulation by the residents in June, 1660, requesting the burgomasters to "designate those who have derived most benefit from the construction of the aforementioned Canal to help pay the expenses with them," and they asked for a delay of eight days, which was granted on June 18. Stuyvesant was also invited to take a hand in the matter.

The collection of this assessment was resisted by several persons; including Coenraet Willemsen, perhaps the most prominent baker in town, was removed to the prison chamber of the city hall for refusing to pay his quota. Hans Dreppel alleged he had been exempted by Stuyvesant; he was let off with an assessment of 40 guilders because he had to sheet both in front and at the side of the canal, his property being at the outlet at the East River, now Pearl Street. Joghim Beeckman objected to payment because he knew "no reason for it," but acknowledged "he must bear what the Magistrates did, or else [he said], ship bound for England to pay his quota in three instalments, one being payable each half year. He said he could not do it, so was "ordered to be removed to the prison chamber." Coenraet ten Eyck, when ordered to pay, demurred, on the ground that he had "more dirt than before" at his place and derived no profit from the canal. He was told to pay up or expect summary action. Frederck Lubbertsen complained "of taking away his lot &c., by which he suffered great loss," and "he was allowed to pay his assessed quota in four instalments." Willemsen, the baker, was brought again into court, and told he might pay in three instalments, to which he replied definitely that he could not do it," and that the Magistrates can do what they please "about it. The court then (June 23) decided that all who were assessed should pay, "to wit—those who have heavy payments, in four instalments, and the lighter in three; and that the Treasurer" should "send a note to each house and cause them to be notified three times by Jan Gillis van Koot, and after three refusals, have execution levied by the Officer [schout], P. Tonne man."—Ibid., VII: 253, 254-55.

The old canal in the present Broad Street is referred to in records of 1644 and 1646 as "the Ditch" or "Common Ditch;" it was filled up and the street paved in 1676. The street was called Broad Street in 1679.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1002.

Stuyvesant is again at Esopus (Kingston). He left there on Dec. 3, taking with him "the grain which had been threshed."—Rec., N. Col., XIII: 111. See Oct. 29, 1659.

The burgomasters order notice to be given, on Dec. 5, that all persons who claim either the small or great burgheirright, and who have "no freedom of the City," shall "procure and receive the same within fourteen days," namely on Dec. 19 and 20, when the burgomasters sit at the city hall from noon to four, "to do this purpose. Persons who fail therein are to be prohibited from carrying on any business whatsoever in the city. On the above designated days, numerous persons took out their certificates of denization, and others did the same on the 23d, the papers being signed by the presiding burgomaster.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 240, 241, 242.

The burgomasters order the weigh-house porters "to keep the Bridge clean, and that notices be affixed" showing what will have to be paid by persons "who lay wood on the Bridge." The porters are also allowed "to do what" (other service) is "asked of them," who do not engage with working the Beam; but they are required "to be found at the Beam," or, when they go from their posts, "to leave word" where they may be found.—Ibid., VII: 239-40. The reference is to the weigh-house (see May 4, 1654) and new pier on the East River, at the present Pearl and Moore Sts. (see Nov. 9, 1660).—See Dec. 13.

Isaac Allerton, Jr., appears before the court of burgomasters Dec. and scheepsen, and requests that the court "appoint curators to the residuary estate in this country, of his father decd9, and regarding the papers remaining at New Haven in the hands of the Court there, he requests that they be written to, to send the same here." The curators appointed by the court were Paulus Leendertsen van der Gifft, Govert Lookermans, Jan Lauwerens (John Law rense), and George Wosley—the last named being the agent of the deceased Allerton.—Rec. N. Am., Ill: 90. These persons, "after much conversation," accepted the designation as curators, on the 16th. In the presence of the city court.—Ibid., VIII: 92.

The burgomasters order the following notice "regarding the Bridge to be affixed to the Beam," viz: "Whereas the Pier or Bridge must be kept clean, each and every one, who brings fire wood or any other thing there, is hereby notified to pay to the Weighhouse Porter 24 carudi guilders of this worth in proportion."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 240. See also July 4, 1672; Nov. 9, 1678; April 18, and July 11, 1659; and Nov. 3, 1660.

In a city court proceeding of the under-schout of the city against Thomas Verdon, "the hill" beyond the weigh-scales (at present Pearl and Moore Sts.) was mentioned.—Rec. N. Am., Ill: 91.

The city schout, Nicasius de Sille, asks the city court to confer upon him, and the under-schout, Resolved Waldron, authority to “seize the cart whenever they find any carters sitting riding on their carts along the streets,” which request the court grants.

This action is particularly the result of charges made by Waldron to burgomaster and councilor Glenn and Thomas Verdin, who were driving their carts along the Strand (East River, now Pearl Street) without dismounting, for which they were fined. —Rec. N. Am. III: 91.

An impression of the city seal of New Amsterdam is placed on a small burgheir's certificate for the bateau of Cornelis Jannen van Hoorn, issued to him by Burgomaster Martin Cregier. This document is owned by the Title Guarantee and Trust Co., New York City, and, so far as known, is the only impression of this city seal extant. See facsimile and description in Wilde, Civic Antiquity of New York, 42-41, and Pl. IX, also Frontispiece, Vol. V.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: “You are specially charged with the supervision of the city's financial administration and we direct you generally, to take care, that the finances of the Company there are well and properly managed.” —N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 449.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant as follows: “Your order concerning the payment of the soldiers and other servants of the Company in wampum has our approval, as it will have the tendency of placing all on the same footing and thereby giving satisfaction; but as it has not yet been informed to us how much wampum we have to direct and authorize you, to calculate wampum at that rate and for the same reason we reduce the currency value of a beaver from 8 to 7 guilders. .. You will strictly conform to this rule.” They tell him that “this special reduction of wampum must necessarily be followed by a second, more general one, if we desire to prevent its complete debasement, caused by the abundant importation of wampum by the people of New England, who make their payments with it and take out of the country not only the best goods sent from here [Holland], but also many beavers and other furs to the detriment of the Company's revenues.” They refer him to this village and in order to prevent that losses may be prevented to the inhabitants of New Netherland, they deem it necessary that the people “be previously warned .. by public notices to be given in March and June,” concerning the reduction of rate which is to take place “the following year” (1660). —N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 450-51. See Nov. 11, 1659, and April 21, and Sept. 20, 1660.

In reply to Stuyvesant's letter of Sept. 17 (p. v.), the directors say they believe “the complaints made by the Latin schoolmaster or rector about the insufficiency of his salary are almost answered by the payment of all salaries there [New Amsterdam] at Holland valuation, as now ordered by us, which, with his pupils [see May 25, 1660] every year, should be sufficient to support him decently, as long as he remains a single man; with the increase of young people in the school his income will increase daily, for the parents of his pupils will not hesitate to remunerate him fairly, if he does his duty. You can assist him in this matter according to circumstances.” Such “medicinal seeds” as were requested, they say, will be ordered from Leyden. —N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 452. See April 16, 1660.

The burgomasters decide “to write a letter to Jacob Alichx to send back the bell which D[9 Everard] Welius had borrowed provisionally from the city of New Amsterdam.” —Rec. N. Am., VII: 245. Welius had died on the 9th or 10th of this month.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 286, 287. On the 50th, the very day on which Vice-Director Alchis himself died at New Amstel, on the Delaware (N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 289), the secretary of the city, in the name of the burgomasters, wrote to Alchis, as follows: “Whereas a bell was given to Donat Welius by form of a loan and for the accommodation of the Colony of New-Amstel, to use the same there provisionally, until it be asked back, and this City having again need for it, we request your Honor, to send it back to us by the first opportunity.” —Rec. N. Am. VII: 245. Nothing resulted from this correspondence, and, on, Feb. 27, 1660, the burgomasters renewed their request in a letter to Alexander d'Hinoyosia, Alchis's successor. —Bid., VII: 247-48.

Allard Anthony is requested by the burgomasters to deliver to them “with the least possible delay the acc[e] of the Treasurership of the City, the business of tapping,” as well as cleared before him on Jan. 31, 1660, and presented “an acc[e] of his administration in quality as Treasurer of the Cities [sic] domains,” which they examined. —Ibid., VII: 245. On Feb. 2, Anthony succeeded Dec. Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt as one of the burgomasters, and on the 7th, Paulus Leendertse van Goirt delivered the treasury papers to Van Cortlandt, the new city treasurer. —Ibid., VII: 245.

Prior to this year, a half-moon was erected before the watergate, on the East River (present Wall St., west of Water St.). See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. The fortifications of the city were demolished by 1668, as is indicated by a recital in Liber Willy, III: IV: 173. It was, however, rebuilt before 1695, as such a battery is shown on the Miller Plan of that year, Pl. 23-a, Vol. I. It had disappeared by 1717. —See Pl. 25, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

Prior to this year, the two great stone bastions of the wall, situated, respectively, at Wall St., west of William St., and at Wall St., east of Broadway, were erected, as they appear on the Castello Plan, C. Pl. 82, Vol. II. See also Pl. 25-a, Vol. I, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 944. They were referred to as "7th Bastion Zelandia" and "8th Bastion Hollandia" in the "Court of Lieutenancy" papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections, (1880), 493-6. See March 28, 1691. These bastions were demolished in 1699 (p. 5), and the stones were employed in building the new city hall at Wall and Broad Sts. —Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 271; M. C. C. II: 82.

Prior to this year, the canal which ran through the present Broad Street had been spanned, prior to this year, by three small bridges at its upper end, and two "firm timber bridges with rails on each side" near the outlet. —See Castello Plan, Vol. II, and Description of the Town of Manhattan, Vol. I.

The city wall of New Amsterdam, as described in the Castello Plan or bird's-eye view, reproduced and described in Vol. II, C. Pls. 82 to 82-e, inclusive, and preserved in the Villa Castello near Florence, Italy, shows the town of New Amsterdams as it was in the summer of this year. This plan, which was probably drawn between 1665 and 1670, is, almost without doubt, based on the survey by Jacques Cortelyou ordered on June 7, 1660 (p. 2), and completed just in time to be dispatched in the ship which carried Stuyvesant's well-known letter of Oct. 6 of that year (p. 2) addressed to the directors of the West India Co. This is the earliest plan of the city which has come down to us, and the only one from the Dutch period. —See Castello Plan, Vol. II, p. 214, that only two small bridges are shown, is erroneous, for three bridges plainly appear. The argument there presented, that the third bridge was built between October, 1660, and September, 1661, is consequently based upon a wrong premise. The Castello Plan should be associated with the first Cortelyou survey, of 1660, and not with the second survey, of 1661, as is stated in the historical summary in I: 91. The reference in the same connection to Appendix III should be to Vol. II. Through carelessness, street names have been omitted from the Castello Plan key (C. Pl. 82). These will be found on the Map of Dutch Grants (C. Pl. 87, Vol. II: 61).

From about this year, Andries Rees, who was a cadet in the service of the West India Co. in 1657, conducted a tavern on "Smeer Street" (now William St. below Wall St.). On Jan. 50, 1663, he was charged by Schout Tonneman in the city court with failure to notify him of a brawl at his tavern, during which Pieter Jansen, a mason, was stabbed by Denys Isaaksen. On June 26 of the same year, the schout charged that he and his deputy went to the house of Rees "on Sunday last upon hearing noise and found there eight @ ten persons playing at ninepins and two at backgammon and amongst other persons as many as fifteen @ twenty," who were in direct violation of the ordinances and placards of the R.H. for the Director General and Council of New Netherland, recently renewed by the Court of this City from the Public Stand of this City Hall. The schout demanded that Rees "be condemned in a fine of ninety guilders and forbidden to tap for a year and six weeks or to follow the cost of the action. Rees, in extenuation, said he "tapped two hours after the afternoon's preaching and he did no business during the week." The court
In 1660, the fiscal, Jan van Cleef and his friend, bought of Jacob Wollertse van Couwenhoven, for the use of the inhabitants of the town of Utrecht, a Horse Mill with the appurtenances which had been used for grinding corn in the Manhattans. The mill stones and the mill work were brought and set up in the Village of Utrecht. The friend of Jan van Cleef without the knowledge of the Fiscal sold out his third part to Jan van Cleef, the Fiscal being security for both of them, and having paid out already more than 400 guilders ($160) on account of the mill. The Fiscal seeing that Jan van Cleef did not prosper, and that the last day of payment was near at hand, threatened to prosecute and compel him to act justly. On this Jan van Cleef sought a buyer to sell the mill to, at the same time the people desired the Fiscal to buy the mill, but he refused, neither would he sell this third part, having in view the benefit of the Town and the convenience of the inhabitants. In consequence of this Jan van Cleef was under the necessity of selling his two thirds to Albert Alberts, and the mill remained in the town of Utrecht, the Fiscal remained unwilling to sell his third part, as quoted in Dec. Hist. N. Y. (Svo. ed.), I: 690. The mill stones and appurtenances alluded to were those belonging to the mill of Van Couwenhoven on the Sloop Steegh in New Amsterdam. See Dec. 26, 1656. See also, Castello Plan, II: 308-9.

In 1660, it was ordered a survey was to be made on his bouwery, near which is now the west side of Second Ave. at 10th St., for the use of his neighbours and tenants (Corwin, Man. of the Ref. Ch. in Am., 906). It was demolished in 1687,—Eccles. Rec., I: 499-509. St. Mark's Church in The Bowery now covers this site.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935, 956. Grants of land near here were made to free negroes in 1659 and 1660.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 269.

In this year, "Pierre Pia," was recorded as keeping a tavern at what is now the north-east corner of Marketfield and New Sts.—See Libor Devos, At 215. He was a tapster here at least as late as 1663.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 175, 179, 186, 219. By 1677, the place was called "ye Swan," and was conducted by "Samuel Davis"—M. C. C., I: 60. See Castello Plan, II: 335; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. See also Jan. 9, 1663.

Hendrick Jansen Claart, from ter Goes, "commonly called the Dutch Mark buyer," is indicted by the county court for a felony for theft, and abuse of the public officers. The case is important in the criminal jurisprudence of the City. As the burgomasters and schepens do not find themselves qualified by their Instructions to sentence and execute capital punishment, "they request Nicaus de Sille, in his capacity of city schout, "to demand of the Director General and Council further and more ample qualification," or, in his capacity as fiscal of the company, "to enter the demand" before the provincial authorities.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 205, 206; Rec. N. Am., III: 161-2. On the 20th, Schoet De Sille requested the city magistrates "to take into consideration the renvoy to the Director General and Council relative to the felon, . . . so as to conclude the case;" but they instructed him "to prosecute the case of the prisoner . . . before the Supreme Council."—Rec. N. Am., III: 103. On the following day (21st), De Sille having presented the demand, Stuyvesant and the council granted and conceded to the petitioners the authority desired by them, with the proviso that, if they found "the offence of the aforesaid prisoner" to be one "to be adjudged by them to be capital in majori gradu, they demand the Director General and Council's approval thereof."—Ibid., III: 102. Returning to the city court with the supercargo the 25th, De Sille reported that the supreme body had referred the case back to their inferior bench, wherefore he, as prosecuting officer, demanded a sentence against the prisoner, who was thereupon brought into court.—Ibid., III: 106. Sentence was deferred until the next day (26th). The prosecutor and defendant was condemned "to be brought to the place where justice is usually executed and, with the rope around his neck, whipped, branded and banished the country, and condemned in the costs and fines of justice."—Ibid., Jan. III: 110-11. The supreme body asssented to the sentence of banishment imposed by the city court, not only beyond the city's juris- diction, "but also beyond the Province of N. Netherland," and likewise permitted the city to erect a gallows before the city hall, "so that he be executed for the last offense."—Ibid., III: 111-12. Claart, his wife, and his children were, on the 27th, ordered deported by ship "to the Virginias."—Ibid., III: 114.

Van Hoboken, the schoolmaster, is not rendering satisfactory service, as appears from a short minute of this date. He has petitioned for "an Amsterdam from this city, as he is behindhand with the building of the school, and for divers other reasons." The court replies: "Petitioner is allowed to receive his current year's salary, which shall be paid him at a more convenient season . . . and his allowance henceforth is abolished."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 2454. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 66. See Oct. 7, 1661. Van Hoboken's petition apparently contradicts a conclusion reached by Prof. Kilpatrick that "it was the duty of the people [in New Netherland] to furnish school quarters and of the company to provide the master's salary." His argument that the words "allowance" and "salary," as used, failed to define the annual appropriation of 100 guilders for a schoolhouse is not very convincing.—Kil- patrick, op. cit., 90-93. It is more probable that the local authori- ties were occasionally pleased to grant to a master a compensation over and above the salary fixed by the company, as in the case of Pieter Sille, (see July 4, 1659). Dissatisfaction, on the other hand, could be expressed feelingly by discontinuing the allowance (see Aug. 9, 1660).

There being several city ordinances in force which have "not been renewed for many years," and are "unknown to many Burgers and inhabitants," who through ignorance fail to observe them, Schoet De Sille is therefore "ordered and charged by the Burgomasters and Schepens yearly at proper seasons to renew such placards as occasion demands," so that observance may be assured and ignorance may not be justly pleaded in extenuation of infractions.—Rec. N. Am., III: 168.

John Pynchon writes from Springfield to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut: "Major Hawthorne & Mr. Richards Go to yt Monhats yt first opportunity to treate with yt dutch Goveurnour, of Company purposing to carry on their designe of Trade yr River [Hudson] if fairly they may."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 176 (Mass. Hist. Soc.).

Stuyvesant's request that only persons who are "friendly and not opponents" be nominated as burgomasters and schepens is related to the city court.—Rec. N. Am., III: 120. The following day (Feb. 1) was a Sunday, and on that afternoon the burgomasters and schepens of the City of New York assembled at the city hall by ticket in writing, "in presence of Mr. Nicolas de Sille, Delegate from the Director General and Council." After several ballots had been taken, a double set of names was fixed upon and sent to Stuy- vesant and the council, from which to elect a single set. The supreme body, on Feb. 2, sent an approved list, which contained some substitutions of names not among the original nominees. The new board was duly sworn in and installed by Nicolas de Sille, in his capacity of fiscal and as a member of the council, and by Cornelis van Ruyven, as provincial secretary, both of whom had been duly delegated for the purpose. The instructions were read to the court elect, the oath of allegiance was taken and, "after ringing the bell three times," announcement was made to the burgurers and inhabitants of the city to "hold the aforesaid persons in due respect and consideration."—Ibid., III: 122-26.

The burgomasters nominate Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt Feb. 1 and Pieter van Couwenhoven, that one of them may be chosen as an orphan-master in place of Allard Anthony, whose withdrawal has become imperative through his elevation to a burgomastership. Stuyvesant and the council appointed Van Cortlandt on the 9th.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 245; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 206.

Stuyvesant and the court appointed Jan van Cortlandt on the 18th Jan. 1667 (g. t.), regarding the forming of villages or hamlets as a protection against the Indians. The isolated farmers of the province are required, on pain of confiscation of their goods, and without any distinction of persons, "to remove their houses, cattle, and corn; and cultivate the last of March, or at later the middle of April, and convey them to the Village or settlement, nearest and most convenient to them; or, with the previous knowledge and approval of the Director General and Council, to a favorably situatted and defensible spot in a new palisaded Village to be hereafter formed," where suitable lots will be granted to the applicants— 10 men, 32 years old, 50 free men as assigned to the slowly complying, hence another order was issued, on April 12, and a notice, on May 18, to cause their removal or concentration.— year.

17. Stuyvesant writes to the vice-director of the West India Co. at Curacao, as follows: "The negroes, whom the Lords-Directors ordered to send hither, must be clever and strong men so that they can immediately be put to work here [New Amsterdam] at the Fort or at other places, also if they are fit for it, in the war against the wild barbarians either to pursue them, when they run away or else to carry the soldiers’ baggage, for it is quite evident, that in order to possess this country in peace and revenge the frequent affronts and murders we shall be forced into a lawful offensive war against them. An important service would be done to the Company, to us and to the country, if among the expected negroes some experienced men, who have been some time in Curacao, were sent to us."—_N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 142-43._ Stuyvesant also requests for the cavalry at Manhattan, in the service of the company, "some good and well trained horses, strong stallions or geldings, the latter being preferable as of greater service," and he requests for the Fort "the provision of a sadle and briddles.
Among them he wants ‘three or four good mares; all for account of the Company.’”—_Ibid., XIII: 145._

18. The court of burgomasters and schepens petitions Stuyvesant, and the council that it be obligatory on parties applying for revision of any judgment of that court to deposit a certain sum.
This was granted on February 25.—_Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207._

23. A proclamation is published by Stuyvesant and the council for "a day of general fasting and prayer, which shall be kept throughout this province on Wednesday before Easter, being the 24th of March" (p. 19). The burgomasters were kept busy in the many "with hot fevers, heavy colds, giddiness of the head and many other diseases," and on account of "threatened invasions by our neighbors [New England] on the territories, streams and rivers, long possessed by us, with rumors of war and its immediate consequences, murder and arson by the savage barbarous natives committed here [Manhattan and environs] as well as principally ... on the Esopus." (Kingston). These declarations are diicted to be God’s punishments, because the people have desecrated the Sabbath, used profane language, neglected divine service, and indulged in "drunkenness, feasting, voluptuousness, adultery, deception and other heinous sins." On the last day, "during divine service," it is forbidden to play tennis or ball, hunt, fish, drive, plough, sow or mow, or to engage in "all illicit amusements as dicing and hard drinking."—_N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 144-45._

24. It was customary to lead cows to the common pasture upon signal given by "the blowing of the horn," as is shown in a suit before the city court of this date.—_Rec. N. Am., III: 137._

25. Commissary Nicolaes Varleth (Varlet or Verlet), in a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, says he "is interested deeply in the (estate of the) lately deceased Governor of Virginia" (Samuel Matthews), and that he is "exceedingly anxious to go there in person," which can be done by him "best during the present season of winter." As there is now "no suitable ship" in port, Varleth requests them "to grant or hire thereto the H.ble Company’s yacht," on their own conditions, and he offers also to be of any service to them in Virginia. They agree to let the vessel him to "a reasonable hire, certainly not less than six guilders each day." Varleth is "summoned," and, appearing before them, the agreement is consummated, one condition being that he give "free passage both ways to the Captain-Lieutenants, who in his absence, represent the Governor, either on the sea or on land," and that if the said Captain-Lieutenan should get some men there, he shall take as many aboard as he conveniently can, without charge.—_N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 144._

On the 27th, Varleth, and Bryan Newtn, the captain-lieutenants at New Netherland, to the governor and directors, file their condolence on account of the death of Gov. Matthews, and "to renew not only the former old friendship, correspondence and neighborly intimacy, but also to propose a closer union, offensive and defensive, against the barbarous Indian natives, the enemies of both our nations, some further and surer footing to regard commerce and trade," and to seek permission "to enlist there a detachment of soldiers" for New Netherland. This and the burgomasters would not allow.—_Ibid., XIII: 144-45._

They were given particular instructions on March 1, and at the same time the council issued a proclamation offering protection against all prosecutions for debt, for three or four years, to such fugitives as would return from Virginia and Maryland to New Netherland.
The envos were well-received in Virginia and negotiated an intercolonial treaty of amity and commerce; they returned to Manhattan in April. On May 18, Sir William Berkeley and Theodore Bland, respectively governor and speaker of the assembly of Virginia, wrote to Stuyvesant and the council, empowering Sir Henry Moody as special envoy to receive their signatures to the treaty concluded by the Dutch envos in Virginia. Moody appeared before the Dutch provincial authorities, on June 21; the treaty was deliberated, and presently was completed; it received the hearty assent of the directors at Amsterdam.—_Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207, 213, 217; N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 297; XIV: 482._

27. The burgomasters direct an order to be made "instructing each one residing along the beach of the East River to build up and raise their sheet piling higher within the space of six weeks; under a penalty of five guilders,"—_Rec. N. Am., VII: 148._ On May 4, the schoot was directed "to warn and order for the last time those residing on the East and North Rivers to "to build up their sheet piling, within three weeks’ time." He was required "to cite those in default to the City Hall," and make complaint against them.—_Ibid., VII: 148._

Jan Jansen Hagenaa, city carpenter, having appeared before the burgomasters for further instructions for work to be done, is ordered "to look up the City ladders and to make a shed, to keep the ladders under."—_Rec. N. Am., VII: 148._ From a later record of the burgomasters (June 5, 1665, q. v.), we know that the firemen have "now locked up at the prescribed place back of the City Hall."—_Min. of Orph. Court, II: 176._

Claes Jansen Ruyter is appointed Indian interpreter by Stuyvesant and the council.—_Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 207._

A treaty of peace is made at the city hall of New Amsterdam by Stuyvesant, his council, and the burgomasters of the city, with a delegation of scharmen representing Indians of Long Island, Staten Island, Hackensack, N. J., Haverstraw, and Westchester County. These Indians declare that they will keep the peace, but do not speak for the Maritans or those of Esopus, with whom they have no desire to have it throuh. It is agreed that, to prevent murder or other mishaps, no Indian shall "come with his arms" into Fort Amsterdam or the villages, but that they "must deliver them at the gate or at the first house of the village or settlement," to be returned to them again when they leave. To obviate disagreements when the Indians bring peltries, fish, and other wares to market in New Amsterdam, it is provided that hereafter they shall come to barter at "no other places, than near the former beaver-path
[the North River landing, about at Battery Pl. and Greenwich St] and to the neck near the weigh-house," on the East River, except that firewood may be taken anywhere by them. Another promise of the Dutch is that there will be built at the two trading places "suitable houses." Other agreements provide for doing away with the provocations of war, arranging for the apprehension and punishment of wilfull murderers, either Indian or Dutch, and the education of Indian children. The interpreters of these Indians of Algonquin linguistic stock were Claes Ruyter, Claes de Norm, and Watering, an Indian who understood and spoke Dutch._

A placard is prepared by the burgomasters and schepens informing the community that the directors at Amsterdam have been "pleased to favour this Province with a foreign trade, the rather as speaking a means to encourage some to the cultivation of land, on the prosecution and promotion of which the prosperity and advancement of this state depends; but under express condition, that the ships, which shall proceed from here to France, Spain, Italy, the Caribbean Islands and other countries, to trade or sell their freighted country wares, or leave the United States, may be, shall be bound and holden to steer right for the City of Amsterdam in Europe with the returns they may obtain [the discharge and traffic, to pay such customs as the Director General and Supreme Councillors shall find reasonable." Publication of this proclamation was made at the city hall, with the usual formality, on the 16th.—Rec. N. Am., I: 45; III: 145-46.

A city ordinance is drawn up by the burgomasters and schepen prohibiting "all Scotsmen and traders" from selling any goods in New Amsterdam, or departing from there to Fort Orange (Albany) or any other place in New Netherlands with "their...merchandise or goods without having previously sought and obtained their Burgher Right and holding...as an open shop" or store in New Amsterdam, the staple port of the province. Publication of this ordinance was made at the city hall on the 16th, in the usual formality.—Rec. N. Am., III: 142-43.

Lastly in complying with its provisions, particularly by "newly arrived Traders, Scorch factors and Merchants," induced Stuyvesant and the council, on May 25, to pass a provincial ordinance against open trading, and requiring the parties alluded to above, to keep an "open store" in New Amsterdam for a period of "at least six weeks" after securing their burgherright.—Ibid., VII: 356-57; Laws & Ord. N. Ned., 177. See Jan. 31, 1661.

Coethoens, chief of the Wappens, appears before Stuyvesant and the councillors at Fort Amsterdam, under protest of representing the Esopus chief's plea of the interest of a peace, to whom reply is made that the Dutch have learned that the Esopus Indians have said "they would surprise and kill them," when the Dutch on the Esopus least expected it, and that "they would make war as a mock-peace."

The Indian chief parries the question as to how peace can be maintained under such circumstances, but avers that "only the barebacks" among the Indians are hostile, and the others want peace. Stuyvesant tells him that if the Esopus chiefs want peace, they must come to New Amsterdam to make it, to which he replies that "they were afraid," whereas answer is made that "if they did not dare to come," then "the Director-General would go there at an early day."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 150-51.

On the same day, Stuyvesant makes arrangements to "be absent for a short time" in the Esopus country. He leaves "the administration of civil affairs" to the provincial secretary and the two burgomasters of New Amsterdam, whilst the military authority is "absolutely committed to Capt. Marten Cregier," who is also one of the aforesaid burgomasters.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 150-53. See March 25.

While Stuyvesant is on board the yacht "de Haen," before Esopus (Kingston), during Indian depredations in that region, he reveals his solicitude for his family at Manhattan in a letter to Secretary Van Ruyven, wherein he says: "My love to my wife and children, tide and time forbid my writing to them;" but "let the free and good Company'swives keep good watch on my behoof."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 152.

The council appoints military officers of Harlem.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 208.

This day was set apart, on Feb. 25 (q. c.), by a proclamation of Stuyvesant and the council, as a day of general fasting and prayer throughout New Netherland, because many persons had been afflicted with "Hot fevers, heavy Rheums, Dizziness of the head and many more diseases;" as well as on account of the visitation on the province in general of "threats of encroachments and invasions of neighbours on our long possessed Lands, Streams and Rivers, with Ruin Mays, and the daily fruits thereof, as Murder and Burnings by the Indians, Barbarous Natives committed here especially on our countrymen and fellow inhabitants in the Esopus." The day was to be observed in fasting, prayer, and attendance upon "Divine Service," and "all exercises and playing of Tennis or Ball, Hunting, Fishing, Trading, Pleaughing, Sowing, Mowing, all unlawful games such as dice playing, and getting drunk" were particularly forbidden. This proclamation was read publicly in New Amsterdam on March 16, at the city hall, with due formality.—Rec. N. Am., III: 149-49.

War is proclaimed by the Dutch against the Esopus Indians, dated at Fort Orange, on this day.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 152. See March 15.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: "We forgot in our last letter...to mention the engagement here of another preacher, called Dö Henrichus Selens under the same salary and conditions; they both go over in the ship 'de Bever,' the first to take charge of the ministry at the Esopus, the other in the village of Bruckelen. To carry on the service some books are sent over, which your Honors will hand to them, besides to the schoolmasters, prayers and catechisms, to be used as model and used as proper under the community in each respective place for teaching."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 155.

The directors at Amsterdam separate the office of schout of New Amsterdam from that of the company's fiscal, and leave the mission Pieter Tonneman, given him particular instructions and his birth of office. Almost from the very beginning of the city government, in 1653 (see Feb. 2 and Nov. 11, 1653), the burgomasters and schepen had sought a separate prosecuting officer for the city. They had repeatedly solicited it from the company or its provincial representatives. The directors state that they have now finally acquiesced because they believe it will not only "much gratify the burghers of the city" but also will "promote the administration of justice and law." On April 16, the directors wrote that Tonneman was "now coming over in the 'Golden Otter,' at a yearly salary of 250 d. over and above what the said Burgomasters and Schepens" might give him for attending to the duties of the office...besides such a share of the fines and penalties" as would be found "stated in his commission and instructions;" that he was to execute his trust punctually, keep the oath to hind, and to "comply with the provincial government, and remain "faithful to the Company." On the other hand, Stuyvesant and the council were enjoined to uphold him in his position "in all matters of law and equity." His duties as schout were to "bring to trial all, who break political, civil and criminal laws, placats and ordinances; to arrest all delinquents in the city and its jurisdiction, and his instructions direct him to "fix, execute and inflict the punishment, therein prescribed; to demand, that upon his direction and complaint all criminal matters and abuses be corrected and decided and all sentences speedily and without delay executed and further to do in this respect, what a good and faithful Schout is in duty bound to do under his oath of office. He was also to "convolve the board of Burgomasters and Schepens and preside at their meetings, also move all matters coming up for deliberation, collect the votes and decide by their plurality."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 461-65; Laws & Ord. N. Ned., 374-76.

On Aug. 5, Tonneman was sworn in by the provincial authorities as the first independent schout of New Amsterdam. He had also petitioned for reappointment as schout of Bruckelen and its jurisdiction, but this was refused him by Stuyvesant and the council, who had been forewarned by the directors that they intended that post forResolved Waldron, whose place as under fiscal of the company they had decided to abolish.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 215; N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 461. For references to the controversy over a separate city schout, see Feb. 2, 1653; Nov. 11, 1653; Dec. 24, 1653; May 18, 1654; July 21, 1654. The city having been managed by the provincial government "Liberty to take as well from the traders as skippers, for the erection of a Pier to and for the accommodation of the same, in discharging and loading at said Pier, eight stivers per last, the smaller merchandise and goods in proportion," whereas the skipper has to "pay one third and the owner and receiver two thirds," Jan Jansen Bestevaer, a skipper, is ordered by the presiding burgomaster, to pay to the city treasurer before his departure "his imposed quota for the benefit of this City, for the accommodation experienced by him through the abovementioned Pier." On May 4, a similar order was issued to skipper Jacob Jansen Stuarts.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 250-51, 252. Apparently, the obligation was not always met, or even understood, by skippers coming into port. Therefore, on May 4, the burgomasters resolved "to make an Order, that no person shall have power to unload any goods coming from abroad, by ships, schoots or boats, from one ship into another, or even to weigh on board, or in any ship what is subject to the Beams; but to discharge the goods on the Bridge or Pier, which is built for that purpose, and to weigh at the Beam, which is subject to the Beam."—Ibid., VII: 252. The new weigh-house and pier were on the East River, at what is now Pearl and Montgomery. See Landmark Almanacs, Key II: 587.

Cornelis Barentsz, baker, finding his emoluments "as Measurer of Grain and Lime and Similar things" insufficient for the support of his family, applies to the burgomasters for the place of "Teller of the Bricks and Tiles coming from Patras (Holland) and other places." He is appointed, provisionally, and allowed a fee of "four stivers [eight cents] per thousand" bricks or tile, to be paid him half each by purchaser and seller.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 250–51. On April 13, 1665, he appealed for an increase of the fee to eight stivers, "for your benefit from counting each thousand, "the skipper or the importer" paying him this for—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 172.

An order is issued by Stuyvesant to Under-Schout Resolweert Waldron and the court messenger, Claes van Elshout, directing them "to warn once more the outlying settlers, each separately ... that in accordance with all orders, formerly heard, and communicated to them [see Feb. 9, 1669], they must abandon their isolated places within a given time and move into the settlements," that is, the concentrated centers.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 160.

By the Declaration of Breda, issued by Charles II at Breda, in the Netherlands, he promises a general pardon, religious toleration, satisfaction to the army, and the settlement of confiscated estates on their present possessors.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and the council: "As we are told, that Rector Curfius practices medicine there and therefore asks for a herbarium seat to his [see Sept. 17, 1659], we have been willing to provide him with one herewith, you will hand it to him with the understanding, that it shall not cease to be property of the Company."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 462.

Stuyvesant writes to the general court of Massachusetts, vindicating the Dutch title to New Netherland, and of Hudson River, in reply to a letter from Secretary Rawson, of Nov. 12, 1659, in which Massachusetts claimed the Hudson River north of 42° 20'—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 209. Rawson's original draft and Stuyvesant's original reply are in Mass. Archives, II: Colonial Series, at State House, Boston.

Stuyvesant writes to the directors at Amsterdam: "The distressing situation of the country had compelled us, before we received your Honours' peremptory order, to draw out the outlying farmers together in settlements, to be at once delivered, as far as possible, from murder and single personage, or may escape from the enclosed placat No. 9, which is now [being] daily carried out."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 165. See the ordinance, Feb. 9, 1660.

Stuyvesant and the council write to the directors at Amsterdam that, owing to the "troublesome times" occasioned by the danger of an invasion by New Englanders, the Dutch provincial government is compelled to be economical with its depleted treasury, and that the dangers of an expected invasion compel the maintaining at New Amsterdam of "more than two hundred soldiers, the officers and trainmen not counted."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 475.

Stuyvesant writes to the directors at Amsterdam: "We wish, that what you say so clearly regarding the reduction of wampum to the value of silver or at least of beavers and your arguments for it, could be put into practice without any trouble and without diverting our trade into other channels. We believe, it cannot be done without considerable risk, for wampum is the source and the mother of the beaver trade, and for goods only, without wampum, we cannot obtain beavers from the savages. If we receive no wampum from outside—we have none in our country—this would certainly cause a diversion of the beaver trade.

"To your further statement, that the special reduction of the wampum must be followed by another and general one, if we desire to prevent its total depreciation in consequence of superabundant importation, we must say, under correction, that we do not quite understand, what you mean by the special reduction of the wampum. The reduction affects man and man, seller and buyer, generally, who pursuant to the placat count 8 pieces for a stiver, instead of 6, unless they have agreed upon another rate by written or verbal contract. If, as we understand it, you mean by special reduction, that wampum is received at our offices at the rate of 200 stivers for 30 skins, it is necessary to explain that this case is a consequence of a previous contract or stipulation in letting, selling or farming out some of the Company's demesne and that except to officers of the Company it is not issued to individuals for either days' wages or commodities at any other rate, than the one established and as such redemption to be given, the one then called for by previous stipulation, when the one is calculated with the other, as the receipts and disbursements in the ledgers show. If, as we presume and conclude from what follows, you intend to have the wampum once more reduced by a general reduction from 8 to 10, then we think that under present circumstances it would be premature, because the reduction from 6 to 8, made last year, has been such an obstacle to the circulation, that wampum is somewhat scarce now. Should the importation of it increase with the beaver-trade during the summer, then we shall consider your order for the best of the Company as well as we can, and carry it out, giving you information by every chance. Before we leave this matter, we have to say, under correction, that it matters little, whether 8 or 10 pieces for a single pound of wampum, if the marks, holds or sells, his goods, according to the abundance of wampum and the price, he has to give for beavers. It would be desirable therefore, as we have repeatedly stated to you, that wampum and beavers, as well as tobacco, should be declared an absolute commodity or merchandise and that the importation of no other small currency, than silver, should be allowed here, which we believe can be done when beavers, tobacco and other things are brought and kept here under the Dutch market."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 470–71. See Nov. 11, 1659; Dec. 22, 1659; and Sept. 20, 1660.

The old burgomaster, Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, exhibits to the city court his appointment by Stuyvesant and the council of the previous day as presiding burgomaster, pro tem., during the absence of the two ruling burgomasters from the city.—Rec. N. Am., III: 130; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 209.

The name of Jacob Leisler (Leyseler), of Frankfort, Germany, appears on a roll of soldiers sent to New Netherland in this year.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 225; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (410 ed.), III: 37. This seems to be the earliest mention of him in connection with the Dutch possessors. For a sketch of his life and execution for treason, see May 16, 1659, to May 16, 1661, inclusive.

Cornells Steenwyck and others, merchants of New Amsterdam, petition Stuyvesant and the council for permission to trade along the west coast of Africa, from Cape Verde to Cape Lopez de Gouvallo, etc., and are at once referred in the matter to the directors at Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210.

Thomas Hall and others, farmers and proprietors north of and adjoining the Fresh Water on Manhattan Island, petition Stuyvesant and the council to allow their houses there to stand, and that other interested parties may be permitted to build near them, in order that a village can be formed. On the same day, a council order gives Wolphert Webber and Hall permission to let their houses stand, and also allows a village or hamlet to be formed near the bower of Augustin Heerem, or near that of Director-General Stuyvesant.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210. This appears to be the earliest official act suggesting the Bowery Village.

The burgomasters order the court messenger not to presume "to serve any attachment on any person or property without first communicating with the Burgomaster or Officer [schout], on pain of dismissal."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 252.

The schout requests the burgomasters "that the gate [of the fence] in the rear [of the lot] of the City Hall leading to the High Street (Hoogh-straat [now Stone St.]) may be made, and that the Jailer be ordered not to bring any planks or other goods on [to] the lot behind the City Hall, without having the previous consent of the presiding Burgomaster and to remove what lies there." Pieter Schalabonck, the jailer, is accordingly ordered "to notify and direct the owners of the bricks, planks or other goods" that encumber the rear lot "to have the same removed," or, failing to comply, the removal will be done by the city at the expense of the owners. He is also charged not to allow "to know in future" anything else of what sort soever it may be, "to be brought on to the lot, unless he has first obtained leave from the presiding burgomaster.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 252.

In a court proceeding of this date, mention is made of "the square" before the house of Burgomaster Marten Cregier.—Rec. N. Am., III: 179. This house is on the open space before the fort on the Heere Weg (Broadway), which later became the Bowling Green.

A contract is made between Stuyvesant and the council on the one part and Nicholas Varlet (or Violent), Stuyvesant's brother-in-law, as far as the carrying out of the duties on imports and exports from and to New England and Virginia.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 210.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND
1660 Hellegond Joris, who was appointed, in 1655, as city midwife at New Amsterdam, is now granted by Stuyvesant and the council an annual salary of 100 guilders for her services in attending the poor.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 148, 211. On her petition to the burgomasters of the city, they allowed her provisionally, on Nov. 3, 1660, 200 guilders in current money.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 163, cf. 174.

1-11 Parliament votes that the government of England shall be by king, lords, and commons; and accepts the king's Breda declaration. This led, on May 8 (p. v.), to the restoration of the Stuarts.

18 A conflict at Fort Amsterdam, by Stuyvesant, Coun- cillor Nicolas de Sille, Burgomaster Allard Anthony, and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, former burgomaster, with Indian chiefs representing the Hackensack, Nuck, Haverstraw, and other tribes, when peace is concluded with the Esopus Indians is discussed.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 166–67. See May 24.

"The provincial council issues a notice to farmers living on isolated boweries to pull down their houses and settle in villages.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 211. See also Jan. 18, 1661; and Feb. 9, 1660.

The House of the Stuarts is restored. Charles II is proclaimed king of England, Scotland, and Ireland by both houses of parliament.—Winson, ep. cit., III: 149. See, further, May 25/June 4; May 29/June 5.

24 An Indian conference is held in Fort Amsterdam between three chiefs of the Mohicans and Stuyvesant, at which these chiefs took a meek and respectful attitude toward the Esopus Indians. Present are interchanged. Claes Ruyter and Jan Dureich (usually spelled Dareth) act as interpreters. But on the next day, the provincial authorities concluded that "it is quite evident" from the conference that "a firm and stable peace with the Esopus savages is not likely "unless the captured Esopus Indians," eleven at New Amsterdam and others in prison at Esopus, who are the bodeg of the tribe, are either released, who would then make more causes for trouble, or put where they cannot get back, and so that the remainder of the Esopus Indians may be "forced to a solid peace by force of arms." It is concluded "to send the aforesaid captives to Curacao by the first good opportunity and at the expense of the Company, to be employed there or at Bonayro with the negroes in the service of the Company," and meanwhile "to continue a defensive and offensive war against the Esopus savages."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 168–69.

These Indian captives were ordered deported on June 29, in a ship owned by Nicolas Veltech and Jacob Backer and Stuyvesant, in a letter of July 5, sent by the same ship, apprised the vice-director of Curacao what to do with them upon their arrival. After the conclusion of peace with the Esopus Indians, on July 15, and the received good behavior warranting some consideration, Stuyvesant ordered, on April 16, 1661, that two "of the better sort" of the captives be sent back; and promised that, if they behaved themselves, the others would "be released and sent back in due time."—Ibid., XIII: 178, 179, 194. See June 3, June 12, and July 15, 1660.

A provincial ordinance is passed against open trading without possession of the burgheer of New Amsterdam.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 377. See March 9.

June 7 Prior to this, the house was finished (present site, No. 39 Broadway) in which Harmans van Hoeboken conducted his "trivial" school.—Liber Deeds, A: 238; cf. Ibid., A: 178. See also N. Y. Col. MSS., XI: 53 (Albany); Rec. N. Am., VII: 244. Van Hoeboken removed to Stuyvesant's bouwery, to keep school there, Oct. 27, 1661 (p. v.);—N. Y. Col. MSS., IX: 869 (Albany). See Castello Plan, III: 291; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941, where the school is erroneously given.

1 The court of schout, burgomasters, and scheepen renews the ordinance relative to attendance by its members, and fines for tardiness or absence.—Rec. N. Am., III: 162–63.

2 The first post-office in New Netherland is opened, at the office of the "Director General and Council" in New Amsterdam. For details, see Aug. 6, 1652.

3 Stuyvesant and Councillor De Sille meet the chiefs of the Hackensack and Haverstraw Indians, in conference, at which an armistice is arranged with the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 166, 167, 178, 179, 194. See May 31, June 12, July 15, 1660.

The Restoration in England. Charles II, having sailed from Jop. 4 Holland, lands at Dover.

7 It is found that the secretary or clerk of the city court has recorded "many Judgments and Decisions rendered and pro- nounced" by that court, "without such having been revised, as they should have been, or submitted for the signature of the President," which has resulted in instruments not being "drawn up according to the real intent and meaning" of the court. Therefore, the supreme court of directors-general and council now orders the city's secretary "not to execute any extracts of any Judgments, Decisions or any other Acts of importance," unless first "revised and signed in the Register . . . by the Court or at least by the President."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 386–87.

The burgomasters of New Amsterdam are appointed by the provincial council to assist the director-general in deciding certain cases on appeal before the council, and to which the company's fiscal is a party.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 213.

Jacques Cortelyou, surveyor-general of New Netherland, is directed by the provincial government to survey and make a map of the lots within the city of New Amsterdam.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 213. This plan of the city was completed by Oct. 6 (p. v.). Th Castello Plan can, almost without doubt, be identified as a copy of this survey or a drawing made from it. See Castello Plan, C. Pl. 81, and pp. 209 et seq., Vol. II; as well as Chronology, Oct. 6 and Dec. 24, 1660.

Charles II enters London. With the king, Edward Hyde, afterward Earl of Clarendon, returns from exile. He was made Lord Chancellor, and in September (p. v.) became closely connected with the royal family by the marriage of his daughter, Anne Hyde, with James, Duke of York.

The Esopus officials request Stuyvesant to come to them "by the first opportunity, bringing along a good interpreter ... in order then to conclude . . . a firm, inviolable and eternal peace" with the Indians. On June 21, the provincial council agreed that Stuyvesant "should go there, as soon as the ship de Traw has sailed, in order to conclude, if possible, a peace," on terms already fixed upon.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 178. On July 5, the council appointed Marten Cregier and Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, representing New Amsterdam, to assist Stuyvesant at Esopus "in any difficulty with their advice and counsel."—Ibid., XII: 178–79. They left for Esopus on July 7 and returned to New Amsterdam on the 31st.—Ibid., XIII: 181–84. See May 24, June 3, and July 15, 1660.

Stuyvesant and the council inform the directors at Amsterdam that only 27 out of 50 horses shipped from Curacao in the fly-boat "Eyklenboom" have arrived at New Amsterdam, the rest having died from want of good fodder, and that most of those which survive are so weak they "cannot walk nor stand;" they have to be "carried in carts and on sledges from the shore and the shore grooms are stripped to the skin" and even after a fight 19 negroes to New Amsterdam.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 427.

The city's revenues for payment of ever increasing expenses having been found to be insufficient, the burgomasters petition Stuyvesant and the council for authority "to impose some chimney tax" as a subsidy, from which they may "derive from each chimney or fireplace" as much as the director-general and council may deem proper, the tax so imposed "to be collected every three months by the Treasurer" of the city.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 255–56.

A provincial ordinance is passed for the regulation of shipping on the North (Hudson) and South (Delaware) Rivers. It is the result of evasions of the old ordinance of March 10, 1658. Skippers are forbidden, without first obtaining a proper commission, "to resort [to] and navigate" these rivers "and the places situate between both;" and passes are not to be granted to them by the fiscal unless "they first exhibit a proper commission to him."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 382.

Schout Nicolas de Sille informs the burgomasters that when he goes around "at night and at unreasonable hours to make examination," dangerous attacks are made on him by the dogs in the city, and he requests an order for preventing these attacks.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 256.

The burgomasters, together with Schout Nicolas de Sille, resolve to "draft a Placard respecting the hooting after Indians in Pearl Street, and the cutting of the Kneecbes [Kneechacks, a game still indulged in at country fairs in Holland, and consisting in trying to cut a tough piece of molasses cake in two with a batten having a given number of strokes] which is done by boys."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 256.

Andries Andriessen receives a ground-brief for a lot on the west side of William St., south of Wall St., the ground now included in the site of the Atlantic building. See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and p. 35.

Albert Cornelissen Wantman receives a ground-brief for a lot on the south side of Wall St., 29 feet east of the corner of William St; the ground is now included in the site of the National City Bank. See Castello Plan, C. Pls. 82, 82e, Vol. II and p. 345; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and p. 406.

Articles of peace are concluded by Stuyvesant with the sachems of the Eumass Indians. He returned to New Amsterdam with his associates on the 31st, and on Aug. 5 made a full report to the provincial council.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 179-84. See May 24, June 3, and June 12, 1660.

Stuyvesant having concluded peace at Enpass, on the 15th of this month (p. 81), now goes to Port Orange (Albany) and holds a conference with the Senecas.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 182-84.

Aug. Prior to this, the Red Lion brewery was built on what is now Beaver St., the buildings Nos. 47, 49, and 51 covering its site. Isaac de Forest and Joannes Veeerveen conducted the brewing business there from 1660 to 1663, and by Daniel Veeerveen probably until their demolition in July, 1675.—Orig. Books, N. Y. Hist. Soc., Collections (1915), 54-55, 56-57. See Castello Plan, p. 288-89; C. Pls. 82 and 82e, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 969.

Pieter Tonneman is sworn in as the first independent schout of New Amsterdam.—See summary under April 9. See also Feb. 1, 1666.

July Two of the fugitive judges of Charles I. ("regicides"), Edward Whalley and William Goffe, are welcomed at Boston and concealed from officers of the crown. They were also sheltered by New Haven.—Winsor, III: 374. See also 1661.

Aug. The burgomasters hear that Rector Curtius of the Latin school "of his own pleasure takes one beaver per quarter from each boy" instead of the stipulated tuition of six guilders. They give the schoolmaster "warning and notice, not to take any more, than what is fixed upon," on pain of losing "his Yearly Stipend" and receiving "no further allowance."—Rec. N. Am., VII: 257. See Feb. 1666.

An "Inferior Court of Justice" is established by Stuyvesant and the council in the "newly commenced Village of Haelerm," consisting of three commissioners—Jan Pietersen, Daniel Tournour, and Peter Cresson, before whom all minor actions between man and man are to be tried, and the senior commissioner is empowered to represent the schout in all criminal actions. Appeals are possible from their decisions, in actions exceeding 50 guilders, to the supreme court of director-general and council. They are also specifically commissioned to enact ordinances providing "that the arable lands and Gardens" may be "carefully fenced, kept inclosed, and the broken fences properly repaired."—Laws Of Or. N. Neth., 386-87.

Stuyvesant offers to pay 250 guilders annually toward the support of Rev. Henricus Selyns, provided he will preach the Sunday evening sermon at Stuyvesant's bouwery.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 479. On the same day, Selyns is appointed to be minister of the church at and of Stuyvesant's bouwery. His formal induction at Breuckelen took place on Sept. 3.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 217; Eccles. Rec., I: 479-81. In a letter to the classis of Amsterdam, on Oct. 4, he said of the bouwery: "I serve on Sundays, in the evenings only, at the General's Bouwery, at his expense... Catechizing will not be held here [Breuckelen] before the whites, but we will hold it at the commodious house of a Dutchman, for five or six weeks, or when there is no preaching service there... I preach at Breuckelen in the morning; but at the Bouwery at the end of the catechetical sermon. The Bouwery is a place of relaxation and pleasure, whither people go from the Manhattan, for the evening parties. The city of New Amsterdam is in the center of the Negro Coast, beside the household families. There is here as yet no Consistory, but the deacons from New Amsterdam provisionally receive the alms; and at least one deacon, if not an elder, Aug. ought to be chosen here."—Eccles. Rec., I: 487-89. Stuyvesant's Bowery chapel was west of Second Ave. near 10th St., the site being now covered by St. Mark's P.E. Church. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 209.

In a controversy between Lord Baltimore and the Dutch shipping agents of the Delaware River, the minutes taken by the deputies of the West India Co., representing the "Assembly of the XIX," at Amsterdam, show on this day the following entry: "It being submitted by Wt. Commissioners from the presiding Chamber of Amsterdam that the English nation in New England are daily usurping and appropriating considerable tracts of land in New Netherland belonging to this State and the Company, so that they have taken to themselves to within 80 [9] leagues of the Manhattans, the Fresh river there situates, wherein not only the inhabitants of this State [The Netherlands] have heretofore had their Colonies and plantations, but also the Company, a trading house or fortress..." The minute recites, further, Stuyvesant's agreement on a boundary line on Sept. 19, 1659 (p. 793), to prevent further usurpations; and the further attempts by the English.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 241, 235.

Parliament passes an act of general amnesty for political offenders, except regicides, and it receives the king's assent.

Schout Pieter Tonneman is ordered by the burgomasters "to direct and charge each and every one dwelling on the East River of the city, "forthwith, De Forest, De Forrest owning the property by a deed from Joannes de la Montagne, recorded Dec. 29, 1661.—Ibid., At. 252. The buildings were used as a brewery by Joannes and Daniel Veeerveen until 1665, and by Daniel Veeerveen probably until their demolition in July, 1675.—Orig. Books, N. Y. Hist. Soc., Collections (1915), 54-55, 56-57. See Castello Plan, p. 288-89; C. Pls. 82 and 82e, Vol. II; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 969.

James, Duke of York, the king's brother, secretly marries Anne Hyde, daughter of Edward Hyde, Earl of Clarendon.

The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant in regard to 20 wampum, as follows: "We will not discuss the arguments and difficulties, raised by you on account of our order [see Dec. 22, 1669] for reducing the wampum, as far as the time to carry it out is concerned, for we perceive by your prolix explanations, that you do not understand what we mean, and therefore we need not repeat it. But about the manner itself we say again and maintain, that it is based upon good reasons, into the explanation of which we have no wish to enter now; we only recommend you most seriously and order, that this reduction be put into practice as soon as time and circumstances are favourable, without fail."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 481. For their previous communication on the subject, see April 24, 1669.

The supreme council of New Netherland resolves to charter the company's sloop to Frederick Philipse (Felipse), late the director-general's carpenter, for a voyage to Virginia.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 218.

Schout Pieter Tonneman appears in the city court against Waley van der Veen, notary, for having "insulted and calumniated the Magistrates" of that court, charging that he has called them "blockheads" and "fools and simpletons." Although Van der Veen makes a general denial of the charge, he does not explain further, besides mentioning that he "will clear the injury, honorably and profitably, honorably, by praying with uncovered head forgiveness of God and Justice; profitably, by paying a fine," together with the costs, and, in case of refusal, "go immediately into confinement." From this judgment Waley appeals to the supreme court of director-general and council, "and to be kept by a Court Messenger" until he obey the judgment. At the same time, the city court sends an explanation of the case to the higher court, in which they aver that the "insult" is "destroying the authority and respect" of their court, of law, and respect for the power of the Supreme council so that similar occurrences may be prevented.—Rec. N. Am., III: 212-14.
In the Stuyvesant learned and "In for one hundred dollars, so that it begins to be a brave place, and divers brave villages are rising up which are built in good order."—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 125.

Oct. 6. Stuyvesant wrote the council to direct at Amsterdam about wampum, thus: "Whatever orders, rules and reductions may be made and carried out, they do not prevent its depreciation and further losses. The lower it is reduced, the more the trader gives for a beaver, going, as we said before, as far as 15 or 16 fl. To reduce the price of wampum to 10 or 11 for a silver, as we reduced it from 8 to 10 in receiving it at our offices, will remedy the evil only for a brief period; the trader would give the length of one hundred hands, instead of fifty and he, who receives it at so much a guild, would lose so much more time and have so much more trouble in counting it. To declare it absolutely bullion and not receivable at so much a pulber, would endanger the beaver trade and lead it into other channels; nor can it be done as long as we have no other currency here for the retail trade. On the other side they are taught by experience, that if we let it go, as at present, wampum will depreciate more and more every year, the inhabitants and the traders and the rich and poor will then as now repress their trade. We would therefore request you once more, to consider measures by which coin or some sort of currency may be brought into this country: we have repeatedly submitted to you our plans on this subject, namely, that beavers and other furs should be reduced in price, the price of wheat and other provisions and merchants, Scotchmen and traders, be warned to pay their duties for tobacco and beavers at our office here and to make the calculations accordingly."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 485. See Sept. 20.

Stuyvesant, in a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, informs them that the burgemeiers, Bleeu and Plomyn, have been placed in conformity with the directions "and their call," and he adds: "In the meantime three or four other villages still need preachers and are deprived of religious services, namely New Utrecht and Gravesend on Long Island, New Haerlem on this [Manhattan] Island and a newly planted village of about thirty families across the North river. Necessity therefore requires, that two pious and learned candidates be sent over besides the desired English preachers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 485.

That the Dutch Church at Harlem had its origin in this year is indicated by a record of the expiration, on Nov. 30, 1664, of the term of office of Jan la Montaigne, Jr., its first deacon, which office, in accordance with the custom of this church, he doubtless had held for two years.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1904), 177-78.

In a postscript to a letter written by Stuyvesant to the directors at Amsterdam, he says: "After closing our letter the Burgomasters have written that the burghers of this city [N.Y. and N.J.], which have been placed in conformity with the directions "and their call," and he adds: "In the meantime three or four other villages still need preachers and are deprived of religious services, namely New Utrecht and Gravesend on Long Island, New Haerlem on this [Manhattan] Island and a newly planted village of about thirty families across the North river. Necessity therefore requires, that two pious and learned candidates be sent over besides the desired English preachers."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 485.

The fire-wardens are ordered by the burgomasters "to go around on the earliest opportunity and inspect all the fireplaces and chimneys" in the city, to see if they are clean, and so ordered a number of reports.

--- Rec. N. Am., VII: 265. The fire-wardens were Hendrick Kip, Jr., and Jan Jans de Jongh. One vacancy existed through the removal of Joannes de la Montagne, Jr., to New Haerlem. On the 10th, the burgomasters nominated Burger Jorissen and Evert Duyckingh as candidates, and, on the 20th, Duyckingh was elected and confirmed to this office by Stuyvesant and the council, receiving his commission on the 24th.--- Ibid., VII: 264, 266. The burgomasters, on the following day, renewed their order about inspection, to be begun in three days, and on the 28th communicated the same to the three fire-wardens.--- Ibid., VIII: 266.

An act of the British parliament establishes a general postal service.

A Quaker, named George Wilson, had been active in holding conventions at the house of Henry Townsend, of Jamaica, L. I., and other Quaker meetings were held at Gravesend. This was a violation of the provincial ordinance against conventicles, of Feb. 1, 1646 (q. v.). Persons who were involved were arrested, fined, or banished. Stuyvesant also sent half a dozen soldiers to Rutsdorp (Jamaica) to restore quiet and prevent Quaker activity. When, a few weeks after, the people asked to be relieved from quartering these soldiers, Stuyvesant ordered them to be supplied by the persons in Jamaica who had Quaker sympathies. He also dopo some of the magistrates there who had winked at the conventicles.—From "Council Minutes" in N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 493-95.

Solomon la Chair petitions the supreme court for admission as a notary public; and the court orders him first his examination as to fitness. On the 20th, he received the appointment and took the oath.--- Cal. Hist. MSS, Dutch, 220.

Lodowyc, poss. captain of the rattle watch (see Jan. 7), appears in court with Jan Jelissen Koeck, collector of the watch tax, and delivers to the burgomasters "a list of all the inhabitants" of the city. The question arises whether the servants of the West India Co. should be exempt from the watch tax; this is decided in the negative. Pos informs the court that he has made out a list, showing to what streets and corners the watch should go and call out the hours in the night.--- Rec. N. Am., VII: 265. On Feb. 25, Koeck produced in court a list of persons who had paid the tax and those who were unwilling. At the same time, the burgomasters exempted the members of the rattle watch "from the payment on condition" that they would also call the hours "outside of the gates, the Landgate [at Wall St. and Broadway] as well as the Watergate [Wall and Pearl Sts.], for which the people of the Watch" were to "pay to support the Rattlewatch."--- Min. of Orph. Court, II: 76-77.

The burgomasters resolve to ask Stuyvesant and the council "whether their Honors" have exempted the Company's servants from the Burgert excise both of beer and wine as well as the slaughtert tax; some being "unwilling to pay."--- Rec. N. Am., VII: 265.

Rector Curtius of the Latin school claims exemption from 25 payment of the excise on the ground that "Professors, Preachers and Rectors are exempt from the excise in Holland," and that the Director General has granted him free excise. The court of burgomasters and schepens decide that "the De [Domine] Rector shall pay the excise."--- Rec. N. Am., III: 253.

The city court decided, on Jan. 18, to petition the provincial government "relative to the Scotchmen [i.e., Quakers] traveling thro' and fro," that, if absent four months from New Amsterdam, they should forfeit their burgerright and be obliged, upon their return, to remain a period of a year and six weeks before being again eligible for a renewal.--- Rec. N. Am., III: 250. This petition was drafted by the burgomasters on the 24th (ibid., VII: 266), and resulted in an order from Stuyvesant and the council, on the 31st, which directed the forfeiture of the burgerright by persons who, having absent from the city, did not keep fire and light, for the consecutive period of four months.--- Cal. Hist. MSS, Dutch, 224.

The city court made this order known to the people on Feb. 25. Absentees were required by it to purchase anew their burgerright upon return. It carried with it also the injunctions against leaving to Fort Orange and other parts of the province, conformable to the ordinance of May 25, 1660 (see under March 9, 1660), but so far modified it as to allow that trade on payment to the city of New Amsterdam "of twenty guilders in beavers, or the real value
Pieter Tonneman was sworn in as schout of New Amsterdam, on August 5, 1660, and, by his instructions from the directors at Amsterdam, on April 9 of that year (q.v.), was specifically designated to rule the court of burgomasters, and scheepen; but the instructions did not make it clear whether he was entitled to vote (see April 9, 1660). A controversy now arises on these points. Stuyvesant sits with the city court "to assist at the nomination of the succeeding Burgomasters and Scheepen." Tonneman objects if any one of the magistrates has any objection to his participation in making the nominations. By vote they decide against it, inasmuch as it manifestly conflicts "with the Instruction of the Schout and the laws and customs of the City of Amsterdam in Europe." Stuyvesant interposes at this point, and decides that the schout shall have a vote, "assur- ing them" that the matter would be "so concluded" by him and the council. But the burgomasters and scheepen request a post- ponement of the nominations until an "Acte" thereon be given them. After some debate, the meeting adjourned until the after- noon. Upon reassembling, the schout delivered the "Acte," which declared "that the Schout must preside in the Court of Burgomasters and Scheepen and consequently have opinion and vote in the annual nomination . . . and all other matters, wherein he is not a party." The court declared the document "contrary to the Instruction," and, as Tonneman had not brought his in- structions, the burgomasters were "deprived of their authority." Then Stuyvesant read the schout's instructions, and said he understood the "first rank remaining to the schout" to mean "the presidency," whereupon the presiding burgomaster remarked that the instructions of the fiscal also directed that he should preside in court, but that the presidency had, none the less, always remained hitherto with the burgomasters, of which they were "now deprived." Stuyvesant replied that "such was con- nived at by the Director General and Council;" however, he was content, for the present, that the schout should "desist from the presidency granted to him in the Instructions he was now given on the "Acte" by the directors. The presiding burgomaster then announced that the board concluded that the schout should cooperate with them in the nomination "for the present time and desist from any further" voting, unless authorized thereto by the directors. Stuyvesant and Tonneman assented and the nominations proceeded. A new board was elected. The names were published to the commonalty, on Feb. 2, "after the usual ringing of the bell three times."—Rec. N. Am., III: 257-61.

The court of schout, burgomasters, and scheepen renews the ordinary council's attendance on the business of "Ordinary, Extraordinary and other Meetings" of the court, and fixes upon the fines for absences.—Rec. N. Am., III: 265.

Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, appears against Rachel van Tienhoven in the city court, saying he has "twice subjected her to a fine for having neglected, after divers notices, to erect her sheet- planking and to fill the same in with earth." She replies that she cannot do her part before her neighbours, for example, Isaac de Forest and Tonneman himself, have "arranged their portion;" whereupon the court orders the schout to look after those who are "bound to erect their sheetplanking first."—Rec. N. Am., III: 261. This relates to the shoring on the East River (now Pearl St. between Whitehall and Broad Sts.).

Oloff Stevensen van Corlandt, retiring treasurer of the city, hands in his account-books and other papers to the burgomasters, who turn them over to Marten Cregier, his successor in that office for the following twenty years.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 75.

The provincial council issues an order for summoning those who have neglected to repair their fences at Corlase Hook.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 221.

At the request of the churchwardens of the city, the burgomasters ordered as many Jennes Neeb, Jannes van Loon, and Claes van Elslandt the elder, the other for Jan Gillissen Koek, about ringing of the bell and burying the dead.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 75-76. On the 25th, an order was handed to Koek, authorizing him "to take care, that the bell he tolled for the dead at the proper time, also to preserve the pall, collect the hire thereof for the churchwardens and the bell, the rent for the straps, benches and boards; to keep a record of all, who have died and are buried, without concerning himself with anything else in this regard."—Ibid., II: 77-78. At the same time, the younger Van Elslandt was requested to bring his father before the burgomasters, but he reported that his father was engaged with public business. They issued an order, however, directing the father "to take care only of the graves of the dead, dug in the church and in the churchyard; to look after the bells, &c. bring them back to the proper place; to invite, according to old cus- tom, everybody to the funeral, walk decently before the corpse and to demand and receive pay for his services, without asking for more."—Ibid., II: 77, 81. The elder Van Elslandt appeared before the burgomaster on April 25, and brought his complaints had been lodged against him for not behaving well "as a gravedigger and when inviting people to a burial;" yet, "because of his age and long residence," they merely warned him "to behave better henceforth."—Ibid., II: 80-81.

Rector Curtius of the Latin school appears before the burgomasters, who again charge him with taking from his pupils "one beaver each quarter," contrary to orders (see Aug. 9, 1660). It is charged also "that he does not keep strict discipline over the boys in his school, who fight among themselves and tear the clothes from each others bodies, which he should prevent or punish. He answers about the taking beavers, that at the beginning of school the parents of his pupils came to him, urging him to teach the children well, which he promised to do and has done more than usual, but he must therefore also have more was allowed him, for which they have promised him one beaver; concerning the discipline he says, he has in his hands more instructions, and wish to have their children punished and he requests, that the Burgomasters would make a rule or law for the school; it is also necessary, that his school [house] should be enlarged."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 76. See July 21, 1661.

"The burgomasters, having received the remonstrance of the Churchmasters [wardens] concerning the pew in the church and the vacant seats in them," order "that the vacant seats in the church be "rented out or sold for the benefit of the Church."—

Min. of Orph. Court, III: 78-80.

From the aforementioned by the burgomasters, on Feb. 25, Mar. 3, 1661, Stuyvesant and the council now reappoint Nicholas de Sille as church-warden, and elect Marten Cregier and Cornelis Steenwyck as orphan-masters, and Hendrick Willemesen and Claes Gagelesoen Visser as fire-wardens.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 78-80, 82-84, 89. Hans Vos is appointed by Stuyvesant and the council as deputy schout of New Amsterdam, to assist Pieter Tonneman, the actual schout.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 222.

A request is made by a miller for the right to use the water of the Kock with which to operate a mill. O'Callaghan, who made a special official members upon receipt of the demesne and its environment, placed the location of this mill at the outlet of the Kock or Fresh Water, 50 feet from Pothaker's Hill, now City Hall Place.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 222: La Chain's Register, in Hist. Soc. Year Book (1900), 146; Rec. N. Am., IV: 2. On the ownership of the mill, as shown in a partnership court case, see Rec. N. Am., IV: 2-5.

Allard (or Aldert) Coninck asks the burgomasters to excuse him "from purchasing his small Burgherright, because at the time of the great war [1653] he with others . . . helped to work on the wall," but his request is denied.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 80. Stuyvesant and the council direct the burgomasters to deliver to the provincial secretary "in due shape the City's accounts of receipts and expenditures" for the year 1660, and to do so henceforth every year on Feb. 1, the day before the personnel of the board is changed, in conformity with the system "in the praise- worthy government" of old Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86-87.

Metje Greversaet being asked by the burgomasters why she does not pay "her money for the Rattle watch [night patrol] and for her Burgherright," answers that she cannot, because she does not earn "as much as Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86-87.

The wife of Eghbert van Borsum is told by the burgomasters that she still owes excise fees for the year 1654. She says she "always paid when the collector came."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86.

Philip van der Noy is told by the burgomasters that he still owes the city excise fees for the year 1654, which he disproves by his account-book.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 86. Evidently this refers to his connection, as lessee, of the "Stads Herbergh" or city

Bartholomew van Schel and other masons who have been engaged in building the walls of the fort of stone are discharged from the public service. Evidently, this work, which had been in progress for the last three years, was now completed.—See summary under Dec. 19, 1666.

Parliament votes that every member shall receive the sacrament according to the forms of the Anglican Church. On May 22, the "Solemn League and Covenant" was burned by the common hangman. On Dec. 13, Episcopacy was restored in Scotland, when three bishops were consecrated there by the Bishop of London.

June
John de Decker petitions the supreme court of director-general and council, appealing from a judgment pronounced against him by the city court of New Amstel, alleging that because he is a member of the higher court he is not amenable to a court of inferior jurisdiction.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 225; cf. also Rec. N. Am., III: 308. The case was taken up by the supreme court.

The fiscal complaints to the provincial council that the merchants are making false entries of their goods, and requests that provision be made to stop the frauds.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 225. On the same day, therefore, Stuyvesant and the council pass an ordinance to prevent false entries being made at the customs house, by demanding of "all Merchants, Factors and Traders not to ship off or send away any Peltiers, either in case or package, unless the same" are "first brought into the Honble Company's store, and there inspected and appraised," as well as "marked with the Company's Mark." Hides and furs, to be dealt with similarly, "and shipped off from the Pier [present Pearl and Moore Sts.], and from no other place."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 401–2.

In the city court, a female defendant is threatened with punishment to the rack in order to elicit true testimony from her.—Rec. N. Am., III: 307. Another evidence of the rack is found in ibid., III: 300.

The provincial council issues an order requiring the tavern-keepers of New Amstel to acknowledge and respect the fiscal and his deputy in their respective offices.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226.

Hendrick Assuerus, tavern-keeper of New Amstel, is fined by the provincial council for having sold liquors to sundry persons and permitted them to play at ninepins during divine service.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226. He lived on Hoogh (Stone) St. in 1665.

July
Petersje Jan, widow of Claes Jansen Ruyster, is charged in the city court by Schout Tonneman with having an unstamped beer measure on her premises, contrary to law. She alleges it is the property of Willem Bogardus, therefore she has not the right to consume it, and that she has no other measure, having "heretofore sold by her cup." She is fined 10 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 81.

The council refuses to grant the request of Jan de la Mottagne, Jr., and others, proprietors of the plantation called "Vredenla &" (Way of Peace), near the newly erected village of New Haarlem, to settle a hamlet of some families on the point of the flat land, near where a water-mill is about to be erected.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 226. There are no records showing that the projected mill was built.

The members of the rattle-watch (or night patrol) are ordered by the burgomasters not to call before daybreak: "Rise up from bed etc." They ask for light and are promised two pounds of candles.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93. See Oct. 7, 1661.

Sybrant Jansen (also called Galina) and Tomas Lambertsen, carpenters, are requested by the burgomasters to make "the pew of Father Schepers and Schepens" larger, for which purpose they are to fetch the "wainscot from Mr. [Nicauis] de Sille and the City paying for it."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93.

Joost Goderis (or Goderus) is appointed foreman of the porters at the weigh-house of New Amstel by their own vote.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 93. He had been appointed weighmaster on April 26, 1657.

The burgomasters remind Stuyvesant and the council of their order to them, on Dec. 15, 1657, "to collect from each chimney for the purchase and maintenance of fire buckets and ladders on fire, etc.," but as the city is a city "many poor inhabitants" who have "only one small chimney," yet pay "as much for taxes as well-to-do persons" who have "two to three fire places for one chimney," they think it unfair, and ask the provincial authorities on July 2 to "put such a tax on each fire place" as they deem fit. To this Stuyvesant and the council assented on July 15, by making the rate one florin annually for each fireplace.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 97-98.

This settled, the burgomasters on the same day ordered Schout Tonneman, Secretary Nevius, and Court Messengers Claes van Elslandt, Jr. and Jan Gillissen Koeck, "to visit all the houses in the city and to examine the fireplaces in them, making a complete list of them," including the flues, and to make also "a note of all wooden or plastered chimneys." Then, on the 24th, the treasurer was instructed to send Koeck on Aug. 1 to collect one florin "for each fireplace . . . according to the test thereof;" and on Aug. 5, he was again ordered to send Koeck "to collect the outstanding dues for each fireplace," accompanied by the schout who was to assist him "in cases of refusal, first warning the residents to guard against loss and then levying the dues by distraint, charging for the visit 8."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 94, 96, 102.

For early history of this tax, see Dec. 15, 1657.

Rector Curtius of the Latin school writes to inquire if the burgomasters and schepens will contribute to him 600 guilders a year (they had been giving him 200—see July 4, 1659) in beavers on condition of his receiving no contribution from the youth. He was referred to the director-general and council for an answer.—Rec. N. Am., III: 345. Prof. Kilpatrick computes that the rector's annual income from the salary paid him by company and city together, plus the 600 guilders he may have reached 1,126 guilders, "considerably more than the elementary master received" (see May 9), showing that "the rector of a Latin school was on a distinctly higher plane, much more nearly equal to the position of the clergyman."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 103. Curtius was informed a few days later (see July 21) that he was dismissed.

A city ordinance concerning bakers is issued by the burgomasters, requiring them, after Aug. 1, to obtain a license to bake, to be renewed every three months, and for which they are "to pay each time" one pound Flemish ($3.50).—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 95. On Sept. 23, the bakers petitioned the burgomasters for relief from these rules and fees, but the petition was, on the 26th, referred to the provincial authorities, who had been responsible for the issue of the original order.—Ibid., II: 108.

Lodowycz Pos, captain of the rattle-watch, is reprimanded by the burgomasters for being "at night at the house of the Blue Dove," a tavern, where he engaged in quarrelling, even "allowing his sword to be taken from him." They charge him to look after his command, "inspect their attention to duty and appearance and then go to bed, rise again now and then at midnight," to see if his men do their duty.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 95-96. This is not only mention of other matters, but a warning to all tavern in the records. It stood at what are now Nos. 10 and 12 Pearl St. The tavern-keeper was Claes Jansen, from Naerden, who was also known as De Ruyter. See Castello Plan, II: 181; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

A letter from Stuyvesant and his council to the directors at Amsterdam says: "the English and French colonies are continued and populated by their own nation and countrymen and consequently bound together more firmly and united, while your Hoses' colonies in New-Netherland are only gradually and slowly peopled by the importations of all sorts of nationalities (few excepted), who consequently have the least interest in the welfare and maintenance of the commonwealth. —N. Y. Col. Docs., XII: 205.

Stuyvesant addresses the directors at Amsterdam in regard to wampum, as follows: "We are not less, than formerly, troubled in regard to your order about the reduction of wampum, for our daily experience convinces us more and more of how little use the former reduction from 6 to 8 [white beads] has been. We have already told you, that in the trade wampum is handled by the handful or length of string and that there is so much under selling going on, that no reduction by reduction is possible. A beaver, bartered formerly for 6, 7 at the highest, is now bought and sold for 18 to 20 guilders, wampum rating at 8 for a stiver. If we were to go on reducing wampum at this rate, we would at once drive away all our trade, which is already suffering; for this and other reasons we dare not carry out your resolution, the reduction, though repeatedly ordered by you."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 503-4. See April 21, Sept. 29, and Oct. 6, 1660.
Curtius, the master of the Latin school, has been dismissed by the directors of the West India Co., to whom Stuyvesant writes as follows: "What Alexander Carolus Curtius, the Rector or Latin schoolmaster, dismissed by your Honors, has remonstrated and requested of us on his departure, your Honors can deduce from his letters, printed in the Coll. of Col. Pratt, Annals of Public Education in N. Y., 27. Curtius's petition appears not to have survived. He had been master of the Latin school for about two years (see July 4, 1619). For the reopening of the school under Aegidius Lyccuy, see May, 1662.

Regarding the receiving of furs selected on board one Humphrey's sloop, near Tallman's island,—Ibid., 127. On Oct. 20, the council allowed Varlet compensation for supplies used on board the revenue cutter.—Ibid., 250. According to his family, see Narr. N. Neth., I, 326.

The burgomasters requested of the master of the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

Joris Rapalje, who requested on the 27th the post of harbormaster, is granted the appointment by the burgomasters.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 97.

Nicolaes Vanlet (or Varlett), as collector of export duties, petitioned the provincial council for aid in defraying the expense of a revenue cutter.—Cal. Hist. Mss., Dutch, 227. On the same day, the council confiscated the use of the casks and the Portion of furs selected on board one Humphrey's sloop, near Tallman's island.—Ibid., 227. On Oct. 20, the council allowed Varlet compensation for supplies used on board the revenue cutter.—Ibid., 250.

Regarding his family, see Narr. N. Neth., I, 326.

The burgomasters requested of the master of the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

They requested of the master of the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

The pump of the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

The pump of the weigh-house, is ordered by the burgomasters to deliver to the secretary of the city within 24 hours a statement of what the porters exact "for carrying wares, goods, beer and wine from one place to another."—Min. of Orph. Court, 96-97. See Aug. 1.

Mauritius Pieter Pietersen is sent here [New Amsterdam] as schoolmaster, preacher and comforter of the sick by the Directors, and he absolutely requires a proper dwelling and schoolhouse;" which Stuyvesant requested the burgomasters to take under consideration. They forthwith resolve: "As soon as Master Maurtius Pietersen has been appointed schoolmaster etc. by the Director General and Council and the Burgomasters have been notified of it, they will dispose of the matter and for this purpose ask for the lot behind the house of the Fiscal to build a schoolhouse."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 97. They made a request for the lot on Aug. 5 (ibid., II: 103), but no action on the matter appears of record. See Feb. 2, 1662.

The burgomasters give provisional instructions to the porters of the weigh-house and the beer carriers, requiring them "to report every morning at 5 o'clock before the Company's Warehouse or Scales and remain there until 12 noon, coming back at 1 o'clock to remain until sunset." They are not to handle wine or beer, taking it from one place to another, "without demanding and receiving the proper excise or transfer ticket" they are to "furnish their own tools for handling wine and beer," while on duty "not drink any of the goods while they are charged with the duty of watching them besides a fine into the "common fund" of the porters; if damage occurs through their drunkenness, they are liable for the damage and subject to a fine; Joost Goderis (or Goderus), chosen by the burgomasters as foremost of the porters, is to be obeyed, and he is "to remain at the Scales or the Company's Warehouse" during the set hours, not leaving, so that the merchants may be served conveniently; the porters are required to keep at work continually from job to job, reporting each time upon their return to their foreman, who is obliged to keep a record thereof."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 97.

Court, II: 97.

When their work is done, they are to "immediately deliver the excise ticket to the foreman," who is to retain all of them "until the evening and then return them to the farmers of the excise or at the latest the next morning before 9 o'clock," or be subject to a penalty for dereliction. Inattention is punished by a fine; so is tardiness and insolence to merchants or burgurers. The porters are not to take more for their work than the wages that are prescribed by the burgomasters, and if they "let fall the fire bell is rung they are to be at hand and give aid, or, failing in this, to lose their places. When a porter falls sick, he is paid out of the common fund six florins weekly. Sunday work is prohibited.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 98-101. On Aug. 5, the burgomasters established tabulated rates of charges by the porters or laborers entering the weigh-house, to be paid at the company's warehouse.—Ibid., III: 102-3.
are mounted 3 small bras guns, tho' it be large enough to mount 8 guns on it: then they said, they would build 2 halfe moones more between yt and ye North-east gate [Wall and Pearl St.]. Between this side and Long island all ships usually ly at anchor, to lade and valuate goods, secure from hurt of any wind and weather. From the said outer quere long island it is ½ of a mile, being an arme of ye Sea between ym [them], yt embraceth long island from ye maine land, afraiding a navigable passage each way into ye Sea, for good ships, frequented much by New Eng'd men, Hollanders and others.

The Souther-side or roundhead of ye town [around Fort Amsterdam] is bounded with ye arm of ye Sea, as it were divideing ye bay and arme of ye Sea, turning part of ye inlond water of ye Wester-side of ye Towne into Hudson ryer, and part by ye Easter side of ye towne, between ye maine and long island. Nearest ye Westerside of this head is a plot of ground a little higher ye others ground: on w^th stands a Windmill; and a Fort four square [Fort Amsterdam], 100. yards on each side, at each corner flanked out 26. yards; in ye midst of ye East and Westside is a gate oppo- site to ye other [they were about north and south]: ye walls are built w^th lime and stone, and within filled vp w^th Earth to a considerable breadth for planting guns, whereon are mounted 16. guns. In this Fort is ye Church, ye Gouernors house, and houses for soldiers, ammunition, etc.

The Wester-side of ye towne from ye Windmill unto ye Northwest-corner 480. yards, and lyth neer North-north-east and South-west, w^th ye Arme of ye Sea, yt stretches itself into Hudsons ryer, by ye Hollanders calld ye North-riser. From ye towne unto ye other side its 3. miles broad, and a fit road for ships to ride, ye said rier goes far into ye land N. E. ward. About 40 leagues vp this ryer on the ryer side they have a towne calld Forterian [Fort Orange, Fort Aurnia, now Albany], in compass as big as Manados, but not so much built, nor so populous. This towne afford[s] their chief trade for beafer-skins, otterskins, Muskins [muskat skins], Dear-skins etc. None but their own people may goe there to trade, except they have purchased ye burglary of Manados for go. gld. Between New York and Manados is a Fort, w^th soldiers in it, and a small town of 60. Dutch families, calld Sopasspe [Esopus, now Kingston], but is somthing from ye ryer; there they plant corne etc. and haue some trade for beafer and other skins.

The land side of ye towne [New Amsterdam] is from ye North-west corner unto ye North E. gate 520. yards and lyth neer N. W. and S. E. having six flanked at equal distance, in four of wch are mounted 8. guns. W^th in ye towne, in ye midway between the N. W. corner and S. E. there hath a small descent on each side much alike, and so continues through ye town unto ye arme of ye water on the Easter-side of ye Towne: by ye help of this descent they have made a gut [the canal, present Broad Street to beyond Exchange Pl.] almost through ye towne, keyet it on both sides w^th timber and boards as far in ye 3. small bridges; and neer ye coming into ye gut they have built two firm timber bridges w^th rails on each side; at low water ye gut is dry; at high water boats come into it, pass under ye 2. bridges, and go as far as ye 3. small bridges. In ye country stand houses in several places.

"The bay between Long island and ye Maine below ye towne and Southwest of Nut island [now Governors Island] w^th in ye heads [Hoeden or headlands by the Narrows] is 6. mile broad, and from ye towne unto ye heads tis 8. mile, and beares one from ye other S. S. W. and N. E. The town lyeth about 40. deg. lat. hath good air, and is healthy by reason of the many sorts of Trade mariners and mariners, whereby it has much trade, of beafer—otter, musk—and other skins from ye indians and from ye other towns in ye Rier and Contrry inhabitants there abouts. For paynt gloe wampen and Peage many of ye indians making, w^th they receive of ye for linnen Cloth and other manufactures brought from Holland.

"From Long island they have beef, pork, wheat, butter, some Tobacco, wampen and Peage. From New Eng'ld beef, sheep, wheat, flower, bisket, malt, fish, butter, Cider-apples, iron, tar, wax, and pitch.

"From Virginia, store of tobacco, oxeides dried, some beef, pec and fruit, and for paynt gloe Holland and other linnen, can- vase, tape, thred, cordage, brasse, Hading cloth, stuffs, stockings, spices, fruit, all sorts of iron work, wine, Brandy, Annis, salt, and Sept. all vsefull manufactures.

"The town is seated between New Eng'ld and Virginia, commodiously for trade, and yt is their chief employmt, for they plant and sowe little.

"From Amsterdam each year come 7, or 8. big ships w^th passengers and all sorts of goods, and they lade back beaver and other skins, dry oxeides and Virginia tobacco. Tis said, yt each year is carried from thence above 20000 sterl. value, in beaver skins only.

The Governor of Manados and New Netherland (so called by the Hollanders) is called Peter Stansau [Stuyvesant]: he exerced authority from thence southward (towards Virginia) as far as Dillow-bay [Delaware Bay], being about 40. leagues. Ye Sues had plantations in Dillow-bay formerly; but of late years ye Hollanders went there, dismissed ye Sues, seated themselves there, haue trade for beaver etc. He exercises also authorith Eastwards towards New Eng'ld unto West Chester, wch is about 20. miles, and inhabited by English: Also on Long island inhabitants as far as osterbay, (being farther East-ward on ye island side, ye West Chester is on ye maine) being about on quarter part of ye island. ye 2d island is in length 120. miles East and West, between 40. and 41. deg. lat. a good land and healthy. Ye other part of ye 3d island Eastward from osterbay, is vnd [under] ye authority of New Eng'ld Colonies, as it stretches itself on their coast; ye Christian inhabitants are most of ye Eng'lish.

Brian Newton (Norton) asks the provincial council to allow him to resign his commission of captain-lieutenant of the company's garrison at New Amsterdam, and to permit his return to Holland.—Cal. Hist. M.S., Dutch, 228. He had been discharged from his lieutenantcy, in June, 1659, and returned to Holland only to sail again to New Netherland in December of that year.—N. Y. Col. Dixt., XIV: 461—62.

The provincial council resolves to offer at public sale, on the 2. of Jan. 1661 an inden. for 400. acres, in ye north-east of Wall and New Sts., including the site of the Mortimer building.—See Castello Plan, C. Pla. 82., 83., Vol. II. and II: 239; Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87., Vol. II. and II: 366.

The punishment of riding the wooden horse was still inflicted at New Amsterdam in this year.—Rec. N. Am., III: 347: Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 228. The burgomast and scheepen ask Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, if he has received the fines from the bakers of the city, and he answers that he has. They thereupon decide "to divide" the same among "the justice [court] of the City, the Poor and the Church."—Rec. N. Am., 111: 354.

Stuyvesant and the council by ordinance direct the inhabi- tants of certain towns or villages, among them those of Harlem, within three months, or at the latest by Jan. 1, 1666, to have all lands claimed by them, whether cultivated or uncultivated, surveyed by the sworn surveyor, "and set off or designated by proper marks, and on the exhibition of the Return of survey thereof, apply for and obtain a regular Patent as proof of property, on pain of being deprived of their right," and so that remaining land may be given to others.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 499.

The burgomasters inform Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, that after the adjournment of their session they intend "to go up to him and see all streets, whether anything lies there to prevent driving," and, if they find the owner, Tonneman is to order him "to take it away or in case of refusal to do it at the owner's expense."—Min. of Orph. Court, Ill: 106.

Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, is directed by the burgomast and scheepen to see that the privyctl on the streets be re- moved, as it has been forbidden by Placat that privy closets should empty on the street."—Min. of Orph. Court, Ill: 106.

Hendrick Willemesen, baker, having been interrogated by the burgomasters as to the quality of bread baked in the city, about a complaint and complaints have reached them, says the main fault lies with the bakers, who allow their apprentice "to practice the making of the bread, who do not knead it sufficiently, which makes the bread bake badly."—Min. of Orph. Court, Ill: 106; Rec. N. Am., Ill: 106.
The provincial council, on the 13th, by an order authorized the burgomasters to adopt measures for preventing a monopoly (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320), and, on the 21st, each burgomaster was asked to give his advice for putting an end to the "covetous expropriators" who intended the "beef to fall into the hands of the poorer people." The next step taken, so far as known from the records, was an interrogation of Adolph Pietersen by the burgomasters, on March 24, 1664, as to whether he could work eight or ten days for the city, in "putting up a little house, for the Indians to offer their wares." He replied that he was busy, but returned, presently, and said he would undertake the job, if the burgomasters could "wait a few days." They agreed.—Ibid., II, 133.

The presiding burgomaster of New Amsterdam proposes for the consideration of the council the "whether some means ought not to be taken to bring silver money here into circulation among the public and to keep seaweed [wampum] only as an article of trade, and that the Hon[ble] Director General asks the advice of each one hereupon." The question being put and discussed, the council unanimously decided first to write to Flanders and demand a mint, having that, to cry down the seaweed and fix the beaver at six guilders and the tobacco @ four and a half silver threepence, and that the Lords Majors [directors at Amsterdam] should please to furnish some silver and silver coin for that purpose."—Rec. N. Am., III: 383. See Oct. 6, 1660.

On Oct. 4, the presiding burgomaster stated to the court, "that the yachts or sloops trading up and down" the Hudson were "indebted for wharfage, for loading and unloading at the wharf," which, although quite as much bound to pay as the ships, had not court if it was not advisable to request from Stuyvesant and the council an order requiring "the yachts, in place of paying the wharfage," to "make each of them one or two voyages to Tappan and bring from there, for this City, your yachts full of stone in order to surround this City with a wall in course of time."—Rec. N. Am., III: 377. The burgomasters now ask the provincial council that yachts or sloops owned in the province be obliged to bring two or three cargoes of stone yearly to the city for the redoubts proposed to be constructed, in lieu of paying their wharfage; and the council empowers them, on the same day, to make an agreement with the captains of such yachts, that they shall bring stone or pay the wharfage fee.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320.

An order of the provincial council, on Oct. 15, empowered the burgomasters to make regulations for the assize of the bread baked in the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320. At the same time, Stuyvesant and the council had confirmed the nomination, of Hendrick Willemse and Cristoffel Hoogblant as inspectors or "oversers of the bread." They now accept these posts. Their business is to see that the bread is made of good materials, has the proper weight, and is well baked, and "to perform their duties for the welfare of the community and the inhabitants."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 113.

At the same time Schout Pieter Tonneeman seizes a load of coarse bread from Reynier Willemse, a baker, and requests these newly-appointed "oversers to express their opinion" about it. They examine it and declare that it contains "honest material," but has not been worked properly or allowed to ferment enough; also that it was baked badly and made by someone who either did not know how to bake or, knowing, had been in a hurry. Reynier Willemse comes before the burgomasters and is shown the bread by the schout. The burgomasters ask for an explanation, and he replies that "he was out and had put the boy to work, and give him peace. Constantly trying to pull the bread out of the oven, even when he said it was not done yet and must remain in the oven for another hour," also that "the wheats was from Gravesend, which is not as good as the grains from elsewhere." He is released, "this time," with a warning "to bake good and fit bread" for the public.

On the same afternoon, the overseer, Hendrick Willemse, who is also a baker in the city, comes again before the burgomasters

11 As certain persons forestall the general interest of the city by securing what the Indians bring to sell, "such as venison, mackerel, and fish," the burgomasters and schepens decide to enforce the provincial ordinance of July 21, 1660 (Levee & Or. N. Neth., 393), against runners in the woods, and to provide that "no Indian shall bring any articles to any places except such as shall be "ordered and appointed therefor."—Rec. N. Am., III: 379.

The provincial council, on the 13th, by an order authorized the burgomasters to adopt measures for preventing a monopoly (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320), and, on the 21st, each burgomaster was asked to give his advice for putting an end to the "covetous expropriators" who intended the "beef to fall into the hands of the poorer people." The next step taken, so far as known from the records, was an interrogation of Adolph Pietersen by the burgomasters, on March 24, 1664, as to whether he could work eight or ten days for the city, in "putting up a little house, for the Indians to offer their wares." He replied that he was busy, but returned, presently, and said he would undertake the job, if the burgomasters could "wait a few days." They agreed.—Ibid., II: 133.

The presiding burgomaster of New Amsterdam proposes for the consideration of the court, "whether some means ought not to be taken to bring silver money here into circulation among the public and to keep seaweed [wampum] only as an article of trade, and that the Hon[ble] Director General asks the advice of each one hereupon." The question being put and discussed, the council unanimously decided first to write to Flanders and demand a mint, having that, to cry down the seaweed and fix the beaver at six guilders and the tobacco @ four and a half silver threepence, and that the Lords Majors [directors at Amsterdam] should please to furnish some silver and silver coin for that purpose."—Rec. N. Am., III: 383. See Oct. 6, 1660.

On Oct. 4, the presiding burgomaster stated to the court, "that the yachts or sloops trading up and down" the Hudson were "indebted for wharfage, for loading and unloading at the wharf," which, although quite as much bound to pay as the ships, had not court if it was not advisable to request from Stuyvesant and the council an order requiring "the yachts, in place of paying the wharfage," to "make each of them one or two voyages to Tappan and bring from there, for this City, your yachts full of stone in order to surround this City with a wall in course of time."—Rec. N. Am., III: 377. The burgomasters now ask the provincial council that yachts or sloops owned in the province be obliged to bring two or three cargoes of stone yearly to the city for the redoubts proposed to be constructed, in lieu of paying their wharfage; and the council empowers them, on the same day, to make an agreement with the captains of such yachts, that they shall bring stone or pay the wharfage fee.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320.

An order of the provincial council, on Oct. 15, empowered the burgomasters to make regulations for the assize of the bread baked in the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 320. At the same time, Stuyvesant and the council had confirmed the nomination, of Hendrick Willemse and Cristoffel Hoogblant as inspectors or "oversers of the bread." They now accept these posts. Their business is to see that the bread is made of good materials, has the proper weight, and is well baked, and "to perform their duties for the welfare of the community and the inhabitants."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 113.

At the same time Schout Pieter Tonneeman seizes a load of coarse bread from Reynier Willemse, a baker, and requests these newly-appointed "oversers to express their opinion" about it. They examine it and declare that it contains "honest material," but has not been worked properly or allowed to ferment enough; also that it was baked badly and made by someone who either did not know how to bake or, knowing, had been in a hurry. Reynier Willemse comes before the burgomasters and is shown the bread by the schout. The burgomasters ask for an explanation, and he replies that "he was out and had put the boy to work, and give him peace. Constantly trying to pull the bread out of the oven, even when he said it was not done yet and must remain in the oven for another hour," also that "the wheats was from Gravesend, which is not as good as the grains from elsewhere." He is released, "this time," with a warning "to bake good and fit bread" for the public.

and informs them "that the bakers cannot go on with their business, if they are to continue baking only for their wages," because they lose too much time "taking the grain to and from the mill." He also reports that he has reproved Reynier Willemsen for having blamed "his boys," a thing "which would not be done in Holland."

The city court forthwith establishes a new bread assize, and prohibits the baking of cakes (Koeckjes), cracknels, or sweet cakes. The ordinance is at once "read out from the front steps—see Jan. 12—" of the city hall, "after the usual ringing of the bell."

On Nov. 4, the burgomasters charged the shoict "to direct all bakers . . . not to bake anything else, but coarse and white bread and always to keep coarse bread publicly for sale in the shops."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 116. The conditions were unfavourable to the bakers: so, on Nov. 18, they petitioned the burgomasters for "a raise of the price of white, wheat, and rye bread, and permission to bake little cakes, sweet cakes and cracknels once or twice a week." They were granted the cake privilege on condition of their keeping in their shops coarse bread "for public sale at the prescribed price and not deseter."

22 An interesting anti-garnishoe ordinance is passed to protect the servants of the West India Co. from "some self-interested persons" who get assignments, "on the Company's books of account, against those of superior debtors of the triflers," and for which they charge, "over 50 or 60 cents more than people could purchase them for Beaver."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 410-11.

23 On June 11 of this year, the deacons of the church at New Amsterdam petitioned the provincial council that each of the adjacent villages be obliged to make weekly contributions for their own poor. —Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 236. They were to make this demand because of "the many applications and great trouble which they experienced daily from persons residing in the outlying villages with whose characters and wants they were wholly unacquainted, causing a depletion in their treasury to the disadvantage of the poor and needy of New Amsterdam; Stuyvesant and the council now (Oct. 22) pass the first poor law applicable to the province, in order, as they say, "that the Lazy and the Vagabond may as much as possible be rebrushed, and the really Poor [be] the more assisted, and cared for."

The deacons of New Amsterdam are not to give assistance to any persons not residents of the city, unless they bring a certificate showing "their character and poverty." Collections are ordered to be taken "in all Villages and Settlements" and "to be laid up for the Poor and Needy." This is to be done in every place, whether there is a preaching there or not. Platels that have magistrates thereof are required to "nominate and qualify two proper persons" to "go around every Sunday with a little bag among the congregation and collect the Alms for the support of the Poor of that place"—but, if they fall short in their needs, they may make requisitions of New Amsterdam in the manner specifically prescribed for such cases.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 411-12.

That this ordinance did not solve the difficulty is evident from subsequent conditions, for which see Dec. 28.

27 At about this time a second school for the teaching of common branches and the catechism was opened "on the bouwery of the Director-General," under the charge of Harmannus van Holoken (see Jan. 16, 1666), who had been replaced by Evert Pietersen in the older school, situated near the fort (see Feb. 2, 1665). Van Holoken, unsuccessful, apparently, as a schoolmaster in the older school, had solicited employment in "one or other maner in the Company's service for debts contracted as a triver," and was named by the burgomasters as a candidate to be the teacher, with this condition, that the Director General, whenever his service might be wanted for the Company as adfitor, shall replace him by another expert person.—N. Y. Col. MSS., IX: 869 (Albany): Eccles. Rec., I: 525; Pratt, Annals, op. cit., 17. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 70, 916. "Elementary Schoolmasters in New Amsterdam," ending with Pietersen, see Kilpatrick, 70.

The site of this bouwery school, which was intended for Stuyvesant's tenants and his negroes, was near the present corner of Sixth St. and Hall Place. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.

28 Jan Gillissen Koeck is sworn in by the burgomasters as measurer or gauger of cana, elle, and weights in New Amsterdam, and is given peculiar instructions for the conduct of his office.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 116-17.

29 Jacobus Gahy, in a Latin letter written from Holland to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, says that "the new teacher [Aegidius Luyck] of the children of the Director General" is about to sail and will be the bearer of this and other letters. He describes Luyck as "a youth, but very modest, a good reader, and well versed in languages." He predicts that he will become "teacher of the Latin school" at New Amsterdam, in the place of Dr. Curtius.—Abstract from the original Latin letter in Winthrop Papers, XIII: 79 ( MSS. in Mass. Hist. Soc.). Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 165, 137.

The burgomasters adopt "the following instructions for Master Evert Pietersen [see Aug. 15], the schoolmaster, to regulate himself thereby." These instructions and rules they have drawn up with the advice of Stuyvesant and the council.

1 He shall take good care that the children arrive at the regular hours of 8 A. M. and 1 P. M.

2 To keep good discipline among his pupils.

3 To teach the children and pupils "the Christian prayers, commandments, baptism, Lord's supper, and the questions with answers for children," as which are taught here every Sunday afternoon in the church.

4 Before closing school "let the pupils sing some verses and a psalm."

5 He shall receive "besides his yearly salary," from every pupil quarterly, as follows: Thirty stuivers for each child taught the alphabet, spelling and reading; fifty stuivers for instruction in reading and writing sixty stuivers for teaching to read, write and cipher, and from those who came "in the evening and between times pro rata a fair sum" but "the poor and needy," who asked to be taught for God's sake, "will teach for nothing."

6 He is allowed "to demand and receive from every body" who makes "arrangements to come to his school before the first half of the quarter preceding the 1st of December next the school dues for the quarter, but nothing from those" who come "after the first half of the quarter."

7 He is not to take more from anybody "than herein specified."

8 Conditions for the sale of a lot of negroes in New Amsterdam are issued by the provincial council, and, on the same day, the burgomasters ask the council for four able-bodied negroes as a gift for the用途 of the poor; and the council voted to give three of them to the city.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251.

The burgomasters fix upon new wharfage rates, to be paid by the merchants of New Amsterdam for unloading and loading their goods.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 115-16. Cf. Kilpatrick, op. cit., 67-68.

9 The city of New Amsterdam was at this time building a ship, called in the records "the City's ship" or "the City's barge." The burgomasters are now informed that the shipwrights are drawing "more than 1100 ft. in wampum from the Treasury for wages, at the rate of 16 ft. in beavers."

10 From a record of a year later (Nov. 3, 1662), it is known that Jan Ariannaan was one of the shipwrights who at that time asked the burgomasters for his pay "for making the City's barge."

11 Ibid., II: 165. On Aug. 25, 1662, Pieter Jansen from Langestraat engaged with the burgomasters to enter "the service of the City" and "to sail as skipper of the City's ship for the salary of 400 ft. in wadze, and 70 ft. in beavers, including rations."—Ibid., II: 159. He made another contract, on March 9, 1663, "to sail as skipper of the City's ship, doing also all work, as discharging and taking in freight," at a monthly salary of "40 ft. in wampum and one beaver or the value thereof." A few days later (March 18), Gov. General authorized the city to sail with Jansen, at a monthly salary of 50 florins.—Ibid., II: 170-71. A year later (March 17, 1664), Jansen entered into another contract to skipper for the city, this time for a salary of 800 florins, and besides for every voyage, when he discharged at New Amsterdam, to receive a "for all the supply of the vessel, 4 ft. also in wampum," Andries Andrien was engaged at the same time to work on the ship at a per diem salary.—Ibid., II: 194. (Langestraat was in Brabant.)
The pillory of New Amsterdam is mentioned in a court sentence of this date.—Rec. N. Am., III: 410.

Reynier Rycker appears before the burgomasters and exhibits a bill of Jacob Ruycker against the City for 237 guilders for beaver pelts and nails delivered before the particular under March 10, 1662. This was evidently a more elaborate drawing than the one made in the summer of 1660—the Castello Plan (q.v.).

Notwithstanding, the directed rata."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 117-19. These materials were used on the public works in that year.

Dec. 2. Stuyvesant having decided that "the Farmer of the slaughter excise" should "not take more for excise than 15 stivers of the florin," in such kind of pay as had been given for the animal, this is reported at a meeting of the burgomasters, who now send the farmer an order, in which they say that "many Burgbers and inhabitants" of the city have complained that he has exacted "one stiver heavy money of the florin, without regard to the animals," whether "bought for wampum or beavers or wares, valuing them at his own pleasure." They order him not to "demand and take more than 15 st. [i.e., per guilder, or 75 p. et c.] for the animals reported to him, in such pay as the reported animal" has been "bought for."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 119-20. The farming of the revenue on slaughtered animals was confirmed by the council, on Dec. 22,—Hist. MSS., Dutch, 211. Notwithstanding, on Jan. 17 following, Paulus van Beeck, the farmer, was ordered anew "not to rate the beaver higher or to take from anybody more, than the said conditions allow, figuring the beaver at 12 fl. in wampum," the established rate of "the general office" of the company at New Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 1225; Rec. N. Am., IV: 12-13.

The captain of the rattle-watch or night police reports to the burgomasters that his men have no firewood; so an allowance is granted of 14 pieces weekly or two pieces for each night, the weekly allowance to be delivered every Friday.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 122-24.

The burgomasters resolve to petition Stuyvesant and the council "for permission to collect from all ships 5 st. per last whalef舠e and for every hoghead exported 2 st., and other freight pro rata."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 121. On Jan. 10, 1665, they directed the secretary of the city "to help [in] remembering, that a report be made to the bench of Burgomasters and Scheepmen on the charges, paid by ships, banks and merchants for discharging and taking in goods at the landing place, also on the ports."—Ibid., II: 123. On Jan. 19, the court petitioned Stuyvesant and the council for approval of the license granted to the ship "to be paid by vessels unloading at the city wharf (present Pearl and Moore Sts.), and by sloops wattering in the recently constructed basin, which the council approved.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 233. The basin was formed by the pier or custom-house bridge and the piling erected on the made land before Stuyvesant's residence (present State and Whitehall Sts.). This basin was made some time in 1661.

6. "Oyster Island," now Ellis Island, is mentioned in a court record of this date.—Rec. N. Am., III: 420. A record of April 25, 1666 (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V), shows the island was then known as Dyre's Island.

In answer to a request by Cornelis Harsen, the burgomasters decide "that everybody is bound to have his grain measured, except what is grown on his own land."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 121.

The orters of the weigh-house petition the burgomasters for "an increase of wages and to be exempted from paying Rattle-watch dues." The request is "for the present denied."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 121.

22. The schout and scheepmen of the village of Bergen having granted provisional permission to Willem Jansen "to work a ferry between Bergen and the Island of Mannahttan," his petition is now before Stuyvesant and the provincial council for ratification; they delegate the Bergen officials "to enter into a provisional agreement concerning the ferryage with the petitioners to the better advantage of the inhabitants . . . and until further orders."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 214. Jansen was the first authorized ferry-man of that "pretty" of the city, and Jansen, 1665.

The provincial council orders the burgomasters to pay the salary of the city schout.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 232.

A provincial law having been passed on Oct. 22 (q.v.), Dec. the presiding burgomaster now proposes to the city court "to 28 decree, whereas divers poor seek their support here from other towns, that the Deacony of this City intend to permit a collection to be made every Sunday at each town from which the outside poor may be maintained—then inasmuch as such would tend rather to the prejudice than interest of this place—to resolve that such ought not to be undertaken before and until they communicate the same to the W.Court of this City, and to prefer acquainting the Honble Director General and to speak to his Honor thereupon, and that a collection be made by the Honble Director General and Council throughout the entire land for this object, so as thus to be freed from the trouble."—Rec. N. Am., III: 430-31. See Jan. 26, 1662.

The burgomasters lay out an order for the members of the rattle-watch or night police to go on duty in pairs, and direct their captain, Lodowycz Poz, to order them to walk less noisily and not presume to commit nuisances "on the steps of the City Hall."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 123-24. See also April 13, 1665.

The earliest extant court record, as well as land trial, of the 13 village of New Haerlem is of a hearing on this date at an "extraordinary meeting" in the case of Nicolaas Meijer [de Meyer] against Sigemonsen Luijkxas [Lucas], in which the plaintiff demands the delivery of a house, barn, land, etc., that were sold to him by the defendant, together with the costs of the suit.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 3 (N. Y. Pub. Library). Both parties had lots at Van Keulen's Hook (ibid., I: 5), or Otterspoor (see Landmark Map Rep. Key, III: 967).

Translated in full this court record (reproduced as PL II, Vol. IV) is as follows:

"13 January 1662. Extraordinary meeting.

"Present Jan Pitesren
Daniel Turmer
Jan Lamont
Nicholas Meijer, Plaintiff, against Sigemonsen Luijkxas, Defendant

"The Plaintiff demands the delivery of the House, Barn, and the further appurtenances as they were sold to him; with the costs of suit accrued and yet to accrue.

"The Defendant acknowledges to have sold the land and the house to the plaintiff, but it was left to his consideration until the morning whether he would do it.

"The plaintiff replies and shows two attestations wherein it appears that the sale was so made; and also by the attestation of Evert Duijker that the Defendant has acknowledged to have sold the same, but did not think that the expences would amount to so much.

"The defendant appears before the Court and prays for evidence, because the declaration of Myndert Koerten is contradicory; denies that Margret Provest was present at the sale, and requests that the conversations be sworn to, and sustains that Meyndert Gerritsen cannot testify, he having rented Meyer's land.

"The Court orders the Plaintiff to have his witnesses sworn.

"From the original Harlem Records, I: 3.

Walewy van der Veen, who had, on Oct. 27, 1662, petitioned the provincial council for admission as a notary public, and had been ordered to be examined as to his fitness, is now sworn in.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 231, 233.

Gabriel Carpey receives two ground-briefs for small lots adjoining lots, on the south-east corner of William and Wall Sts., the ground new covered by the building of the National City Bank.—See Castello Plain, C. Pls. 82, 83, II, and II: 244 Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and II: 406.

It is reported to the burgomasters that the consistory of the church at New Amsterdam deems it necessary, because many poor people come from the country, "to pass the gate for a general collection," and that Stuyvesant has written that, not only to the city but also outside of it, a collection is demanded "for the support of the poor coming from outside." But the burgomasters resolve "to send an order to the Deacony" of New Amsterdam, "directing them not to give assistance to anybody, except to the poor, to provide these poor with clothing, food and a little money; also to make a note of whom assistance is given."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 124-25.

1662
Martens Cregier, treasurer of the city of New Amsterdam, having been directed two days before to render an account of his stewardship of the city's funds, now delivers to the board of shou't, burgomasters, and scheepen his accounts of the revenues and expenditures of the city, which being audited are found to be correct. On Feb. 5, he was succeeded in office by Allard Anthony, and the books and papers were handed over to the new treasurer.

Feb. 31
Pieter, a negro, who has been engaged by the city as a public executioner of criminals, requests the city court for "payment of wages for executing the sentence on one Messers. Martens and Mareen van Veert" (Waart). Martens had confessed, "without torture and chains," to the theft of cabbages from a garden, and had been sentenced "to stand in the pillory with cabbages on his head" (see also Nov. 15, 1661), as an indication to the public of the nature of his thievish, and the latter had been condemned to be whipped at the public whipping-post.---Rec. N. Am., III: 356-5, 409-10; IV: 24-149.

Stuyvesant comes into the city court in order "to be present at the nomination of the succeeding Burgomasters and Scheepen in place of those going out." These nominations are made by a plurality vote, in double number, and are presented to Stuyvesant and his council for a final choice and election of the requisite number. Such choice was made on the 2d, when their names were proclaimed to the burgurers and inhabitants with the usual ceremony.---Rec. N. Am., IV: 25-29, Hist. MSS., Dutch, 253.

Stuyvesant requests the city council, "in view of the interest of the community," that they "erect and to have built a suitable school [house]." They ask a second time (for the first, see Aug. 1, 1661) to be given a lot, this time "on Brouwer [Street] South." The answer of the director-general and council is that it is "more convenient that the school[house] be erected on a part of the present churchyard."---N. T. Col. MSS., X (pt. 1): 39-40 (Albany). No further record appears. It is certain that a private house continued to be rented for the school near the fort, perhaps the house of Casper Steynens on that same Brouwer St., at which situation, perhaps, the house was used.---Rec., II: 260. This is known positively to have been the location three or four years later (see May 8, 1660).

Persons who are not residents of New Amsterdam, but who are in the city for a time, are obliged to pay the tax for the rattlewatch as long as they remain.---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 126.

The burgomasters order Allard Anthony, the city treasurer, "to demand and collect from everybody, above 16 years old, without exception, the dues for the Rattlewatch."---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 126-27.

The city court renews an ordinance with respect to the attendance and tardiness of members of the bench.---Rec. N. Am., IV: 26.

Aegidius Luyck departs from New Amstel, on the Delaware, for New Amsterdam, "called for the private instruction of Stuyve- sant's children."---N. T. Col. Docs., XII: 362; N. T. Col. MSS., XXI: 257 (Albany). The Latin school, which had closed with the death of Christofforus (see July 21, 1661), was reopened under Luyck in the following May (q.v.).

Mar. 10
The provincial council orders the arrest of Solomon Lachair and Warner Wessel, farmers of the excise, because they are in arrears with their funds. Wessel's petitions to be released from imprisonment, which is granted to him through the intercession of several women on behalf of Wessel's wife. But a week later his bondmen asked the council for security against loss by them of the bail and Wessel's property was ordered to be inventoried.---Hist. MSS., Dutch, 234.

A dispute as to the right to collect fees from auction sales is ordered by the council. Timothy Gabriel, the auctioneer, and Joannes Nuyss, the city's secretary, are those whose conflicting claims are heard.---Hist. MSS., Dutch, 234 and June 9, 1662.

Allard Anthony, the treasurer of New Amsterdam, reports to the city council that his accounts are still open for woolen and plastered chimney which they find.---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 128-29.

The city treasurer, Allard Anthony, suggests to the burgomasters of Jan Gisselin Koeck, who served both the city and the court of orphans, must be empowered to make attachments for the city and the orphans court, in the absence of the court messenger, "when people come out of the City," with the same legality as if made by a court messenger. On the 7th, the presiding burgomaster asked the members of the city bench whether Koeck should be given the authority to arrest persons who came to the city, and who were "indebtedit as well to the City as the Orphans Chamber." The court decided that such a matter "must be communicated" to the director-general and council.---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 129-30; Rec. N. Am., IV: 45.

The town of Harlem petitions the provincial council that the settlers there may be exempted from the payment of 8 st. per morgen for their lands; rejected.---Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235.

A "mill" and the house of Wewijn Elberts, widow of Aert Willemsen, a brewer, are mentioned in the records as being on her lot "on the Eastside of the Heere Street" (now No. 41 Broadway).---Min. of Orph. Court, I: 210. For particulars about this property, once owned by Andries Hudee, see Castello Plan (Pl. 82c, Vol. II), and Key, Sec. C., No. 11, pp. 235-37, Vol. II.

Nominations are made by the burgomasters for a church-warden and an orphan-master, which they submit to Stuyvesant and the council for an appointment.---Hist. MSS., Dutch, 241. Pieter Welpheertsen van Couwenhoven to the office of burgomaster; no choice was made of a church-warden by them before March 30, and on April 7 a commission was delivered to Goveert Loockermans.---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 130-31, 155, 152; Hist. MSS., Dutch, 235. See also April 7, 1662.

Jacques Cortelyou, the city draughtsman, appears before the burgomasters of New Amsterdam and is asked what his "charges for making the City map" amount to. He replies, he is willing to leave the amount to be fixed by the city officials, but volunteers the information that, "if made" in Holland, "such a map would bring 100 rykdaalders," about $100. Whereupon, the burgomasters allow him, "for making the map and other services for the City 100 fl. in heavy money," or about $40. A week earlier (March 3), Jacob van de Water, a draughtsman, had been "allowed by the Burgomasters, for making the map of this City, according to the poll for 96 fl. in beavers, the ratio of 16 fl. a trapum." This important survey of the city by Cortelyou had been finished in a matter of weeks; the end of the year 1661 (see Dec.), when he had handed the data to the draughtsman. On Jan. 16, 1662, Cortelyou was summoned by the burgomasters to the city hall, where, upon interrogation, he informed them that he had finished his work and that the material had "already been in the hands of van de Vereen for 6 weeks," who promised "to have it ready this week," being the end of January. The name "van der Veen" in the record is clearly a slip of the pen by the secretary or clerk for "van de Water."---Min. of Orph. Court, II: 124, 129, 170. See also, summary of the Dutch Period, II: 91; description of the Duke's Plan, I: 264-9, and Castello Plan, II: 209 et seq.

A list of lands at New Haerlem at this date is entered in the court records; it shows the name of each owner, with the number of morgens of land possessed by each. The highest number of morgens is held by any one person: 24. J. Pietersen Slott, Daniel Tueruer, Lubbert Geritzen, and P. Kasje each hold this number. Domine Zijperus, the preacher, it is shown, has 18 morgens.---Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 8 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

By a proclamation issued by Stuyvesant and the council on January 15, a levy of general thanksgiving, fasting, and prayer in New Netherland was named for March 24. This proclamation was read publicly at New Amsterdam on March 10.---Hist. MSS., Dutch, 233; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 130. See also Ecles. Rec., II: 116-18, for text and reasons.

Schout Tenemans requests the city court by petition "that in view of the impressions of the people, the council [shall] be put in execution, until the successful party" has obtained "a receipt from the Treasurer and paid the Schout his fees; and that the Bailiff be charged and commanded not to execute any more than his judges, until on notice given by the Court Messenger, the receipt is also produced." This is allowed, as it has been decreed by the provincial government.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 54.

This report of March 25, 1662, by Pieter Mattam, the clerk of the two court messengers of New Amsterdam, is ordered to warn the arrested parties and notify them of the fine, when they serve persons with an attachment, in case the parties endeavour to "violate the arrest or run beyond the same without the consent of the Officer."—Schout.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 54.

Geertje Tenus (probably wife of Cor Sjanssen.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 334) is charged by the schout with having "tapped for Mathew, the negro of Heer Steenwyck on the 14th of this month, a man being of Day's Festing," and he asks the court to deprive her of "her trade for one year and six weeks." She denies the charge, but Mathews says in his examination that he got drink from her and she took his money for it. Resolved Waldron testifies that the negro lies and has been forced to it by beating. It is alleged that Mathews got drunk "at another place." On the 28th, witnesses were examined, and the court dismissed the case for insufficient evidence, and ordered the negro to be "imprisoned for false accusation."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 51, 56-57.

The burgomasters resolve "to issue an order that no fruit market shall be held at the prescribed place and time."—Min. of Orph. Court, 133. The records do not reveal the purpose of this vote.

The inhabitants of New Amsterdam requested the burgomasters for written instructions and make the following suggestions, viz. that the leather firebuckets be greased and cared for; that everybody who has powder in his house shall "be ordered to take good care of it, to prevent disaster in case of a fire," that wells be made; that firebooks be procured and locations for them be designated; they also ask what they ought to do when a fire breaks out, since they have "nothing to show" that they are firemen, also what fines they may be allowed to impose; they request an order prohibiting anybody from using the firebuckets, "on pain of being fined," and that persons who know that "such" are "to receive for their last time." The written instructions were issued on April 21 (q.v.).—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 132.

David Wessels and Frerick Arentzen report to the burgomasters that some people come from out of town to the city "asking for work or to make chair matting," who are "allowed to earn the wages." This, they say, deprives them asburgers of the city, who paid the city's taxes, earning "a support for themselves and their families," and ask for a prohibition of the intruders.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 132-33.

Niclaus de Salle and Hendrick Jansen van Vin, churchwardens of New Amsterdam, object to the city's agreement with Claas Mareschalk to repair the glass in the Church [in the fort] which he undertook for a reasonable price," but now renders an unreasonable bill, which they exhibit to the court for examination. The glazier replies that he "calculated according to the Church[s] and the glass is a great guide to set the lances in the arms in their proper places." The court appoints Cornelis Steenwyck and Adolf Pietersen to reconcile, if possible, the parties in dispute.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 57. For earlier reference to the coasts-of-arms in the windows, see Oct. 9, 1665, and July 1768.

Ovatam, chief of the Hackensacks, and another chief, named Mattano, are authorized by the council of New Netherland to seize any brandy brought into their country for sale, and to seize the purveyors thereof, bringing them to New Amsterdam to be "punished as an example to others" in the hope of stopping this illicit rum traffic with the Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 218-19; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 215.

The provincial council gives notice that the duties on goods exported to New England and Virginia will be sold to the highest bidder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 236.

On March 10 (q.v.), the burgomasters nominated Joannes de Donder, Claes Loekkemans, submitting their names to Stuyvesant and the council, to one of them to be elected and confirmed as a church-warden to succeed Hendrick Jansen van Vin, whose term had expired. No choice was made then, so, on March 30, the burgomasters named Loekkemans and Jan Vigne, from whom the provincial authorities commissioned Loekkemans, as church-warden, Vander Vin, requested permission from the burgomasters, "on behalf of the Church, to take away the box in the City Hall," which is granted. He was also ordered, on April 12, "to make ready his accounts of the Church revenues and expenditures as soon as possible and submit them to the Burgomasters." This report he delivered on the 21st, "as more fully may be seen by the bills filed in this City Hall." The burgomasters, Stuyvesant, and the two court messengers of New Amsterdam, are ordered to "warn the arrested parties and notify them of the fine," when they serve persons with an attachment, in case the parties endeavour to "violate the arrest or run beyond the same without the consent of the Officer."—Schout.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 54.

Jan de Prê elucidates the sale of house and lot house, lot, as well as farm land and garden, in New Haerlem to Willem de La Montagne, for one cow and fifteen guilders in seawax (wampum), the purchaser to pay for the survey. It is signed by both parties in autograph and witnessed by the hand of M. Zyperus, the clergyman.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 14 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

A minute is entered in the council minutes relating to Stuyvesant's visit to and return from the Esopus country, now Kingston, N. Y.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 113.

The "Corporation for the propagation of the gospel in New England and parts adjacent in America" is established.—Winoor, op. cit., VIII: 169.

The city court grants permission to Anna Claess Cossen, widow of Daniel Litche, "to sell by the Bailiff some books" in her possession and the property of Sir Henry Moody, Bart, she having a lien on them "for a considerable sum."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 64. It would be interesting to know the titles of the books in this early book sale.

On March 23, Gerrit Hendrickssen petitioned the provincial government for a renewal of his lease of the revenue of the weighhouse for another year, which was granted. Now the council farm the weigh-house to him again, but with some alterations in the conditions.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 215, 246.

"David du Four" (David de Voe) acknowledges acceptance of the post of herder of cows in New Haerlem, to begin on the 23d of this month.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 16 (N. Y. Pub. Library). Action was brought, on May 11, against "David de Voo" in the New Haerlem inferior court, because of the damage sustained by the town through his negligently performing his duties, and because the town has to expend more to replace him. His answer was that he was beguiled by sweet words into taking the job, but did not want it. He was condemned to pay to the town the amount in excess of his own contract to which the town was put by his failure.—Ibid., II: 19. See April 29, 1662.

The residents along the great canal (now Broad Street), "between the first bridge and the shore"—meaning, apparently, from the Brouwers Brugh (present Stone Street) to the East River (now Pearl Street)—are directed "not to put earth beyond the posts set, to improve the street," so that people can "drive their carriages." Joannes Verrillen and Cornes ten Eyck are appointed overseers by the burgomasters, to "further this work."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172-73.

On March 24 (q.v.), the fire-wardens requested from the burgomasters written instructions with respect to their duties and responsibilities. These are new adopted by the burgomaster and must be summarized as follows: (1) They are to see that "no more roofs" are "covered with reeds nor the old ones repaired, under a penalty of 6 fl.;" (2) "That no wooden nor plastered chimneys" are built in the city, "and to condemn those which may have remained," having them "torn down in a prescribed time under a fine of 6 fl. for each time" their orders are disobeyed; (3) They are to fine householders whose chimneys are foul; (4) To see that "the ladders and fire-buckets" are not used by the inhabitants, and fine those who do use them; (5) They are obliged "to go to a fire with a black staff with three crosses" (from the city arms), as their insignia of office, and to suffer a fine of three guilders for the benefit of the schout if they fail; (6) It is their duty "to make an inspection at least every three months," to observe if the fire-buckets are in their proper places at the points designated for their deposit, and to have those which are damaged "brought to the City Hall," to be repaired by order of the burgomasters; (7) They are to watch "that the porters of the Weighhouse and the beer carriers, as well as the grainmeurers,, go to fires and remain there "until the fire is out as or long as the Firewardsens" deem it advisable, and those who fail are to be fined; (8) They are required to see to it "that little fires" are "made outside of the houses, and not conflagrate in sumber," because these fires might "cause a conflagration;" (9) For their services, the fire-wardens are to receive all the fines provided for in their instructions.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 135, 156-37.
Royer Cornelissen van Soestbergen, a prisoner held for alleged theft, answering certain interrogatories in court, declares he "brought from a negro by the new Bridge the sack of grain" which he threw "in the water by the Crispel bush," but did not know the negro, though subsequently he had "intended to bring the grain to the mill and sat so long on the piggy behind Tommas Hall's until he removed it thence." It developed in the case that the schout demanded of the court that the prisoner be heard further, "after having been subjected to Torture on the rack." Royer Cornelissen van Soestbergen pleaded guilty on four points, and was condemned by the court to be brought "to the place where criminal justice is usually executed and there to be tied to a stake, severely scourged, branded and banished out of this City's jurisdiction for the term of ten years," and "further in the costs and mists of justice." The punishment was administered the next day (29th).—Hist. IV: 68–70.

Jan Cooco (Cogo, or Koku) and Moens Pietersen acknowledge that they have engaged from this day to attend as herdsmen of cows and oxen belonging to the town of New Haarlem, until "a fortnight after All Saints day." They are to be paid 700 guilders, in seaman, and half a pound of butter for each milch cow, of which 50 guilders are payable five weeks from the date and the remaining 300 guilders on the expiration of their term.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 19 (N. Y. Pub. Library). See April 20, 1662.

Severyn Lawrens (Laurens, Louwrens) and Jan Jansen Loojerstraet are ordered prosecuted for selling liquor during divine service, contrary to law.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 237. Cf. Nov. 11, 1661.

Clises van Elstian is removed from the office of court messenger by the city court.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 81.

General Council of New Amsterdam, asks the burgomasters and schepen "that a sewer . . . be laid near the work at the Water Gate [Pearl and Wall Sts.] to prevent the water from the work running thro' her garden." This land had been conveyed to her husband on Sept. 10, 1655, and when he sought permission to build on it, he was greatly opposed by the burgomasters, because it would have abutted "right against the wall outside the city gate." The land was therefore cultivated as a garden. The widow's complaint was that the garden suffered from washouts, and therefore the city ought to provide drainage, since it was a fault that was due to the wall all the burgomasters of New Amsterdam had been so careless about it during the Dutch régime; but on March 7, 1665, the widow conveyed to the city the abutting or southerly end of her garden, which no doubt relieved her of the difficulty complained of.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 83; Min. of Orph.

Timothy Galbray, venue master by appointment of the provincial government, declines in the end to have agreed that he is not amenable to the city bench in any action which relates to his commission on sales, but is answerable solely to the jurisdiction of the higher court of the province. He is ordered to prove, therefore, that he is entitled by his instructions to receive "half commission."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 85.

The burgomasters order "that the city court is to issue a warrant to the two court messengers, requiring them to report at his house every morning between seven and eight o'clock and every afternoon between one and two, to see if he has any need of them; if this cannot be granted, he requests to have one of them "adjourned to him" regularly; the court informs him that, if he has any summons to issue, he may "tell the Messengers to come to him on Saturdays or Mondays."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 87.

A survey is ordered by the provincial council of land at the Fresh Water, called the Calkh Hook, in dispute between Abraham Verplanch, Jan Vigne, and Jacobus Kip.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 237. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965.

The burgomasters conclude "to lay before the Director General and Council . . . the necessity of keeping up the Heere Graacht [great canal, now Broadway] and for that purpose to ask and recommend to persons who are unwilling to pay their share of expenses . . . and to submit "at the same time the resolutions" of Stuyvesant which were "adopted at the meeting" of the burgomasters in the city hall, on June 28, 1660.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 140; Rec. N. Am., VII: 255. See also June 2, 1665; May 29, 1665.

Charles II marries Catherine of Braganza, daughter of John IV, King of Portugal.

A resolution of the burgomasters of this date reads: "Whereas the Burgomasters of this City have resolved to have erected in the Heere Graacht [great canal, now Broadway] at the East River outlet, present Broad and Pearl Sts., a convenient and durable lock, to keep said Graacht at all times full of water, so that in time of need because of fire . . . , and at other occasions it may be used and that especially the great and unbearable stench may be suppressed which arises daily when the water runs out, therefore they direct all and everybody dwelling on either side of said Graacht to pay, upon the demand of the Treasurer or on his order, the share as imposed by the tax of February 13, 1660, even though these moneys were intended to pay expenses for the Graacht and now and hereafter to be used for erecting the aforesaid lock and dam.—Rec. N. Am., V: 142–43. See also May 25, 1665; May 25, 1666.

Concierge Matheus de Vos reports to the burgomasters concerning a dispute between him and Secretary Janneus Nevisius about "the fees for selling goods at auction." Both lay claim to these perquisites, but they submit their differences voluntarily to the burgomasters for a decision, and these decide that the fees should be equally divided between the two. Both sides are satisfied and thank the board.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 143.

Egbhart von Borum, late ferry-man, petitions the provincial council for compensation due to him for ferrying over the East River several persons on the 21st of March, 1664, during the engagement of the New Amsterdam flag.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 147.

Annetje Smits, wife of Hendrick Janssen Smit, is hailed to court by the schout, who charges her with tapping on Sunday during the prechasing hours, contrary to law. She is fined "six guilders for the pone."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 102, 165. See also Rec. N. Am., V: 156. The tavern was at No. 32 Bridge St. See Feb. 4, 1647.

Adriaen Vincent is ordered by the burgomasters to pay the July renewal of his burgerright, because he has been in the country and absent from the city of New Amsterdam. He pleads with Hendrick Karstensen and Adam Diecksen, fence viewers of the village of New Haerlem, having been sent for by the town officials, are asked why they fail to do their duty, and they answer: because the schout has refused to cooperate with them. Several persons also testified to their attempts to keep their sheep from being driven by the market chimneys, and aver that the schout has refused to hear them in their respective complaints or do anything against the guilty owners of the intruders.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 31 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

The question is raised by the burgomasters whether a man who has married in New Amsterdam the daughter of a burgler may also enjoy the burgerright without paying for it. "After some discussion," they decide in the affirmative, on condition, however, that the person give "notice of it within six weeks after marriage."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 158.

The shippers of furs are given notice by the provincial council to send in a return of what they have shipped in the vessels about to sail. Two days later, another notice was given to them to send their furs, within 24 hours, aboard the vessels about to sail, and, on Sept. 6, a warrant was issued to the farmers of certain export duties to search the sailing vessels.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 240.

Previdous edicts "against Convectulles and prohibited assemblies" are not obeyed as the provincial government desires, so now the ordinance is renewed and enlarged upon. Only "the Reformed worship and service" are legal; all others are inhibited. The law reads: "no Convectulles or meetings shall be held in the province whatever the place be in houses, barns, ships, barnes, not in the Woods nor fields upon forfeiture of fifty guildens for the first time for every person wether man or woman or child, that shall have present in such prohibited meetings, and twice as much for every person, whether it be man or woman, or child that has exerted or taught in such prohibited assemblies, or shall have lent his house barn or any place to that purpose; for ye second time twice as much; for the third time four times as much, and arbitrary punishment besides."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 158.

As it is alleged that persons bring in and distribute "among the Common people . . . tedious & erroneous books writings & letters," a prohibition is placed upon "the importation of such printed or unprinted books, writings or letters," and also upon "the communicating or dispersing, receaving, hiding of the same, upon forfeiture of an hundred guildens, to be paid by the importers and distributors of such books, letters or writings and fifty guildens for every one that shall receive them from those that distribute them, with confiscation of the imported books when they are found out." Moreover, persons who came into New Netherland without leave are required to take the oath of allegiance within six weeks after their arrival, and to register their names at the office of the provincial secretary in New Amsterdam. All magistrates, sheriffs, marshals, officers, and commanders in the province are instructed to enforce in their respective precincts the laws against convectulles, unlawful assemblies, and vagabonds. Persons who have been four or more undesirable characters are subject to heavy penalties; likewise any local official who violates his office by winking at the law is to be fined heavily and forever disfrsahed the public service.—Laws & Ord. N. Neh., 428-30.

Jan Gillisen Koeck reports to the burgomasters that he has summoned several persons who owe rattle-watch dues and chimney fees to the city; whereupon they order all persons in arrears to pay promptly or suffer an execution against them.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161.

Rachel van Tienhoven, widow of Cornelis van Tienhoven, and sister of Jan Vigne, having been ordered to pay rattle-watch and chimney dues, produces a bill against the city for bricks delivered by her. She is told by the burgomasters that the city has not received as many bricks as she charges for, and that only 4,000 bricks "have been "used for the two chimneyys of the guard-house."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161. 28

As the burgomasters have learned that Allard Anthony, the treasurer of New Amsterdam, intends "to go to the Virginias by the first ship," they direct him to give them, "before his departure, an account in due form of his administration of the City's domain."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 161.

Jao van Cleef and Titus Cyre appear in the city court, in Oct. regard to a borse-mill of Jacob Wolpbersten van Cowenhouen, which they have bought, and whereof Cyre has sold his share to van Van de Water, and feared he might not get his own.

He therefore requests the city court to direct "the Court Messenger to attach the money," which being allowed, he asks that the attachment "be declared valid" until it is found to whom the most belongs. The court so declares.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 159.

For some time the inhabitants of New Amsterdam have been distressed because they have been unable to buy "anything from the merchants with seawant, except at an excessively high and intolerable price." The preiding burgomaster, therefore, asks the city court whether some means are not to be found to alter this untoward state of affairs. After deliberation, it is decided that the value and currency of seawant is to be given by the Burgurers and inhabitants of the city and its jurisdiction, as well as within the province, that "be fixed annually when the beaver" "is purchased by the traders and merchants."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 153.

In a dispute in the city court between Hendrick Willemson, the proprietor, Janse Smitt, Willemson demands that Smitt "be ordered to drain his water through his own drain and to raise his lot" (now 32 Bridge St.); but Smitt says he has already raised his lot. The court refers the matter to the fence viewers, "to make ocular inspection," settle the dispute by an order as they see fit, and endeavour to reconcile the parties in dispute.—Rec.
N. Am., IV: 155. See also Castello Plan, III: 267 (No. 11).

Jan de Wit and Denys Hartogvelt, carpenters, agree to build a wind-mill outside the landgate of the city (Broadway and Wall St.) near the company's farm, on condition that they receive at a reasonable price the stones and iron belonging to the company's old well at "25 cents," and all iron and "8 reeling" will be "in ruins." The old windmill stood in the present Battery Pl., at Greenwich St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 961). On Sept. 22, 1663, the company signed an agreement to give them the stones and ironwork of the old mill and to allow them to grind in the new mill to be constructed by them, "without contributing for it any share to the Company for the use of the wind," on condition that they should build the mill as quickly as possible on a lot to be granted to them, and should grind for the company "25 skepels of grain weekly, free of toll, if the Company require so much."—Liber Deeds, B:

24. New York. On the same day, Hartogvelt gave up his share in the wind-mill project, his place being taken by Jan Theunissen, of Leerdam; and De Wit, on April 4, 1664, sold his interest to Claes Jansen van Langendijk.——Ibid.

This new wind-mill, in which the West India Co. owned a half interest, stood in the present City Hall Park, on the Communipaw, and was known later as "Jasper's Mill" and "Old Garrison Mill."
It was erected between Sept. 22, 1663, and April 4, 1664; was destroyed by lightning in 1669, and rebuilt in 1695. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 962, and Pls. 104, 17, 32, Vol. I, and II: 221. See also April 4 and May 27, 1664.

3 When the speculators appear before the burgomasters, they suggest their instructions, and ask for an increase of pay.
The burgomasters amplify their instructions and order that nobody shall "slaughter any animal within this City's jurisdiction, but such persons" as live in the city and have taken the oath of allegiance; but that ever-Y. Lamontagne, the City Clerk, and the New Amsterdam inhabitants asked to assist him, provided that a sworn butcher is "present at the slaughtering." They are "not allowed to take an assistant from outside this jurisdiction," unless they first inform the burgomasters thereof and report to the secretary of the city. The sworn butchers are allowed fees, as follows: For an ox or cow, 5 florins; for a calf or pig, 2 florins; for a sheep or goat, 1 florin, and smaller animals in proportion.

On Nov. 17, Asser Levy and Eghbert Meindersen, sworn butchers, told again the burgomasters that their pay for slaughtering was insufficient, and were allowed an increase in certain prescribed cases.

Upon the request of Joost Goderus, the foreman of the porters at the water-works, New Amsterdam, the burgomasters decide that the porters shall each pay eight stuivers weekly into the common fund. Those who are "unwilling" are to be assessed "twice as much." This is the common fund established for the benefit of the porters in case of illness, etc.——Min. of Orph. Court, II: 165-64.

Schout Tonnemen requests the city court to allow him "to place François de Bruyn in prison in the City Hall," as he has defaulted in a judgment recently rendered against him. The court directs the schout to confine the prisoner "in a respectable tavern."——Rec. N. Am., IV: 166.

The provincial council of New Nederland appoints magisnates for the village of New Haerlem.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch,

Pieter Tonneman, the city schout, on Oct. 26, petitioned the provincial government for permission to make his own arrests, and to be allowed to "agree and compound for all civil and criminal cases up to one hundred guilders." This is now granted to him by apostil, "on condition that he render every month precisely, correct account and reliquia to the City, Poor and Church, of what share or portion" belongs to each. The petition and apsotil thereon were ordered to be entered upon the court minutes of the city court, on Jan. 23, 1663, as of record.—Rec. N. Am.,

The burgomasters inform Lodowycz, captain of the rattlewatch, that his men are not going about at night "to their proper places for calling" the hours, and that the people on Pearl Street, have lodged a complaint about it. Pus replies that "they always call at the first entrance of Pearl Street" (apparently at the present State and Whitehall Sts.), but do not go farther because the residents beyond are unwilling to pay the watch tax, so are not entitled to the service. The burgomasters simply tell him to see that they make "their rounds properly."——Min. of Orph. Court, II: 164.

Lubbert Gerritsen acknowledges the sale of his lot No. 8 on the north side of the village of New Haerlem, with the housing and garden, to Jan Laurensz (Dayts), in the manner he had grahed the same from Matysz Boonen, and that for the sum of 300 guilders, in seawant.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I:
33 (N. Y. Pub. Libr.).

The court of schepens of the village of New Haerlem apsects and authorizes Jan P. Slot as surveyor [roijmeester], for the welfare and security of the village, enjoining also all carpenters from setting up any fences or building in the absence of the surveyor.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.

This day the village officials of New Haerlem make the following minute in their records: "Posted a notice [for the benefit of the inhabitants], that the fences be set up on the northside of the village within fourteen days, subject to a fine of two pounds Flemish" for derelicition.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.

Symon Darwig and Moenis Petersen are appointed fence viewers of the village of New Haerlem, and it is ordered that persons in default of fencing be fined three guilders for each derelicition.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.

On Dec. 16, it was decided to have an inspection of fences on Dec. 18.—Ibid.
This fence viewing resulted in a number of prosecutions in the court of schepens.—Ibid., I: 35, 36, 38.

Daniel Tournere is chosen sexton of the church and fire-warden of the village of New Haerlem in the place of Jan Lamontagne, Jr.
—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 34.

A curious form of installment payment of the burgheeright
Dec. appears in the case of a man who was sworn in as a member of the rattle-watch or night police, but whose burgheeright fees have not been paid. He is one of the New Amsterdam inhabitants assisted by, to be deducted by the city treasurer from his salary as a watchman.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 167.
CHRONOLOGY: THE DUTCH PERIOD: 1626-1664

Willem Jansen, the Bergen-Manhattan ferry-man (see Dec. 28, 1661), complains against the Bergen officials that they have told the community there that every inhabitant of the place can keep a barge and ferry, whereupon these officials are summoned to appear before Stuyvesant and the council "to give an account of their action." They appeared on Jan. 4, 1663, and countercharged that Jansen "had refused to carry over," which prompted them to act; but Jansen said he only refused to serve "those who would not pay him." The Bergen schout "was directed to assist the ferryman" in securing his payments for service, and, if he acted unbecomingly, to report him to the provincial authorities, who would "then issue such orders, as occasion may require."—Ibid., XIII: 234, 235. This was the ferry known as the Communipaw ferry. See also June 25, 1660.

The constant deprestation of wampum as an exchange in New Netherland, after repeated correspondence between the provincial government and the directors at Amsterdam, leads to the promulgation of another ordinance for regulating the currency, which is the last act of the kind passed during the Dutch régime. It is found that the deprestation is so great that "they, ye, even by some, 24 guilders are now ordinarily paid for one Beaver." Moreover, the directors at Amsterdam have often in dispatches, and especially in a letter of Dec. 22, 1659, ordered the reduction of payment made in New Netherland "to the Company's servants in Wampum or Beaver, to the value of" 433-34. Stuyvesant and the council find themselves obliged, "in order that the Company's servants may receive in some degree an equivalent of Holland money, again to reduce the Wampum, at the Company's counting house [Pearl near Broad Sts.], from 16 to 24 White, or 12 Black [Beads], for one stiver, and to disburse it at that rate on the first of January next, to the Company's Servants in payment of Monthly wages and Board money, and as regards Beaver, to continue to pay out, provisionally, until further Order, at 7 guilders, in payment of Monthly wages and board money."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 433-34. See Dec. 22, 1659; Oct. 28, 1662; and Jan. 20, 1664.

Three negro women, slaves, petition Stuyvesant and the council to be manumitted, which is granted to them on condition that one of them shall come weekly to do Stuyvesant's housework.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 242.

During this year, the West India Company's ship, the "Arms of Amsterdam," on her way from Guinea to New Netherland with a cargo of negro slaves, was captured in the West Indies by an English privateer, Robert Dowman, and carried into Virginia. Stuyvesant and the council sent Jan. de Decker at the head of an embassy to Virginia, to remonstrate and reclaim the slaves,—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254, 259; N. T. Col. Docs., II: 218. The proceedings had upon this complaint are in the Records of the General Court of Virginia, No. 5, and a transcript thereof, made in 1847, is attached. In this same year, Stuyvesant appointed Jacob Leisler, "merchant and burghe" of New Amsterdam, 1 having no "acquaintances in Holland," ships through an agent to The Hague "244 heavy deer skins and 22 rolls of Spanish tobacco, weighing 474 lbs.," which are "to be sold for the best profit" of Leisler.

On May 12, he committed to the care of an attorney the collection from the directors at Amsterdam of "all such moneys" as were "due him for his military service, according to accounts and proofs thereof."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 47-49. Leisler had come over in 1660 (see April 27, that year), as a soldier in the employ of the West India Co., returning to engage in business.

Aiming at toleration for Catholics, the king suspends the 26th Conformity Act by proclamation. A parliamentary bill to permit this had failed to pass. About this time, Non-Conformists began to be called Dissenters.

Hendrick Willemsen and Reinder Willemsen, inspectors of bread, found within the jurisdiction of New Amsterdam, send a written remonstrance to the city court, because they have received "many complaints" that some of the bakers have been baking bread "not only of mixed stuff, such as wheat and rye," but also, "under guise thereof," have been using "material altogether unfit for human consumption," making it unsafe. They send letters annulling giving them power to take official action in such cases, to which the burgomasters and schepens agree.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 178.

On March 13, the ordinance was "published from the City Hall after the usual ringing of the bell three times." It referred to a former ordinance of the director-general and council, renewed on Oct. 31, 1662, (p. 202) and revised after a new enactment gave the two inspectors authority "to go around among the bakers," at "will, but "at least once a week," to see that the bread baked was "of good material and due weight," and just as the flour came from the mill, "unmixed or with other stuff amongst it." Unsatisfactory bread was to be seized and the guilty baker to be fined; the schout was "authorized duly to proceed against the contraveners" of the law.—Ibid., IV: 214-15.

This ordinance resulted in a petition from the bakers of the city, who averred they could not comply with it without loss, unless the price of bread were raised to the consumer. The burgomasters and schepens, on March 23, agreed upon a new assize of bread; but the increase was still unsatisfactory to the bakers, who named higher prices. The city fathers met them half way, and a revised rate was fixed upon on April 17 (q. u.), to wit: wheat loaves of eight pounds at 16 stuivers; rye loaves of equal weight at 22 stuivers, and white loaves of two pounds at 12 stuivers.—Ibid., IV: 217, 218, 220, 224.

Pierre Pia, a Frenchman from Picardy, conducts a tavern in New Amsterdam, at a house owned by Joannes Vervelen, on the north side of Markethall St., at the east corner of New St. See Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 234. Vervelen had the consent of the West India Company for the building. Pia is now charged with keeping "out of hours and after setting the watch and in conducting himself irregularly, both in making noise and other insolences."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 175; 179-80; 186-87. See 1660.

On Jan. 30, Schout Tonman recommended to the burgomasters and schepens the nomination of new members of the city court. On Feb. 1, they made the nominations in the presence of Cornelis van Ruyven, as representative of the provincial government, and now, on the 23, Stuyvesant and the council elect from the nominees the new members of the bench, who take the oath. Five are installed by Councilor Jan. van der Decker, he having been especially commissioned to act in the case.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 194-97; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 244.

Those in the employ of the West India Co. in New Netherland are enjoined from receiving payments of wages on account, unless they have as much as three months' wages due to them. The order prohibiting advance payments arose from the discovery that some of the employees, "by their troublesome and importunate applications," had "received more than they were entitled to, in direct violation of the Order issued on the subject of payments." They are warned "not to importune or trouble the Receiver or Councilman for money or goods, on pain of instant dismissal" from the service, and the disbursing officers are made subject to the loss of a month's salary if they aid persons contrary to the act, and are to "be debited on their account" with all that they advance "to anyone contrary to this Order."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 435.

Paulus Leendertsz van der Grintt received as warrant for wages he was due as treasurer of New Amsterdam, in place of Allard Anthony. He received the books and papers of the financial administration of the city on March 2.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 169, 169.

A great earthquake is felt and heard throughout New Netherland, New England, Acadia, and Canada. For contemporaneous accounts of the phenomena, see notes by Henry C. Murphy on one of Selyns' poems, in Anthology of New Neth., 175, passim; also Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I: 709.

Complaint is made to the provincial council by Johannes de la Montagne, schout of New Haerlem, against divers persons for riot, committed in planting a May pole decorated with rags before the door of a newly-married couple, and by assembling around the house, "barring," etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 244.

Nicholas Verlett receives a grant from Gov. Stuyvesant for a tract called Hobuk (Hoboken).—N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections, I: 21. New Netherland copies by the English were properly signed by Paulus van den Bergh, ferry-man, informing him that there have been "many complaints" against his service, because he does "not fulfill the conditions under which the Ferry" was leased to him, which is an inconvenience to those who need the service, and who often have to "wait half a day or night" before he carries them across the river. They send him anuncient, giving him a copy of the conditions to which he is amenable, and threaten, "if the complaints continue, to "let the said Ferry publicly to somebody else" at his expense.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

A new assay on bread is promulgated in New Amsterdam.—See summary under Jan. 9, 1663.

Publication is made from in front of the city hall of renewed ordinances "forbidding the keeping of strong drink or entertain parties on the Sabbath;" and further forbidding them "to draw any strong drink for the Indians or natives" of the province.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 225.

The burgomasters and scheepen of New Amsterdam petition the provincial government for the removal of duties on exported liquors. Stuyvesant and the council directed that no one else shall be permitted to erect a similar mill on Manhattan Island. There is no recorded evidence of the execution of this right.— Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246; O'Callaghan's MS. Notes on Windmills, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

An old and sickly negro, Mayken by name, who has served as a slave of the West India Co. since 1628, petitions the provincial authorities for her manumission, which is granted.— Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246.

The burgomasters determine to write a letter to Jacob Jensen Gardien, alias Fleder, who lives at Fort Orange (Albany), ordering him to "line up the bank before his lot next to Daniel Litsco [Litscho], as his neighbours bear suffer great damage, or else, if he fails to do it, it shall be done by the City and the expenses recovered from the lot."— Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172. The reference is to the absentee owner's neglected sheet-piling on the shore of the East River, his house being in the street with that of John Lawrence, afterwards a mayor under English rule, and with Litscho, the tavern-keeper. It was the street along the strand, now Pearl Street, south of Wall St. Fleder's absence and continued neglect led to the confiscation of the lot and its regranting, in 1667, to Balcarres de Haurt.— See Castello Plan, II: 256, Nos. 10 and 11.

Adolf Pietersen and Albert Coninck are appointed by the burgomasters as "buyermoesters" or overseers, "to see that the High [now Stone] Street be properly made higher and passable;" and "the people living on High Street" are "directed, each to raise and improve the street before his house and lot."—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 172. On May 21, the burgomasters again directed these overseers "to do their duty in improving the street."—Ibid., II: 173.

A land ordinance, passed by the provincial government, recites a strange violation of foreign laws regarding land tenure. It shows that on Manhattan Island, Long Island, and in other places, land, that was granted with the understanding that it was to be improved, still lies "wild, waste, unoccupied and unfenced;" moreover many tracts of land are "also abandoned and stripped of their Fences by the Proprietors," win, none the less, reclaim the lands whenever others seek to improve them. A like matter is looked upon by the government as a "serious damage of the Public", an "obstruction of Agriculture," and therefore a "loss of the Honourable Company's long expected Tents and other Revenues." Another ordinance is now directed to stop these abuses. All grants of lands within the province, for which tracts are long due and which are unimproved, are notified "to fence in and improve, within the term of six months, the lands they lay claim to," or suffer forfeiture of the land for the benefit of the company, the same to be again disposed of for the public benefit."— Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 139, 343, 378.

In a criminal case, the burgomasters and scheepen "adjudge that Jasper Abrahamens shall be brought to the place where criminal justice is usually executed, be bound to a stake and severely flogged, and the Hangman shall make a gash in his left cheek or arm. That the blood flow, further he shall be banished for the term of five and twenty years from this City's jurisdiction and be condemned in the courts and misis of justice, which the prisoner shall have to pay before being released from confinement." A similar sentence is pronounced against Hendrick Jansen, "which two foregoing judgements are put into execution, according to ancient custom"—his mouth being cut because they sometimes fail to call out the hours for three or four hours at a stretch and are not keeping order in the city.— Min. of Orph. Court, II: 171.

In April, 17, "Josias Diffon [George Dobson], an Englishman, is summoned to the court for what is inferred he has been accused of being alleged against him "for his keeping a disorderly house and entertaining sailors, whereby the masters or skippers receive no service from them." He pleads not guilty and is released with a warning.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 205, 326.

Mar. 8

Abraham Jansen, a carpenter, is requested by the burgomasters "to make a model or a plan for a sluice to be put in at Jochem the shoemakers."—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 169-70. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 245.

Abraham Jansen, for the many communications sent by the two burgomasters of New Amsterdam, on Feb. 16, Stuyvesant and the council now elect Allard Anthony and Johannes van Brugh as members of the bench of the court of orphan-masters. Cornelis Steenwyck holds over as the third member of this court.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 169, 170. Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 245.

Abraham Jansen receives permission from the provincial council to erect a water-mill near the Cape in New Amsterdam (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 965), with the pledge that no one else shall be permitted to erect a similar mill on Manhattan Island. There is no recorded evidence of the execution of this right.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246; O'Callaghan's MS. Notes on Windmills, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

An old and sickly negro, Mayken by name, who has served as a slave of the West India Co. since 1628, petitions the provincial authorities for her manumission, which is granted.— Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 246.
To all English People whome this present writing shall come:

Robert King being a Justiciary of Great Britain, did by his Majesty's authority, in the City of London, at the Castle of the Tower, by virtue of the Act of Parliament, make an order that all persons, being English, who shall be found within the limits of the City of London, shall be bound by the laws of England.

Therefore, I, James, son of Thomas King, do hereby convey to Robert King, all my right of property in the land and buildings situate within the City of London, on the day of May, 1680, being the day of my birthday.

This conveyance is witnessed by Edward Chubb and William Smith.

C. CONVEYANCE, MAY 26, 1680. SEE P. 236.
The Indian massacre known as the Second Esopus War was begun on this date. The Indians made "an unexpected, sudden attack" on the settlers near Esopus (now Kingston, Ulster County, N.Y.), attended by murder and arson. It was timed to take place when few men were in the village of Willywck, while they were at work in the fields. In this village twelve elders and a burned-out house, eighteen persons, men, women, and children, were murdered, and ten others were carried off into captivity. The new village, afterwards called Hurley, was "burned to the ground and its inhabitants were "mostly taken prisoners or killed."

Jansen Felpus, as mortgagee, having obtained a judgment against Jacob Wolfbertsen van Couwenhoven, asks the burgomasters for permission to levy on and sell "the brewing utensils" of Couwenhoven, but is told to submit his request to the full bench of the city court. This he did on the 12th, demanding by a sworn declaration that the defendants "being material men, hypothecated to his predecessor and subsequently to him," might "be sold by execution to obtain his pay therefrom." Couwenhoven answered that he had no objection to the account, judgment, and mortgage, but that some silverware was in Felpus's hands "as a pledge," and that his dwelling-house and the brewery and its utensils had already been "seized for sale on the 25th July next" for the satisfaction of creditors. Felpus expressed content, "on condition of getting the first money" from the sale; but the court adjudged that he should wait, "saving his action in case of preference or concurrence." On July 5, Felpus requested the court for an "act of authority to the Marshal to sell the dwelling house, brewery, brew vat and brewhouse of van Couwenhoven, mortgaged to Peter Rudolphus, deceased," and the court ordered the marshal "to put these in execution." On July 12, Couwenhoven told the court that the marshal had "been with him in Frevryck Felpus's name to seize his brew kettle and brewing apparatus pledged to Frevryck Felpus to sell them by execution." He was ordered to make his peace with Felpus.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 175-76.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1663 Chingle' (Oude Singel, at Leyden). The record made in the Wal- lown Church book calls him "Henri Couturier, peintre de Leyde." 12 Also in the year 1648, the St. Lucas Guild of Leyden was founded, and one of the first names enrolled was that of Couturier. On Nov. 17, 1648, as "Sr. Hendrick Couturer de Junge," and as a camelot or ground-gauger, the manufacturer (graaf geweest), he is recorded as making, before a notary, a mutual testament with his wife, "Elisabeth Coppin," their home being "on the Coeopersgracht," in Leyden. On Sept. 6, 1649, he hired a house and lot in Leyden, from the organist Eustatus Parisius, but before the end of that year, his death, as is registered against his name in the roll of the St. Lucas Guild.—Ferilagen en Mededelingen. Afdeling Letterkunde. 5th Reeks, Deel IV (1919-20), 563-70. See also Addenda.

On account of the Indian war at the Esopus, "most of the soldiers in garrison" at New Amsterdam having been sent to Wil- wych [now Kingston], it becomes necessary for the burgomasters to provide a proper watch over the city, and they therefore direct the captains and principal officers of the trainbands or militia to see to it "that henceforth every evening a non-commissioned officer with a sufficient number of men with hand and side arms" shall "go on guard for the night at the Land gate," and that sentries shall be posted and the rounds made until further orders are issued. —Min. of Orph. Court, II: 178. On June 26, Lodewyck Pots, "the Marshall, issued to each Burgher Company fifty pounds of powder, altogether one hundred and fifty," for the three companies. —Ibid., III: 268-69. The trainbands were thus super- ceded by the train-band.

On June 10, 1661, in a letter to the magistrates of Fort Orange, Stuyvesant mentions the Indian depredations at Esopus, and says he "arrived in the village of Willywych [now Kingston] at about 6 o'clock" (on the previous day), that he intended going to Fort Orange to bring about the ransom of "the forty-five captured women and children," held by the Esopus savages through help from either the Mohawks or the Senecas. But he could not find a ship and, moreover, was forced to change his plans, he says, because the yachts going to Manhattan, by "bringing the pitiful tidings...would throw everything into disarray there." He felt obliged on that account to hasten his return to Manhattan and "make there arrangements" for the relief of Esopus. He also gave orders that thenceforth no yacht should sail up or down the Hudson River "by itself, unless well manned, to prevent possible surprises."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 249-50. On June 19, another order required that all yachts coming from the north "must touch at Esopus, to get news from there, under a penalty of 50 guilders" for dereliction.—Ibid., XIII: 254.

The people on Staten Island are informed by the provincial council concerning the recent depredations by the Indians at Esopus, but to the good will of the Indians, and yet are urged on their guard and to "keep good watch" also, two soldiers are sent to them.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 248. Stuyvesant and the council determine to use the Mohawks in ransoming the Esopus Indians captives in their hands, and to pursue "the deceitful and treacherous nation" (Esopus Indians), until revenged.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 252.

The provincial authorities name commissioners to manage the enclosing with palisades of the settlement of Genoempa (now Jersey City).—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 252.

The court of burgomasters and schepen of New Amsterdam considers a "petition of the beer tapsters," who ask permission to "sell the Varen [4 mengel or about 5 quarts] of beer for sixteen stivers" (52 cents). The court allows them to sell at "fourteen stivers and no more."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 260. On the 26th, the court orders the schepen to "take strict attention to this and to im- pose a fine fixed thereon upon the tapsters, who take more than fourteen stivers for the varen of beer."—Ibid., IV: 268-69. But on Oct. 9, the tavern-keepers petitioned the provincial council for leave to charge 16 st. and this was granted.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 253.

The inhabitants of New Netherlands are warned by proclamation to "keep the peace," and taking use of the hand and travel only in parties of 4 or 5 persons, and provided with proper arms. The precaution was necessary on account of the Indian massacres at the Esopus, and the consequent "condition of the country."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 444.

Lodewijck Pots, who has been captain of the rattle-watch or night police, is now in command of three burgomaster companies of militia, with the title of "Marshall" or provost marshal. On July 25, four members of the rattle-watch were summoned before the burgomasters and informed that the "Trainbands," or three burgler companies, had "taken the place of the Rattle-watch," therefore these men entered the service in the militia.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 179-80. Stuyvesant, in a handbill issued at Hempstead, promises "free plunder and all the savages, whom they could capture," in order "to induce some of the English to take part in the expedition to the Esopus."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 259.

Stuyvesant and the council, at Fort Amsterdam, issue a pro-clamation calling for volunteers for an offensive and defensive war against the... Esopus savages," enactment to be "for a year or a year and a half or longer, until the same shall be de-stroyed." The usual soldier pay is offered, also "free plundering," possession of captured Indians, "exemption from tithes for 6 years," and compensation for injuries and loss of eyes or limbs.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 259-60.

Marten Cregier informs the city court that he has been fa- voured by Stuyvesant and the council "with the Captain-Lieutenancy in the service of the Honle West India Company," and therefore now comes to take his leave of the Bench of Burgomasters and Schepens of the City and at the same time to deliver to Burgomaster van Cortlandt the City Seal and the Key of the Chest of Deposits." On July 3, the city court resolved "to invite, by the Court messenger in the name of Schout, Burgomasters and Schepens, for next Thursday [July 5], at nine o'clock in the forenoon, thirteen of the rattle-watch and having been or who had been former burgomasters or schepens, to gather at the "City Hall, in the manner of a Common Council (Vroetschap)... to lay before them the letter" of Stuyvesant and the council, "and to deliberate together and consider, whether 25 or 30 men could not be encouraged to serve in time of need as a reinforcement to this or other place requiring assistance, on receipt of five guilders per day for the expedition, and in addition the privilege and benefit of ex-emption from watch, chimney money and tithes for the term of six years; and to hear their advice thereupon." The city bench, moreover, in view of the request as a burgomaster, and Pieter Wolphertsen van Coivenhoven's resignation (on July 3) from the office of schepen, to join Cregier's company as lieutenant, deemed it expedient that these vacancies should be filled. The court made double nominations in the usual manner, on July 5, and the two places were filled on the 5th by Stuyvesant and the council.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 268, 275-77. The letter of Stuyvesant and the council referred to above (dated July 2—see text ibid., IV: 274-76) was inspired by the Indian troubles at Esopus and a fear of further Indian depredations in other villages, or even on Manhattan Island. The city fathers and former burgomasters and schepens met in this new savages about the 3rd week of July.

Schout Tonnenan asks the city court to condemn Lysbet Auckers, who has "presumed to sell and tap with unstanpted whole and half mutjes [a mutje = ¼ of a bottle] and with a beer can, found to be under size, thereby abusing and affronting Jan Jellisen and bystanders, saying she will not let them stamp any more than she pleases and also to be more obliged to use, than what she daily makes use of." For "her stiffneckedness, unmarked measures and under sized can," the schout demands she be fined 25 guilders and costs, "on condition of allowing the unstamped cans, mutjes and half mutjes in her house to be marked, on a line thereunto affixed" (sic). She replies that "it can belongs to Paulus Heimans and that he placed it in her house, and that she locked up the unstamped mutjes, with which she has not tapped." The court orders her "to prove that the seized can belongs to Paulus Heimans and that she has no other than stamped measures in her house or to make them unseizable."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 265-66. On Oct. 23, she was again hailed before the court, as "Lysbet Ackermans," charged with having "tapped brandy for two soldier and beer for two Indians on Sunday." She admitted having drawn beer for the Indians, but said "it was before the broth," and that she "always took odds and ends to smoke and never tapped brandy" for the soldiers at this time." She was fined ten guilders.—Ibid., IV: 320.

Proposals are made by Stuyvesant and the council at Fort Amsterdam to saviours of the Hackensack, Nyack, Staten Island, and even against the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 261-62.

Warning is given "that about 20 to 25 Esopus savages have..."

left their fort 3 or 4 days ago," intending "to come down here [about Manhattan] and get prisoners or kill some Dutchmen."

Burgomaster Martin Cregier is commissioned by Stuyvesant and the council as "Captain-Lieutenant over all our military, to command the same agreeably to the instructions already given or hereafter to be given, to drill, to march them up and down and have them commanded, drilled and marched up and down by other subaltern officers, as the situation and circumstances of affairs shall require it for the best of the Company and the greater safety of the country," and to have full direction of the military affairs when Stuyvesant, the "Captain-General," is absent. Cregier takes the oath and receives his "provisional instructions." At the same time the oath is taken by Lieutenant Nicholas Stillwell, and by Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, "Captain-Lieutenant of a detachment of natives [Indians] and volunteers." These officers, and the "oldest Sergeant Christian Niessen," constitute a "Council of War," which has the decision in all matters of war as well in sending out parties as concerning the expedition [against the Esopus Indians in general], by a plurality vote, and, in case of a tie, Cregier has an extra vote to settle the matter. The council of war is "directed to use all possible precautions in sending out parties for the protection of the coming harvest and the cattle, to send out a frequent party in the late evening, and all provisions as many parties as seem to be desirable, without jeopardy to the protection of Fort Amsterdam, and to make a detailed report of occurrences and requirements to the director-general and council.

Cregier arrived at the Esopus Kill on July 4, with reinforcements. Stillwell and Van Couwenhoven arrived, with the troops they had been able to assemble, on the evening of the 9th. Cregier remained in the Esopus country until Nov. 17, when he returned to Manhattan, leaving about 60 soldiers under the command of Ensign Niessen; but on the afternoon of Dec. 19 he left Manhattan Island again and arrived at Wapping the following day. He returned to Manhattan on the last day of the year, and reached New Amsterdam about noon of Jan. 3, 1664. The return voyage was attended by food and ice-drifts.

On account of the Indian uprising, the provincial government, on June 26, appointed July 4, and the first Wednesday of each succeeding month as days of fasting and prayer throughout New Netherland. In New Amsterdam the proclamation thereof was made in front of the city hall on June 30.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 248; Rec. N. Am., IV: 259.

A common council (Vroetschap) is convened at the city hall of New Amsterdam, consisting of the city bench and thirteen invited former burgomasters or schepenen, at which it is agreed "to perform every duty, to enrol for the service of this city some people, as many as twenty @ five and twenty men; during these troubles [Indian matter of course] more force may be sent as reinforcement to this or any place reduced to the stress of the Indians; then whereas a considerable sum of money is requisite thereunto, and the City Treasury cannot supply so much to defray the same, it is therefore expedient to take up some money on interest from the Commonality on a/6 of the City, which it will be impossible not only to get, but also to discharge, unless the Rt. Hon:ble Director General and Councillors . . . shall please to benefit this City for ever with the income of the half weigh scales [i.e., half the receipts of the weigh-house, the city having formerly been granted one half, and the provincial government having retained the other half] and the Ferry to this side of the river, with the ferry from Brooklyn. A committee of two is appointed, one burgomaster and one schepen, to communicate this resolution to Stuyvesant and the council the next day.—Rec. N. Am., IV: 276, 277. See June 26 and July 10, 1665.

From Beverwyck (now Albany), on July 2, Martin Cregier writes to Stuyvesant and the council, informing them that his contingent numbers "about 130 men bearing arms, all counted except the negroes," and that he "cannot bring much more than 100 men bearing arms into the field." He asks that "the ordered goods" be sent at "the first opportunity," for "we cannot," he says, "get anything but arms and ammunition which must all be brought from Manhattan."

Not only supplies were furnished from Manhattan Island, but the grain raised in the Esopus region had to be sent down to be ground, "on account of little water" at that place.—N-Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 275.

A call for volunteers for the defense of New Amsterdam is issued by the provost marshal, Col. Brit. MSS., Dutch, 250.

On July 2, a circular letter was sent by the provincial council, directed to the several towns of the province, urging upon them watchfulness and defense at the present conjuncture of affairs, due to the Indian troubles, and requiring them to send delegates to a provincial meeting to be held at New Amsterdam on the 6th. A similar letter was sent to the burgomasters and schepenen of New Amsterdam. The delegates were convoked on the day named; but, on the 10th, the delegates from Amersfoort (Flatlands), Gravesend, Midwout (Flatbush), New Utrecht, and Breukelen wrote to Stuyvesant and the council that they were ready to defend their neighbours on Long Island from attack, but refused to cross the river to New Amsterdam.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 249; Rec. N. Am., IV: 275-76.

Various members of the rattle-watch or night police are informed by the burgomasters "that the trichbands have taken the place of the Rattlewatch," and they are asked if they will "be willing to go on an expedition in the service of the City," to ease trouble arises from Indians on Manhattan "or in the surrounding villages." The men agree to enlist, on condition of being "rewarded if wounded;" are furnished with hand and side arms, and promised "to turn out by day or night upon the command of the burgomasters or of the Council."—Cal. Hist. MSS., Court, II: 179-80. See June 14, 1665; June 26, 1665; July 5, 1665.

Stuyvesant and the council write to Councillor Johan de Deckter at Beverwyck: "We have renewed the peace with the savages around here [Manhattan]; if the heart is as good as the mouth, then we hope for a good result."—N-Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 279; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 322.

Skippers of sloops sailing on the Hudson River are ordered by a provincial edict of this date "to apprehend, if possible, all Indians" who come aboard their vessels "between the Dacs Kamer and Catskill," and then to deliver them as prisoners at New Amsterdam or at any other place, according to that they may be used as guides as occasion requires. Those who deliver up prisoners "any of the Esopus Indians or their adherents," who are at war with the Dutch, are promised 100 guilders in wampum for each Indian captive. The "Dans Kamer," a dancing ground of the Indians, was on a plateau adjoining the rocky point at the head of Newburgh Bay, north of the present city of Newburgh.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 444-45; Ruttenber, Indian Geg. Names (1906), 138-39.

As liquor is being sold to Indians, contrary to statute, and as the existing Esopus Indian war makes the sale in the province the more dangerous, since it involves the peril of other Indian disturbances, another law is now proposed, directing all magistrates of inferior courts in the towns to enforce strictly the laws hitherto passed on the subject, and to exact in their respective jurisdictions such orders as they judge to be "best and most proper for the suppression of that scandalous traffic."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth. No. 84-97. For summary of such laws, see p. 176-182.

"Seventeen savages" come "into the Fort" (Amsterdam), and state that they live "on the East end of Long Island," and offer their services "to go also into the fight against the Esopus savages." The offer is accepted by the provincial government, and they are asked when they will come; they answer, that they will first "wait for news how matters stand at the Esopus."—N-Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 280.

The sachem of the Wickquauckeck (Indians of Westchester County) comes "of his own accord with his brother" to the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, and says "he was warned by a Wapping sachew that the Esopus savages would come down with 40 or 50 men in about 5 or 6 days, to kill them and the Dutch of New Haerlem, Hasimus, Hoboken, Ganoenquea and the new village" (Noortwijk). He says also that "therefore he has come to take refuge with his people near New Haerlem, he gives notice of it so as to prevent it, the proposal of which he may not get frightened." He says further, that "he has warned the inhabitants of New-Haerlem and requests that we give notice to the people on the other side of it and on the General's bowery," that is Stuyvesant's farm.—N-Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 282.

Agostus Loyck, ruler of the Greek and Latin school in New Amsterdam, petitions Stuyvesant and the council for a salary (see May, 1662). His request is referred to the directors at Amsterdam, to whom, on Aug. 9, Stuyvesant recommended that
The provincial council resolves that Stuyvesant should go to Sept. 6. Boston for the purpose of coming to some agreement, if possible, with the commissioners of the United Colonies, respecting the distribution of the revenues of the colony. If he is not successful, he is to return to his place of residence.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251.

The burgomasters order that “all grain and lime” be measured by the official measurer.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 182.

The burgomasters resolve, “that the Schoot, Burgomasters and Scheepens in office shall receive yearly the sum of 25 fl. instead of being exempted from the excise on wine, beer and meat.”—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 182.

The ports of New Amsterdam are ordered by the provincial authorities not to carry any beer or wine from any house without a permit from the farmer of the excise.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 251.

From nominations made by the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on the 7th, Govrett Lookermans is appointed by the provincial council an orphan-matter in place of Johannes van Brugh, who has gone to Holland.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 253; Min. of Orph. Court, III: 180-81.

First news of Capt. Cregier’s victory over the Esopus Indians is received by the council at Fort Amsterdam from a Hacksack Indian, and “a new coat” is promised to him as a reward for his tindings.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 294.

Stuyvesant and his council observe that the Sunday laws are being treated as if they applied only to “keeping of half the Sabbath,” so now an ordinance is passed commanding “that not only a part but the whole of the Sabbath day” shall be kept. From sunrise to sunset “no ordinary labor” is to be performed, “much less drinking-clubs allowed to sit,” and it prohibits “all extraordinary exercises, such as Gaming, Riding in carriages, wandering, Fishing, Bowling, Running and roving in search of Nuts and Strawberries, Trading with Indians, or any such like, and, among the rest, the too unrestrained and excessive Playing, Shouting and Screaming of children in the Streets and Highways, on the fune of the upper garment, or six guilders (according to the rate of the counting house) for the first offense; double the sum for the second time, and for the third time to be exemplary corrected on the body.” This law was transmitted by the provincial authorities to the burgomasters of New Amsterdam on Sept. 15.

In March, 1671, Capt. Cregier had not yet made publication of the act as directed, and Stuyvesant notified them to do so, asking “the reason such was not done.” He was told “that the Board found themselves agrivated in some particulars.” When the matter came up in the city court on March 18, the act was again read and considered, and Capt. Cregier was ordered “to have the act there to be highly necessary,” but declared it would “not dare to publish such a Placard as divers sections thereof were too severe and too much opposed to Dutch liberties.” In May, several persons had been arrested for Sabbath violations and a test case was in hand, so the city bench requested a conference with the provincial council to settle “some points” in the act which were “in direct opposition to the custom of Holland.”—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 49-50; Rec. N. Am., IV: 701-2; V: 38-39, 60; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 253.

While Stuyvesant is “on the eve of leaving for Boston,” the council receives a letter from Capt. Cregier “regarding the success and the advantage” which he has gained with his troops over the Esopus Indians. The council promises to send reinforcements and supplies to Cregier.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 295.

Teunis Cray is appointed measurer of apples, onions, and turnips, as usual along the strand of New Amsterdam.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 182. Fernow’s translation of aqw, i.e., uijten, was queried by him as “carrots,” which is incorrect.

The chief of the Marapings appears in the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam in regard to furnishing some of his savages the Dutch against the Esopus Indians.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 295-96.

For reference to wampum in a letter from the directors at Amsterdam to Stuyvesant, see Jan. 20, 1664.

The provincial council voted to raise 4,000 guilders, Holland currency, for public purposes, on the security of four brass cannons in Fort Amsterdam. Two days later, a contract was made with Cornelis Steenwyck to advance 12,000 guilders in wampum on the above bill of exchange and security.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254.

Cornelis van Ruyven, Oldolf Stevenson van Cortlandt, and John Laurence are commissioned by the provincial council to proceed to Hartford, there to endeavour to procure a settlement of the boundary between New Netherlands and Connecticut. They left New Amsterdam at sunrise on the 15th and arrived at Hartford on the afternoon of the 18th.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254, 314. Their journal is printed in N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 385 ff.

Cornelis Steenwyck reports "in the morning" to the council at Fort Amsterdam that, on the previous night, "at about 9 o’clock," Secretary Cornelis van Ruyven was at his door to tell him "what a Northern savage had related at Jan de Schilder’s house, namely, that the balance of the Esopus savages had fled with their prisoners to the Wappinghs, where also the Mahicans, Kiehtawaghs, Wiyak to the Perrunis, and the whole frontier were in motion. They had threatened to attack the Dutch, calling all as yet Dutch plantation over the River at Hobobooks, Hasi tus, the corn-land and then the Manhattas Island, to burn, to kill everybody or take prisoners, whom they could get and that it should be done in a few days."

At noon, the council got the confirmation, was greatly concerned, and deferred deliberation until the afternoon, when some of the city fathers were to be present on invitation to deliberate with the council, for the matter was deemed to be of "very great importance." When the joint meeting assembled in the afternoon, "the advice received from the Esopus were read " to a majority of the burgomasters and schepens present, and then a frank statement was made of the present situation of the country and its perilous state, of the impossibility to redress it, unless either by subsidies or by negotiation of drafts on the Fatherland money could be raised for the maintenance of the too small military force, but neither counsel nor help could be thought of or proposed by them; however it was resolved for the present to send some troops to protect New-Herksem, and two yachts, each manned by 10 or 12 men up the Northriver [Hudson] to prevent the designs of the savages and divert them as much as possible; meanwhile also to warn the villages in the country around . . . that they must be on their guard, and "by the 24th of Oct. to the City of New-Herksem, to remain there in the river and to prevent as far as possible the savages from crossing over to Long-Island." The two yachts designed for the Hudson River were put in motion, and Lieut. Van Couwenhoven was given particular instructions how to operate with his command.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 299-301. See Oct. 23, 1663.

The city court of burgomasters and schepens addresses a petition to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they recall that the latter, some while ago (see Oct. 15, 1663), brought to attention their "the very dangerous position and situation of the country, as well in regard to send some with the barbarous Esopus nation and their allies, as the menacing anticipations and encroachments of neighbours together with the already mutinous revolts of some English subjects, and that, for the prevention and farther resistance, not only advice, but deeds and means" were "highly requisite and necessary." They say that they are "well inclined and bound," as a body corporate, as well as individually, to give the "aid of their poor council and small abilities for the benefit of the common wealth and more especially of this City," but that they represent "only one member and the danger" is a concern of "the Province" to go against them. They feel it "not only very necessary and advantageous that some Delegates be convoked and called as well from this City as from the other surrounding places and villages, also especially from the town of Beverwyck and Colony of Renselaerswyck to deliberate and consult together under your Honors’ wiser direction and higher authority for the good of the commonwealth," they request Stuyvesant and the council to order the convoking of such an assembly "as soon as possible," so that whatever is "found most advantageous for the country" may "then be determined for the general peace, quiet and union."

The apostil of the provincial authorities thereon, dated the 26th, declares: "Though the General and Council of N. Netherland find the request consistent with justice and necessity, yet the convocation of the Magistrates mentioned herein as necessary, yet bearing in mind the inconvenience of the approaching winter and that the delegates sought as well from the Colony of Reinselaars Wyck as from the Town of Beverwyck cannot possibly come down and return before the winter, the Council and General Assembly; it is more convenient to call for the present occasion the Magistrates of the adjoining towns and hamlets, and what by them, with the knowledge of the Director General and Council, may be proposed and advised for the public good may be in scripso, to be communicated, should time and circumstances permit, to the Courts of the Colony of Reinselaars Wyck and of the Town of Bever Wyck and Wild Wyck and to hear their advice thereon."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 318-20; Van Rensselaer Bowen Manuscripts, 743-85.

On Oct. 29, the presiding burgomaster presented to the city council the answer of the provincial government to the aforesaid petition, and stated that he had "called together the Court to conclude, in pursuance to the answer, on the points and articles necessary to be proposed for the good of this Province at the General Assembly to be convoked . . . also to communicate by plurality of votes two persons from the Board to attend the Assembly." The city court then agreed upon the following articles, viz.:—(1) "To demand assistance against the savages;" (2) "To take up the matter of ‘boundaries between us and the English;’" (3) "To send Delegates to Fatherland," to make their demands to the Directors at Amsterdam for assistance and, failing with them, "to address themselves to the Lords the High and Mighty States General." Burgomaster Paulus Lemertens gave Drift and Schepen Jacob Kip were qualified as the two delegates of the city to the general assembly, and were instructed "to propose their articles and points."—Ibid., IV: 325. The provincial council agreed, on Oct. 27, to a general assembly and sent out circular letters on the 29th, convoking the same on Nov. 1.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254.

On the day named (Nov. 1), the delegates met at New Amsterdam. They sent an address to Stuyvesant and the council, in which they recommended the appointment of agents, in Holland, to procure a settlement of the boundary controversy with Connecticut and free trade with the neighbouring English colonies. The general assembly remained in session until the 5th. See Oct. 22 and Dec. 11.

The burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam, and the delegates from the adjacent towns, address a remonstrance to the directors of the West India Company, and the most important conclusions may be summarized as follows: In behalf of the inhabitants of the province, they refer to "the depredated value of returns, not only causing here an excessive rise and dearness of wares imported into this country from Patria, but also the departure hence of several families; and, consequently, a depreciation in houses and real estate, the prosperity and hopes of agriculture alone remaining.

Certain means for the preservation of the people are necessary, as vouchsafed by the " Freedoms and Exemptions" published by the directors; namely, "reasonable protection, peaceable use and enjoyment of the bonâ fide property of the lands;" protection "against all intestine and foreign wars, invasion and violence," and the fulfillment of the promise of the directors "to work out and secure commission and patent, in due form," whereby their "real and legitimate jurisdiction over this Province and territories could be shown, demonstrated and justified," and to obtain "from his Royal Majesty of England, an absolute and definite settlement of the Boundary with his subjects, the English Nation, our neighbors here, and the ratification and approbation thereof."

They aver: "This province ought to be reinforced by a requisite number of good soldiers," to which they have been forcibly and necessarily and advantageous that some Delegates be convoked and called as well from this City as from the other surrounding places and villages, also especially from the town of Beverwyck and Colony of Renselaerswyck to deliberate and consult to the side, stand here between barbarous nations, and are bounded on the other by a powerful neighbor who keeps quarrelling with this State about the limits [boundaries]. Thus the good people are thereby brought and reduced to a condition like unto that of a flock without a shepherd, a prey to whomsoever will seize his advantage to attack it."

Regarding the aggressions of their English neighbours, they say that nation has "found out a way neglected by your Honors, to provide and arm itself with a coat of mail in the shape of an ulterior power and commission which it lately obtained from his Majesty of England [see April 21, 1663; March 24, 1663]; . . . for experience in State affairs teaches and abundantly exemplifies, that the strongest are commonly in the right and that the feeble, ordinarily, must succumb."

The eventual outcome was already apparent: "The total loss of this Province is infallibly to be expected and anticipated."

They report: "It being objected and pleaded by the abovementioned English, as a pretext for their designs, that the real right and property of this Province and its territories were not duly proved and justified on your Honors' part by proper commission and patent from their High Mightinesses."

The document closes with a plea for relief and help as indicated, and is signed by delegates of the city of "Amsterdam," and the villages of Amersfoort, Berchem, Batavia, Haarlem, Utrecht, Leiden, and Bergen.—N. T. Col. Docs., II: 477-79 (where full text is given). See also summary under Oct. 22; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 254.

The general assembly (Gemeene Landsz Vergadering) chooses and commissions Jan Baptista van Rensselaer, patroon of the colony of Rensselaerswyck, and Johannes Pietersen van Brugh, former captain of the village, to the office of the agents to carry to Holland the remonstrance of Nov. 3 (q.v.), with other papers, and provides funds for their expenses. The documents in this case are in Van Rensselaer Bown Manuscript, 785-89. See also Oct. 22 and Dec. 11.

Amsterdam to New York. He had been in New Netherland since 1629, and was one of the earliest official surveyors of the province, as well as among its earliest land patentees, serving the government in many high places of trust for 34 years. While in process of removing with his family to Maryland, he arrived on Nov. 1, 1663, at Apoqueningh, in the present state of Delaware, "and died there of a violent fever on the 4th."—N. T. Col. Docs., 1: 91 (note); XII: 446.

Marie Taine (or de Tene), widow of Philippe Casier, and David Uzille, sell to Joost van Obhuis their houses, barn, land, and garden, situated in New Haerlem, contained in three parcels, one lying north of the village, and the other two on Van Keulen's Hook, with the meadows thereto belonging.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 47 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

The chief of the Wickquaeskeck (Indians of Westchester County) comes to Fort Amsterdam, to request "for himself and his tribe, this year and for the future," to fish unmolested near the village of New-Haerlem." This is granted "on condition that they shall not come armed into the neighbourhood of the Dutch." To serve as means of identifying them, passes are issued, containing "the seal of the Company impressed in wax on little cards," to be shown to the Dutch whom they meet. Twelve such passes are issued, four each for the Wickquaeskeck (dwelling between the Hudson and Byram's Rivers), the Kitchiwan (Cromon River), and the Reckgawank (Haverstraw)—N. T. Col. Docs., XII: 301.

New Haerlem magistrates are appointed by the provincial council.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 255.

Even to Lienau, Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven, Sergeant Pieter Ebel, and Harmen Douwen, "all three well versed in the savage tongue," to find out if the Wappingers and Esopus Indians are well disposed to make peace, as has been reported.—N. T. Col. Docs., XII: 304-5.

All the sheep and sheep owners with respect to leased boweries or farms. The owners allow the lessees the use of horses, oxen, ploughs, wagons, and other implements, but the lessees use them "also in the service of others and on other lands, whereby not only the Horses, Cattle and implements" are abused and worn out, "but even the sheep and sheep herds and Lands" are neglected, "to the serious damage of the Lessors and Agriculture in general." To stop this cause for just complaints, the provincial government prohibits by law the use thereof on other than the specified land leased, unless such permission has been "expressly stipulated by written contract;" for violation, the act provides a forfeiture of four skeels of wheat for each day, in addition to what was earned by the lessee "by plowing, drawing of timber, &c.," to be divided equally between the owner and the fiscal.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 450-51.

The supreme court of New Netherland gives judgment in favour of Timothy Gabry, vendue master, in his suit against the city clerk and city marshal of New Amsterdam, enjoining them to prevent selling a parcel of land from public auction. It is held that all sales of property surrendered for the benefit of creditors shall be conducted by the provincial secretary or his deputy.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 255.

At a session of the schepens of New Haerlem, Joannes Ver- veer, is chosen by them to seek to obtain a warrant (preceptor) for the town.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 48 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

Duck Klaven and J. Vermelje request the schepens of New Haerlem for lots lying outside of the town's gate.—Harlem Records (original MSS.), I: 48 (N. Y. Pub. Library).

On the afternoon of this day, Capt. Martin Creepier sails in the company's yacht on a voyage to the Neweswing (Navesink) Indians, and with him go Govert Loockermans, Janes Cortelyou, and Pieter Ebel, with ten soldiers, two sailors, and the sacamen and another Indian of Staten Island. They warn certain Englishmen that meet there against promising to buy land in the islands without the consent of the Dutch provincial government of New Netherland. On Dec. 11, an agreement was made with chiefs of the Neweswing Indians for the purchase by the Dutch of all their unsold lands, and to prevent sale of the said lands to anybody else.—N. T. Col. Docs., XII: 314-17. On Feb. 16, 1664, the council determined to send an expedition of 20 to 24 men in a yacht to take possession of the country which was in danger of settlement by some Englishmen.—Ibid., XIII: 358.

Domingo Angola, a free negro, petitions the provincial council for the manumission of Chelatina, a baptized orphan daughter of Manuel Trumpeter and Anthonya, his wife, both of whom have died. The council grants the request, on condition that the West India Co. is to be furnished with another negro slave in her place, or that 500 guilders be paid for her release. On Sept. 16, 1664, record was made of the payment of the sum for her freedom by Govert Loockermans. The petitioner, Domingo, and his wife, Maykie, although free at this time, only received their certificates of manumission as the company's slaves on April 17, 1664.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 256, 264.

Albert Leendertse collects a ground-claim for a lot at No. 13 and part of No. 17 Wall St., the westward part of the Wilkes building being now on this site.—See Map of Dutch Grants, C. Pl. 87, Vol. II, and III: 357.

The chief of the Hackensack Indians comes to the council chamber in Fort Amsterdam, to inform Stuyvesant that the Neweswing and their allies, are "pled that the Dutch were willing to make at their request a peace with them."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 314.

The provincial government issues a certificate in regard to conferring of half liberty upon certain of the negro slaves of the West India Co. on Manhattan Island.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 356.

Joost Goderus is dismissed from his office as head postmaster of the weigh-house at New Amsterdam, because he has stolen firewood, "a very prevalent practice among the poor of New Amsterdam."—Goderus had been superseded by Barent Jacobsen Cool (or Kool) on Sept. 21.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 182-83; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 255, 257.

Cornelis Steenwyck appears before the burgomasters and schepens of New Amsterdam and is informed that, "pursuant to their unanimous resolution," he is "requested by the General Provincial Assembly [held Nov. 11] to proceed to Fatherland as Delegate from this Province, to lay the deplorable and sorrowful condition of this Province before the Directors with petition for redress pursuant to the writings to be given them therewith;" as the ship "Gilded Star" is in port ready to sail, he is "requested to get himself ready, to repair thither in her in the aforesaid quality;" but Steenwyck, "in respect of the present" does "not permit it," yet offers to sail in another ship, in March or April of 1664, and "to do then all" that lies "in his power for the good of this Province."—Rec. N. Am., IV: 342. See Oct. 22 and Nov. 3.
A guard-house at the land gate was mentioned in a deed from Hendrick Hendricksen to Martin Hoffma, dated Nov. 17, 1664.—Liber Deeds, B: 55 (New York). The words referring to the guard-house are as follows: "A lot east of the High Street, having to the north the line of the street; and to the south the land of the court of entrance, three leagues from the bank of the river, on the west-side as far as the territory reaches to the English Colony, with all streams, kilts, creeks, ports, bays, and outlines belonging thereto."—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 449.

Before Stuyvesant and the council at Fort Amsterdam appear chiefs of the Hackenschack and Staten Island Indians, bringing the brother of the chief of the Wappingers, requesting "two months more of armistice" for the Esopus Indians.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 320-21. The next day they returned and renewed their request, which was granted because of the difficulties in which the government found itself owing to English aggressions in Westchester, on Long Island, and in the country of the Newings.—Ibid., XIII: 321-22.

An armistice was made with the Esopus savages for a period of two months.—N. T. Col. Docs., XIII: 322. On this day, also, Stuyvesant, in the right of the governor or the court to their ends, on the terms of the armistice and instructing him how to inform and regulate the people there under these conditions.—Ibid., XIII: 323.

Maria de Truyts (Truitt), wife of Jan Peck (Peetz), is prosecuted by the provincial council for selling brandy to Indians. At the same time, the council, due to this and other cases of infraction, promulgates an ordinance which demands the arrest of "the Indians who are found drunk on Sundays ... and not to liberate them before they shall have paid one pound Flemish. But the Sachems shall be previously informed hereby," namely, about the order.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1651 Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 451.

On Jan. 3, 1664, the fiscal lodged a complaint about Maria in the provincial council for selling liquor to Indians, no doubt in continuance of the original case brought up a few days before, and the council commend to him to pay the costs of action, and to be banished from the Island of Manhattan. On Jan. 24, she begged the council, as "one of the oldest inhabitants of the city of New Amsterdam," to grant her a remission of the sentence and permit her to remove to Fort Orange (Albany). Four days later, the provincial authorities remitted her fine for the time being and allowed her to remove to Long Island.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1652-59. The tavern was in the Smits Vly.—See July 24, 1665.

It is discovered that "furniture and cattle which the Indians plundered from divers Inhabitants and Bouwsters"—during periods of Indian uprisings, as recently during the Esopus Indian war, were bought or bartered from the Indians by some of the inhabitants, which encouraged and afforded the Indians "to perpetrate more and more such Robberies and thefts, to the serious damage of the Farmers and of Agriculture."—Law is passed prohibiting the purchase, barter, or trade of "any plundered or stolen Movalies or Cattle from the Indians, unless information thereof" has been "previously given to the Director General and Council or to the Inferior Magistrates, each in his respective jurisdiction where such goods are "offered for sale," and their consent is obtained. Anybody who violates the law is required to give up such stolen goods, and is to be punished in their jurisdiction, to suffer all losses involved, and forfeit "in addition as a fine, as much as they shall have given the Indians for the purchased or bartered goods."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 452-53.

Sometime before this year, a blockhouse was erected west of the present Church St. and south of Wall St. It is shown on Pl. 10A, Vol. I. On Pl. 22-4, Vol. I, it is called "the Northwest Blockhouse."

Stuyvesant, buccaneers, led by Sir Henry Morgan, began their depredations on the colonies of Spain.

The population of New Amsterdam, which numbered 1,000 souls in 1666 when surveyed by Capt. De Koninck, now numbers 1,500, of whom less than 350 are male adults, the rest being women, and children under 18 years of age.—O’Callaghan, Hist. of New Netherlands, 1614-18, p. 149; citing Albany Records, XVIII: 138; Holland Docs., XVI: 221. A guard-house at the land gate was mentioned in a deed from Hendrick Hendricksen to Martin Hoffma, dated Nov. 17, 1664.—Liber Deeds, B: 55 (New York). But the Sachems shall be previously informed hereby," namely, about the order.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1651 Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 451.

On Jan. 3, 1664, the fiscal lodged a complaint about Maria in the provincial council for selling liquor to Indians, no doubt in continuance of the original case brought up a few days before, and the council commend to him to pay the costs of action, and to be banished from the Island of Manhattan. On Jan. 24, she begged the council, as "one of the oldest inhabitants of the city of New Amsterdam," to grant her a remission of the sentence and permit her to remove to Fort Orange (Albany). Four days later, the provincial authorities remitted her fine for the time being and allowed her to remove to Long Island.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1652-59. The tavern was in the Smits Vly.—See July 24, 1665.

It is discovered that "furniture and cattle which the Indians plundered from divers Inhabitants and Bouwsters"—during periods of Indian uprisings, as recently during the Esopus Indian war, were bought or bartered from the Indians by some of the inhabitants, which encouraged and afforded the Indians "to perpetrate more and more such Robberies and thefts, to the serious damage of the Farmers and of Agriculture."—Law is passed prohibiting the purchase, barter, or trade of "any plundered or stolen Movalies or Cattle from the Indians, unless information thereof" has been "previously given to the Director General and Council or to the Inferior Magistrates, each in his respective jurisdiction where such goods are "offered for sale," and their consent is obtained. Anybody who violates the law is required to give up such stolen goods, and is to be punished in their jurisdiction, to suffer all losses involved, and forfeit "in addition as a fine, as much as they shall have given the Indians for the purchased or bartered goods."—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 452-53.

Sometime before this year, a blockhouse was erected west of the present Church St. and south of Wall St. It is shown on Pl. 10A, Vol. I. On Pl. 23-4, Vol. I, it is called "the Northwest Blockhouse."

Stuyvesant, buccaneers, led by Sir Henry Morgan, began their depredations on the colonies of Spain.

The population of New Amsterdam, which numbered 1,000 souls in 1666 when surveyed by Capt. De Koninck, now numbers 1,500, of whom less than 350 are male adults, the rest being women, and children under 18 years of age.—O’Callaghan, Hist. of New Netherlands, 1614-18, p. 149; citing Albany Records, XVIII: 138; Holland Docs., XVI: 221.

write to Stuyvesant and the council with respect to fortifying the harbour of New Amsterdam, and creating settlements thereabouts, as to "prevent the English occupying those places."—N. T.
Col. Doct., II 218.

11 The directors at Amsterdam, in a letter to Stuyvesant of this date, refer to a previous letter to him, dated Sept. 25, 1663, in which they ordered that "the month regular of such servants [of the Company] there [New Netherland] shall henceforth be liquidated and paid in Beavers valued at 6 instead of 7 gilders a piece." With respect to the depreciation of wampum, they recognize it on the increase, and therefore "resolve" and give the council of the account of such persons as have been 12 Jan de Witt and Jan Thueussen, partners in the ownership of a windmill on a site within the area of the present City Hall Park, on the Broadway side, having become involved in an irreconcilable dispute, the city court orders Jan de Witt to take over for a consideration Thueussen's share until May, which he agrees to do.

Further disagreement, however, led to De Witt's resigning, when his partnership was dissolved in May.—Rec. N. Am., V 7: 12-13;
Min. of Orph. Court, II: 70-71. Thueussen was formerly a tapster.

13 An edict of the states-general, under the great seal, is issued, declaring the right of the West India Co. to plant colonies in America, and laying particular emphasis upon its jurisdiction in "the country called New Netherland."
It avows the company's authority, derived from its charter of 1641, to settle the boundaries by the Hartford treaty of Sept. 19, 1660 (p. 80). This edict is a recent product of English aggressions, and by it the Dutch seek to stem the inflow of English colonists. The Dutch villages with "fire and sword" under New Amsterdam. The conferences agree with him and describe the invaders

14 The fear of an English invasion of New Amsterdam leads to the consideration of its defences. Its "openness . . . along the water side, both along the East and North Rivers," is "notorious."
Stuyvesant has asked the city confères "in what manner" it is "best to fix and defend" the place, and whether they think it "practicable and necessary" to set off the city immediately "with sufficient palisades against an expected attack." He now suggests that an inventory be taken of the number of palisades which each householder and each unmarried man ought to furnish, and sets the time at which it shall be done. The materials are often exhausted and unable to be further hurried; that the city's income is so meagre that even "the few words heretofore begun for the City" cannot be completed; that "the greater the revenue, the greater the expenses;" therefore Stuyvesant, they say, should "be pleased to lend the Company's Negroes to cut and haul palisades with the City's Negroes for things one be brought to the North, the other to the East River." Day and night watches for the city are discussed.

15 There are some things in Stuyvesant's remonstrance which the city confères consider to be beyond their jurisdiction and properly in concern of the City's prerogatives, but the Council, in the report of the approaching election of new members of the city bench, recommends the nomination of "such persons as make profession of religion, no opponents of the Superior or Inferior government, but peace loving and such as are fit for that office." The bench makes nominations on Feb. 7, in the presence of "Cerrin van Hayven," appointed by Stuyvesant and the council to be present on this occasion on behalf of the provincial government. Election by the latter took place on Feb. 24, after which public announcement was made to the commonalty, in front of the city hall.—Rec. N. Am., V: 15-18; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 259.

20 Stuyvesant addresses a representation, consisting of ten items, to the five provincial councillors, and to the schout and burgomasters of New Amsterdam, in regard to the invasion of the English on Long Island and the possibility of an attack on New Amsterdam.
The schout and burgomasters, impressed by "the importance" of the matter, communicate it to the schepens, and to Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt and Allard Anthony, both former burgos-masters of New Amsterdam. The burgomasters are "summons and demand" made "first by letters" by the English at Harford, and, "subsequently, by force of arms—first by one Jan Co (John Coe) with a troop of about 50 @ 50 foot and slave-men in the English towns only on Long Island; afterward and recently by one Jan Scott (John Scott) with a troop of about 80 horse and also as many foot not only in the English, but also in the Dutch towns, on said Island." Stuyvesant adds that "no similar hostile proceeding" has "hitherto been made use of against these parties," but, "to prevent bloodshed and consequent greater mischiefs," efforts have been "made by embassies and written protests to bring matters to an accommodation," or at least to refer the whole matter to the lords of the states-general, as an international concern. But not much is expected of an agreement abroad.
Opinion differs in New Netherland. Some praise the forbearance which the Dutch provincial government has shown, while others declare "the non-resistance and non-opposition by force and violence to be cowardice, scandal and insult"—a reprehensible conduct for the Dutch nation.

The conference advise resistance to any further invasion by John Scott, should he return in March, as he has threatened.
They declare that the directors at Amsterdam should have made use of their assets, profits derived from duties in Holland and New Netherland during many years, by "enrolling and sending 2 @ 500 brave discharged soldiers" and by fortifying the city of New Amsterdam. Had provision made this provision for security, they have no doubt "but those who now revolt would have taken good care, knowing that we being strong enough would have given them plenty of trouble and reduced them by force of arms to obedience."
This is not the case but "every Burgher is bound to defend his place within its walls," they say, while "the military or soldiers of the Company" serve "outside and the country and villages round about," wherever necessary, both against "the savage barbarians" and the English or any other nation which seeks to do injury.

Stuyvesant had said that he thought the English were trying to provoke a quarrel ending in bloodshed, as a prelude to the Dutch villages with "fire and sword," under New Amsterdam. The conferences agree with him and describe the invaders also the reported recruiting of "every sixth man in the adjoining colonies" of New England, and the anticipated difficulties in the 8 Dutch and English towns on Long Island.—Rev. N. Am., V, 272.

"Olof Stevens van Cortlandt receives his commission as treasurer of New Amsterdam, and "all books and papers concerning his office."—Min. of Orph. Court, II, 185.

12 In the city court of New Amsterdam, Egbert van Borsum, formerly owner of a boat which Hendrick L de Biesen Mol built for him "is unfit to be used on the Ferry." The case is referred to arbitrators.—Rev. N. Am., V, 24-25, 36. See June 1, 1654.

14 An ordinance is enacted for the recording of deeds and mortgages in Breuckelen, Midwout, Amsterdam, and New Utrecht, instead of at New Amsterdam, because it has been found that many inhabitants of these villages neglect "to convey in proper form their sold Lands, Houses, and Lots, to the purchasers, and to give a quitclaim therefor," on the ground that they are "unwilling to bear the trouble, loss of time, and expense attendant on going to the Manhattans, to the office of the Secretary of the Director General and Council," such neglect resulting in some lands being sold four or five times, "without being duly recorded." The new law requires local registration in registers kept separately for deeds and for mortgages, and correct copies thereof are to be delivered annually to the office of the provincial secretary.—Laws & Ord. N. Y., 459-60.

16 The council sends a force to hold the Navesink lands.—See Dec. 6, 1663.

19 Abraham Lubbersen is engaged by the burgomasters as corn-gel (gunner) in the city.—Min. of Orph. Court, II, 185.

20 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam enter into an agreement with Jan Bockevelt, Gerrit Jansen from Amhemb, and Jacob Keeren, "for making eighty six gabions to wit thirty two 2/3 feet high and wide, thirty two 3/4 feet wide and 5 feet high, and twenty eight 6 feet high and 4/5 wide," for which they are to receive "thirty-five threavers and a half" per day, "on condition that they themselves cut the wood." Cartage is to be paid by the burgomasters.—Min. of Orph. Court, II, 185. See Feb. 20.

23 The burgomasters of New Amsterdam resolve to submit proposals for the defence of the city to Stuyvesant and his council. Experience, they say, has shown that "all wars and troubles" with their English neighbours have been "based upon the desire to plunder" New Amsterdam "or obtain booty." New Amsterdam is the "capital," and its inhabitants are "mostly Dutchmen," who have "at their own expense built so many fine houses" that the city surpasses "nearly every other city in these parts of North America." Here is "a garrison of three complete companies of militia;" therefore, the place should be "properly fortified" in the manner they recommend, which would make it "formidable to evil-minded neighbours or the savages," and these proposed works "will also be a comfort to the East and North, making them safe for help to come, as a road to retreat or go to the assistance of so many villages, hundreds of farms, with houses, grain, lands, cattle and nearly ten thousand souls, mostly Dutchmen and some Frenchmen, who in the course of years and with God's blessing would "grow into a great people," in a province so favourably situated, "where thousands of acres of land" are yet "uninhabited and untilled."

The country, they think, might even be a refuge for the people of the Netherlands, if the fatherland were "visited by cruel wars, civil or with outside nations."

Or it might become a "granary" for the fatherland, in the event of "failure of the Eastern crops or a prohibition of trade by the Northern kings and princes." The burgomasters estimate that "about eight thousand shecels of winter grain" are "in the ground, besides the large quantity of summer grain, rye, peas, oats, and corn, kept in store."

If a peace reigned, this promise "an abundance of cereals."

Again, they say New Netherland might be expected "to become the staple of commerce" for the fatherland "by the planting of tobacco, hemp, flax and other necessities," all of which thrive there.

They contemplate these things, the burgomasters conclude that, "next to the matter of the province," after the boundary question has been settled, lies "in the fortification" of New Amsterdam "by a bastion at the East River gate [Pearl and Wall Sts.], pallisades closely set through the water to the round bulwark before the City Hall [Pearl St. and Centre St. Alley], from there pallisades to the Kapiskon brooks at the southern end of Manhattan, where Battery Park is now, where a fort may be built to protect from there the East and North Rivers and specially the City and the port, then again pallisades to prevent a landing to about half way up the North River to a bastion," this bastion "to protect the part as far as the North West bastion, to be built near a bag of closely set pallisades, running down to the river and well protected against the floating ice." From this point across the island to the East River gate they propose the building of "a strong stone wall with two bastions" and "with a wing into the [East] river."

Now they contemplate the cost, which they say will be "a large sum of money." They know that the provincial government cannot spare any money, because the late Indian war depleted the treasury, and it is also impossible "to burden the inhabitants" of the city "with more taxes." The people, they say, "grow daily poorer." However, "in this pressing necessity," the burgomasters propose "to spend the whole of the City's income on the fortifications, and to raise among the merchants and richest Burgers and inhabitants as much on interest" as can be obtained, or may be needed, provided the provincial government will, "in a year from now," allow the city "to receive the inkeepers or tapsters' import as security for the creditors and until the loan has been paid, but no longer.

On the 21st, Stuyvesant and the council agreed to this request, with the proviso that the collections of the tapsters' excise should begin in May, 1667, and that "from that date on the present and future revenues of the City" should "be bonded for the payment of the money to be raised and that the fortifications" should be "planned and made with the knowledge and approval of the Director General and Council."—Min. of Orph. Court, II, 185-90; see Feb. 8, 1664. On the following day (Feb. 22), the city court met, and the aforesaid propositions were read, together with others proposed. The presiding burgomaster reported that "Mr. van Ruyven" had "already offered 1000 florins, and the Director General promised at least as much on interest. It was then resolved, unanimously, "to summon not only the old Burgomasters and Scheepers, but also the wealthiest inhabitants," to be assembled on Monday, Feb. 24; meanwhile the members of the city bench promised their personal loans, on interest.

On the 24th, some of these burgheers and inhabitants, who had been invited to court, had the proposals for a loan presented to them and were asked to signify the amounts they would lend to the city at an interest of ten per cent, this interest at beginning, and each shall have paid his last promised pennies and continue until the monies given on interest have been paid back, at the longest for a period of five years from date, "in such value as the zewan" then had, being eight white and four black beales for a stuiver.

More than a hundred loans were then made, aggregating 27,933 florins, including a loan of 5,000 florins, the largest single loan.—Rev. N. Am., V, 28-33.

On Feb. 26, the burgomasters requested "a sealed warrant, showing that the import on wine and beer, to be sold by the tapsters" in the city, was to remain in their hands until the projected loans were paid with interest. Stuyvesant and the council gave this warrant under the provincial seal on March 6.—Min. of Orph. Court, II, 190-91; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 2615 Rec. N. Am., V, 33.

The council minutes refer to "the newly commenced settlement of Norwalk on the Northriver," where, a farmer having died, leaving a minor son, it is desired to appoint guardians and trustees "for the aforesaid orphaned child," as well as "to take an inventory of the property" left by the parent. Stuyvesant and the council "request and authorize" . . . Paulus Leendertsen vander Grift, present Burgomaster, and Mr. Allard, present Mayor of Amsterdam and Co-Patrons of the said new settlement to act as guardians and trustees for the child.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 360. This settlement, formed about 1663 (see July 26, 1663), was also known as the Burgomaster's Colony or Bouwery, and was the site of the older Sapo-Nikan plantation, and within the present limits of the City of Greenwich Village.—De Puyter Papers and Warren Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987.

1664. Island tribes appear in Fort Amsterdam to present plans for the exchange of Christian children held in captivity by the Esopus Indians. The following Feb. 5, 1665, New Netherland and John Scott, who provides that "the English shall send the Esopus a named settlement with the 34; "Conformably to your Majesty's instructions to Commissioner, Y. of the States-General and the Bewint-Hebbers for the space off twelve Months and longer (viz.) until his Majesty of England & the States-General doe fully determine the whole difference about ye said Island & the places adjacent & that till then the said people his Maiesties good Subjects & his Royalties bee not invaded but have free egress & regress to ye said Manhattans (Alias) New Amsterdam & all other places wholly possessed by the Dutch according to the former Articles off January ye 24th 1664 [1664, q.e.] & that the Dutch shall have free egress & regress in all or any off ye said towns either in negotiation or administration off justice according to the Laws off England without respect to persons or nations & that ye Dutch towns or bouweyers shall remaine vnder ye States-General the aforesaid term his Maiesties Royalties excepted and that ye said town any one by him shall molest in his name ye said Dutch towns directly or indirectly."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 361-62.

7 The city court of New Amsterdam, addressing Stuyvesant and the council, says: "Although your Honors convoked in the month of October last year a General Provincial Assembly which was hold on the 24th and 25th of November following by Deputies from the adjoining towns and settlements only, because the delegates from the Colony of Reineselaerwyck and villages of Beverwyck and Wildwyck were unable to come down and sail back at the time, owing to the inconvenience of the approaching winter: and whereas after the aforesaid meeting of the Assembly, our neighbours, the revolting English, have made attempts under one Jan [John] Scott against this State endeavoring to reduce our villages on Long Island under their obedience, with divers threats which they gave out, of making some attempt on this place; all which we think unnecessary to enlarge upon every one and what they further sought to commit in invading, taking possession of, and inhabiting the Neuwestings, we find ourselves necessitated to turn to your Honors with urgent entreaty that in this highly imperious necessity, in which the whole country is placed, you would again convoke a General Provincial Assembly of all possible and capable Deputies from the surrounding places and towns. As specially from the Colonies of Reineselaer Wyck, Beverwyck, and Wild Wyck to enact by a unanimous vote, what shall be found proper for the prosperity, quiet and peace of this Province, which ought to be immediately reported to our Lords and Principals in Europe, so as to be able to send it over with the Delegates in the ship the Statyn." To which Stuyvesant and the council replied, on March 18, that, "Conformably to the Apostoly dated 27th Octob. last, the petition was deemed just and necessary. Therefore the letters thereto required should be drawn up and placed in petitioners hands to be dispatched by the earliest departing sloops."—Rec. N. Am., V: 33-34; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 262.

"On April 1, the provincial government issued a writ summoning the several towns to send delegates to a general assembly to be held on April 15. Elected delegates on April 15 was meanwhile, elected as his delegates Burgomaster Cornelis Steenwyck and Schepen Jacob Backer. The assembly met as required, and the delegates drew up an address to Stuyvesant and the council, which was answered the next day. On April 12, they sent a second address, in which they explained the purport of their first address and solicited legislation. Other exchanges followed. In an address on April 15, the delegates asked permission to petition the West India Co. and the states-general for protection and for a redress of divers grievances, as well as to send agents to Holland to support the same, which was granted.

Without coming to a final conclusion or voting supplies, the assembly adjourned for a week. On the 21st, the provincial government again notified the delegates to assemble the following day, and when they were met Stuyvesant addressed them in person.—Rec. N. Am., V: 45; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 265, 266; Brodhead, Hist. State of N.Y., I: 725-29; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N.Y., I: 116-17.

10 Nicasius de Sille is confirmed as a church-warden of New Amsterdam by the provincial council.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 261; Min. of Orph. Court, II: 195.

12 Govert Loockermans, one of the church-wardens of New Amsterdam, having been called by the council to account of the administration of the Church money," says he "never had the key of the money box or kept account," and that the key has "always up to date been in the hands of Mr. Johan de Decker and his attorney Francois Boon." It appears from the records that Decker "had the administration of the money and of the property of the Church." Loockermans, now being continued in the office of a church-warden, and having associated with him Nicasius de Sille, demanded the delivery of the money and property to him "under inventory." Decker had left the city and had given the church funds "to his attorney Francois Boon," but had made no accounting; so the burgomasters presented the situation to Stuyvesant and the council, asking that Boon be obliged to surrender the property and money to the two wardens of the church, with an inventory, "so that the necessary repairs of the Church might be made. On the 18th, Boon was ordered to do so.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 195.

15 Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven reports to Stuyvesant and the council concerning information he has received from a friendly Indian about "great dissatisfaction among the Esopus and Wappingers," who "had expected to kill all the Dutch and drive the English farther away, as the English of New York,cbester had promised to them, that they would first take Long-Island and then the Menedes (Manhattan). To ascertain the correctness of this rumour, Lient. Van Couwenhoven was sent, with "2 or 3 others, conversant with the savage tongue, in the Company's yacht to the Wappingers." Inquiry sustained the charge of English machinations.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 365-66.

Stuyvesant and his council issue an ordinance "for the better and more careful Instruction of Youth in the principles of the Christian Religion." In order that children may be instructed "in the principles and fundamentals of the Reformed Religion," as well as in reading, writing, and arithmetic, it is ordered that the schoolmasters "shall appear in the Church, with the Children committed to their care, and intrusted to them, on Wednesday before the commencement of the Sermon, in order, after the conclusion of Divine Service, that each may, in the presence of the witchcraft government, again notified the delegates to assemble, the Scholars as to what they have committed to memory of the Christian commandment, and Catechism, and what progress they have made; after which performance, the Children shall be dismissed for that day, and allowed a decent recreation."—Laws & N. Neth., 466. "Among the Dutch, a Pedagogus, or "Pater Patriae. Other exchanges of letters by the schoolmasters to teach religion through the catechism and other church formulaires. . . . "The civil authorities conceived their interest and responsibility of strikingly similar to what is common in America today. They chose the masters—frequently upon ecclesiastical recommendation—paid their salaries, furnished the schoolhouse, and gave the directions under which the masters taught. In the division of civic function, the States-General exercised only a broad supervision, serving more as a central body for administrative or legislative agency. The Lords Directers from the general treasury of the company furnished the money for the salaries, directed the general affairs of the school, and besides held themselves free to control even its minutiae. The director general and council acted only as the agents of the company, but exercised much power in the service of the lords. The city authorities, but for defraying finances and an autocratic director, would have furnished a sufficient support and the sole control of the city school... In spite, however, of any thwarting of purpose, enough was done by the secular authorities to present a remarkable anticipation of the American public school."—Kilpatrick, op. cit., 89, 91–94.

"Several persons, both white and coloured, are fined for shooting pigeons in the woods on Manhattan Island on Sunday, contrary to ordinance.—Col. Hist. MSS., New York, 1641, 1642, 1643.

Willem Bogardus is granted by the provincial council the use of one-third of the west-northwest corner of the island for a residence.—Col. Hist. MSS., New York, 1641, 1642, 1643.

The territory covered by this extensive and very important grant is thus described: "All that part of the Mayne land of New England beginning at a certain Place called or known by the name of St. Croix next adjoyning to New Scotland in America and from thence extending along the Sea Coast unto a certain Place called Pelusquine or Pemauk and (see) upp the River thereof to the furthest head of the same as it tendeth Northwards and extending from thence to the River of Kinebequi and see upwards by the shortest course to the River Canada Northward and above all that Islands or Islands commonly called by the several names or names of Matawacks or Long Island and abutting towards the west of Cape Cod and Narro Higanetts abutting upon the Mayne land betweene the two Rivers there called or known by the several names of Conencute and Hudsons River Together aloge with the said River called Hudsons River and all the lands at the East side thereof or to the Eastside of De la Ware Bay And also all those several Islands called or known by the names of Martin Vinyards and Nantukes otherwise Nantucket" (etc.).—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 1–5.

An engrossed parchment duplicate of this grant is in the New York State Library, in the State Education bldg at Albany. They also offer their friendship and express their desire to live in peace with the Dutch, upon whom they urge the necessity of expedi-

Ied Cornelissen van Vorst receives a ground-brief for a lot near Gov. Stuyvesant's bower'y, to the west of the Great Highway (Broadway), to the north of Cosyn Gerritsen's land, and to the south of Dirck Michiels, containing in breadth 24 rods; "then line running betwixt Cosyn Gerritsen northwest and by west and so thence extending one half, it is in length 100 rods," "betwixt Dirck Michiels northwest and by west its length 150 rods," and is in area about 8 acres or 4 morgens and 312 rods.—Liber Patents, II: 106 (Albany).

Jan Schryver is charged in the city court by Schoet Tonneman with entertaining at his house on Sunday, April 6, "in the afternoon after the 2d sermon," 20 persons who were drinking. Schryver admits he f tapped a little pint for strangers on account of their thirst." The court holds that there is a contradiction in the Sabbath ordinances of Oct. 26, 1636, and Sept. 15 (sic), 1663, and unanimously resolves to go in a body to Stuyvesant and the council on Thursday next [April 11] at nine o'clock in the morning to speak to them on this subject," also to find out "for what reason those who reside beyond the Fresh Water are allowed to take more on the Sabbath than the tavernkeepers of this City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 46.

The Trittenheer Act is repealed.

Ensign Niijssen writes from Wiltwick (Kingston) to Stuyvesant and the council, stating "that on the 10th of April an Englishman arrived here with Claes Tijssen, who desired, as he said, to buy some land from the Dutch," but accomplished nothing. He says he "afterwards informed our man to the Eastside of De la Ware Bay and also all those several Islands called or known by the names of Martin Vinyards and Nantukes otherwise Nantucket."—Rec. N. Am., V: 45.

A "some dead hogs" lie "here and there on the street," Schout Tonneman asks the advice of the city court with respect to their disposal—"where he shall have them conveyed and by whom, to prevent the stench, which proceeds therefrom." He is instructed "to send the City's Negroes" under order "to collect and bury the same."—Rec. N. Am., V: 45.

In a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, Stuyvesant tells them about the war with the Esopus Indians, and says: "We have got back all our Christian prisoners, except three." He adds: "Other tribes inform us, that they are willing to renew the peace with us," but he does not place reliance "upon the statements and declarations of this uncivilized, treacherous and mendacious people." He gives the expenses of his government "for the last year" as $6,000 guilders, while on the other side the revenue will not be more than 10,000 guilders on account of the poor trade in beavers, caused by the wars which the Maques [Mohawks] and Sinnokus [Senecas] wage against the Northers [New England] and Canadian savages. We shall therefore have a deficit of 40 or 50,000 guilders."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 372.

In the council chamber at Fort Amsterdam appear the chief of the Hackenjacks and others, Sarah Kiersted acting as inter-er, in regard to the marriage of a Dutchman by one of the Wappingh Indians. Stuyvesant is referred to as "the chief of the Manhatans."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 371–372.

1664 court with violation of the laws regulating tapsters. Smith's tavern stood on the present site of 32 Bridge St. He is accused of selling drink on Sunday, April 6, and again, on May 22, he was charged with having "drunkenly sung and chanting." He makes a general denial, and is condemned to pay a fine and receive a reprimand.—Rec. N. Am., Vol. IV: 48, 64. See Castello Plan, II: 267-68; Landmark Map Ref. 18-25 The general court of Massachusetts-Bay at Boston receives intelligence, as to that province, from its own agents and commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick, are "on their voyage to these parts," and makes preparations for their reception.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 72-73.

29 Certain inhabitants of Gowanus and Manhattan petition the provincial government for permission to dredge the kiln "between the end of Frederick Lubbertsen's land [Brooklyn] and the Red Hook," so as to make "a passage to the Gowans and the mills, without going round West of the Red Hook, where the water" is "ordinarily very low." The kiln is "filled up with sand at one end," and it is believed the improvement will enable boats "carrying one hundred sheeps of grain or a full load of wood," or other cargo, to "pass through" the passage. The petition is granted, the dredging to be done at the expense of the petitioners, and saving the title rights of Lubbertsen and others.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XTV: 348-49. The same Red Hook is retained to this day on maps of the South Brooklyn shore of New York Bay, just south of Buttermilk Channel. See also Randel Plan of 1814, A, Pl. 15, Vol. III.

31 Several negroes, male and female, are sold by direction of Stuyvesant and the council at New Amsterdam to the higthest bidder.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 466.

This day is set aside in New Netherland as a "general day of thanksgiving as well on account of the desired peace as specially for God's signal mercy, which he has shown us during the war with the Esopus savages in delivering all the captive Christians out of the hands of the barbarians contrary to all human hope and expectation." Voted by Stuyvesant and the council on May 31.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 383-84. See also May 15-16, 1664.

4 The Rev. Hendriques Selyns writes from Breukelen to the classis of Amsterdam of the safe arrival of Domine Samuel Megapolensis, and adds: "You have heard of the sad state of New Netherland. The Indians have killed some, wounded others and taken a number of captives and at the same time burned a number of houses at Esopus. The English have declared, that they would take our towns [New Amsterdam] and all Long Island with flying colors."—N. Y. Col. Docs., National Civic League.

20 When the Indians brought their petitions to Manhattan for barter and trade, some persons, as alleged in complaints of the inhabitants as well as of the Indians, assailed the Indians, led them by the arm, and dragged them with their goods "against their will into one house or the other, without allowing the Indians to barter and exchange elsewhere their Pelties for such goods" as they required. This led to trouble and was deemed to provoke "still more." Stuyvesant and the council, "to prevent such irregularities," now ordains that nobody, whether following the business of an Indian trader or not, directly or through others, shall "accost, or ... along with him the Indians on their arrival, the River side or landing, or the Pelties and other wares" brought by them, "or ... cause the goods to be carried to his house," but shall "allow the Indians to go with their Merchandize" where they themselves wish. Penalties for infractions are established.

32 This law was requested by the English alphabet to the city of Amsterdam on June 24, with orders for its publication; but the city fathers took no action until July 17, when, in the city court, they declared that, as the provincial government had already provided a copy of the law, which was "affixed to the gate of the Fort," and, "in the substance of the matter to the traders, they believed it "to be unnecessary to publish the said law in all the City, especially the Pay of this City," that is, in front of the city hall.—Laws & Ord. N. Y. Neth., 463-64; Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 266; Rec. N. Am., Vol. IV: 97.

The following minute is made: "A letter was read from Johannes Polhemus, pastor at Middtow [Flatbush] in New-Netherlands, dated 23 April 22, 1664, wherein his Rev. complaints, as in his preceding letter, of Sept. 21st, 1663, that no correspondence is maintained among the several cities, the ecclesiastic discipline is neglected by punishing the offenders; 39 that no means are provided for the propagation of religion among the savages and the English, although authority therefor had been received."—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 34.

There had been "many complaints" to Stuyvesant and the council because "the Fences around some Bouweries on Manhattan Island" are "not kept up as well as they ought," resulting in "serious damage" to cornfields by "the trespassing of the Cattle," the provincial government therefore passes a law which names three fence viewers for Manhattan Island, who, when they find "any Fences out of order," are required to warn the owners "to make repairs immediately, and for failure to comply to cause them to be fined 12 guilders for the first delerictio, twice as much for the second, and 50 guilders for a third offense, as well as to pay whatever damages result from trespass of their cattle.

A third of the fine was to be paid to the pound, and the remainder went as a perquisite to the fence viewers. — Laws & Ord. N. Nath., 46-49.

24 The directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant and inform him that ships have been sent from England against the New-Englanders, (see A. Col. Hist. MS's, Dutch, 166, 267, 707). Before this letter arrived, Stuyvesant had heard this news from other sources. — See July 8.

Joannes N. rivius, the secretary of New Amsterdam, informs the city court that he has seen a copy of an "answer" in a suit, written by Walewyn vander Veen, a notary, and wants to know whether such copying by others "than himself can be done. The court replies it cannot be done, but "that the papers in the suit, consisting of demand, answer, reply and rejoinder, which parties enter against each other, must be copied" by the secretary; and that he is entitled to the fees for the "answer" which the notary has transcribed. At the same time, the request to copy the notary against accepting the fees, and threatens him with disbarment for six weeks if he again trespasses on the rights and perquisites of the secretary.—Rec. Tomas Coninck is charged by Schout Tonneeman in the city court with having twelve Indians at his tavern (11 Pearl St.), and the schout demands he be fined 500 guilders according to ordinance. Tadens is ordered to deposit the sum with the court. On the 8th, the schout in court demands the payment in "heavy money." He says some of the Indians were drunk, but Tadens alleges they came drunk "to his house and he tapped small beer for them, but no strong beer." He is then fined 50 guilders, because "drunken Indians were found on Sunday at his house."—Rec. N. Am., V: 77.

Tadens is ordered to deposit the sum with the court. On the 8th, the schout in court demands the payment in "heavy money." The burgomasters of New Amsterdam call upon the directory-general and council and make "a statement of the grievances and discontent of many merchants and inhabitants of the city, because they have been "forbidden by those of the Colony of New-Amstel on the Southriver to trade either with strangers or savages on the whole river," which they allege is contrary to their privileges obtained "many years ago." They say that Peter Alrichs has come to the city from the South River, with a cargo worth twenty to thirty thousand guilders, and wants to know if persons who come from the Delaware are to trade here "should not be obliged first to purchase citizenship (burgherright) and to keep an open shop for 6 weeks according to the privilege granted this city; also among the traders, the "smallest traders shall be punished as traitors here with strangers and savages," which is forbidden the inhabitants of New Amsterdam at the South River. The provincial authoribehind their house and lot," they cannot forbid it in this case.—

Re. N. Am., V.: 87.

The city schout of New Amsterdam asks the court concerning the disposal of the body of Hendrick Jansen Smitt, a tavern-keeper (see Feb. 4, 1647), who committed suicide by hanging himself "on a branch of a tree at the Kalkhoek on this [southern] side of the Fresh Water." The schout demands a forfeit of his goods, and that the corpse be "brought away and allowed by the burgomasters and other servants," by putting it "brought to the place" where the body was "found hanging," and be "there shoved under the earth," also "that a stake, pole or post . . . be set there in token of an accursed deed." The burgomasters and schepens, however, take cognizance of the fact that the deceased was an "old Burguder," of pretty good behaviour, and give heed to the request preferred by eight of the neighbours that he may be accorded "a decent burial." The court adjudges "that the body" shall "be interred in a corner of the Church yard [on Broadway] in the evening after the ringing of the nine o'clock bell: further, the forfeiture of his goods left by him to be applied as is proper.

The city schout and the city secretary then handed a copy of the verdict to Stuyvesant and the provincial council, who found "no objection to the sentence itself," but objected to "its form," and suggested approval by them was contingent upon the heading being made in the name of the state-general, the director of the company, and the director-general and council of New Netherland. This so stirred up the members of the city bench that they went in a body to Fort Amsterdam where Stuyvesant and the council were assembled and requested, in the name of the city court, "that they be not altered in their names and privileges, which empower them, if their Schout were prevented, to inform themselves in the first instance of murderers and to apprehend the same.

They objected because the provincial fiscal had prevented the city schout from removing the body of Smitt from "the entrance of the Kalkhoek, as he [the schout] ought to have done." They maintained, too, that "all officers within the jurisdiction" of the city "should first be apprehended by their Schout," and, if a prisoner were first caught by the fiscal or his substitute, "he ought to be handed over . . . to their Schout, except the Company's servants," who, when committing an offense and if apprehended by the schout in the fiscal's absence, were to be handed over to the fiscal. The superior court agreed that the body of Smitt should be delivered over to the city schout by the provincial fiscal, because the schout "was officially by the dead body . . . before the Fiscal," but no action was taken to decide the city bench's demand for jurisdiction within the city over all offenders who might be apprehended within the city's legal jurisdiction.—Re. N. Am., V; 93-95; Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 267. See also April 29.

"Owing to the perilous situation of affairs," caused by the news of an expected English expedition against New Netherland, "all sloop captains sailing up and down the North River, as the Hague and Staten Island, are to receive and navigate on the river "until further orders," and then only in company of two ships," properly manned, so as to prevent disaster. They are "also commanded," when sailing, "to touch, when going up and down, at the Esopus [now Kingston], and to demand a pass" from the commissary there, "as a proof" that this provincial law has been "obeyed." Those who fail to comply are to be subjected to a fine of 25 guilders.—Laws & Ord. N. Neth., 465.

Sybrant Cornelissen, from Flensburg, is appointed assistant surgeon by the provincial council, to be employed in shaving, bleeding, and administering medicines to the soldiers.—Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 267.

Rev. Heinricus Selyns petitions Stuyvesant and the council for his dismissal from the churches at Breuckelen and "in the settlement near the Director-General's Bouwery," because the four years for which he was engaged are "about to expire." They grant his request, and, as the ships are about to sail for the Fatherland, he is allowed "to depart in the Bever, in which he came." Selyns, on his part, remarks that he has "no doubt, that D' Smeal Megapolendius, Pastor and Medicine Doctor," arrives, they will "have a good opportunity" to fill his place.—N. T. Col. Docs., X: 505-51.

The king having appointed four commissioners, Nicolls, Carr, Cartwright, and Maverick, to hear complaints and appeals in New England, and settle the peace of the country, they arrive at Boston, and are opposed as hostile to colonial liberties. Nicolis and Cartwright write to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, written "from Anchor near Nantisscott Islands," inform him that they have been sent by his Majesty under a commission to "do him some service yere fore yt Government & as soon as we have fitted our selves, & en- quir'd of the French there for our long voyages and our hauls (which we put into some disorder,) we shall make haste to you, an wee give you this Notice that you may bee ye more ready to assist us, according to his Maj[esty's] Expectacion." This is the veiled language by which Winthrop learns of the projected expedition against the Dutch of New Netherland.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 27.

Stuyvesant writes to the directors at Amsterdam in regard to the constant rumours of an English invasion of New Netherland. He says: "We keep the military force under our command as close together as possible, heighten the walls of our fort, strengthen it with gabions and make all arrangements for defense. It is not our ancient custom to have so little powder and lead hand, there being only 2500 lbs in the magazine and besides that not over 500 lbs among the militia and inhabitants here and at Fort Orange, as we are informed. You can easily judge, that this supply will not last long, for it is not more than two pounds of powder for each man and then we have not even for our artillery, if we have to sustain an attack. We hope, that it will not come to that, but we must most urgently request you, immediately and successively to provide us better, than hitherto, for the preservation and protection of this capital, which, if lost, all is lost, with the following war materials: powder, lead, grenades and small arms; else the great expenses of building a wall of stones around the fort which is daily being made higher and stronger, will be speedily lost for want of the necessary ammunition and [to the dishonor and shame of the nation and your faithful officers].—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 553; see also July 19/23, and Aug. 23 pastim.

Stuyvesant informs the directors at Amsterdam that "seven or eight persons," representing French Hugenots of La Rochelle and St. Martin, have arrived "by the last ship, the Eendracht, to view the land" for a colony of refugees, and have been particularly pleased with Staten Island as a place for a settlement.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XV: 554-55. See Jan. 24.

John Pynchon writes from Springfield to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, thus: "my Pastore advice is That some way be thought on speedyly to Certifie ye dutch of ye falshood of all such enquiries with they there are no Dutchmen but the same entertaine such false aspersions, we be may be best done by making use of Capt Willet or any other ye think fit. I would not have ye Dutch to entertaine such thoughts as ye English did gyve ye Indians to Root out ye dutch: I never heard any thing ye way fr6 any of ye People but ye Contrary: & for my owne part as I have had occasion to speake with ye Indians since I came home I have tolde ye ye dutch & we were freinds & they must not meddle with ye dutch when they have asked me about it, & I have blamed ye dutch they did not make Peace with ye Moawhawks when they had an opportunity by theire desiring it, & this as far as I understand is ye spirit of all ye English herewhiles.—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 140 (Mass. Nicolls and Cartwright propose to the governor and council of Massachusetts Bay, with respect to cooperation in the reduction of New Netherland, as follows: "In obedience to his Maj.'s Commands, for ye more effectuall means of reducing the Dutch Plantation, who have, contrary to all right and justice, Usurped, and are now possessed of his Maj.'s Dominions in and near adjoining to Hudson River in America, wee doe in his Maj.'s Name propose to the Governor and Council of his Maj.'s Colony of Massachusetts Bay as follows: that they will make an Act to furnish us w'h such a Number of men Armed, as they can spare, and that they may begin their March on the 20th of August next, if in the mean time, we finde we can p'vally by Treaty, or by other Assistance of his Maj.'s Subjects nearer the place, wee promise to give them Accompt, and to Stop the further Charge
The Council of Massachusetts Bay Colony answers the proposal of the same day, by Nicolls and Cartwright, for cooperation in “the reducing of the Monhatoes, by raising and furnishing a Number of Souldiers, to begin their March on the twentieth of Aug^t next.” The councillors say they are “very desirous to testify the great loyalty to his Majesty and readiness to promote y^t interest of the English Nation,” and therefore have passed an act calling a session of the general court to be held on Aug. 3, to whom his majesty’s letter and the proposal would be submitted “for their advice, Assistance, and concurrence therein.”—N. The prevailing officer of the city court of New Amsterdam, in addressing the members of the bench, refers to the prevailing rumour that the English frigates which have arrived at Boston are to come against New Amsterdam, and asks what action shall be taken in case he and his associate burgomaster are summoned to conference with the director-general and provincial council, particularly if the time does not admit of “calling a meeting of [the] Burgomasters and Scheepen.” The members of the city court agree “to wait the time, in order to hear what demonstration the frigates” show, and to “regulate themselves afterwards accordingly.”

July 28—secretary of state, and inform him of their arrival in America. They say they intended to make port at Gardiners Island, but because of contrary winds were obliged to make for Nantasket, where they put-into port. They tell him about the negotiations they have entered into with the government of Massachusetts-Bay, and explain the dilatory tactics of that government. They have informed the officials at Boston that it was an act of providence that cast them upon their coast first, when the original design was to go to the east end of Long Island. Both government “with an opportunity of testifying their loyalty to the King, and their Zeale for his Service, which w^tabout this providence they would have wanted,” by enlisting their cooperation “towards the reducing of the Mahaduoes to the obedience and Government of his Maj^t’s,” who “had particularly recommended it to all his Colonies,” so that “they might now by giving” to the expedition “their advice and Assistance set a good Example to y^t other Colonies,” encourage the soldiers, “and dishearten the Dutch, and more, demonstrate their obedience and affection to his Maj^t’s then by any other thing they could do.”—N. A letter is written by the Rev. Samuel Dilius to the classis of Amsterdam, in which he expresses regret that Domin Henricus Soldanus, who sailed for Holland, “will not return” to them. He feels “very sorry for him,” among them a number of the negroes, who are greatly grieved by his departure. He adds: “In reference to the places, in which he preached viz: the town of Breudelen and the Bouwerie [Stuyvesant’s bowery], it is not yet positively decided, but I think it probable, that the son of Dom. Meagapoleus, who has recently come over, will take charge of them, as he has not been sent by our patrons to any other place. The French on Staten-Island would also gladly have a preacher, but their families are few in number and poor, so that they cannot contribute much to the support of the Gospel and as our support here is unspeculal and small, there is no way they will settle a preacher. In the meantime, that they may not be wholly destitute Governor Stuyvesant at their request, has permitted me to go and preach there every two months and administer the Lord’s Supper. This I have done for about a year: in the winter season it is troublesome on account of the great water or bay, which must be crossed, and the showers and storms, which occur.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 391.

The ship “Gideon,” for the account of the West India Co., lands at New Amsterdam 250 negro slaves, of which 153 are males and 157 females. Simon Cornelissen Gilde is captain of the slaver’s ship. These negroes were brought from the Coast of Guinea via Curacao, as charter-party of the “Gideon,” dated Nov. 15, 1665, was for a voyage from Holland to Africa to procure copper and elephants’ tusks, and slaves for New Netherland.—Cal. Hist., MSS., Dutch, 268, 269, 304, 353.

The general court of Massachusetts-Bay sends messengers to Nicolls, Cartwright, and the other royal commissioners with an answer to the proposals of the commissioners of July in regard to their request for soldiers to cooperate “in reducing the Dutch at Manhattoes.”

On Aug. 25, the court ordered by resolution that one-third of the inhabitants, without any exception, should “appear in person put another in his place furnished with a shovel, spade or wheel-barrow, to labour every third day at the City’s works, on a penalty of six guilders” for dereliction; that “the guard” should “be kept and a whole company [be] paraded,” beginning on this day (35th), when the drum was to “be beaten at five o’clock in the afternoon” that everyone who mounted guard was to receive a pound of powder and one and a half pounds of lead; furthermore, to conserve grain, the brewers were not to be allowed to “malt any hard grain during eight days nor brew beer higher than twelve guilders the run.”

On the same day (35th), the court petitioned Stuyvesant and the council in writing, declaring that they had positive information about the arrival of four frigates at Boston “or thereabouts in N. England, provided with a considerable number of soldiers with intention, as reports run, to attack and invade this place and the adjoining districts especially on Long Island,” and that these were even then on the way to come here.”

The city fathers thought it manifest that the city should be put in a defensive state, and so asked for “eight pieces of good and heavy cannon provided with their carriages, balls swabs, brushes, picks and spoon.” If this were granted, then the city would be “provided with a quantity of twenty-two pieces;” they also requested 50 pounds of powder for each piece of artillery, or altogether “eleven hundred pounds,” as well as “ball in proportion, also six hundred pounds of lead for bullets, to be used by the Burghers for their muskets.” It was feared that New Amsterdam would have “to bear the first attack,” before the fort was assaulted, and therefore it was “necessary to demand a greater number of people than the Burghery” could turn out, as the city had already provided a company of burghers to “keep guard every night.” They requested, on that account, that the city’s contingent “be strengthened at first by soldiers and the Company’s servants, and that the day watch . . . be kept by soldiers at both gates [the water and land gates], and in case of being besieged or attacked . . . all the soldiers and Company’s servants with the Burghery” should “repair to this City’s walls,” it being considered that if the city were lost, the fort would be untenable, “or very little so” also, that if, “in skirmishing, any Burgher should require powder,” he should “have free access to the Company to be furnished there with powder.”

Stuyvesant, after a brief visit to Fort Orange, now (Monday) returns to New Amsterdam, only to meet at once the overwhelming difficulties of an invasion by the English.—N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 372.

The petition of the city court is now returned, with the apostil or marginal note of approval from the provincial body. That the fortifying might proceed speedily, Stuyvesant and the council at once contributed the company’s negroes and the 30 soldiers of a general’s guard of soldiers,” whilst promising also to “assist with all possible might and means;” they sent six heavy cannon, as an addition to fourteen “previously delivered to the City,” making the cannon for the city’s use 20 in all; and also the requisite powder (1,000 lbs.) and lead (600 lbs.). They agreed, too, to provide the Company’s soldiers “to assist with their muskets in the defense of the city, and made a provisional allowance that “one half the number of people” (i.e., the soldiers) should “watch Stuyvesant wrote on Sept. 15 to the classis of Amsterdam regarding the day's events as follows: "On the 26th of August [N. S.] there arrived in the Bay of the North River, near Staten Island, four great men-of-war, or frigates, well manned with sailors and soldiers. They were provided with a patent or commission from the King of Great Britain to demand and take possession of this province, in the name of His Majesty. If this could not be done in an amicable way, they were to attack the place, and everything was to be thrown open for the English soldiers to plunder, rob and pillage. . . ."Our Director General at the Council, with the municipal authorities of the city. . . asked that the whole business should be referred to His Majesty of England, and the Lords States General of the Netherlands; but every effort was fruitless. They landed their soldiers about two leagues from here, at Gravesend, and marched them over Long Island to the Ferry opposite this place."

Stuyvesant having returned to New Amsterdam on the 25th (Nov. 8 S.), received a congratulatory address from the Court of Governors at Fort Oranje; now writes to the Dutch officials at Fort Oranje: "Difficult, on account of my indisposition, was my departure from you; more difficult and troublesome were my return and arrival here, on last Monday [25th], on account of the report of the four English frigates, one of which [the "Guinea"] showed herself, on the following Tuesday [26th], in the Bay, near Sandy Hook. "Yesterday, being Thursday, three more arrived and sailed together up into the Bay of Nacajack, where they remain at anchor up to the present time; they have sent the inclosed summons to all the Dutch towns, from which and from verbal statements, it is evident to be inferred that they will endeavor to reduce not only this Capital [New Amsterdam] but also the whole Province to obedience to England. "The naval and military force from Old England is estimated at 1,700, some say 3,000 men, in addition to the crowd daily expected from New England. "You can easily consider in what a state of embarrassment and anxiety we find ourselves, without a hope of any relief. Therefore this serves chiefly to warn your Honors and all friends especially and mainly not to send down any Beavers or Peltries for fear of their falling into the hands of the English. "This is desirable, and indeed most necessary, that your Honors should assist us with some aid in men and powder, in case any hope or means remain of transporting and bringing them here in season and in safety."—N. Y. Col. Acts, II: 372. On Sept. 3 (N. S.), La Montagne and Van Kesselher sent an answer, remarked the difficulty not to find the contents of our Governor's letter, and said that, "at the request of some passengers, whose homes" were "at the Manhattans," they had "coosented to their departure in a sloop" bound for New Amsterdam.—Ibid., III: 375.

Stuyvesant writes to the royal commissioners, Nicolls and Cartwright, asking the reasons why the English hostile fleet lies in the bay before New Netherland, and sends the letter by a delegation to intimate "that with utmost respect and civility, they do desire and entreate of the Comander in Chief, of the aforesaid men of War or friggets, the intent and meaning of their approach, and continuing in the Harbour of Nacyackle [Nackack, below the Narrows, near Gravesend, between New Utretch and Coey Island], without giving any notice to us, or first acquainting us with their designe, with Action hath caused much admiration [sic] in us, having not read any timely knowledge of the same, in respect to 1st Government of the place, they ought, and were obliged to have done."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 80–81.

Stuyvesant and the council send a letter to the commanding officer at Elipso (Kingston), in which they inform him of the arrival of the English fleet at Nacyack (near Gravesend) on Long Island. They add: "We have therefore resolved for the better protection of this fort and consequently of the whole country to call down here the military, except that the Redoubt [Randout] remain properly Garrisoned. You are therefore directed, to send upon receipt hereof the Sergeant with the rest of the men immediately to this place."—N. Y. Col. Acts, XIII: 393–94.

The royal commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, et alii, publish by proclamation their design, under his majesty's command, for compelling or reducing to English control "all such Forraigners, as have without his Majesties leave and consent seated themselves amongst any of his Dominions in America" (meaning the Dutch of New Netherland).—N. Y. State Lib. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 79. Col. Nicolls answers Stuyvesant's letter of the day before by a letter conveyed to New Amsterdam by Col. George Cartwright and three other delegates, with a summons for surrender, claiming for the king of Great Britain the "unequallable" right and title "to those parts of America," and designating the "forraigners" as usurpers. Nicolls states that the king has commissioned him "in his name to require a Surrender of all such forts, Townes, or places of strength" which are in the possession of the Dutch under Stuyvesant's command, adding: "And in his Majesties Name, I do demand the Towne, Situate upon the Island commonly known by the Name of Manhattan with all the forts thereunto belonging, to be rendered unto his Majesties obedience, and Protection into my hands." He adds: "That his Majestie being tender of the effusion of Christian blood, doth by these presents confirm and Secure to every man his Estate, life, and liberty, who shall quietly submit to his Majestie's behests, who shall oppose them with any violent or enter- tensive intentions, must all the miseries of a Warre, or they bring upon themselves." He expects an immediate answer.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 81–83.

Stuyvesant acknowledges the receipt of Nicolls's letter of Aug. 29/30, and promises a full answer on the following day.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 83.

The burgomasters of New Amsterdam request of Stuyvesant a copy of the letter of Col. Nicolls in which he demanded the surrender of the city, but are refused; whereupon a delegation from the burgesses of the city visits the provincial council and demands that the letter itself or a copy be supplied.

On the following day, the burgomasters asked Stuyvesant to communicate to them the contents of a letter he had received from Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, but he refused their request peremptorily, and tore the letter in pieces in their presence, against which they protested. Then they demanded to know the contents of Stuyvesant's answer to the demand for surrender.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 268.

Stuyvesant writes a letter to the directors at Amsterdam, in which he informs them of the arrival of the English fleet, that the Island is lost, that New Amsterdam has been summoned to surrender, that popular murmur and disaffection exist, and that the loss of New Netherland is certain.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 308.

John Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut writes to Director-General Stuyvesant and his council from Gravesend, informing them that he "hath hitherto continued in constant intelligence with the Right Honble Colonell Richard Nicolls C"omader in Chief of his Maities forces now arrived here, & other his Maities Honble Commissioners, who have come from England under commission of King Charles II, in order "to reduce to his maities obedience all such forraigners as have without his Majesties leave, & consent seated themselves amongst any of his Dominions in America to the prejudice of his Maities Subjects, & diminution of his Royall authority: . . . I understand also [ie says] that they have in his Maities name demanded the town entered upon the Manhaden, with all the forts thereunto belonging, to be surrendered under his Majesties obedience: I thought fit to give you this friendly advertisement, That I understand his Maities cimand concerng this business is very urgent & y't although he hath sent over very considerable forces exceedingly well fitted with all necessaries for warre with such Forraigners, & other experiest woemen, to begin fortifications, yet hath also given them order to require assistance of all his Maities Colonies, & subjects in New England, & hath directed his particular cimands in his Royall letters to our Colonies: My serious advice therefore to your selfe, & all your people, as my loving Neighbours, & freinds is this, That you would speedily accept his Maities cimand, when it shall be declared, & resign your selves under the obedience of his sacred Maies, y't you may avoid the effusion of blood, & all the good people of your nation, may enjoy all the happiness tended, & more then you can imagine, vnder the protection of so gracious.

CHRONOLOGY: THE DUTCH PERIOD: 1624-1664

Aug. 22

Colony & Connecticut, & all the rest are obliged, & ready to attend his Matz's Service: And if you should by Willfull protracction occasion a general rising of the English Colonies, I should be sorry to see you in a white ship. William symon your Governor, and myself, yea many others thereof, do with I hope & perswade (in real compasion) y' will not runne so great an hazard, to occasion a needless warre with all the evils and miseries y' may accepny the same, when nothing but peace & libertyes & protection is tendred: I have desired my excell Willls, & my son, Capt. Thomas Clarke & Capt. John Pinchon to attend your Hon's with these letters, & to have further conference with your hon'ble about the premises, & desire they may have freely reception, & free returne to their company & attendance, & you shall receive upon any occasion the like civilities from your loving Neighbour & Servant John Winthrop.

He also enclous a copy of a letter from Col. Richard Nicolls, of the same date, embodying Nicoll's assurances and reading as follows: "As to those particulars you spoke to me, I do assure you that if the Manhattanes be delivered up to his Matz, I shall not hinder, but any people from the Netherlands may freely come and plant there, or there abouts. And such Vessells of their owne Countrey may freely come thither and any of them may as freely returne home, in Vessells of their owne Country, and this, and much more is contained in the priviledge of his Matz's English Subjects, and thus much may you, by what means you please assure the Governour (i.e., Stuyveysant)—Winthrop Fapors, Vi. 187 (Mass. Hist. Soc.); N. T. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 84.

The inhabitants of Westchester petition the English Commissioners against the abuses committed by the "pretended power of the Manhattoians." Among the things alleged is the seizure of 23 inhabitants of Westchester, who were "committed Prisoners into the Hold of a Vessell, where they continued in restraint from all friends for the space of thirteene dayes, fed with rotten Provision creeping with worms, whereby some of them remained diseased to this day, after which they were carried away in Chains, and layed in their Dungeon at Manhattan."—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 391-92.

Stuyvesant sends a long letter in answer to the summons to surrender, which Nicolls and Cartwright sent by deputies three days before. He denies the alleged "unquestionable" right and title of the English to the Dutch possessions, cites the charter granted to the West India Co. in 1624, and his own commission of July 26, 1646, as well as the extraordinary and inaccurate dates of Dutch settlements in New Netherlands. He asseverates that the country over which he has command and which he has been commissioned "to govern," is Dutchman. . . . in the name of... the States General of the English. . . . It is Dutch by "first discovery and possession and Purchase of the Lands" from the Indians and others. Moreover, he refers to the Hartford treaty of 1660, which resulted from boundary disputes, but at which the Dutch jurisdiction itself was never questioned. He declares that the use of force by Nicolls would be "a breach of the Articles of peace" made between their sovereign nations, and offers a reference of the case for adjudication to their governments in Europe. Closing his letter, he writes: "As touching the threats in your Conclusion we have nothing to Answer, only that we fear not but what God (who is as just, as mercifull) shall lay upon us, all things being in his gracious disposal, and we may as well be perswaded by him with small forces, as by a great Army, with makes us to wish you all happiness and prosperity, and recommend you to his protection. My Lords Ye's thrice humble and affectionate Servl. and friend."—N. T. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 84.

Mrs. Van Rensselaer, in a description of the fort as it was at this time, observes (in Hist. City of N. Y., I: 230-21): "New Netherlands was in as good a condition for defence as any American colony; Fort Amsterdam, indeed, was a better fortification than could elsewhere be found. Yet the statement made at the time by Stuyvesant, that ninety-three of the garrison were "passrid" [see Aug. 27/Sept. 6], and various supporting documents show how impossible it was to defend city or fort against an invading force of any size."

The ten bakers of New Amsterdam are summoned to the city council, being charged with a public disturbance. A list of the bakers is available, which shows that the united stock amounts to 975 skeples. The information is required on account of an expected siege by the approaching English expedition. The date of the original record should be "29," instead of "24."—Rev. N. Am., V: 107.

A press warrant is issued by the royal commissioners, Nicolls, Carr, and Cartwright, to Capt. Thomas Morley, commander of the ship "William," to give orders from Capt. Hyde and to participate with the English squadron in the reduction of Manhattan.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 94.

Col. Nicolls gives a licence for raising volunteers by beat of drum in the towns on the west end of Long Island, to participate in the expedition against Manhattan Island.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 85.

Col. Nicolls issues a warrant to Capt. Hugh Hyde, commander-in-chief of the royal squadron, "to prosecute (with the advice of the Captaines under his Command), his Matz's Claims & Interest by all wayes, and meanes," as they agree to be "most expedient for the speedy reducing of the Dutch, under his Majesties obedience."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 93-94.

The Rev. Samuel Drisius, in his letter of Sept. 15 (N. S.), to the classics of Amsterdam, continued his narrative (see Aug. 16/26) thus: "The frigates came up full sail on the 4th of September with guns trained on one side. They had orders, and intended, if any resistance was shown to them, to give a full broadside on this open place, then take it by assault, and make it a scene of pillage and bloodshed.

Our Hon. rulers of the Company, and the municipal authorities of the city, were advised to defend the place, but found that it was impossible, for the city was not in a defensible condition. [See the remonstrance which the inhabitants addressed to StuyVESANT, N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 248; and Stuyvesant's defence, ibid., II: 356, and 427.] And even if fortified, it could not have been defended, because every man standing on the circuit of it would have had four rods distant from his neighbor. Besides, the store of powder in the fort, as well as in the city, was small. No relief or assistance could be expected, while daily great numbers on foot and on horseback, from New England, joined the English, hotly bent upon plundering the place. Savages and privyers also offered their services against us. Six hundred armed Northern Indians, with one hundred and fifty French privyers, had even an English commission. Therefore upon the earnest request of our citizens and other inhabitants, our authorities found themselves compelled to come to terms, for the sake of avoiding bloodshed and pillage. The negotiations were concluded on the 6th of September (see Articles of Surrender, Aug. 27/Sept. 6). The English moved in on the 8th [see Aug. 29/Sept. 8], according to agreement."—Jameson, N. N., Neth., 441-75.

Stuyvesant writes another letter to Nicolls, in which he says nothing remains to him but to defend himself against the public opinion of Nicolls that he surrender; yet, as he views the possibilities of attack and defence, he sees that there would be "a great deal of blood spilt" and "greater difficulty" might arise hereafter; it has therefore been "thought fit" to send to Nicolls deputies to aver the disaster and to arrange "a place & hour" for deputies from Nicolls to meet "with full Commission to treat, and seek out the means of a good accommodation, and in the meantime, to cause all hostility to cease."—N. Y. State Library Bull., History No. 2, 85-86.

A number of negroes, "half slaves" of the West India Co. at New Amsterdam, ask to be "manumitted and made entirely free;" granted.—Col. Hist. MSSA, Dutch, 269.

Nicolls answers Stuyvesant's letter of the same day, in which the director-general sought a parole or conference of deputies. Nicolls renews his "first Summons and message... for a speedy surrender of the Townes and Country, and to obtain obedience & Protecon." He declares his willingness to send deputies, if "by such a meeting" Stuyvesant means "to treat upon Articles of Surrender." His salutation to Stuyvesant and good wishes for the inhabitants are expressed in gracious words.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 86-87.

The remaining inhabitants of New Amsterdam sign a remonstrance to Stuyvesant and his council, urging them not to reject the terms offered by the English for the surrender of New Netherlands, but to meet the conditions in the speediest, best and most reputable manner.—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 145-49.

Stuyvesant and his council commission deputies to treat with Nicolls in arranging the articles of surrender, in such a way that

Bloodshed, plunder, and murders may be averted, and, in consideration of the promise of Nicolls, “to redeliver the fort and City of Amsterdam, in New Netherland, in Case the difference of the Englishmen, is adjusted by the home governments.”

Aug.

Col. Richard Nicolls, “Commander in Cheife of all his Majesies forces, now beleaguering the Towne, on ye 5th Manhattans,” accepts the proposal made by the Governor and his Council, there residing, to be removed to New York by Articles of Surrender of the said Towne and forts, thereunto belonging, under his Majesies obedience,” and he names deputies to meet with those who have been appointed by the Dutch provincial government. The English are represented by Sir Robert Carr, Col. George Cartwright, Gov. John Winthrop, and Councillor Samuel Willys of Connecticut, and Capt. Thomas Clarke and John Finchon of Massachusetts. The Dutch delegation consists of Councillor Johan de Decker, Capt. Nicholas Varlett, Dr. Samuel Megapolens, Burgomaster Cornelis Steenwyck, former burgomaster Oloff Stevensen van Cortlandt, and former schout Jacques Cous-seau. Nicolls signs the commission “at the Campe before the Manhattans.” The deputies agree to meet on the following day (27th, O. S.) “PECULIAR at 8 of the Clock in ye morning at a place called the Governor’s Bower upon ye Manhattans.”—N.Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 102.

The place designated was the company’s old bower No. 1, which Stuyvesant had purchased in March, 1651.

Samuel Willis, writing from Milford to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, says: “Here is A boate in? Setacut [on Long Island] brought News of the Arriball of The frigets at Longe Isle. The men upon the Banke 16 To 60 years of age warned To attend The designe against The Manatones Who are To meet at Greavesend vpon next Monday. In Case you heare noth-thing of our vessell this Shalup will be redy Transport you at an Howers Warrigne . . . Cornell Cartwright quartered last night at Setacut.”—Wm. Towne, N.Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 102.

Articles of surrender are consented to at Stuyvesant’s bower?

by representatives of the Dutch of New Netherland and the royal

English commissioners who, as we have seen, have associated with them at pleasure.

No Dutch ship is to be forced to serve in war “against any Nation whatever.”

The townsmen of Manhattan are not to be required to billet any soldiers “without being satisfied and paid for them by their Officers,” and, if the fort proves incapable of quartering all of them, then the burgomasters of New Amsterdam are to “appoint some houses capable to receive them.”

The Dutch custom governing inheritances is continued.

All public archives pertaining to inheritances, the church, the poor, or orphans, are to “be carefully kept by those in whose hands they are, and the recorder, in particular, concern the states-general may at any time be sent to Holland.

Other provisions regulate court judgments; travel to and from the Netherlands as planters and Dutch vessels are allowed freely to come and go, carrying back to the Netherland either persons or merchandise.

The open shipping trade is to be enjoyed for six months.

The Dutch inhabitants are granted freedom of worship.

The fort is on a suitable place, where it was located on the first discovery of New Netherland, for the purpose of resisting any attack of the Barbaryans rather than an assault of European arms, having, within pistol shot, on the North and Northeast sides, higher ground than that on which it stands, so that, notwithstanding the walls and works (mursage) are raised the highest on that side, people are walking on top of that high ground can see the soles of the feet of those on the esplanade and bastions of the fort, where the view is not obstructed by the houses and church in it, and by the gabions on the wall.

Secondly. The fort was and is encompassed only by a slight wall, 2 @ 3 feet thick, backed by coarse gravel, not above 8 @ 10 feet high in some places, in others higher, according to the fall of the ground.

Thirdly. It is, for the most part, crowded all round about with buildings better adapted for a citadel than for defence against an open enemy; the houses, are, in many places, higher than the walls, and bastions and render these wholly exposed; most of the houses also have cellars not eight rods distant from the wall of the fort, in some places 20 to 3, and at one point scarce a rod from the wall, so that whoever is master of the city can readily approach, with the aid of ladders, from the aforesaid houses the wall of the fort, which is unprovided with either a wet or dry ditch; and also, if need be, a mine from the close adjoining cellars and blow the place up.

Besides this, the fort was and is without either well or cistern. Previous to this it was hastily provided with 20 @ 2 water barrels or pitted casks removed from the ships and filled with water. Hence then, 'tis to be deduced how easy 'twould be to recover it back; how difficult, nay, impossible for us to defend it. For, the houses being built of wood so close under the fort, they must first be torn down, or else, for want of time, burnt to the Redelivery of the province is to be made immediately if “at any time hereafter” the king of Great Britain and the states-general agree that.

Finally, it is agreed that certified copies of the grant of Charles II to the Duke of York, and of the duke’s commission to Nicolls, shall “be delivered to ye Honble Mr Stuyvis vant the present Governor, on Monday next [Aug. 29/Sept. 8] by eight of ye Clock in the morning at ye old Milne mill ford, shown on the Nicolls Survey standing about the middle of the thim and wood,” &c., and these articles, consented to, and signed . . . and that within two hours after, the fort and Towne called new Amsterdam upon the Isle of Manhattes, shall be surrendered.”—N.Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 95-98; N.Y. Col. Durn., II, 250-53; also transcript in M.G.C. II, 49-53, under July 7, 1664; and Broodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I, 762-65.

A contemporaneous Dutch broadside of these articles, probably issued in Holland as a news bulletin, is reproduced as Pl. 13, Vol. IV, from the original in the N. Y. Pub Library. This is headed (translated):

“Articles of Surrender of New Netherland on the 27th of August, Old Style, Anno 1664.” It continues:

“Symon Gilde van Rarop, skipper of the ship Gideon, coming from Menates or New Amsterdam, in New Netherland, reports to New Netherland, on the 8th of September, New Style, that he was delivered over to the English on the following conditions . . . (see reproduction).

Opinions as to the identity of the "oude Molen" (old mill), mentioned in the last section of these articles, are considered in the description of the Nicolls Map or Survey, Pl. 10 b.a., p. 211, Vol. I. Reexamination of the evidence now at hand makes it almost certain that the conclusion there reached as to the identity of the "old mill" was erroneous, and that the reference is after all to Pieterson’s mill. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 961.

The surrender was confirmed by the Treaty of Breda, July 21, 1667 (p. 25). After later reoccupation by the Dutch, and subsequent recapture by the English, New York was secured to the English by the Treaty of Westminster, Feb. 9/19, 1674 (p. 53).

In the year 1666, Stuyvesant, in his "Answer" to the charges which were made against him by the West India Co., for surrendering to the English without a demonstration of resistance, stated to the states-general that the fort of New Amsterdam could have been "reduced by 500 men in less than thirty 24 hours," and he gave the following description of the fort and of the conditions with which he was confronted at the time:

First. The fort is situated on a suitable place, where it was located on the first discovery of New Netherland, for the purpose of resisting any attack of the Barbaryans rather than an assault of European arms, having, within pistol shot, on the North and Northeast sides, higher ground than that on which it stands, so that, notwithstanding the walls and works (mursage) are raised the highest on that side, people are walking on top of that high ground can see the soles of the feet of those on the esplanade and bastions of the fort, where the view is not obstructed by the houses and church in it, and by the gabions on the wall.

Secondly. The fort was and is encompassed only by a slight wall, 2 @ 3 feet thick, backed by coarse gravel, not above 8 @ 10 feet high in some places, in others higher, according to the fall of the ground.

Thirdly. It is, for the most part, crowded all round about with buildings better adapted for a citadel than for defence against an open enemy; the houses, are, in many places, higher than the walls, and bastions and render these wholly exposed; most of the houses also have cellars not eight rods distant from the wall of the fort, in some places 20 to 3, and at one point scarce a rod from the wall, so that whoever is master of the city can readily approach, with the aid of ladders, from the aforesaid houses the wall of the fort, which is unprovided with either a wet or dry ditch; and also, if need be, a mine from the close adjoining cellars and blow the place up.

Besides this, the fort was and is without either well or cistern. Previous to this it was hastily provided with 20 @ 2 water barrels or pitted casks removed from the ships and filled with water. Hence then, 'tis to be deduced how easy 'twould be to recover it back; how difficult, nay, impossible for us to defend it. For, the houses being built of wood so close under the fort, they must first be torn down, or else, for want of time, burnt to the

1664

“Furthermore, the aforesaid Evert Willemsen Munnick, alone, declares that at the time the aforesaid frigates passed the fort, Director General Stuyvesant acted as if he wanted to go to the gunner to order him to fire on them, but that the ministers Mepopolets, father and son, practically led him away and induced him to leave.

[Apopul] then De-la-ware Castle, man'd with Dutch and Swedes. So now the English are masters of three handsome Towns, three strong Forts and a Castle, not losing one man. The first Governor of these parts for the King of England was Colonel Nicolls, a noble Gentleman, and one of his Majesties Commissioners, who coming for England in August, he, leaving them in the care of Governor Stuyvesant, and his men, who between one and eighteen years old, amounted to fully 12@1,200 men, would be under the necessity of seeking their retreat and support in the little fort, whose place, from wall to wall, is less than 150 feet in length and breadth.—"N. T. Col. Decr., II: 440–41. The "Reply" of the directors of the company is in ibid., II: 489, ff.

6 Stuyvesant claimed (after the conquest of the town by the English) that the fort of New Amsterdam could not endure an English siege (see July 25/Aug. 4), among other reasons, because there was no well in the fort and only a limited number of water barrels. In the "Reply" of the directors of the West India Co., made in 1666, they said: "The further excuse that there was no cistern in the fort, sounds very strange to the Company, who now hear the fact for the first time. Yet, when looked into more closely, and the eye is cast on the situation of the place, 'tis true that close by the fort was a well of water which could, with a little trouble, be brought against the wall. But, besides, the fort had been already furnished with water-barrels, as the ship Gideon alone could supply plenty to stock the fort for three months, exclusive of those which still remained in the city." — N. T. Col. Decr., II: 500.

Egidius Luyck and three others who witnessed the surrender made a written declaration on March 7, 1666, in which they said: "The city of New Amsterdam being open all around, and only enclosed on the land side in all haste and speed, on the arrival of the enemy, by old and rotten palisades against which a little breastwork was thrown up at 3@36 feet high, and scarcely one foot wide, and consequently unfit to withstand the smallest force. . . . Besides, it is notorious and manifest that the fort is, of itself, very weak, and, in regard to its situation, incapable of any long defence, houses being built almost all around it, which must first be burnt or pulled down, to the ruin and destruction of the poor Burgers. It is also to be noted, in addition to the above, that the ground to the north and on the Brandywine shore, shot from the fort, is much higher than the bastions and walls of the fort; so much so, that the soles of people's feet on the batteries, and in some places, the terreplein, can be seen from it. Moreover, the walls of the front in some places were not above 8@10 feet high, and without ditch or palisade, so that ladders could at once be brought against the wall. From this and many other circumstances, every one, and even the principal military officers, were of opinion that the fort itself could not hold out three days, even though the surrounding houses were cleared away, to the ruin and destruction of the major portion of the Burgers." — N. T. Col. Decr., II: 475.

On this day, Stuyvesant and the council issued a certificate of consent to the articles of capitulation, dated "at the flint of Amsterdam" and under the "Publique Seale," thus ratifying and confirming what the joint commission agreed upon in the articles, which were dated Aug. 25.— N. T. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 102–3. August 29 is the day customarily cited as the date of surrender, out August 27.

"In Anno 1664 his Majestie the Second sent out four worthy Gentleman Commissioners to reduce the Colonies into their bounds, who had before incroch'd upon one another, who much to the glory of the King and Red-Coates took from the Dutch their chief town then called New-Amsterdam, new New York; the Twenty ninth of August turn'd out their Governour with a silver leg, and all but those that were willing to acknowledge subjection to the King of England, suffering them to enjoy their houses and estates as before. Thirteen days after Sir Robert Carr took the Fort and Town of Awapsa
"And the aforesaid Harmen Martense, alone, declares that having been some time with the troop of Jan Schot [John Scott], he knows very well that they were of no importance and had little enemy, but that the secretary and councilor van Ruyven having sent his wife ahead to meet the English, he asked the said secretary what they, to wit, the government, intended to do while he sent his wife to the English, whereupon he answered that they had no powder and that the English were their friends, but that on the contrary, when they were embarked on board the Gideon and asked for the powder with which they were to be supplied, Captain Marten Krüger told them that he would provide it, but that for fear that the soldiers would attack the English, he had had two kegs of powder brought to his house instead of on board.

Finally, the aforesaid deponents jointly declare that the wife of Nicolaes Meyer, free merchant there, in going out of the fort with Mrs. van Ruyven, when she saw that the soldiers intended to offer resistance, said: "Those lousy dogs want to fight because they have nothing to lose, whereas we have our property here, which we should have to give up."

--Affidavit, relating to the surrender of New Netherland, made on March 4, 1665, before Notary Henrick Outgers, at Amsterdam, Holland, and entered in No. 6 of the records of that notary, now deposited in the Gemeente Archief of the city of Amsterdam. Translated by A. J. F. van Lier from a typewritten copy of the Dutch text, furnished to him in June, 1919, by Mr. Désiré S. van Zuiden, of The Hague, Holland.

Col. Richard Nicolls, on this day—the day of the surrender of New Netherland to him—reveals to Capt. John Young his intention of summoning deputies from the several towns to assemble at a convenient time and place, in order "to propose and give their advice in all Matters tending to ye peace and benefit of Long Island," and desires Young to impart these things to his friends and neighbours. This was the first revelation of the idea which came to a head March 1, 1665 (g.v.), and the calling of that meeting was delayed until too late in the season and then it was considered inconvenient in the winter "to put the Inhabitants to the trouble of sending any Deputyes, to meet in relation to ye affairs of the Island." When the Hempstead meeting was called, John Young was one of the two deputies from Southold.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 100, 135, 156.

Evidence that Col. Richard Nicolls changed the name of New Amsterdam on this, the day of its surrender, is found in his letter to Capt. John Young, which is dated at "NYorke." The letter directs Capt. Young "to take an exact list of ye Names of those of long Island, who have taken upp Armes" under his command "for their King and Country," with their addresses, that he may reward them; it requires that their arms may remain in their hands, and that a known body of militia may be ready to be called upon when necessary.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 100.

On the same day, the royal commissioners dated their letter to the governor of Massachusetts "From New Yorke upon the Island of the Manhattas."—Ibid., 100-1.

The Rev. Samuel Drisius, in his letter to the classis of Amsterdam of Sept. 15 (N. S.), continued his narrative (see Aug. 16/26 and Aug. 25/Sept. 4) thus: "After the surrender of the place several Englishmen, who had lived here a long time and were our friends, came to us, and said that God had signally overruled matters, that the affair had been arranged by negotiations; else nothing but pillage, bloodshed and general ruin would have followed. This was confirmed by several soldiers who said that they had come here from England hoping for booty; but that now, since the matter turned out so differently, they desired to return to England.

"The Articles of Surrender stipulate that our religious services and doctrines, together with the preachers, shall remain and continue unchanged. Therefore we could not separate ourselves from our congregation and hearers, but consider it our duty to remain with them for some time yet, that they may not scatter and run wild.

"The Hon. Company still owes me a considerable sum, which I hope and wish they would pay. Closing herewith I recommend your Honors' persons and work to God's blessing and remain,

"Your willing colleague,

"Samuel Drisius.

CHAPTER II
THE ENGLISH PERIOD
1664–1763
CHAPTER II

THE ENGLISH PERIOD

1664-1763

A BRIEF summary of the principal events of the English Colonial period of New York City's history, from the surrender of New Amsterdam by the Dutch on Aug. 29/Sept. 8, 1664, to the Treaty of Paris, Feb. 10, 1763, which gave to the English control of the lands in North America lying east of the Mississippi River, is contained in Vol. I, Chap. II.

Among the papers relating to the Dutch surrender of New Netherland is a "Register of the principal events" connected therewith, under this date, in which is found the following paragraph: "And thereupon, without any other occurrence, was, as above stated, the place of New Amsterdamers. They were, pro-situate on the Manhattan, surrendered to the English, the garrison retiring with all their arms, flying colors and beating drums; and thereby the English, without any contest or claim being before put forth by any person to it, took possession of a fort built and continuually garnished about forty years at the expense of the West India Company."—N. Y. Col. Doc., II: 445.

The city court of New Amsterdam is informed "that divers soldiers," who have "worked for the City," claim "about four hundred guilders," hence, "means must be provided." The court, therefore, orders the farmers of the excise on beer and slaughtering to make immediate returns to the city treasury, and directs the city treasurer to make an immediate accounting of "the City's income and disbursements," while public notice is given to all the city's debtors to pay within eight days.—Rec. N. Am., V: 107-8.

Sir Robert Carr is commissioned by Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick as commander of an expedition for the reduction of the Delaware country to the obedience of Charles II. His instructions read: "When you shall come nearer unto ye 30th fort with is possessed by the Dutch you shall send ye Boate on Shoare, to Summon the Governor and Inhabitants to yield obedience to his Majt as the Rightfull Sovereigne of that Tract of Land, and lett him and them know, that his Majt is graciously pleased, that all the Planters shall Enjoy their fires, Houses, Lands, Good & Chattells, with the same priviledges, and upon the same Terms, which they do now possess them, Only that they Change their Masters, whether they be the west India Company or the City of Amsterdam." Provisions are made also for conciliating the Swedes and for an understanding with the lord proprietor of Maryland.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 104, 125-7.

An agreement with the Delaware magistrates, including the oath of allegiance to the king of Great Britain, was signed on Oct. 1.—Ibid., 127-28.

Rev. Samuel Druitt writes to the classis of Amsterdam an account of his flight from New Amsterdam, as follows: "I cannot refrain from informing you of our present situation, namely, that we have been brought under the government of the King of England. On the 16th of August [N. S.] there arrived in the Bay of the North River, near Staten Island, four great men-of-war, or frigates, well manned with sailors and soldiers. They were provided with a patent or commission from the King of Great Britain to demand and take possession of this province, in the name of His Majesty. If this could not be done in an amicable way, they were to attack the place, and everything was to be thrown open for the English soldiers to plunder, rob and pillage. We were not a little troubled by the arrival of these frigates.

"Our Director-General and Council, with the municipal authorities of the city took the matter much to heart and zealously sought, by messages between them and General Richard Nicolls, to delay the decision. They asked that the whole business should be referred to His Majesty of England, and the Lords States General of the Netherland; but every effort was fruitless. They landed their soldiers about two leagues from here, at Graveyard and, Sept. marched them over Long Island to the Ferry opposite this place. The frigates came up under full sail on the 4th of September [N. S.] with guns trained to one side. They had orders, and intended, if any resistance was shown to them, to give a full broadside on this place, then take it by assault, and make it a scene of pillage and bloodshed.

"Our Hon. rulers of the Company, and the municipal authorities of the city, were inclined to defend the place, but found that it was impossible, for the city was not in a defensible condition. And even if fortified, it could not have been defended, because every man posted on the circuit of it would have been four rods distant from his neighbor. Besides, the store of powder in the fort, as well as in the city, was small. No relief or assistance could be expected, while daily great numbers on foot and on horseback, from New England, joined the English, hasty bent upon plundering the place. Savages and privates also offered their services against us. Six hundred Northern Indians with one hundred and fifty French privates, had even an English commission. Therefore upon the earnest request of our citizens and other inhabitants, our authorities determined to make terms, for the sake of avoiding bloodshed and pillage. The negotiations were concluded on the 6th of September [N. S.], The English moved in on the 8th [N. S.], according to agreement."

The earliest recognition of the name New York ("Jorck") in the minutes of the city court appears on this date, in a letter written by the court to the directors of the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Co., in which they tell about the surrender of the city and province to the English authority.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 116. Its earliest appearance on a map is found on a very rare map of the world (16's 5'), dated, and published this year by Joseph Moxon, London.—British Museum Cat., No. — copy (New Neth. portion) in author's collection.

The city court resolves to write to the directors of the West India Co. at Amsterdam, informing them of the capture of their city by the English and concerning the establishment of English authority in the province. This letter begins: "We, your Hon's loyal, sorrowful and desolate subjects, cannot neglect nor keep from relating the event, which thro' God's pleasure thus unexpectedly happened to us in consequence of your Hon's neglect and forgetfulness of your promise—to wit, the arrival here, of late, of four King's frigates from England, sent hither by his Majesty and his brother, the Duke of York, with commission to reduce not only this place, but also the whole N. Netherland under his Majesty's authority, whereunto they brought with them a large body of soldiers, provided with considerable ammunition. On board one of the frigates were about four hundred and fifty as well soldiers as seamen, and the others in proportion."

The letter then recites the summons sent by Nicolls to Stuyvesant and the subsequent negotiations which led to the surrender, and describes the circumstances which prevented resistance by the Dutch, who had demanded three days' time for consultation, which had been allowed. "But meanwhile they [the English] were not idle; they approached with their four frigates, two of which passed in front of the Fort [Fort Amsterdam], the other anchored about Nnten [now Governors Island] and with five companies of soldiers encamped themselves at the Ferry [at Breuckelen], opposite this place, together with a newly 1664 raised Company of horse and a party of new soldiers, both from Sept. the north [New England] and from Long Island, mostly all our deadly enemies, who expected nothing else than pillage, rape, and robberies. They could perceive nothing more as the city fathers made a full inquiry regarding the means for defence, and found the population "to be full fifteen hundred souls strong in this place," but not 250 men "capable of bearing arms exclusive of the soldiers, who were about one hundred and fifty strong, wholly unprovided with powder both in the City and in the forty, yea, not more than six hundred pounds were found in the fort besides seven hundred pounds unsecureable." A draft of one farmer in three met with refusal, so the city fathers "with the greater portion of the inhabitants considered it necessary to remonstrate" with Stuyvesant and the council, demanding that they "consent to a capitulation;" finally, after they had laboured with the provincial authorities with "much trouble" in presenting the difficulties that precluded the resistance of the invaders, Stuyvesant and the council gave in and the surrender eventuated.—Rec. N. Am., V, 114-16.

On this day, the last entry in New Style dating, as used by the Dutch, is employed in the minutes of the city court. For the next two meetings (Sept. 15/21 and 20/30), double dates were used, but thereafter, through the first English period, the entries were made according to the calendar, thus providing a subtraction of ten days in this century from the reformed reckoning, all dates between Jan. 1 and Mar. 14 being counted as belonging to the preceding year.—Rec. N. Am., V, 110, 116. See Sept. 22.

9-19 Nicolls issues a passport to Skipper Simon Cornellisen Gilde, of the slave-ship "Gideon," upon the occasion of the surrender of the colony; that is, Fort Orange (the English usually spelled "Fort Orange" as the Dutch pronounced it)—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 165. See Sept. 20.

13-23 Gov. Nicolls issues an order directing all masters of ships, whether English or foreign, upon arrival in the port of New York "or the places and Roades adjacent," to appear immediately before him and give information concerning "what they came, and whither they are bound, together with the Contents of their laden;" and, in case they intend to unload any goods, they are "to make a true Entry & report of all such goods & merchandizes," in conformity with the parliamentary Act "for encouraging of Trade," also requiring all masters of ships to "make any goods, that he perceives or seeth, are unloading or Roaded adjacent within his Maj's [sic] Comands," to "first make Entry of his Shipp, Sloop or Vessel before" they "take any goods or merchandize in, and declare what port or place he is bound for. Thomas Delavall is commissioned at the same time receiver of shipping.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 151-56.

Warmaes Wessels is instructed by the city court to prevent the exportation of goods by any but responsible persons, and to make an entry on his books of the duties, but not to collect any duties, and, in the mean time, he is "not to pay any more money to the Receiver of the [West India] Company" on the export account, other than was due on the day when the surrender was consummated. He is to abide by this order until Gov. Nicolls can be consulted on the subject.—Rec. N. Am., V, 122.

22 This is the first "Old Style" date found in the minutes of the city court (N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 165). From this point until Sept. 14, 1754, when the Gregorian calendar was adopted in England and went into effect in New York, the "Old Style" of the Julian calendar is regularly followed in the Chronology. If data are introduced from Dutch or other sources using the reformed date ("New Style"), the double date is given. See Oct. 5/19, 1754.

23 Nicolls and Maverick, writing to Gov. Benedict Arnold of Rhode Island, ask pardon for not having been able to give the Rhode Island delegation "so good an Entertainment" as was due, pleading that they are "as yet strangers here;" but they are glad to note that the deputies will "bring backe" to Arnold "the satisfaction of having seen his Majesty's Interest and Right pyrveale in these parts without effusion of blood or their cursing and talking, when mention was made of a capitulation." The city fathers made a full inquiry regarding the means for defence, and found the population "to be full fifteen hundred souls strong in this place," but not 250 men "capable of bearing arms exclusive of the soldiers, who were about one hundred and fifty strong, wholly unprovided with powder both in the City and in the forty, yea, not more than six hundred pounds were found in the fort besides seven hundred pounds unsecureable." A draft of one farmer in three met with refusal, so the city fathers "with the greater portion of the inhabitants considered it necessary to remonstrate" with Stuyvesant and the council, demanding that they "consent to a capitulation;" finally, after they had laboured with the provincial authorities with "much trouble" in presenting the difficulties that precluded the resistance of the invaders, Stuyvesant and the council gave in and the surrender eventuated.—Rec. N. Am., V, 114-16.

The first formal treaty with the Iroquois is made at Albany, on behalf of the English, by Col. George Cartwright, and is signed also by four Mohawk chiefs and four nominal Senecas, two of whom are Onondagas and two Cayugas. The treaty provides for mutual trade, offense and defense, and the English are not to give aid to certain New England Indians who have treacherously murdered a Mohawk chief, but they are to bring about a mutual peace with the River Indians. The supplemental articles are dated April 16, 1667—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 110-12; Beauchamp, Hist. of N. Y. Iroquis, 216; Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., I, 81.

John Winthrop, Jr., in a letter to the English chancellor, says he waited upon the commissioner who came over to subjugate the Dutch of New Netherland "at their head" on the end of the land, and continued that service till upon the 28 of August last I saw the fort and town upon the Manadons Island reduced to the obedience of our Sovereigne Lord the king, whereby there is now made for the enlargement of his Maj's Dominions by filling that vast and wilderness in terms with rebellions of his Majys Subjects, and we hope it will be a means of the future peace & good of these his Maj's adjoyning Colonies.—Winthrop Papers, V (Letters and Papers of John Winthrop, Jr., 1649-1676), in Mass. Hist. Soc.; also from another manuscript in Clarendon Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1865), 58.

Gov. Nicolls issues an order of banishment against Johannes de Decker, late member of Stuyvesant's provincial council, because he "did (contrary to the 14th Article of Surrnder) actually travalle from hence and tractive with powder and Negroes, unto fort Albany and other places upon Hudsons River," without requesting a pass and liberty to do so from the governor; moreover, because after having been informed thereof, "hee did endeavor by discourses to alienate the minds of his Maj's Dutch subjects from that happy reencounter without blushed; upon Articles so lately made, and that hee did comitt these misdemeanors before the fort Albany was taken;" and they were treacherously & many goods taken away & therein deprived sundryly of a very fair estate: having since tyne lived here among the English I have knowne him many yeaeres I believe he hath a reall hearty love to the English he hath long agoe foretold and expected this day of the English possessing the plaace and hath thowed the end of the dutch [Dutch] crown." From this letter we learn also that Cornelis Melyn spoke "not very much English but good French, his son [Jacob] now with him upon his vessell speaks English."—Winthrop Papers, V, 207 (Mass. Hist. Soc.). Cornelis Melyn had removed to New Haven Colony in 1657, with his son, where they took the oath of allegiance to English authority. The importance of this newly-discovered record is in its revelation of Melyn's attitude toward the capture of New Netherland, and because it is later than any record hitherto known in relation to his holding of the office. The latest notice of the capture of him was in 1633. See Innes, op. cit., 122, 351; Van Rensselaer, Hist.
City of N. Y., I: 486.

Oct. The value of wampum as money, in New York City, is now 10 "eight white and four blacke" beads to a shiver or penny.—

11 The Dutch and Swedes on the Delaware capitalize to the English, and for the first time every mile of the Atlantic coast from the north-east corner of Maine to the southern limits of Georgia is under the British flag. For further particulars in connection with this important step in the history of North America, and the extension of British rule, see N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 71.

The Dutch ministers of New Amsterdam, Janness Megapolenis and Samuel Dirisius, come into the city court and state that they have received their discharge from the West India Co., "dated the last 15th December," to the city court which, as they are "inclined to serve the Commonalty," they have addressed themselves "to the Governor Richard Nicolls [sic] and spoke to his Honour about the wages." They state that he told them their wages ran "for the time of six months, to which time the Convention of Majes represented [i.e., duties], after which time he would see how to arrange the matter. As the ministers are now in doubt as to how they should "regulate themselves," they seek the advice of the city authorities, from whom they receive assurance that their salaries will have due consideration, the same as "the other servants of the City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 133-34.

Evert Pietersen, who has been schoolmaster since 1661, and employed at a fixed salary by the West India Co. (see May 9, 1661), requests from the burgomasters and schepens, now that "his allowance from the Company is struck off," that "they keep him at the same allowance, to wit: fl. 36 per month, fl. 125 for board, Hollands currency, being his salary during the absence of [i.e., duties], after which time he would see how to arrange the matter. The deputy of New Amsterdam, Thomas Hall, writes to Privy Council.—Rec. N. Am., V: 137. His "eight days" having expired, he appeared in court on Oct. 18, and sought an answer. He was notified "to wait still a day or two."—Ibid., VI: 144. It was actually necessary for him to wait much longer (see Apr. 25, 1665).

The general court of Connecticut appoints deputies to accompany Gov. Winthrop to New York, in order "to Congratulate his Majesties His[106] Commissioners" on the capture of New Netherland, and, if an opportunity offers itself, to arrange "the bounds between quakers and Dutch."—Connecticut.—N.Y. State Lib-

"One agreement was written out and very nearly made, declaring that Connecticut should not come within twenty miles of the Hudson River [Nov. 29, 1664—see N.Y. Colonial MSS., LXXIX: 4], but, as it did not receive the signatures of the contracting parties, it had no force. New York historians, like Brodhead [Hist. State of N. Y., I: 255], are therefore wrong when they declare: 'It was well known that it had been settled in 1664 that the boundary should be everywhere twenty miles from Hudson's River.'”— Bowen, Boundary Disputes of Conn., 69-70. See, further, Dec. 1, 1664.

The city court that day "twice, in the presence of Gov. Nicolls and his Council" and "did order the church to be opened for the administration of the oath and with that view [the] Burgomasters should summon to this City Hall the Magistracy of this City and some of the principal inhabitants.

When assembled accordingly at the city hall, Gov. Nicolls came in, accompanied by his secretary, Matthias Nicolls, and, looking around, asked where Stuyvesant, Van Ruyven, and the city's preachers Megapolenis and Dirisius were. The burgomasters replied that "it was not known that they should be sent for." Nicolls, however, "to purge away all scruple that was thought to be in-immediately came." Gov. Nicolls then asked each one present to take the oath of allegiance as "a true subject to the king of Great Britain," and to be obedient to the king, to the Duke of York, and to such governors and officers as were appointed by such authority.

In the original records, the form of the oath is recorded in the English and Dutch. When the oath had been read to the meeting by the governor himself, "divers debates occurred thereupon by some of the assembly," and "finally all the meeting roundly declared that they could not take such oath," unless the governor added to the form the words "conformable to the Articles concluded on the Surrender of this place." This they desired because "they feared by taking such oath that the matters of the place might be nullify or render void the articles." Megapolenis and Van Ruy-ven, however, said they "saw no impediment to taking such oath." Others of the assembly squabbled over the oath so long that Gov.
Nicolls "finally departed with his secretary from the meeting," which then adjourned.

On the following Tuesday (18th), "the burgomasters went with the Treasurer's book of the City accounts" to the governour, "and placed the same in his hands together with the bond granted to the City by the late Director General and Council." Then and there "debates arose on both sides in [the] presence of Coll. Cartwright and Mr Thomas Willet regarding the oath." The governour said "that the Commonalty were greatly distracted by some;
the burgomasters denied any knowledge thereof, and "persisted again that they could not take the oath" until after the demanded words had been inserted. Then Nicolls exhibited to them a written decree which declared the "false and frivolous assertion cast upon the Oath of Obedience," namely, that signing it would annul and make of no effect "the Articles of peace so late and solemnly made, signed and sealed." He declared that the articles were not in the least "broken or intended to be broken by any words or expressions in the oath, and said he would hereafter consider anyone who circulated such a false construction as a disturber of the peace, and would proceed against him. He ordered the declaration to "be forthwith read to all the Inhabitants and Registered people," and "that every denizen" be obliged to take the oath, if he intended to remain in the province.

On Oct. 20, the general meeting assembled again. The former proceedings and the declaration of Nicolls were read. The con-feres agreed unanimously that the oath could be taken with safety, "provided the aforesaid Governor Nicolls would "seal his given writing" or declaration.—Rec. N. Am., V: 144-45.
This declaration and the form of the oath are given in N.Y. State Coun. (1854), 524-27. For form of oath, see Addenda.

As city schutt, Pieter Tonnaen, about to depart for Holland, asks the city court to give him his discharge from office and appoint a successor. He also asks for "a settlement from the City under the City's seal and signature," and the "payment of his services according to [the] salary granted by the City." On the 20th, Tonneman told the general meeting which had assembled to act on the oath of allegiance which Gov. Nicolls required that he was unable to advise on that subject; by that he is implied "to depart for Holland with the ship lying ready to sail.

There was delay; so, on Nov. 22, he again requested the city court to choose another in his place "at the next Court day," so that he could then "take his leave" and also "wish his successor luck in his place." The city court thereupon resolved "to invite the old Burgomasters and Schepens to meet them in this City Hall at three o'clock in the afternoon, to choose, in form of a common Council," a successor to Tonnaen. Accordingly, this common council assembled, and those present were informed by the presiding officer of the object of their being convened, and that Tonnaen wanted "to depart with the ship the Eendracht lying ready to sail.
Nominations were made and Allard Anthony received a plurality of votes as new schutt, subject to "the approbation of the Hon'ble Governor Nicolls."

On Nov. 29, Tonnaen sat with the city court for the last time.
At this session he communicated "in writing his retirement from the Bench," and asked for a certificate as evidence that he had per-duced the duties of his office "to the best of his power" and in the interest of the country and its inhabitants. This was granted and he received also the thanks of the bench. In regard to his salary he asked to be waited until the city was made a "burthened with heavy debts," but Gov. Nicolls issued a passport to him to go to Holland in the "Eendracht" (Unity).—Rec. N. Am., VI: 145, Margriet Jels is charged in the court city by Schout Tonnaen with having "five persons at her house on Sunday evening between two and three hours during the nock." She was fined 30 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., VI: 140. The offence was taking at an un hourful.
Nicolas Bayard, as assistant to Cornelis van Ruyven, late Oct. receiver-general of the West India Co. in New Netherland, is appointed to make up the company's books, etc.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 1654-55.

26 Sir Robert Carr is recalled from the Delaware, because his absence interferes with "the good Settlement of his Maist' affairs in ye several Colonies of New England," which his fellow commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick, said "was the principal end" for which they were employed.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. Col. Docs., X, 213.

27 Col. Richard Nicolls is commissioned by his fellow commissioners, Cartwright and Maverick, "to repair to Delaware Bay and there to take special care for the good Government thereof," and to depute such Officer or Officers therein as he thinks fit "for the management of his Maist' affairs, both civil and military, until his Maist' pleasure is "further known."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 183.

An important bearing of the articles of surrender on the customs and shipping at the port of New York is shown in an order from Gov. Nicolls to the collector, Thomas Delaval, as follows: "Whereas the Articles of Surrender of this Towne of New York do not expressly set downe the true meaning and Intent of the Recognizor, nor to whom it shall be paid, yet for the good of this place, I have been, and am still content it shall be rec'd by Mr. Cornelius van Ruyven. But in regard there is in this Harbour, a Ship called the Unity [Enschedi] of Amsterdam, and doth take Tobaccoes towards her Loading, which are brought from his Majesties Plants; and it being not mentioned in ye Articles that there is leave so to do, nor is it permitted by the Lawes of England, yet for the present to Encourage the Inhabitants of this place, I am willing that they do so load their Tobaccoes, they paying here the Customes and Dutyes sett downe in the Booke of Rates, as they are usually paid in England. And by reason that I may not have returns from England so soon as I expected, and shall want accomodation for my Souldiers, and to prevent the disorders and inconveniences that may happen to this Towne thereby, I have thought fit to ordain that you may be rec'd upon any Ship that is not former paid to the West India Company, with payment to be in Content Beaver, or the value, with what you are to looke narrowly after, and for so doing, this shall be your Warrant."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 222-23. See also Nov. 26.

28 Prior to this Cornelis van Ruyven held for him, until the accounts of the West India Co. can be better adjusted, "all payments in Goods or Beavers" due or to become due, "according to the several Sales, made of ye 5th of August and 1st of Septem'be, and those also of ye 12th of September following," so as to make sure what part of the cargo of negro slaves brought to New Amsterdam from Coracao—some being sold—is included in the pretences of the West India Co.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 122.

29 Thomas Carveth is appointed by Gov. Nicolls "a Publique Notary of the members of the West India Co." But there is no other public notary in the city who understands "the English Tongue."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 125.

31 The burgomasters and schepens, now the city court of New York, order that the tithes by them levied upon beer, wine and wassay, and the excise on "all cattle slaughtered for consumption" to the city. They designate Tuesday, Nov. 8, for this purpose, and direct the secretary of the city "to write and affix notices." As nothing was done then, another order, of the 24th, directed the secretary to write and affix notices for the farming to take place on the 30th, at the house of Juffrouw Wessels at four o'clock in the afternoon.—Rec. N. Am., V: 151, 164.

James Davison (James Dauidis), an Englishman, is charged by Schout Tontenman in the city court with having four persons drinking at his house "last Sunday about ten o'clock, during preaching." He responds that he had "no club . . . sitting and he did not tap within doors, but sold drink by the inch and small measure not of Gars and true teas," and he is fined 12 guilders. Davison had taverns in New Amsterdam and in Albany.—Rec. N. Am., V: 124 (note), 152.

Schout Tontenman charges in the city court that he found four persons drinking at the house of Egbert Meindersen on Sunday during preaching, contrary to law. Meindersen's wife appearing, says "that four Englishmen came to her house demanding a drink of beer for their thirst, which she refused them," because she feared the schout would come and fine her; but they said "they were very thirsty" and would "guarantee against the trouble." She is fined 12 guilders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 172.

Jonas Bartelstern, the "Farmer of the Great Excise on wines consumable by the tapsters and tavernkeepers" of New Amsterdam, appears in the city court against Hendick Obe, demanding that he be fined "for the wines laid in by him and not entered, according to the custom of the City," and if he is not willing, then Obe be charged with the costs of the action. Obe in rebuttal says he does "not tap to every one" and that he lodges strangers. He maintains he is "not obliged to pay the full excise." He is convinced to pay Bartelstern "the full excise on the wines laid in and not entered, with costs of clerk hire."—Rec. N. Am., V: 154-55.

On the 22d, Obe produced the above judgment in court, and declared that he had "laid in some wines not only to tap them, but to sell again," and asked the court if he was obliged to pay excise on more than he had tapped. The court insisted in its original judgment and decreed that Obe would "have to store the wines" on the harbor not in the cellar under his house but elsewhere; as well as make return of the amount of wine he tapped.—Ibid., V: 158-59.

Capt. Hugh Hyde, commander of H. M. S. "Guinea," comes to Fort James in New York and gives notice to Gov. Nicolls that his vessel is fitted up and ready to sail, but stays only for a favourable wind. He had been ordered, on Oct. 26, by the three royal commissioners, Nicolls, Cartwright, and Maverick, to set sail "directly for Portsmouth [Portsmouth, England], giving his Royall Highnesses notice" of his arrival. Hyde was delayed from sailing, in order "to the Marketheld of the Merchants of the Soullit," in the garrison of New York, and, that as mutiny had been "appeased," the royal commissioners sent him another sailing order on Nov. 22, this time with directions to "touch upon the western parts of England, for advice, and from thence to Portsmouth."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 145, 153.

This record goes to show that the name was at this time applied to more than the present Whitehall Street, and included the large open space or plain before the fort, at the outlet of Broadway.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 2. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1088.

The Beavers Grant."(Beaver Street between Broadway and Broadway St.) is mentioned in a land record of this date.—Min. of Orph. Court, II: 3. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 993.

"The Marketfield" is mentioned in a land record of this date. The house conveyed was on the corner of the Beaver Grant and overlooking the Marketfield, "not in the cellar of the said house." This record goes to show that the name was at this time applied to more than the present Whitehall Street, and included the large open space or plain before the fort, at the outlet of Broadway.—Min. of Orph. Court, III: 3. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005.

The president of the city court composes a letter to His Royal Highness, James, Duke of York, on behalf of the city fathers of New York, in which they promise obedience to the duke, and say they deem themselves fortunate that he has provided them "with so gentle, wise, and intelligent a gentleman" for their governor as Col. Richard Nicolls, whose warm reception at the city made them "a little satisfied that under the wings of this valiant gentleman the city will "bloom and grow like the Cedar on Lebanon." They request for the city "the same rights and privilege, that his Majesty our King and most gracious Lord is concerning on all his subjects in England; that is, that ships of all nations may come and bring into England the products of their own country, and may sell the same thereunto back again free and without impost, on condition of paying the King's duty. But, on account of the impoverished condition of the city of New York, they ask that no more be paid other than ships and goods which come "from other places out of England, or even from England to Boston or any places in New England, or go to "their own countries." At the end of this period, they suggest the duke will see the advancement of the province, even to his deriving "great returns." Further, the "great return" from the Province of New York, "then peopled with thousands of families and great trade by sea from New England and other places out of Europe, Africa or America." For consummating these things "with greater pleasure, zeal and commerce," they request "that all privileges and prerogatives which the duke will grant them, "in addition to those inserted and conditioned in the capitulation on the surrender," may "be made known by Letters Patent from the duke and the king, "not only in the United Provinces, but also in France, Spain and other Hansas and Eastern places." This letter is "sealed with the Great Seal of this City impressed on Red Wax." The text of the letter is covered by the city bench on Nov. 24.—Rec. N. Am., V: 160-61, 162.

The city court resolves "to give notice to tapsters and tavern-keepers" that, if they want to continue in business, they must take out a license by a given time.—Rec. N. Am., V: 162.

The court orders the navigation of war with Holland, growing out of commercial rivalry in African gold-dust and slaves.

Customs and duties at the port of New York are made payable to Thomas Delaval by an order of Gov. Nicholls, which directs "that all Ships or Vessels, from this Port, bound to the Nether-lands shall pay the Customs and Duties express in the Book of Rates, of all sorts of Merchandise, according to Our English Lawes," and "make paym^ to MT Thomas Delaval, to the Custome office."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 133-34. See also Oct. 24.

An agreement is made between joint commissioners from Connecticut and New York on boundaries, including provisions that Long Island shall belong to New York, and "that the creeke or river called Monomoneck which is reputed to be about thirteen miles to the east of West Chester, and a line drawn from the east point or side where the fresh water falls into the salt at high water, north-north-west to the line of the Massachusettes, [shall] be the western bounds of the said Colony of Connecticut; and all planta- tions lying westward of that creek and line so drawn to be under His Royal Highness' government, and all plantations lying eastward of that creek and line to be under the government of Connecticut."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 16, 43. See also Oct. 24.

An agreement is made between joint commissioners from Connecticut and New York on boundaries, correcting errors in Brodhead's Hist. State of N. Y., see Bowen's Boundary Dipayes of Conn., 70-71.

The new city charter, first enacted by the city court several times, for which "unnaturally speeches" he is prevented from speaking further until he pays a fine "for the benefit of the poor." He refuses. Later he relented and returned to the court, made an apology, and promised to pay.—Rec. N. Am., V: 167.

Cornelis Stuyvesant, burgomaster of New York, and his partners, are granted by Gov. Nicholls the privilege to trade for one year between Holland and the port of New York in Dutch ships, with "Liberty of unloading and Loading here y^ Goods and Mer- chandise of this place, and to export them to what Port they please, paying only such Customs and Duties, as are payable by Englishmen here."—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 137-38; also 148-49 (Jan. 30, 1664/5).

Gov. Nicholls issues the following order to Stuyvesant and Van Ruyven with respect to the Dutch West India Co.'s estate in New York, viz—

"Whereas the West India Company of Amsterdam hath Instructed you with the Management of an Estate in Lands, Houses, Goods, Cattle, Negroes, Debts, and all other Revenue of what sort soever unto them belonging. These are therefore to give you notice that for good reasons and Considerations mee thereunto moving, I have thought fit to put an Arrest upon you further proceedings therein, and do require, that you in that Act noe more conclude, in any Bargaine Sale, or disposition of any part or Parcel of the Estate of the West India Company, untill further Order from mee, but on the contrary, that you give mee a true and exact Account, without any manner or Concealment of all and every part or Parcel of any sort of Estate appertaining to the West India Company as you will Answer the neglect of this Warrant upon you utmost Perill."

On the 27th of this month, Nicholls, by another order to the various local authorities, "to bee publiqud to y^ Inhabitants," requires "that all Persons whatsoever, in any part or parcel of any Company, or had "any part or parcel of the Estate . . . in their possession," or were otherwise interested, should "bring in Writing" to him within ten days' time "a true State of Their Debt and possession, trust or Consceme," with warning of arrest to those who practised fraud, as well as the forfeit of twice the value of thing concealed.—N. Y. State Library Bull., Hist. No. 2, 140-41, 142-43.

— Probably from this date dates the Nicolls Map (or Survey), reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 104-a. This carefully drawn and accurately survey shows the entire island of Manhattan and its immediate surroundings, and gives, as an inset, a plan of the city, very similar to the "Duke's Plan." It is particularly interesting as showing the early road system at the southern end of the island.

— During this and the following year, the "Deacon's Account" (printed in full in Riker's History of Harlem, 247) indicates activity in building a Dutch Reformed church at Harlem. It was on the north side of the Great Way (later the Church Lane), on a vacant lot between the east end of the old gardens and the river, i.e., in 125th St. west of First Ave. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935), seemingly reserved for the purpose. The work, suspended "during the farming season, was resumed on the approach of winter by the mechanics Jan Gulick and Nels Mathyssen."—Riker, 248.

In order to raise money for the purpose, "gardens, suitable also for building lots," were laid out, to be sold to "actual freeholders or residents at 25 gld each." There were 20 of these, each containing about half an acre, at the west end of the village plot, running north and south from street to street. They were called the "Out Gardens," as they were outside the palisade.

— Doubtless, as usual in new settlements, the people undertook the incipient labor of preparing all the timber, etc., for this voluntary offering. This work, of which no record remains, had evidently been completed and the building inclosed and [made] ready for seats" when the deacon's account of money expenditures began.

The first entry, under Jan. 23, 1665, is for a last given for Gen. Stuyvesant by D. Tourneur, Verwey, and Montague, at a cost of $2119. The minister probably came from New York to conduct the services.—Ibid., 246-48.

In 1666, the church was not finished and money was needed. Some of the out-gardens had not been sold, and but little money had been paid in for the others. It was resolved that a tax should be "laid upon the lands, by the morgen from each lot," but for the present, if the ministers and deacons approved, funds were to be borrowed from the "poor money." Lumber was obtained, and Hendrick Karsens was employed to "raise up and underpin the building," and also to plaster it.—Ibid., 256. By Jan. 30, 1667, work was so far completed that an allotment of seats took place. The building now came to be used as a school as well as church, and a loft or second story was sometimes rented. There was on the church lot an older house, belonging to the town, which was probably rented with the loft. A change was also made in the burying-ground at this time.

On Thursday, April 15, 1668, "the people had gathered around the Lord's table, for the last time in that humble but hallowed sanctuary where, through their early struggles, they had sought and found inward strength and comfort."—Ibid., 445. The church was abandoned in 1688 for a second fund and better edifice. Regarding the second church, see March 30, 1668.

— In this year, St. Augustine, Fla., was plundered by buccaneers under Capt. John Davis, an Englishman.

— In this year, the colonies of New Haven and Connecticut were finally united. John Winthrop was elected governor.

The great plague of London rages throughout this year.

A petition of Eheebert Meindersen to the burgomasters is brought to the attention of the city court, in which Meindersen seeks "some abatement from the farming of the taxes," because he has "not received any excuse from the cattle slaughtered as well before as after the English troubles." He is allowed 200 guilders in "seawant at eight white or four black beads for one steer."—Rec. N. Am., V: 182.

Arien Appel, who has boarded and lodged some soldiers of the English garrison, seeks payment from the city, but is referred to Gov. Nicolls or Thomas Delawar.—Rec. N. Am., V: 183, 187-88.

Feb.

1664, the burgomasters and schepens in office at that time were continued. That article stipulated that they should also thereafter name and elect their successors. Under the Dutch régime they had been allowed only to nominate, whilst the election was reserved to the director-general and council. Following out now (Feb. 2) the model set forth in the first city court bench. This done, they submitted their action to Gov. Nicolls, to learn "if he had any objection to these persons." He had not, and the board proceeded to proclaim the new bench to the commonalty of the city at the city hall. The new members took the oath of allegiance to the English authority on the 5th, and their oath of office on the following day. Not one member of this bench was an Englishman. H. N. Y. G. Hist. Ext., III: 146-47.

Col. Cartwright advises Gov. Nicolls that "the Fort is not to be kept 2 days longer nor 2 bowers, by having the walls raised higher, in my opinion, and therefore a battery upon the point would be of greater advantage and more considerable than the Fort itself, if ever the town be fortified." The same materials will serve in both places.—Broedhead, Hist. of N. Y., III: 96.

14 Gov. Nicolls to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut: "I have for the speedy dispatch of Letters of Publicke concern, made a Law that any letter attested on the back side with the Name of the Governor of any Colony, and directed to mee, or from mee so attested by mee to any Governor or other person shall be immediately dispatch'd from Constable to Constable, who is to press a horse and man for such service at the rate of sixe pence per mile." He suggests that Winthrop "cause the same to be put in practice" in the colony of Con- necticut, the payment to be "made upon the Publicke business."—Win- throp, Papiers, XVI: 23, in Mass. Hist. Soc. For the establishment of the first regular postal service, see Dec. 19, 1672.

"The members of the city court unanimously agree to obey the ordinances "on the subject of being absent and coming too late as well as ordinary as extraordinary Court days."—Rec. N. Am., V: 189.

Elizabeth Tyssner(n) receives a patent by way of confirmation for a plot "having on ye southwest the Maids Path, and on the north- west the East River and on the southwest the house of Peter Hermes which said southwest side contains by estimation 120 feet, 6 inches, the southeast side, 127 feet, and the northwest side 220 feet."—Lib. Patents, I: 33 (Albany). See also Mass. Col. Coun., (1856), 467.

This day is set by Gov. Nicolls for the appearance of two deputies from each town on Long Island and Westchester for a general meeting at Hempstead, "to Sete good and knowne Laws within this govt for the future of this Colony". The Duke of York's Laws are promulgated at Hempstead, L. L. Gov. Nicolls having them compiled from the statues governing other English colonies in America. Regarding the various original written copies of these, and the later printed ones, as well as their substance and amendments, see Col. Laws N. b., I: 6-100.

The preparation and publication of these laws were done in obedience to the duke's commission to Nicolls, dated April 2, 1666 (q. v.). A letter of March 13, from Gov. Nicolls to Gov. Winthrop of Connecticut, acknowledged the receipt of a copy of the Connecticut laws which he "was upon the way to Hempsted." He said that he had finished the body of Laws for his government, except the Publicke Rates whereby he gaue the Deputies their choice amongst all the Laws of the other Colonies which receiued verbatim those of Conscott." All the other laws, he said, were "collected either out of those of Boston, Newhaven, Mary Land or Virginia, and by that you may count them (see Aug. 28, 1665) except those of ye Colony." The governor went on to tell of his "great tryalls and exercise of patience" with "some very disabling persons" [Capt. Young of Southold and John Howell of Southampton] whom I sought most to satisfy both with reasons & Civility." I made divers concessions (Feb. 2) he also this time, and it is quite plain that I would give them the most honourable share in the Government but I found they . . . refused any office att all which you know passeth not vnpunished in other Colonies but I am too well Natural to deal harshly though with the worst of men.

Furthermore, when, at the conclusion of the meeting, the other deputies signed "a publick address to his R. Highness ... that and they and their doe submit cheerfully according to the Tenour of the words of the Royal Highness and his Grace, without which are or shall be established," Young and Howell did not sign.—Win-66-70.

These laws, thus formulated, are ill-arranged and relate to a large number of subjects, such as the proceedings of courts in various actions at law; the administration of estates, slavery, the boundaries of towns and common lands; brewers; the registration of births, marriages, and burials; capital offences; branding and impounding of cattle, horses, sheep, and hogs; public worship and holy ordinances; children and servants; physicians and surgeons; conveyances; forfeit of doves; fast days and thanksgiving; official fees; crimes; induekeepers and ordinary; Indians: defamation; lying and false news; military affairs; marriages; master and servants; public officers (such as constables, overseers, justices of the peace, etc.); public charges; weights and measures; wolves; shipwrecks; oaths; forms of procedure, etc.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 6-73. The laws further provide that the present form of the posed of "The Governor and Council with the High Sheriff & the Justices of the Peace" shall be held at New York one year, a beginning on the last Thursday in September. This court had the "supreme Power of making, altering and abolishing any Laws" in New York.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 165; N. Y. Codified Laws, III: 188.

Some authorities believe that a court of assizes existed before March 1, 1665. Chalmers, Pol. Am., I: 575, says that Nicolls, in ereciting this court, was merely "Prudently copying what had already been established by the Dutch;" and Dawson, in The Sons of Liberty in N. Y., 11 (footnote), puts forth the suggestion that the court of assizes was the same as the Dutch "Court of Director General and Council." See also Brodhead, op. cit., II: 63 (footnote).

These laws were amended in many particulars in Sept. and Oct., 1665, and added to in 1669, 1671, 1672, 1675.—Col. Laws N. Y., II: 75-100. An alphabetical index was made in 1669 in the East Hampton (L. I.) copy; the one preserved in the City of New York.
The City was made by these laws the place of record of bargains, sales, or other conveyances, of the administration and probate of wills.—Ibid., 62. There is a copy of the laws at Albany, in the office of the secretary of state. They are printed in N. Y. Hist.

To the city court, Schout Anthony charges Lysbet Ackermans with using an un stamped weight and unstamped wine measure; that on Jan 8 (Sunday) people went into her house, "after the third bell rang," to drink; also that she had insulted and abused Dowser and Williams, Godwin, Schout and lodge; takes away or excuses in extenuation of the charges, but the court decrees that she will "have to clear herself by oath."—Rec. N. Am., V: 192-93.

Gov. Nicolls, writing to Gov. Winthrop, says: "I shall cause a Copy of our Laws [see March 1] to be written according to your desires."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 165. If ever made, this copy seems to have disappeared. There is preserved in the Mass.
Hist. Soc. a fine manuscript copy of the Duke's Laws that was sent in 1675 to the chief magistrate of Nantucket (then a part of New York). It is in the handwriting of John Clarke, the engraving clerk in the office of Sec'y Matthias Nicolls; it contains 62 leaves, of which the last three are blank. The first page is an engrossed title, as follows: "Laws Established by his Royall Highness James Duke of York & Albany &c To be observed in his R. H's Territories in America." There is a statement, dated April 22, 1675, in the handwriting of Matthias Nicolls, that the oath of fidelity was always to the king, and that proceedings were in the king's name.—Cf. Hough, Nantucket Papers, 59. Ex. Doc. Min., II: 372-77.

Gov. Nicolls issues a warrant to the "Scout, and p'sent Magistrates of Harlem" to require that they take "special care, that none of your Towne p'sume to sell any sort of Strong Liquor, or Strong Spirituous, on any sudden occasion also, and to prevent offending therein, that y08 Seize upon such Liquor, and bring such Persons before mee to make Answer for y8 Offence."—N. Y. S. L.

Albert Leedestrand and Araniemy Cornelis petition the city court for leave and permission to put up "of their land taken by the Hoo; Petrus Stuyvesant and laid out for the Village of N: Haerlem." Stuyvesant was furnished with a copy of the petition and order by the court to make an "answer thereunto in writing."—

The president of the city court informs the bench that, during a visit by him and Burgomaster Van Cortlandt on the previous day to Gov. Nicolls, the governor had told them the soldiers were in need of being boarded and of having their washing done, and that they had no "pot or kettle to cook for themselves," and it "was therefore necessary to quarter the soldiers in the Burgurers' houses;"
adding, that he would furnish weekly rations for the soldiers and the burgomasters should give payment of two guilders weekly for each soldier for lodging money, in consideration of which the city sheuld have, "in addition to the great excuse, the income of the Scales and the Ferry, and that eighty soldiers" should "be quartered, two and two in a house." The city bench agree to "see some Burgurers" to obtain their consent to lodge soldiers. Meanwhile, the schout is given to Gov. Nicolls to invite his presence at their meeting. The schout returning, reports that the governor is "not yet dressed," but has requested "that Burgomasters and Scheepen would please

A large number of burgers and inhabitants having been "invited to appear at the City Hall this day," about three hundred respond. The president of the bench informs them of the governor's proposal and the reasons thereof (see March 29); that the governor wanted to quarter the soldiers so as to prevent further disturbances and insolences by them, and that the governor promised, if any person suffered "by a mistake or impulsion" from the soldiers billeted in a house, he would "make good the same and charge the damage to the soldiers." Most of those present refuse to lodge

The president of the city court informs his associates that he and Burgomaster Van Cortlandt have again a conference with Gov.
 Nicolls at which the governor "accused them of sloth" in regard to "quartering the soldiers in the Burgurers' houses" (see March 31).
If they have not sufficient authority, Nicolls is willing to vest them with it; he intends to send for them in the evening, in order to hear their resolutions. After listening to this report, the court agrees unanimously that it "originally resolved" to receive from the Governor that the subject be postponed "till to-morrow in order to bear thereon the old Burgomasters and Scheepen as well as some of the principal Burgers, and to ask their advice."—Rec.
N. Am., V: 211.

The conference with the court members was held on the 7th.

The governor's proposal was again presented, but those present unanimously declared "they would rather contribute than receive the soldiers into the house." Gov. Nicolls then appeared, and again they were asked "man for man," in his presence, "if they intended to quarter them in the houses, but they persisted in their former declaration. After all had withdrawn except the governor and the regular members of the bench, Nicolls delivered a written order, charging the court to give him a list of houses sufficient for lodging 100 soldiers, and to so distribute the number that not more than two would be lodged in any one house. To this the court replied that the commonalty dreaded to receive soldiers in their houses, in view of the insolences that the soldiers were even now committing against the people.—Ibid., V: 212-13. See April 18 and 19.

Bartholdus Maan complains to the city court "that two soldiers struck him on the head on the 5th of April or thereabouts, New Style," that, although he was forbidden by Gov. Nicolls "to tap for the soldiers," he was forced to it by the soldiers, who came in crowds before his door, even taking "two of his great glasses," and accusing him falsely "of having presented a pistol at them to shoot them," when, in fact, they had "taken the pistol from his bedside" and carried it off, he only securing it again "outside his door." He also accuses two soldiers of insulting his wife of a number of soldiers coming in and, "with naked swords, hacking and striking all within their reach," giving him and Daniel Verveen a cut, as well as later "in the night after the rounds had passed," smashing his window in pieces, an offence which they had committed against his house on a previous occasion also. Rec. N. Am., V: 211 and 213. Nicolls, by the soldiers determined the commonalty not to quarter them in their houses, as the governor had desired.—Ibid., 213.

In the city court of June 15, Bartholdus Maan was again in trouble, the schout charging that there was "disturbance and riot" at deift. house on the 3rd of June, which the city court acused with having drawn a knife, also presented a pistol" and that the governor had ordered him, the schout, "to take informa-
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

19. The earliest known street directory of New York City was a "List of the Burghers and Inhabitants of this City that are assessed" for the lodging of the English soldiers. It gives, all told, 254 names, as follows: At the Marketfield, 11; on the Heere Straat (Broadway), 22; on the Strand of the North River, 15; at the Cingel or City Wall, 10; on High St., 41; along the Waal, 11; by the Water (now Pearl St.), 15; on Pearl St., 71; on Brewer St., 115; on Winkel St., 5; on Bridge St., 15; on the Heere Grafs, 20; on the Prince Grafs, 17; on Prince St., 33; on the Beavers Grafs, 9; in Marketfield Alley, 8; on Sme (Smith's St.), 11; in the Fish Street, 1; on the Water behind the Landgrafs, 5.—Rec. N. Am., V. 221-235. Cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1849), 356-399; Ibid. (1850), 452; Ibid. (1861), 61-62. This list as given in Wilson Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 338-340, teems with errors. The "De Sille List" (see July 10, 1660, and The Nicasius de Sille List, II: 349-351) was a census of houses rather than a directory.

The city council is again apprised of the governor's order for billeting 100 soldiers (see March 29), and that he offers now a weekly pay of three guilders for each servant "or goods equivalent," Nobody was satisfied, however, unless another two guilders were added. This being conceded, enough placards were carried by the 100 men. Nicolls was given the list of the houses, and he gave it to Capt. Delavall and Salibury "with orders to inspect the houses;" and to ascertain if they were "adapted for the reception and lodging of the soldiers." They reported to him that the houses were "almost all fit except fifteen in number wanting double bedding and pillows for two persons, which Burgomasters and Schepens having fitted up, they were delivered over to Capt. Salibury on the 18th of this month by order of the Hon. Govt. Nicolls." The governor was "about to depart for Boston . . . in three or four days," hence he "thought fit to suspend the quarterings until his return, so as to remove difficulties between Burgers and solders, but "on condition that Burgomasters and Schepens should pay now to the soldiers the two guilders per week in servant as lodging money, which they had previously promised to the Burgers for the quartering the solders." The court decided "to accept the proposition of Gov. Nicolls," I was considering it to be for the comfort and good inhabitants of the city, and resolved upon "a general assessment" to raise the 200 guilders requested weekly (see also June 17). Jan Jelissen Keock was authorized by the court "to go, with one of the Court Messengers, from house to house with the assessment list, and collect the monies from each for so much as he is assessed." On the 20th, he received his formal act of authority, in which he was "ordered to prepare both notes and strings of wampum of two guilders to two hundred guilders and deliver them to the Treasurer" of the city; if there was a residue, he could give that to the treasurer in any greater sum, yet, it is wise "receive any sum without mentioning it," since he was "responsible for the monies, for the counting of which he was promised "ten guilders a week."—Rec. N. Am., V. 220-225. See May 2.

A certificate states that grants of land near Stuyvesant's bowery, were made in 1659 and 1660 to divers negroes; the negroes' names are given generally together with the date. May 3.

Because of complaints "That the Scout of Harlem does not execute his Office, and y' several disorders committed, and y' Inhabitants hinders of their accustomed Rights," the governor orders that the "Magistrates now in being, do Act as formerly, and in case the Scout does not Execute his duties, he is to take justice in his place, for the good of the Towne," and to decide all matters, doth, or shall happen there, not exceeding the value of one hundred guild in Wampum."—N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 1652-66.

Petrus Stuyvesant visits the city court and informs the bench that, as his time is short and he is about to depart for Holland (see April 2), he wishes them "every luck and happiness," sentiments which the court reciprocates. He requests the court, if proper in their eyes, to "accede to him a certificate of his comportment," which may "avail him or his children today or tomorrow." After due consideration, the court issues to him a certificate, stating that he has "during about eighteen years' administration conducted and demeaned himself not only as a Director General, according to the best of our knowledge ought to do, on all occurring circumstances, for the interest of the West India Company, but besides as an honest proprietor and patriote of this Province and a supporter of the Reformed Religion."—Rec. N. Am., V. 233.

Pieter Wolphertsen van Couvenhoven and others appear in court and are told about the governor's resolve, "that for the good of the place an assessment list is made of what each shall have to give per week as long as Gov. Nicolls shall be from home or at least for six weeks, so that the soldiers may not be quartered in Burgers' houses and that they were found unwilling to contribute the same" (see April 19). Their reasons are demanded. They reply that the money was not expended as well as it ought and that the soldiers notwithstanding evince their insolence; also that the assessment was unjust, because one is taxed in proportion higher than the others. The board endeavours "in a friendly way" to pacify the objectors, on the ground that it is only for six weeks' time. They then agree to bring in what they are assessed. Some women came into court, to whom the situation was explained, and the court allowed each of the women "to give according to her ability." So more was gained by friendly intercession than by force.—Rec. N. Am., V. 223-23.

Gov. Nicolls holds out inducements to Gov. Winthrop to settle in New York City, addressing him by letter thus: "If your resolutions are not to accept of the Government of Connecticut the Year ensuing, I was considering it to be for the comfort of the Inhabitants and good inhabitants of the city, and resolved upon a "general assessment" to raise the 200 guilders requested weekly (see also June 17). Jan Jelissen Keock was authorized by the court to go, with one of the Court Messengers, from house to house with the assessment list, and collect the monies from each for so much as he is assessed." On the 20th, he received his formal act of authority, in which he was "ordered to prepare both notes and strings of wampum of two guilders to two hundred guilders and deliver them to the Treasurer" of the city if there was a residue, he could give that to the treasurer in any greater sum, yet it is wise "receive any sum without mentioning it," since he was "responsible for the monies, for the counting of which he was promised "ten guilders a week."—Rec. and orders by the court, she did nothing, and the case dragged along for almost three years. —Ibid., VI: 300, 342, 343-44, 351. Finally, on May 12, 1665, the court ordered the sheriff to have one of the city carpenters "finish the Watercourse," and to seize upon 100 muskets and other "armes" for one week, to repair the costs of the work and the charges of the court. —Ibid., VI: 127. This decree seems to have been carried out (ibid., VII: 138), but it does not appear to have been done to the satisfaction of Willemsen, for he complained again (Dec. 5, 1671). The court then ordered the execution of former orders without delay. —Ibid., VI: 128.

An order from Gov. Nicolls directs Cornelis van Ruyven to adjust accounts with Warner Wessells "for the farmes hee hired the last yeares, of the West India Company, and also, to Account with him, what is due from him to the said Company, on any former Account." Van Ruyven was also desired to adjust accounts with John Bartelson, weighmaster. —N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 171.

A municipal government, of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff, is established for the first time. By the governour's proclamation, this English form displaces that of the Dutch schooff, burgomasters, and schepenen. The leaves which contain the order of "Revocation of the franchise of the Officers and Magistrates of Amsterdam and Schepenen" (June 12, 1665), and the charter of Gov. Nicolls, establishing a court of mayor and aldermen (June 12, 1665), are missing in the original minutes of the city court, under June 13, 1665. In the printed Rec. N. Am., ed. by Fernow, these two documents were added "hereunder" of the city court. Fernow stated: "No other records have been destroyed in the capital fire at Albany in 1911." —Rec. N. Am., VI: 248-50.

In the "Revocation," the change in the form of government is indicated by Nicolls as follows: 1) "do Revoke and discharge the forme and Ceremony of Government of this his Ma:estie Towne of New York, under the Name or Names, Style or Styles, of Scout Burgomasters and Schepenen; ... I do further declare, That by a Particular Commission, Such Persons shall be Authorized to putt the Lawes in Execucion, in whose abilities, Prudencie and good Affection to his Maties Service, and ye Peace and happinesse of this Gov: I have specially reason to put Confidence, which persons so Constituted and appointed the service of printed, and the same are by ye Name and Style of Mayor, Aldermen and Sherifffes, according to the Custome of England in other his Ma:estie Corpora- cions." See also editorial in N. Y. Times, June 27, 1921.

In the "Mayor and Aldermen's Commission," Nicolls further states that he has found it necessary to change the form of government under the name of "Scout, Burgomaster, and Schepen," which are not known or Customary, in any of his Ma:estie Dominions; To the end that the course of Justice for the future, may bee Legally, equally and impartially administered to all his Ma:estie Subjects as well Inhabitants as Strangers; Know All Men by these Presents, That You do Submit to, and be bound by the Ordinance, Constitute and Declare, That the Inhabitants of New York, New Harleem with all other his Ma:estie Subjects, Inhabitants upon this Island, Commonly call'd and Known by the name of the Manhattans Island, are, and shall bee for ever, accounted, Nominate and Established, as one Body Politique & Corporations, Under the Government of a Mayor, Aldermen and Sherifffes, and I do by these Psent Constitute and appoint, for one whole year, ... Mr Thomas Willlet [see Feb. 4] to bee Mayor, Mr Thomas Delaval, Mr Oloffe Stuyveyst, Mr John Brugges, Mr Cornelius van Ruyven and Mr John Laurence, to bee Aldermen, and Mr Allard Anthony to bee Sheriff, Giving to them the said Mayor and Aldermen, or any foare of them, whereof the said Mayor or his Deputy, shall bee always one, and upon equall Divi- sions of voyes, to have always the Casting and Decideing voyes, full Power and authority to Rule and Govern as well the Inhabitants of this Corporacon as any Strangers. ... As also, to appoint such under Officers as they shall judge necessary for the orderly execution of Justice; And I do hereby strictly Charge and Command all persons to obey and execute, from Time to Time, all such Warrants, Orders and Constitutions, as shall be made by the said Mayor and Aldermen, as they will Answer the Contrary at their peril, his Maties Court, and the Court of Fletchers in M. C. C:, II: 53-54. The following oath of office is from N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, where a better English text is found than the one in Rec. N. Am., VI: 251-52—

"Oath of Office:"

"An Oath taken by the Mayor and Aldermen of New York. Whereas you Thomas Willlet are Chosen and appointed by the Governo[r], to bee Mayor, of this his Ma:estie City and Corporacon of New York, and the Liberryes thereof, (And you Thomas Delaval, Oloffe Stuyvene, John Brugges, Cornelius van Ruyven and John Laurence, to bee Aldermen, and Allard Anthony to bee Sherifff,) You do Swear to the best of your natural knowledge and belief, That you will most and truly serve and maintain the peace of this Colony, under the protection of this Governor, that you will truly Endeavour to ye best of your skill, with a good Conscience, and according to the Lawes of this Governor, dispense Justice equally and impartially, in all Cases, and to all Persons, where unto by vertue of ye office, You are Impowered, You will ever and evermore Endeavour to ye best of your skill, and by putting in Practice such Peculiar Lawes, as at present, or from Time to Time, are, or shall bee found necessary or expedient for the good of the Inhabitants, and the Establishment of their just Rights and Priviledges; So help you god." —N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 174.

Gov. Nicolls appears in the city court at the city hall, accompanied by the newly appointed mayor and aldermen (see June 12). Burgomaster Olof Stevensen van Cortlandt, who has been named as one of the aldermen on the new board, arises and maintains that the abrogation of the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepenen at this time is "directly contrary to the 1668 Article made on the Revolution," that "At Amsterdam, magistrates, who have continued in office ever since. A considerable debate ensues; but Gov. Nicolls is determined to proceed in conformity with his instructions from the Duke of York, "to establish the government of this City conformable to the custom of England," which is done on this day. He declares he has "nothing to say against rating nor against their demeanour; he acknowledges as "good" what they have "heretofore officially resolved and concluded;" but declares he has "qualified some English for the office on purpose," so that litigants, "as well English and Dutch, "may be better aided on both sides," and in the interest of "the peace and quiet of the inhabitants." This done, Gov. Nicolls "installed" the mayor, aldermen, and sheriff and administered the oath to the alderman. After the taking of the oath and "the customary ringing of the bell three times," the new court was "proclaimed to the commonalty." —Rec. N. Am., VI: 250-52.

Gov. Nicolls, in accordance with his major's commission of Feb. 23, 1664, declares "favored, and Proprietors, Goods, Estate both Real and Personal, Debts and Credits, belonging to the said West India Company, ... are confiscated to the use and Service of his Ma:estie." —N. Y. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 174-75. See Dec. 24, 1664, and June 22, 1665. Brodhead states that the old West India Company went into liquidation soon after the conquest of New Netherland in 1664 and the new corporation took no interest in its recapture. —Brodhead, Hist. State of N. Y., 209, footnote.

The newly organized city court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff (see June 12) holds its first meeting. They vote to continue Joannes Nieves as secretary of the city, at 200 guilders seawort as an annual allowance (see June 27), and "to increase the emolument and fees for writing by allowing [similar] to charge for them silver value, or sewant three for one," keeping Nieves "a month or two on trial." —Rec. N. Am., VI: 252.

Claes van Elisland and Pieter Schasfsbank, who served as court messengers under the court of schout, burgomasters, and schepenen, are now "continued in their offices as Towne Serjeants" by the newly organized city court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff, at the same wages as heretofore. —Ibid., VI: 252. On Oct. 10, 1667, they both represented in court, "that they were employed on all occurring occasions by the Governor [Nicolls], Chief-Justice & [Delaprance], and other officers without receiving any pay therfore," and requested "some allowance," since their regular income was insufficient for their support. The court asked Mayor Willet to consult the governor and other provincial officers about it. —Ibid., VI: 301. Hendrick Obe and others were summoned to preserve the peace and prevent its infringement; to "truly execute such warrants" as were handed to him by the court, and, in his

The newly-organized court of mayor, aldermen, and sheriff orders "the Court of Haarlem and the Constable Resolveout Wal- dron by letter" to be present at their session on the 17th, for the purpose of receiving their orders.—Rec. N. Am., V: 252-53. According to the day named, Waldron, as constable, was notified of his election to the post of "Constable of N. Haarlem;" he accepted and took the oath. The magistrates, who came with Waldron, were then "discharged from their office," and Waldron, as constable, was authorized "to select three or four persons," as overseers, who were "to decide any differences or disputes to the extent of five pounds sterling in sums or no higher," and, if any party was dissatisfied with the decision, he could appeal therefrom to the city court of New York, upon payment of six st. to the constable and the costs of proceeding before the city bench.—Ibid., V: 254.

The new city court resolves "to draft a Placard relative to the observance of the Sabbath."—Rec. N. Am., V: 253.

"Whereas the provision regarding the City revenue as well from the Burgurers as tapsters excise on wines and beer consumable within the jurisdiction of this City is somewhat high, inasmuch as the Twenty-fiue per cent and the twelve per cent in like manner five per cent," the city court "resolved to observe the strictest economy therein; also to order the Treasurer and Collector to appear next Saturday afternoon at two o'clock here in the City Hall to render a good account of their administration."—Rec. N. Am., V: 255.

The churchyard of the city (Castello Plan, II: 221-22, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927) is "very open and unfenced," so that the hogs root there. The mayor's court sends for the churchwardens, one of whom, Govert Loockermann, appears. He is told of the conditions and "the necessity of repairing the same." He replies that such repairs can be made easily enough if there is "money in the chest;" and that it will cost 500 guilders to do the work properly. It is concluded to raise the sum by "a collection."—Rec. N. Am., V: 255. See Nov. 15.

The mayor's court votes "that from now henceforward, and until Gov. Nicolls shall "order otherwise," there shall "be raised weekly from the Commonwealth" a levy of "two hundred guilders in sewan," according to assessment, "for the support of the soldiers as heretofore."—Rec. N. Am., V: 254-55. See also April 19.

The mayor's court resolves "that both the Burgurers' and tapsters' permits, passed by the Collector," shall "be brought every evening to Nicholas Bayard by the labourers of the bachelors and the beer drawlers," and that the "Weigh house labourers and beer carriers" shall appear at the city hall on the next Monday, at nine in the morning.—Rec. N. Am., V: 255. On that day (19th), Bayard was notified that he was to be furnished thereafter "with the number of said beer and wares, called the Mayordom as well by the Burgurers as tapsters and tavernkeepers" in the city's jurisdiction, "to be executed by the Collector Tymotheus Gabry, whereof he shall be bound to keep a register; and that he should "sit, every Court day, with the Secretary Nevis in Court, and keep the minutes" of what was "transacted in English, translate the same into Dutch, make extracts thereof in English, and . . . agree with the . . . Secretary for the writing both of the same and of the Dutch." At the same time, the court reinaugurated the ordinance relative to the dutes to be performed by the weigh-house and beer porters, of whom Barent Jacobsen Kool was foreman, and the men took the oath of good instruction (see below).—Ibid., V: 255.

Paulus Leendertson vander Grit, the city treasurer, and Timotheus Gabry, the collector (see June 15), appear before the city court and produce their accounts "relating to the income, receipt and expenditure of the City's domain."—Rec. N. Am., V: 254.

The city court determines "to abolish the office of Treasurer and the monies as well of the Burgurers as tappers excise," to "be received by the Collector Tymotheus Gabry," who is "to disburse the same on the order and signatures of Mayor Tomas Willet and the Secretary Joannes Nevisius;" and the secretary of the city is "to keep a book thereon, and to take the orders."—Ibid., V: 255. On June 19, Gabry, the collector of the city, prom- ised the court "to conduct himself honestly" in his office, and took the formal oath.—Ibid., V: 255-56. See June 5, 1676.

A riot, caused by some soldiers from the fort, takes place about seven o'clock this evening "on the Bridge" by the East River, dur- ing which several persons are struck with swords, and the constable, Hendrick Obs, is wounded.—Rec. N. Am., V: 260-63.

The mayor's court orders the bakers of the city "to furnish this day to Secretary Nevisius an account of what they . . . bated here during five months in cakes and hard bread, to whom delivered and how much they still have on hand."—Rec. N. Am., V: 255.

The mayor and council ordered all the tapsters of the city to appear at the city hall on next Saturday (24th) in the afternoon, "bringing with them their last obtained tapsters license."—Rec. N. Am., V: 260. On the 24th, Secretary Nevisius was "ordered to give the tap- sters a license" on the following Monday (26th), "to enable them to go for some time or a year."—Ibid., V: 263.

Gov. Nicolls directs the civil and military officers of the three ridings of Yorkshire to put their jurisdictions "into such a Posture, and readiness," for the defence of New York against the contem- plated visit of the Dutch fleet under Admiral De Ruyter, that "upon the first notice" they shall "immediately repair to the ferry, or against New York" as a place of rendezvous under arms.—N. T. Col. Doc., XIV: 768. Yorkshire was the name which was given to Long Island by Capt. Nicolls when New Netherland came into the hands of the English.—N. T. Col. Doc., III: 105.

This day, "after the usual ringing of the City Hall bell three times," "the Collector in like manner five per cent," "ordered the Collector to appear next Saturday afternoon to two o'clock here in the City Hall to render a good account of their administration."—Rec. N. Am., V: 262. See June 15.

Gov. Nicolls sends a letter to Gov. John Winthrop of Connecticut, enclosing a copy of a letter from the king, in which he had ordered "to provide the best yot can," against the Common Enemy; I have made some former proposals to yot of mutual Assistance upon such occasions, but I could hitherto, never obtain a Satisfactory Answer, yourselves well know, that ye preservation of this place, is of the greatest Consequence to the Safety, (not only of his Majesty's Interest in New England, but more Particularly of your several Plantations adjacent, You may Read in his Majesty's Letter that he hath before pleased to Authorize and Impower mee, to See that ye Publick Peace and Safety, be diligently attended in this conjunc- ture of affairs, and therefore I desire yot will give some speedy direction, that the Neighbor Townes of your Colony, do upon notice from me, of the Enemies approach, repair to New York, to yot place De Ruiter hath Orders to give a visit, as my Letters from my Lord Chancellor informe." Winthrop is also requested to forward enclosures to Boston.—N. T. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 177; N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 567. The original letter is among the Winthrop Papers in the Mass. Hist. Soc.

Under this date, Gov. Nicolls writes also to Gov. Bellingham, of Massachusetts, enclosing a copy of "his Majesty's letter and dispatches to be forwarded to the governors of Plymouth and Rhode Island.—N. T. S. L. Bull., Hist. No. 2, 177-78; N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 567-68. The last sentence reads: "The mayor's court "shall be letted" by order of the mayor and alder- men, as heretofore, until further order, "except the Burgner tax.""—Rec. N. Am., V: 263.

The earliest panel of jurors and earliest case of trial by jury in the mayor's court of New York City are of record on this date.—Rec. N. Am., V: 267.

Mayor Willet informs his colleagues on the city court bench that he intends "to goe to Albania with the first Convenient opportunity" and desires the court to "accept in his absence as his Deputy Mr Thomas d'Laval" (Delavall), one of the aldermen, who by this time had been the first deputy mayor of New York City.—Rec. N. Am., V: 268.

The city being "very Open and unfortified," Mayor Willet asks the city court if it were not expedient to call the inhabitants together, to learn if they are willing to contribute toward the forti- fying of the place. The bench agrees that the fortiying is necessary but suggests, before consulting with the inhabitants, "to hear the advice" of Gov. Nicolls in the premises. Yet, on the following day (28th), the people assembled "by order off the Court," when the mayor laid his proposition before them and asked for their advice. He held them there to lay "very Open and to Nee Capacity to Resist the Violence of an Enemy," whether this be so, "they did not judge it necessary that the Ould works made for the forti- fying off the Towne should be Repaired, and that the West syde alongeth Hudsons River should be fortiified with good and sufficient pallissades for the use off which." Gov. Nicolls had "proffered to CHARTER OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH, DEC. 6, 1664. SEE P. 251.
CONTRIBUTE two thousand Pallissades & thousand Gilders in wampum.

He said, "the intent of this proposition" was "not to Constrain any Inhabitant to fight against his own Nation but to make the Towne defensive against the Violence of an enemy wthout seeking to destroy the same." He was ready to abide by anything that the mayor and aldermen should think best and order; but some of the people declared the city was strong enough; "others that they could not work before they had their Armes Restored to them againe & many other excuses, but that he had a mind to see things done."—Rec. N. Am., V. 266-66.

Nevins asks for his dismissal from the office of secretary of the city (see June 15), on the ground that he cannot support himself and family, having "no other income than that received from the City," which is inadequate. The court grants his discharge.—Rec. N. Am., V. 265. He was succeeded in the secretariat by Nicolaes Bayard, but Nevins continued to hold possession of "the old books and papers." As these were "frequently" needed in administration, the court, on July 18, ordered him to hand over to Bayard, "in the presence of Cornelis van Ruyven, all books and papers appertaining in any wise to the Secretary."—Ibid., V. 279.

The portrait of the 60th Chamber, petition of the mayor's court for "an increase of fees," as they find their income inadequate. The court establishes, therefore, a new rate for their fees, as tabulated in the records.—Rec. N. Am., V. 265-66.

The city hall (the "old Stadt Huys") is for the first time called "the City house," in the minutes of the city court.—Rec. N. Am., V. 269.

GOV. Nicolls writes to the Earl of Clarendon: "wee have rather hopes then fears of De Ruyvers arrival, ... I must not flatter you Ldpp with the Imaginary strength of the flott which is truly insignificant compared with Land forces, but all his fleet shall doe vs no prejudice, I have set double stockades round, and mounted 40 pieces of Cannon upon the Walls & Batteries I have 300 men here for the defence, besides the other Garrisons which may not bee Left naked. I have furnish all the English about here with Armes & ammunition, and disarmed only 46 Burgers of this place ... I was soo much solicited to be present at Boston in hopes of being appointed to an Issue of his Maties Comission, that after having settled every thing in good order here I made a journey through the Woods to Boston, and returne back in a months time, ... you Ldpp will alowe be more fully informed that the late Indenture made to my Ld Berkley and Sr George Carteret is to the manifest destruction of the Dukes Colony, for my lord, the very name of the Dukes power here, hath bine one great motive for well affected men to Remove hither out of other Collonies, men well affected to Monarchy, and have found that our new Lawes are not contrueed so Democratically as the Rest, and when I was last at Boston, I did engage a huge Army, 5000 men, and did desire them of their Encouragement, but good land is none of the least Arguments to a Planter which was then to be seen found in the Dukes Pattent, but now is wholly given away, In discharge of my duty to his Royal Highnesse, and the trust reposed in me I beg pardon for being very plaine in the matter, My Lord, all that part of the Dukes Patente joyning to Nova Scotia is not worth a farthing, when it comes to Long Island which is a place of common fame, I assure you Ldpp it is as barren a soyle as any part of New England, meane inhabited by a poore sort of people who are forre to labour hard for bread and clothing, the whole revenue which can bee drawn from these parts is of what is given to the inhabitants, which is little abose a hundred pound sterling, with which sume all the courts of Justice and other Publique charges are to bee maintained, I durst not endeavoe to stretch their pursers farther in the infaunry of this change least [sic] their affections should bee perverted, and wee doe not want ill neighbours to doe us ill offices in such occasions. But by this means all their mothres are stote, and the first 3 sessions have bine held with good saffacion to all the Collony, in 7ber is held a generall Assizes the Governour, Counsell, and Justices upon the Bench, where the lawes are againe to bee reviewed and amended, in case any reasonable obectons bee made, otherwase the Lawes bee given into operation to his Royal Highnesse for his Royal hand, to make them authentick, and then if they were printed and immediately sent over they would bee fully satisfactory to these parts, and of some consequence to his Maties Interest, in relation to the other Collonies, your Ldpp will alowe perceive by this inclined determination, between the Commissioners with the Governour and counsell of Consciencit that those Townes upon the maine to the Eastward of N. Yooke did properly belong to their precedent possater, see that there remaynes only, One small Towne to his Royall highnesse, of all that tract of land from Connecticut Riuver to Hudsons Riuer, see that up Hudsons River to Orange and Cornelis Steynwicken (Long Townes) and noe cold that few or none will be- stow their Labours. Only one Towne is sent to which or very near the Indenture reacheth. about that 50 miles is Albany seated, who are noe planters but only a townse of Trade, with the Indians, Thus the extent of the Dukes Pattent is descibed to you Ldpp [see also July 11, 1674] and I humbly begg your Ldpp to take the whole matter into serious consideration, for if the Duke will improve this place to the vtnost, Neither the trade, the Riuer, nor the Adjacent lands must bee devided from this Collony, but remayne Entire, But if his Royall Highnesse bee weary of the hopes of his new Acquisition It would be much better for the publique good to devest himself of the whole ..."—Clarendon Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1896), 74-77.

Elizabeth, N. J., is founded by Philip Carteret and a party of colonists.—Winsor, op. cit., III, 441-55.

It having been found that "commonly each Court day" some of the members of the 57th Chamber "proceed before the appointed jurymen," come in "long after the appointed time of the sitting of the Court," occasioning a "long delay" in the beginning of business, it is decreed by the court "that every one, whether of the Court or jury, having previous notice thereof, who is not present half an hour before ringing of the bell, ... unless ... prevented by sickness or other necessary circumstances," shall suffer a fine of three gilders.—Rec. N. Am., V. 280.

The mayor's court orders "that six Burgheirs" shall "every night keep watch within this City."—Rec. N. Am., V. 291. A watch during the summer season was unusual (see Oct. 4, 1659); the troubled conditions (see June 19 and 22) probably induced this action. See Nov. 18.

Arian Cornelissen, "husbandman," petitions the mayor's court for "some abatement of excise, as he is daily asked by those passing by, for a drink of beer and he can scarcely accomodate them, as he has heretofore found by experience, that if he pay them the starrs excise, no profit but loss will be realized by the spilling of the beer in carting, loss of time etc." He is "allowed to lay in half a barrel of [strong] beer, weekly, for the convenience of travellers," without the payment of "the established tappers excise thereon."—Rec. N. Am., V. 291. When Stuyvesant's order of Jan. 18, 1660 (p. 7), that people gather in hamlets or villages for mutual protection against Indian attacks, was renewed on Feb. 9, 1660 (p. 9), people north of and adjoining the fresh Water petitioned that, instead of abandoning their homes, others might be encouraged to build near them and thus fulfill the spirit of the order (see May 5, 1660). "The taxen at Starke's, near Stuyvesant's borough, which had been set up at the village, as travel increased, became known as the two-mile stopping place, and is said to have been a famous place of resort. Its situation was admirable for the purpose, and it was, no doubt, visited by those making excursions of pleasure from the city, especially sleighing parties. At this time and for a great many years, this was the only road of any great length on which such a sport could be enjoyed."—Bayles, Old Tourns of N. Y., 47-49.

The classic of Amsterdam resolves that encouragement shall be given Rev. Samuel Drinkes to remain in New York and that he shall be directed to copy as much as possible the introduction of the English liturgy into the Dutch Church. Rev. Megapolens is to be likewise instructed on this latter point.—Eccles. Rec., I, 747-75.

"The petition of Mr Evert Pieterzen, Schoolmaster and Precentor of this City," is read and considered, requesting "that he may have some proper fixed Salarium, as he was heretofore paid his wages by the Hoosic Company and has been continued in his employment from that time to the present," (see April 25). It is told that an order will be made shortly "relative to the salary of the Ministers of this City, under which the Precentorship also comes," and that proper action will then be taken on his petition.—Rec. N. Am., V. 294. See Feb. 20, 1666.

The constables and overseers of Brooklyn are ordered by Gov. Nicolls to make provision for the horses of such persons as come to Brooklyn and the ferry in order to attend the court of assizes.—N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV, 570.

The trial of Ralph and Mary Hall upon suspicion of witchcraft is held in the "Court of Assizes" in New York. They are accused of Oct. 25.
From a mayor's court record of this date, it appears that Oct. 1666
"All Saints' day" (Nov. 1) was "usually the day for the termination of leases."—Rec. N. Am. V. 264.

The carters of the city are summoned to the mayor's court and ordered "henceforward not to stand any more on their carts," be-cause this is dangerous to traffic.—Rec. N. Am. V. 309.

In the mayor's court, Sheriff Allard Anthony brings suit against 31
Abraham Pieteniue Castellotto, Esq. The latter has been arrested "by Capt.
John Jeffc [Young] authorized thereto by special warrant from the General [Gov. Nicolls] for having sold strong beer to the Indians in opposition to the order of the General made therein." Corby says he sold only beer to the Indians and was not aware of the prohibition, and had a verbal pass "to pursue that purpose" so permit-ning that strong beer was "directly forbidden by the last order enacted for this purpose," refer the parties to Gov.
Nicolls, especially because the commission of Capt. Jough provides "that the culprit be brought before his Honour," the governor.—
Rec. N. Am. V. 311. See Aug. 21, 1666. For location of tavern of Abraham Pieteniue, see Castellotto Plan, II: 313-31.

The sworn butchers of the city petition the mayor's court for an increase of "their fees and wages for slaughtering," and ask that unauthorized persons who slaughter in the city be prohibited.

The court decrees, that the rates established on Nov. 3, 1666 (q.v.), shall stand as to small cattle, and allows them an increase of one guilder for killing an ox or a cow; also that nobody save the sworn butchers be allowed to slaughter within the city, unless the sworn butchers give their "general consent" to do so.—Rec. N. Am. V. 312. The sworn butchers were enjoined, on Nov. 13, from slaughtering say animals without the consent of those sworn butchers obtained: "A Ticket of Consent from the Collector of the city, excepting only those to be killed for Gov.
Nicolls.—Ibid., V. 312-13.

Gov. Nicolls, in a letter to the Duke of York, writes: "I have Nov. 3 not been sparing either of Toyle or charges to put these parts into a posture of defendableness; the Dutch thought at the same time I was engag'd in troubles with the Indians also at Fort Albany, insomuch that I found it necessary to augment the number of my soldiers, and consequently many incident charges have arisen this summer, with all which I have struggled even to the utmost of my own monies and credit in the Country still depending on the promised supplies till now, that the winter is coming and no ships appear, the want whereof is a general Calamity, but it falls most heavy upon me in particular who am not able to support so heavy a burden any longer.
I do not value the sight of my own ruine in point of fortune, but my reputation lies at stake to the Country having so often (as a condvince of a supply) assured the Inhabitants of the care which was taken for their reliefe; who depending thereupon are now left naked to the rigour of the winter; The whole trade, both inwards & outwards is lost for want of shipping, but the charge of foure Garrisons with all their fortifications and supplies falls upon mee."

The church-wardens, Lookermans and Johannes de Peyster, are asked by the bench if they now have enough money in "the church Treasury" to "fence the grave yard" of the city (see June 15).

They reply in the negative, and add that there are "still many small debts... due here and there," which they were unable to pay on account "of the trifling income." The mayor's court then resolves "to advance from the Burghers excise" of the city "to the Church wardens" a sum sufficient "for the fencing off of the graveyard, on condition the same be repaid from the first incoming money—that which the abovesaid Church wardens promise to do."—Rec.
N. Am. V. 313. For an account of the hog nuisance in the city, see Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 90-98.

The deputy-mayor tells the members of the city bench that Gov.
Nicolls has proposed "to allow the Burghers to watch anew." Each man is to "bring on his watch two sticks of firewood," and there is to be one lantern per watch. The court thinks it better "still to continue the two night watches," and resolves to "agree civilly with them, together with two other volunters," who can then "undertake to watch on the other nights."—Rec. N. Am., V. 318-20. See Aug. 22.

In this year, Brooklyn's first church, on Fulton Ave., near—Lawrence St., was built.—Stiles, Hist. of Brooklyn, I: 166.

The mayor's court orders that all actions determinable by a jury shall come to trial on the first Tuesday of each month, and to JAN.
This end, "at the said days, a Bench of Juries" is to be appointed.—

Feb. 1666

Isaac Grevenraat sets forth, in a petition to the mayor's court, "that he hired to the late Burgomasters of this City his house standing in the Broadway for 220 a year, commencing first of March last" (see April 16, 1664), as the town now have the same, he desires payment of the rent and also a settlement for the damages done to the windows, hinges, etc., due to the improper use of the house by the solders. The court appoints a committee of three "to estimate the committed damage," and orders payment of the first half of said damages. Rec. N. Am. IV: 337-38. This house, the first house of the English settlement, was situated on the east side of Broadway, just south of Exchange Pl.—See Castello Plan, II: 237.

In the mayor's court, Sheriff Anthony declares that Omemfi Cley "keeps a very unorderly house," and that he is living "with a woman as man & wife," with whom he is not lawfully married. Withal Contrary to all godly Lawes." The sheriff requests that Cley be deprived from drawing drink any more, and be required "to depart this Towne." Cley replies, "that as long [as] he hath kept ordinary there hath bene but twice quarrel At his house & further that he hath taken the $4 Woman for his wife," and he professes to "depart from her" with the first open. The court gives him until the end of the next month (March) "to depart this Towne," and, in case he shall stay longer than the time mentioned, the court orders Cley to give security for his appearance before the court of assizes.—Rec. N. Am., V: 338.

In the mayor's court, Sheriff Anthony Proffers to give for Catharine Mills with keeping a "very unorderly house," and that, on a recent Saturday, "Several Souldiers being very drunk" came "out of hur house, which made a great tumult in the Streets & abused & beat the People whom they did meet withal." The sheriff recommends that the "ought not to be allowed to draw with any more," but "he ordered to depart this Towne." She declares the quarrel did not occur on her premises, but "after they were gone from her house," so the sheriff is instructed to bring in his evidence at the next session of the court.—Rec. N. Am., V: 338.

March 6

The court, hearing the case of Wether, commencing his libel to draw wine, ordered his premises to be "draw noe drinks, or Keepe ordinary [any] more, & further to be summoned to appear in [her] owne Person" at the next court. Apparently she kept an inn in the house rented from William Hofmeyer.—Ibid., 341.

March 10

Thomas Lambert's receives a patent by way of confirmation of a conveyance to him by Abraham ver Planck, dated July 18, 1664, for a certain lot of ground lying on the west side of Broadway with out the gate of the city, bounded on the south by land belonging to Peter van Couwenhoven; on the west by the land of Abraham Ver- planck; on the north by that of Hendrick van der Wall, and on the east by land of Henry West & merchandize 56 ft. and in length 20 rods.—Liber Patents, IV: (Albany).

Gov. Nicolls writes to Gov. Winthrop: "We have beene bound vp this Winter with a longer frost than was ever knowned in those Parts. . . . This Morning about Eight of the Clock two extraordinary great Rainbows were scene and about a quarter of an hour after three Suns were visible to the whole Towne the Rain- bows parted the 3 suns."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 1. For other unusual phenomena, see Sept. 7, 1668. A letter written by John Davenport of New Haven recites that Gov. Nicolls had a drawing made of the rainbows and suns to send to Gov. Winthrop.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 141.

Evert Pietersen asks the city court "that a suitable allowance be granted to him, inasmuch as the W Court had, on the 19th of 7th last [5], promised that an order should be made also regarding his stipend, when the preachers were granted their salary, which has now been done." The city court "decreed absolutely, that he shall receive some satisfaction for his service. But whereas the City Treasury is at present so low, that the daily expenses can scarcely he met, the petitioner is requested to wait still a while."—Rec. N. Am. IV: 340. See April 18, 1665.

An order of the mayor's court is sent to "Mt Thor: Hall and the other farmers both on this and on the other side of the Fresh Water to nominate six proper persons and send them in" to the court, "as Overseers of the Roads and Fences lying around this City."—Rec. N. Am., V: 342. See March 20.

Mar. 25

Two men found in the manage of the cattle of New Harlem, Jacques Cortelyou, the surveyor who first laid out the village, is directed by Gov. Nicolls to draw a line from the river, near the mid-dle of the town, one mile directly into the woods in such a direction as to provide the greatest "convenience of range" for the cattle.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 250-51.

The court considers the nominations made for overseers of roads and fences (see March 6) and elects "from the same Dirck Sicen & Co Lantgerstraet," and the court messenger, Eliaedot, is "ordered to summon them by the next Court day to take the oath of fidelity."—Rec. N. Am., V: 345. They came into court on the 27th, and took "the oath of fidelity," promising "to render justice according to the instructions given them, touching the fences they shall be called to, without distinction or regard of persons."—Ibid., V: 346. See April 16, 1667.

Joost Gederis (of Harlem) and Gerrit Hendricksen are accepted as "public carriers and laborers at the Weighthouse" by the mayor's court and take the required oath of fidelity.—Rec. N. Am., V: 347.

Pieter Jansen receives a patent by way of confirmation for a lot on the west side of William St., near Wall St., now included in the site of the Atlantic building.—See Liber Deeds, B: 90 (New York); Map of Dutch Grants; C. Pl. 87, and its description, III: 393.

Complaints having reached the ears of the mayor's court, "that through the expiration of the office of the previous Surveyors, such case and attention" are "not paid to the subject of surveying" as is desirable, "but [it] is almost altogether neglected" they, "being desirous to provide" against this state of affairs, elect as surveyors of the city "Sieur Frederck Philipson and Pieter Wolphertsen van Couwenhoven," who are "authorized to pay as much regard to the subject of surveying" as is proper.—Rec. N. Am., V: 349.

Gov. Nicolls, writing to the Earl of Clarendon, makes note of the severity of the winter season thus: "from the beginning of November till now we have beene frozen up, which hath not happened formerly in mans Memory." As one of the king's commissioners to New England, he sends a report of the difficulties encountered in Massachusetts: "Thus ended our affairs at Boston so that as Commission^ we have settled only the bounds of the three Colonies of Connecticut Plymouth & Rhode Island yet have not fully visited Connecticut. Where indeed at our coming there will not bee two once, on the contrary for the want of a refractory disposition . . ." The report continues.

"My Lord I have according to ye Lordsshipps Comands . . . used all my Endevaours to keepe up the spirits both of the Merchants Planters & Souldiers^ in daily hopes of the supplyes mentioned, I have run my selfe into debt both here & at Boston, I haue consumed a considerable sume which I brought of my owne, I haue charged my small Estate & friends in England with nearly two thousand pounds sterling by bills of Exchange . . . knowing that his Royall Highness will not suffer mee to perish under the burden, for had I not thus engaged my selfe & Friends, The souldiers^ must have either perished or went into private, but the Planters must have bee eaten out, who haue enoughe works to support their owne meanes Conditions & families; Our neighbours of Boston have made good use of our necessityes in raying the price of their Goods . . . [i.e.] Dongan's financial embarrassments Feb. 27, 1692]. My Lord I could urge the protection given to criminal persons already, but there are so many other contingen- cies of greater moment that I shall only mention two which wee cannot but expect hereafter: The one is that his Royall Highness by Patent hath all Hudsons Rier with all the Customes proffits etc granted by his Majv, The Duke hath given away all the tract of land to the West of Hudsons Rier with all his Rights thereunto, Now whether the Duke meant to give away the Customes & proffits which cannot but swime upon Hudsons Rier— not express, or clear of mee, However I did not exact any from Capl Carterrey, Neither are Islands mentioned in the Grant, yet hee has putt in his Clayome to Staten Island, whereby wee must see of selves absolutely besieged on all sides, The Rier will remaine but the Customes are lost."

The other contingency is a probability that the expansion of New Jersey as a colony will provoke war with the Indians, which will also involve New York. It is a very uncertain matter amongst the Indiyan, how farre it was probable I would take part or revenge any mischief done in New Jersey, T was concluded they would not doe any violence without my leave, because I haue with gifts and a good Garrison, gaind some Interest & power amongst them. Yet they are of late time both by land & sea, the Dutch always supplied them with plenty & upon easy terms so that both Christians & Pagans generally suffer by the death of the Highness can obtain either a Generall Liberty for some Termes of 7 years, if the encouragement of Merchandize whither they please, oonly paying to his Royal Highness his vse such Customs & Dutyes as his Royal Highness shall establish . . . . Otherwise my Lord in regard this whole Colony is compleat into three parte Dutch, why may not (the warre ended) a permission bee given oonly to four or six Holland Ships to trade yearely hither with Comodittyes of their owne Growth & Manufacture, & from hence to returne directly home, paying oonly dutyes to his Royal Highness.

Such like Overture for Trade must bee accepted or this Colony is ruind . . . . at this present during the Warres with Holland wee cannot expect the good actions of the Dutch here to the English, but this I presume to affirme, that in all other occasions they would manifest their good Obedience to his Majestie in better Termes than some of the United Colonies.

"My Lord I have remitted for confirmation to his Royal Highness the present Lawes of this Colony collected out of the Lawes of the other Colonies, onely with such Alterations as may revive the Memory of old England amongst us, for Democracy hath there so deepe a Roote in these parts, that ye vse very normally of a Justice of the Peace is an Abomination, whereof I have upon due Consideration of his Majesties Interest layd the foundations of Kingly Government in these parts so farre as is possible, which truely is grievous to some Republicans, but they cannot say that I have made any alteration Almoost the English for they had no settled Laws in this Land before . . . ."

"These Lawes have beene put in practise the space of one yeare with some Amendments upon Reviewe, & such is the unfortunate Condition of these parts, that some Points of the Lawes Must of Necessity admit of Alterations or Abolitions yearly, & yet by the Duke Instructions I am narrowly bound up to the space of a yeare for his Highness Confirmation, otherwise the Law is void, By which Instruction fully executed, we should at this present have no Law in force; I hope his Royal Highness will give a larger Latitude to the next Governo in that point, & dispatch this New body of Lawes to print without Alterations."—Clarendon Papers, in N.Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1869), 113-19.

In a letter to Lord Arlington,Gov. Nicolls anticipates Stuyvesant's recommendations regarding leniency in trade regulations with Holland (see Oct. 23, 1667). As at least three-quarters of the inhabitants are Dutch, and "their estates as well as relations interwoven with their correspondents and friends in Holland, unless His Majestie pleased to grant them some extraordinary infranchissement, the sudden interruption of the factory with Holland will absolutely destroy all the present inhabitants, who . . . will prove better subjects than we have found in some of the other Colonies, and with a moderate permission both from this and his Majestie government better than can be reasonably expected from new comers of owne nation, who at first (as wee find by experience) are blowne up with large designes, but not knowing the knacke of trading here to differ from most other places, they meet with discouragements and stay not to become wiser."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 114.

May

Gov. Nicolls grants a charter to New Harlem, confirming the lands unto the owners thereof, and describing the bounds as follows: that "from the west side of the liffe of the said Town, a line be run due West four hundred English poles, without variation of the compass, At the end whereof another line being drawn to run North and South, with the variation, that is to say, North to the very end of a certain piece of meadow ground commonly called the Round Meadow, near or adjoining to Hudson's River, and South to the Said Point, an Island called Perkins Island; It shall be the West bounds of their lands. And all the lands lying and being within the said line, so drawn North and South as aforesaid, eastward to the Town and Harlem River, as also to the North and East Rivers, shall belong to the Town." The inhabitants were granted the privileges of a town, but this was to be "immediately depending on this City," They were allowed to go farther west into the woods for more range for their horses and cattle, the lands lying within the bounds being intended for "plowing, house pastures and meadow grounds only," and no person was to be allowed to build nearer than two miles from the town bounds without the consent of the inhabitants.

After making the preceding grants, certain conditions were imposed: The town was to be called Lancelaster instead of New Harlem; they were to continue their present trade; they were to provide "the necessary encouragement of the inhabitants, that ships of any Nation may Import or Export into or from hence all sorts of Merchandize whither they please, oonly paying to his Royal Highness his vse such Customs & Dutyes as his Royal Highness shall establish . . . . and from the Main," and were to be subject to the "acknowledgments and duties" which are or shall be ordained by the Duke of York or the governors who are set over them.—Liber Patents, I: 571 (Albany), cited by Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 252-55.

Riker says: "It is putting it in mild terms to say that this patent was not approved by the Harlem people, . . . The change in the name of the town . . . was a most offensive feature, and was never adopted. The bench of justice or local court, and, in general, such rights as they had enjoyed in common with the other villages, was indeed comprehended under some restrictions but as it made all, without limitation, 'depending [dependent] on this city,'—this condition might impose untold burdens. In the vital matter of taxation, it left them quite at the mercy of the Duke . . . Nor did it fully over their landed interests, as it omitted to name the meadows appertaining to their farms, but separated by the Harlem River." So, while the patent remained record and was never "recalled," the people merely abided their time for securing a better one.—Riker, Hist. of Harlem, 257-58.

Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 57; Pinson, The Dutch Grants, Harlem Patents, etc. (1889), 10. For a later charter, see Oct. 12, 1667.

The secretary of the city delivers to the mayor's court an account "of the weekly assessment collected by Claes van Elsdoort from 13th December 1665 to [the] last [of] April 1666, being 19 weeks." It is found that "many persons" are "still in arrears to a large sum," that Elsdoort has "immediately" been directed to send the secretary the weekly list of the names of the persons not paid over the secretary only fl. 2909, leaving fl. 2818.11 still due, after deducting his commission. When Elsdoort is asked by the court to clear himself, he declares he "paid in to the Secretary all the money he had received." The court then resolves to elect Jacques Coerser in his place, as collector of the weekly assessment for the use of the city, until Elsdoort has "called in the remainder of his list and . . . paid his arrears."—Rec. N. Am., V: 352-53. See May 8.

Rest to the amount of 360 fl. is due Casper Steynman for the use of his house as a "City school" for one year, and he demands payment from the mayor's court. He is "told to wait yet a while, as there is at present no money in the chest."—Rec. N. Am., V: 4.

This house was on the site of the present No. 10 Stone St.—Castello Plan, II: 260. Similar petitions to the court appear frequently during the next four years (ibid., VI: 80, 177, 221). Payments for the schoolhouse as well as for the schoolmaster (see Feb. 10) were made reluctantly by the English court in New York.
